Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Google

INDIA
TODAY

1989
Pt 3

G. K. V.
HARDWAR

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

078592

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RF-1308

078592

Stock Verification 2022-23

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rs. 10.00

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

078592

INDIA TODAY

SEPTEMBER 15, 1989

"I urged we should threaten to cancel the Bofors contract to extract the pay-off details."

GENERAL K. SUNDARJI Former Chief of Army Staff

L. Vol 14-1989
No. 17-24
Pt III

BOFORS
EXPLOSIVE REVELATIONS

Sundarji Speaks Out: Why Arun Singh Quit

CBI: PLAYING POLITICS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Nearly 15 years ago, KLM invented Business Class."

"Today, they have perfected it."

KLM was the world's first airline. nd also the first to introduce Business lass. Today, KLM's Business Class is a ass apart. In comfort. And service.

From Delhi, KLM flies twice a week Amsterdam, Singapore and Jakarta. nd onward to over 140 cities in continents.

KLM Business Class. The first name the business.

Test us, try us, fly us.

Contact your travel agent, or call us at:
Bangalore: 28703, Bombay: 221013, Calcutta: 29 Madras: 869752, New Delhi: 3311747, Dhaka: 3 and Kathmandu: 214895.

Departures every Saturday and Monday to Amsterdam. Every Friday and Sunday to Singapore and Jakarta.

The Reliable Airline

KLM
Royal Dutch Airlines

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Getting Away

The Bofors controversy takes a new twist with the former army chief General K. Sundarji revealing in a startling interview that the Government did not heed his recommendation to cancel the contract. Plus an interview with Lt. Gen. H.Kaul who was in charge of the selection of the 155mm gun.

COVER STORY 22

Slush Slinging

The newspaper reports alleging that Janata Dal President V.P. Singh had squirrelled away millions of dollars in a Caribbean account ought to have spelled the end of his political career. But the reports were so full of holes that they suggested that the ruling party's dirty tricks department was at work.

SPECIAL REPORT 42

Playing Politics

The recent media exposes establishing a link between CBI Director Mohan Katre's son, Umesh, and the Ambanis' Reliance Industries, have raised further questions about the propriety of the CBI investigating the conspiracy to murder Bombay Dyeing chief Nusli Wadia.

SPECIAL REPORT 32

A Bloody Price

Even as the stage was set for the first tripartite talks between the Bodos, the Assam Government and the Centre, parts of the state exploded in an orgy of violence between Bodos and non-Bodos. The gory incidents left 30 people dead, 40 villages gutted and countless others cowering in fear in relief camps.

SPECIAL REPORT 51

Misguided Missiles

Rajiv Gandhi's tour of Andhra Pradesh was clearly an election campaign—characterised by personal and wild allegations against Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao. While Rajiv used his vocal blunderbuss, his party continued to file cases against Rama Rao as part of its strategy to keep him off balance.

SPECIAL REPORT 56

Between Two Worlds

In less than three decades, the tiny mountain kingdom of Bhutan has come full circle. A mystery land, it launched into a hectic phase of modernisation in the '60s. The result was an erosion of the national culture. Now, the Government has set in motion a programme to rediscover its traditional values.

SPECIAL FEATURE 134

CONTENTS

COMMENT 11
CAPITALOOK 13
VOICES 14
INDIANOTES 19
THE FORTNIGHT THAT WAS 21
COVER STORY
Bofors: Getting Away 22
Interview:
General K. Sundarji: 24
SPECIAL REPORTS
CBI: Playing Politics 32
V.P. Singh: Slush Slinging 42
Janata Dal: Game of Brinkmanship 46
Assam: A Bloody Price 51
Andhra Pradesh:
Misguided Missiles 56
CURRENT EVENTS
Jammu & Kashmir:
Act of Desperation 63
TV Debate: Shoot and Scoot 70
Tamil Nadu: Back in Action 75
Uttar Pradesh: Gory Episode 76
Bottomline: Drama Rao 85
STATENOTES 86
BUSINESS FEATURE
Office Automation:
The Great Shake-out 88
TRADE WINDS 92
BUSINESS
L&T Debentures: Contentious Issue 97
Businesspeak: Jayatirth Rao 98
Backward Integration:
Building A Base 103
Pharmaceuticals: Legal War 105
Bata: Stepping Out 106
The Markets: On a See-saw 111
THE ECONOMY MONITOR 113
INVESTIGATION
Madhya Pradesh:
Criminal Progress 114
CRIME
Gujarat: Popular Prisoner 120
AVIATION
Indian Airlines: In a Tailspin 125
NEIGHBOURS
Nepal: Coping With a Crunch 126
GLOBE-TROTTING
UK: Spreading Tentacles 130
SPORTS
Cricket: On the Front Foot 132
SPECIAL FEATURE
Bhutan: Between Two Worlds 134
ECOLOGYWATCH 140
EDUCATION
Gujarat: Schools for Scandal 142
BOOKS
Sensitive Servings 147
AMONG BOOKS
Candour and Confessions 155
EYE-CATCHERS 160

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ed by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

That unforgettable touch of class

JCT FABRICS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Found eGangotri

The Thapar Gro

CC- Domain. Gurukul Ka ar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Solidaire adds life. To colour.

Yes, in fact Solidaire adds a new dimension to everything it does.

To give you the extraordinary. Everytime. With an eye for detail, painstaking efforts for perfection, and years of R&D. And a sheer commitment to excellence.

Which is what earned Solidaire international recognition. In the form of large export orders for colour TVs from leading East European, Middle East and African countries.

As the final touch, Solidaire also believes in adding one more thing to your viewing pleasure: value.

So that you get a value-added, value-based product. Everytime.

Solidaire TV

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XIV NUMBER 17
FOR THE FORTNIGHT SEPTEMBER 1-15, 1989

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
DEPUTY EDITOR DILIP BOBB
SENIOR EDITOR PRABHU CHAWLA
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR SHEKHAR GUPTA
ASSOCIATE EDITOR RAMINDAR SINGH
ASSISTANT EDITOR P.G. MATHAI

CORRESPONDENTS
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT RAJ CHENGAPPA
NEW DELHI MADHU JAIN
PARANJOY GUHA THAKURTA
SIMRAN BHARGAVA
DAVID DEVADAS
PANKAJ PACHAURI
SURAJEET DAS GUPTA
BHASKAR ROY
AHMEDABAD UDAY MAHURKAR
BANGALORE CHIDANAND RAJGHATTA
BHOPAL N.K. SINGH
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN
SALIL TRIPATHI
S.N. VASUKI
CALCUTTA FARZAND AHMED
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
LUCKNOW DILIP AWASTHI
MADRAS C.S.G PRASAD
PATNA UTTAM SENGUPTA
TRIVANDRUM RAMESH MENON
NEWS COORDINATOR SANDHYA MULCHANDANI

ART EDITOR SHIRLEY JOSHUA

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
CHIEF OF PRODUCTION ANURADHA KAPOOR
LAYOUT ARTISTS PEALI DUTTA GUPTA
PRABAL MANDAL
KAMINI SINGH

ASSISTANT PICTURE EDITOR BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA
PRASHANT PANJIAR
NAMAS BHOJANI
SHYAM TEKWANI

COPY EDITOR TARUN J. TEJPAL

COPY DESK SABA NAQVI BHAUMIK
NANDITA SARDANA
VIDHU KHANNA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

REGIONAL MANAGERS ADVERTISING

BOMBAY NEENA MONGIA
NEW DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE S.J. NAIDU

• EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD. F-14/15, CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTIONS: LIVING MEDIA INDIA LIMITED. POST BOX 706. FARIDABAD-121007, HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER. F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE, NEW DELHI, PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-62634 INTO IN • ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029435. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BOMBAY • K-9, CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONES: 3325378, 3323576, 3321323 AND 3321273. TELEX: 31-62124 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105; PHONE: 477188, 479163. CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS • 74/1 ST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 213037, 212448; CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BANGALORE • 12C EVEREST 46C CHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726. CABLE: LIVINMEDIA. CALCUTTA • COPYRIGHT 1987 LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY AROON PURIE FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PEDDLING POWER

Your cover story ("Crime, Money and Politics", August 31) sent shivers down my spine. There is no doubt that the Ambanis have influence everywhere, especially where it matters—including the Prime Minister's Office. Bureaucrats do their bidding, politicians kow-tow to them, R.K. Dhawan is reportedly helping them in the Wadia assassination conspiracy, Mohan Katre is believed to be at their beck and call, and not to be left behind are opposition leaders who too are said to be on their payroll. While governmental institutions appear to be in their pockets, should not the Institute of Chartered Accountants or a group of auditors probe into the Ambanis' financial affairs.

New Delhi — BHAGWAT GOEL

OUTRAGEOUS MOVE

The suspension of six senior Indian cricketers ("Stumping the Stars", August 31) is simply outrageous. The cricketers are not full-time employees of the BCCI and what they do in their own time is their business. They came to North America to entertain Indian expatriates; they did not go to South Africa to support apartheid. BCCI must review its obsolete rules and help build up the game instead of feeling jealous of the cricketers' earnings.

California — TAPAN K. DUTTA

NOT SWITCHING

We're shocked to read the speculative references to us ("Head Hunting Season", August 31). The report is baseless: Had it not appeared in your magazine, we would not have bothered to even contradict it. Our presence in the Janata Dal is our personal, political and moral commitment to the people of Haryana and through them to our motherland. It is only over our dead bodies that the Congress(I) can hope to get at the popular government of Haryana which the people of the state have elected and given to themselves.

Chandigarh — OM PRAKASH CHAUTALA
RANJIT SINGH

DRAMATIC RESIGNATIONS

The mass resignations by the Opposition from the Lok Sabha have pushed the ebullient Rajiv Gandhi on the defensive ("Stunning Manoeuvre", August 15). But the Opposition's show of unity seems too good to last. Instead of labelling the action a "stunning manoeuvre", it would be better to call it a "surprise stunt". For the leaders who have come together will not hesitate to split at the slightest provocation. And in this lies the edge of Rajiv's Congress (I).

Calcutta — C.V. ARAVIND

■ The opposition parties have taught the ruling party a good lesson. The nation has witnessed a priceless show of protest which is indispensable for a healthy democracy.

Amarapur — SHAHAJI B. MORE

■ You have rightly analysed the current Mahabharata going on between Rajiv's and V.P. Singh's armies. The forthcoming elections are definitely going to be like a Hitchcock thriller. But what of the mockery of Parliament and the destruction of other reverred institutions? Who will make amends for that?

Bhopal — RAMESH NARAYANAN

■ The CAG report is the last nail in the coffin of the Congress(I). It is shameful that they are still ruling the country despite committing such a heinous crime.

Bhopal — RAKESH AWASTHI

■ The CAG report on Bofors will certainly be the Opposition's main plank for the election campaign.

Chandigarh — SANJAY CHOPRA

■ The Opposition has embarked on a shameful journey of betrayal. The united Opposition is only a concept, not a fact.

Patna — SYED SIBTE A. RIZVI

MAN OF INTEGRITY

N.K.P. Salve's utterances in the Rajya Sabha ("Firm and Fair", August 15) display the abysmal depths to which our politicians have sunk. Instead of congratulating the CAG for having done an excellent and impartial job, the sycophants of our erstwhile Mr Clean have targeted T.N. Chaturvedi for abuse.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Trivandrum MANI P. MENON

■ To know that there still are men of integrity as T.N. Chaturvedi, makes one proud to be an Indian.

Chandigarh R.S. PATHANIA

A POLITICAL SOLUTION

A political solution seems to be the only answer to the Sri Lankan problem ("Back from the Brink", August 15). Every effort should be made to promote an "accord" between the various Tamil groups demanding a Tamil Eelam. Only then will we be able to protect our Tamil brothers in Sri Lanka.

Deoghar, Bihar KAMAL PRASOON

■ The cold-blooded murder of two Tamil moderate leaders has shocked all civilised people. The killings are examples of the extent to which violence and the law of the gun have overtaken rational discussion and debate.

Anand SHAILESH KUMAR SINGH

MALE MANIA

It would seem as if there is a move on to ("Male Order Service", August 15) systematically eliminate females from Indian society. It is ironical that the only person conducting this test and operation in the country is a female.

Meerut ANU SHARMA

■ Though the sex-selection procedure is nauseating, I will not advocate a ban. Those who consider daughters as garbage to be sent off with a disposal fee called dowry, will anyway make their daughter's life miserable. No girl should be born to such parents.

Calcutta SUSMITA BHATTACHARYA

ONTO THE FAST TRACK

Godrej is perhaps the slowest moving group in the country ("Changing Gear", August 15). In its existence of almost a century, its turnover has touched a mere Rs 800 crore. Other recent entrants in the Indian market scene are enjoying a much higher turnover. The problem lies in the group's mania about close control and family management which prevents it from going public.

Jabalpur ADIL FEROZ

UNVEILING THE UNKNOWN

Revealing the Hill Marias ("Last of the Unknowns", August 15) to the outside world is a necessary evil, as they will be more benefited than harmed. The fruits of such an exercise are already visible in the form of Maria children topping their district primary certificate examinations.

Allahabad AQUEEL AHMED SIDDIQUI

■ The efforts of the Ramakrishna Mission to uplift the tribals in Bastar are commendable. It shows how a few whole-hearted and sincere men can do more in a year's time than the Government could in more than four decades.

Siliguri SONTOO PALCHOWDHURY

■ The success of the integrating approach among the Hill Marias is a tribute to Nehru, a strong protagonist of such an approach. But the fact that the mission workers are denouncing the existence of ghotuls, causes concern. Such tribal institutions have a role to play in their social life, and our approach towards development should be in line with their life-style.

Patna SANJEEV KUMAR SINHA

BITING SATIRE

I did not know I was a surrogate jholawala till I read "The Jholawala Syndrome" (August 15). I have not only seen Battleship Potemkin and Roshomon a number of times, but I also do not mind a sneak preview of the latest Playboy whenever I can lay my hands on it. I have read Kafka, Sartre and Camus and I am the proud owner of The Female Eunuch by Germaine Greer and of Simon De Beauvior's memoirs. I have attended study circles at Madras Hotel sitting on the floor and discussing dialectical materialism. I love my rum and water when listening to that fabulous song Ek, Do, Teen, Char on video. Goldie Hawn and Dimple Kapadia are my favourite actresses. Now should I get hold of a jhola—with a hole!

New Delhi P.V. NAIR

■ Thought should not be divorced from action, but it is better to be a thinking and concerned person, than not being concerned at all. A group of well-read intelligent people who care about social issues and work hard to create consciousness about such things need serious attention, not cursory reporting and ridicule.

Patna KRISHNA

■ The article came as a refreshing breeze of humour in an otherwise heavily loaded political issue.

Bhopal BRIJESH PANWAR

WRONG APPROACH

The sudden demise and reincarnation of the National Wasteland and Development Board ("Changing Face of Failure", August 15) must have demoralised the members of its board. In India, a centralised approach is not workable. The NDWB should be operated as an agent to coordinate wasteland development activities in the country.

Pune PRASHANT KOTHADIYA

A CLARIFICATION

There was a typographical error in the opinion poll ('Congress(I) Edges Ahead', August 31). In the table 'Who would make a better prime minister?', V.P. Singh's rating in the last row should have read as 43 per cent and not 3 per cent.

—Editor

A QUESTIONABLE HONOUR

There is much girlish excitement in Lady Shri Ram College at being featured in "Top of the Pops" (July 31). As we mince glamorously down the corridors to attend our classes on grooming, we titter happily about the recognition our Miss Indias and "scandals" have now received. Being the only women's college on your list, we shudder delicately at the thought that we could have been identified—as the other colleges have so crassly been—by our high standards of selection, our toppers and our contribution to academics, journalism, the fine arts; by Uma Sharma, Chitra Subramaniam, Aung San Suu Kyi, rather than by pretty Pamella. We must ultimately be judged by our looks, mustn't we?

New Delhi NIVEDITA MENON

NO PHYSICS PHILOSOPHER

In your story on Gandhi's descendants ("Living the Gandhi Legacy", May 15), you attribute a double doctorate to me in physics and philosophy. At the risk of inviting further unnecessary attention to myself, but in the interest of truth, I must inform you that I do have two doctorates in philosophy, but I have only a B.Sc. (honours) degree in physics and that too in third division. I mention this disillusioning fact about myself in the hope that readers of your magazine will not write to me seeking enlightenment on abstruse questions in the philosophy of physics. I have lost much privacy because of your story, but thank you for its generosity.

New Delhi RAMCHANDRA GANDHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

arna-
and ace of have
rd. In s not rated eland ntry.
ADIYA

or in Edges Who ter?', hould
3 per Editor

OUR

ment
g fea-
). As corri-ning, ition
have hen's deli-have leges stan-l our lism, hitra
Kyi, must ooks,

ENON

HER

scen-
May te to e risk tten-ruth, two only
and this the will nent ophy vacy
u for

NDHI

PERSONAL POWER

VIMAL
A RELIANCE PRODUCT premium Shirtings

Chennai and eGangotri

Elegance that's forever...

SPARTEK SENSATIONS

*Ideal for homes and low-traffic areas

INTRODUCING

THE Self Design SERIES

The essence of splendour captured in four exclusive embossed tile patterns.
Rich. Graceful. Subtle.
Just the way you want your home to be.
The Self-Design Series™ from Spartek.
A sensation that's timeless.

SPARTEK

52, Chamiers Road, Madras 600 028

India's largest selling ceramic floor tiles.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

To those out to conquer European business there's one flag worth flying.

The map of Europe up there flags our more than 50 destinations on the Continent where business prospects seldom flag. For instance, nine in Germany: Bonn/Cologne, Dusseldorf, Frankfurt, Hamburg, Hanover, Leipzig, Munich, Nuremburg and Stuttgart. Seven in France: Bordeaux, Lyons, Marseilles, Mulhouse, Nice, Paris and Toulouse. Six in Italy: Bologna, Catania, Genoa, Milan, Rome and Turin. And, three in the UK: Birmingham, London and Manchester. With our daily non-stop Bombay-Zurich connection, brief transfers in Switzerland and punctual departures and arrivals, you can meet your business engagements on the dot every time you fly with us.

For details call your IATA travel agent or the nearest Swissair office:
AHMEDABAD 449149 • BANGALORE 211983 • BOMBAY 2872210 • CALCUTTA 4[illegible] • COCHIN 368380 • DELHI 3325511 • HYDERABAD 224244 • KATHMANDU 222452 • MADRAS 861[illegible]

swissair

[illegible]rest/89/SW/12 R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Authoritarian Arm

In the early '70s, following the arrest of the politically-connected financial swindler Dr Dharam Teja, the CBI emerged in the public's eye as an organisation of hard-working, committed, and dedicated super sleuths. A few good men that the nation could count on. And this was good news, indeed, for a country already immersed in the post-Nehruvian cynicism about the efficacy of its governmental institutions.

The CBI's charter was formidable, embracing in its ambit the detection of economic crimes, inter-state investigations, and corruption among top bureaucrats and politicians. Since law and order is a state subject, the Centre was required to seek a state government's approval before assigning the CBI to investigate. But time was when even non-Congress state governments would willingly seek the assistance of the CBI, so meritorious was its reputation. But like many good things in this country, that too was once upon a time.

The recent Mohan Katre episode suggesting a conflict-of-interest with Reliance Industries, whose senior management official is a prime murder suspect in a case now being handled by the CBI, is but one more pointer to the rapid degeneration of its image and operation. It is today a handmaiden of the ruling party, its political jackboot. And the rot started in the '70s when Mrs Gandhi and Sanjay Gandhi began to use the agency during the Emergency to harass and intimidate political opponents.

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

Not that the Janata Party was any cleaner. It, too, blatantly misused the CBI for hounding its opponents, particularly Mrs Gandhi whom the super sleuths of yester year tried to arrest in a hamhanded fashion. And the CBI has never seemed to recover. During Mrs Gandhi's second coming her opponents were once again at the receiving end. Especially in the non-Congress(I) states. When Sikkim's Chief Minister Nar Bahadur Bhandari was in the Opposition the CBI slapped a whole bunch of corruption charges against him only to let the files gather dust once he came into the ruling party's pen.

The examples are endless. When the Bofors controversy surfaced, CBI's Katre travelled halfway across the world ostensibly to investigate accounts into which illegal payments have been made but his findings—if there were any—remain the Government's best kept secret. And when the Indian Express began its investigative assaults on Reliance Industries and the Government's favours to the company, the CBI went to the extent of producing a forged letter in order to implicate the newspaper's adviser S. Gurumurthy in a criminal conspiracy involving the Official Secrets Act.

In like vein, the murder charge involving the Janata Dal's Sanjay Singh was quickly handed over to the agency. And the tell-tale political twist came into prominent evidence when the CBI—the first time it has ever done this—invited camera crews from Doordarshan, the ruling party's agitprop outfit, to film live the CBI's raid on Sanjay Singh's residence in Lucknow. And the event received several minutes of publicity on the evening news. The chargesheet was filed eight months later by the bureau.

While charges against members of the ruling party are filed in the rarest of cases, people on the political hit-list are routinely harassed. Most of the cases are simply left hanging and the targets of the investigation, unable to disprove allegations against them, are left in limbo—confined to a bureaucratic Siberia.

THE unbecoming alacrity with which the CBI was brought into the Nusli Wadia murder case is a testament to the fact that the Centre now no longer even trusts its own chief ministers to investigate cases they seem perfectly willing and able to handle. Non-Congress(I) governments have already begun to indicate that they will no longer allow the CBI to conduct investigations in their states. In fact, seven opposition-ruled states have yet to give the CBI the green signal to take up cases under the Prevention of Corruption Act amended last year. This is a development that damages the federal structure so carefully crafted by the founding fathers of the Constitution. Institutions like the CBI, after all, were meant to be symbols of a healthy Centre-state relationship.

And the ruling party threatens even further damage to this delicate equation. Minister of State for Home Affairs P. Chidambaram has been threatening to introduce a bill in Parliament that would amend the Constitution to allow the CBI to investigate without the consent of the state involved.

And it is not just a question of the destruction of the equilibrium governing Centre-state relations. The ultimate result of these machinations could be far graver. The misuse of investigative agencies to cover up wrongdoing or punish enemies is one of the surest pointers to the encroachment of authoritarianism in a democratic state.

The CBI occupies a critical niche in the Government. It comes under the Home Ministry but also reports directly to the prime minister through the Department of Personnel. As such it is wide open for manipulation from the very top from where it can be used as a private police force accountable only to those wielding political power. This is not to suggest that the CBI is yet like Papa Doc's Ton Ton Macoute or Iran's Savak. But the intimations are there. What is clear is that the agency's integrity and credibility are now shadowed by a persistent question mark. And it is imperative that people—especially politicians from the ruling party—wake up to the danger this institutional defilement poses to democracy. For the next midnight knock could come at their own door.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Going abroad?

For a small premium in Indian Rupees, you can pay for a major medical emergency (in foreign exchange)

OVERSEAS MEDICLAIM

■ It pays for your emergency medical expenses in foreign exchange. No need for a special application to RBI. ■ Payment upto a limit of $ 50,000 (or $ 1,00,000 in USA/Canada). ■ The premium is relatively small, payable in Indian Rupees.

■ Overseas Mediclaim covers you for the cost of medical emergencies arising from sudden illness or accident, in any part of the world. However, the policy will not pay for any pre-planned medical treatment. ■ Overseas Mediclaim is backed by an international claims settling agency which provides essential services like issue of claim forms, processing of files & negotiations with hospitals and doctors, if necessary. ■ Proposals are subject to medical examination for travellers above 40 years going to USA/Canada and above 60 years to other countries.

Premium: The premium will depend on your age, duration of trip and destination. The following extract from the Premium table gives you an example of how premium is charged.

Illustrative Premium Table

	Worldwide excluding USA & Canada			USA & Canada
Duration of trip	5-40 years	41-60 years	61-70 years	5-40 years	41-60 years	61-70 years
	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.
1 – 14 days	274	274	329	324	392	464
48 – 60 days	559	559	671	948	1172	1400
148 – 180 days	2424	2424	2909	4148	5172	6200

Claim payments are subject to a small compulsory deductible of $ 50.

आपत्काले रक्षिष्यामि

Write to us at any of the addresses given below:

General Insurance Corporation of India
Industrial Assurance Building,
Churchgate, Bombay-400 020.

Multimedia Aquarius/GIC/2/89

National Insurance Company Limited,
3, Middleton Street,
Calcutta 700 071.

The New India Assurance Company Limited,
New India Assurance Bldg.,
87, Mahatma Gandhi Road,
Fort, Bombay 400 023.

The Oriental Insurance Company Limited,
Oriental House, P.B.No.7037,
A–25/27, Asaf Ali Road,
New Delhi 110 002.

United India Insurance Company Limited,
SIAC Building,
24, Whites Road,
Madras-600 014.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gunning for Peace

● Notwithstanding the bilateral cooing that has been going on between Rajiv Gandhi and Benazir Bhutto, the situation on the international border in the Jammu sector has been anything but dovish during the last several weeks. This is thanks to some hawkish military posturing indulged in by both sides.

One of the best kept secrets in South Block is that of a recent day-long skirmish on the border near R.S. Pura, involving India's Border Security Force and Pakistan's Rangers. The skirmish is noteworthy because it took place under the active guidance of regular army officers. Pakistan was worsted with about six soldiers killed, while there were no losses on the Indian side. There are also reports that a Pakistani helicopter with a lieutenant-general aboard was shot down.

That both the countries have decided to keep a lid on the incident—prompted, each side claims, by encroachments across No Man's Land—shows how dramatically diplomatic relations between the two countries have improved. Enough to spawn the realisation that skirmishes do not have to lead to wars. While the soldiers have exchanged fire at Poonch, Uri, and Siachen on the actual line of control before, this was the first incident on the international border since the Simla accord.

New Adviser

● K.K. Tewary, Bob Murari, Suman Dubey, and now Karan Thapar. It seems as if the prime minister can never have enough when it comes to media and television advisers. Thapar, a Doon School alumnus like Rajiv Gandhi and Dubey, will be the latest in the star-studded galaxy of politicians and bureaucrats to whom Rajiv lends his ears on matters concerning the Government, politics, and the operation of his pet monopoly—Doordarshan.

Thapar, who is expected to arrive in the capital shortly on a contract to help improve Doordarshan's programming and quality, is an unusual catch. He has spent most of his professional career in London hosting public affairs shows on British television's Channel 4, the most popular one being Eastern Eye. And as a freelance journalist, Thapar has contributed articles for major international newspapers. What people are wondering about is how, and how long, this journalist, a creature of untrammelled western-style press freedom, will last in the suffocating world of Doordarshan's newspeak.

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

Pressing Passion

● AICC(I) General Secretary Ghulam Nabi Azad has an inexhaustible ability for bouncing back, thanks largely to the gift of the gab.

Six months ago, he was stripped of a crucial responsibility—the charge of handling the media on behalf of the party high command. The action was taken by party president Rajiv Gandhi who had received complaints even from friendly journalists about Azad's unsatisfactory performance.

The sober, soft-spoken V.N. Gadgil was then assigned the responsibility of handling and briefing the press. After lying low for a while, the irrepresible Azad has proved that no dustbin is adequate for dumping him. These days he is addressing most of the press conferences at party headquarters on 24, Akbar Road. Gadgil's absences are explained away as his urgent need to travel to Pune to look after his constituency. Azad's performance has hardly changed. Then why does Rajiv prefer him to the more competent Gadgil? Azad, party insiders say, is indispensable as an aggressive mud-slinger at a time when political vituperation is of the essence. Gadgil, they feel, cannot go beyond a certain limit, despite his best efforts. Hence Azad's victorious return as the unofficial spokesman.

Kashmir's Loss

● General K.V. Krishna Rao's appointment as the new governor of Jammu & Kashmir, following the expiry of Jagmohan's five-year term, was a hotly-debated subject among the prime minister's advisers. One group felt that Jagmohan, who had established himself as a legendary administrator in the valley, should be given an extension to handle Kashmir's deepening crisis. This group believed that sending a former general as governor would give the region's anti-India militants more ammunition to propagate the view that Kashmir is forcibly occupied by the Indian Army, and that India wants a military solution to Kashmir's political problems.

Sources say Jagmohan, whose five-year term expired on June 30, was initially told by the prime minister that his term would be extended. But, suddenly, at the end of July he was summoned to Delhi and told by R.K. Dhawan that the prime minister wanted to give him a party ticket to contest for Parliament from any Delhi constituency. But Jagmohan, these sources add, is believed to have turned down the offer. Kashmir's loss can hardly be said to be New Delhi's gain.

Multimedia Aquarius/GIC/2/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ELECTIONS 1989

The greatest event to mark the end of the decade is about to happen — The world's largest democracy goes to the polls. Do you have all the facts at your finger-tips to make a sound judgement on the outcome? Will you be counted among those who predicted correctly?

You could be right ✓

Prannoy Roy, Ashok Lahiri and David Butler present in INDIA DECIDES, a detailed analysis of how freedom of choice has been practised since 1952. Its a barometer of electoral trends and the mood of the nation at the time of each election. No political analysis is complete without this unique publication.

- Statistically significant election figures.
- Analysis of electoral changes.
- Insights into the correlation between votes cast and seats won.
- Complete bibliography for cross referencing.
- For the first time, Lok Sabha results of all general elections, constituency results, close contest results, bye-election results, and lots more — all in one volume.

Free Offer

Order immediately, and this 380 page deluxe hardcover edition will be delivered to your doorstep at NO EXTRA COST.

Just mail your Cheque/Demand Draft for Rs. 350/- (Add Rs. 5/- for outstation Cheques, ie., outside Delhi) payable to LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD., alongwith details of your name and address to: LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD., P.O. Box 29, NEW DELHI-110001.

INDIA DECIDES. Another exclusive from India Today.

INDIA TODAY

The Times of India

- The members of the Opposition were elected to fulfil the vital democratic function of contesting the Government and its policies right here on the floor of the House, not in the streets and columns of newspapers.

■ RAJIV GANDHI in Parliament

- I don't think V.P. Singh matters enough to deserve my personal comment.

■ CHANDRA SHEKHAR in Newstrack

- I should not poke my nose in such big international issues (Indo-Nepal relations). After all I am a chota man. ■ SUBHASH GHISING in The Week

- We do not want to insult them. Let them (Indian troops) leave our shores as friends. ■ RANJAN WIJERATNE, Sri Lankan foreign minister, in The Times of India

- With friends like Mr Kalpanath Rai and Mr K.K. Tewary, he (Rajiv Gandhi) does not need enemies. ■ ARUN NEHRU in The Statesman

- The Congress(I)'s slogan is: Desh ke neta Rajiv Gandhi, mahilaon ki neta Sonia Gandhi, bachchon ke neta Rahul Gandhi, bhaad mein jaye Mahatma Gandhi (The country's leader is Rajiv Gandhi, the leader of women is Sonia Gandhi, the children's leader is Rahul Gandhi, to hell with Mahatma Gandhi). ■ AJIT SINGH at the National Front's rally in Jaipur

- The RSS works for Hinduism, but the Shiv Sena works for militant Hinduism.

■ BAL THACKERAY in Surya India

- The Janata Dal is my first love. But what can I do if my beloved is having a dalliance with a villain (BJP)? ■ SYED SHAHABUDDIN in Sunday

- Bharat bachane se pehle, Rajya Sabha ko bacha lijiye (Before saving India, please save the Rajya Sabha).

■ NAJMA HEPTULLAH to Opposition members

- I have had a sinful past. I have been a bureaucrat.

■ T.N. CHATURVEDI in The Times of India

- If we had won the Windies series and then gone to play exhibition matches, they (BCCI) probably would have chartered a plane for us.

■ DILIP VENGSARKAR in Amrita Bazar Patrika

- Amitabh Bachchan is certainly not cut out for politics. He's only cut out for cut-outs. ■ SHATRUGHAN SINHA in The Illustrated Weekly of India

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A pleated Salwar Kurta, inspired by the legend of Heer Ranja and the colours of spring. To stroll through a casual evening. Or grace a semi formal day.

CC-0. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kurta, yoked with prints and flared around skirt area.

Jewellery comes from colour accents on the print.

The odhni, or dupatta worn long and with abandon.

Exquisite. Exceptional. Rapturous. For the girl in every woman.

A pleated Salwar Kurta, inspired by the legend of Heer Ranja and the colours of spring. To stroll through a casual evening. Or grace a semi formal day.

The Superlatives VIMAL® A RELIANCE PRODUCT Dress Material

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HAVE A SHOPPING SPREE IN MALAYSIA

NON-STOP, EVERY SUNDAY TO KUALA LUMPUR

Malaysia Airlines departs Delhi 11.15 pm every Sunday, non-stop for Kuala Lumpur. Where exciting duty-free bargains and amazingly good value shopping await you.

In Malaysia, you'll find the latest designer watches from all over the world. Malaysian hand-painted batik. Beautiful textiles created in Japan and Europe. Finely-crafted jewellery, hand-made pewterware, and an impressive range of duty-free cameras and electronic equipment. The list of wonderful shopping goes on. And with an exchange rate that is more favourable than that in most other countries in the region, you can really indulge in a big shopping spree.

And all the way to Kuala Lumpur, you'll enjoy the genuine warmth and charm that only Malaysians can offer.

malaysia AIRLINES

ENCHANTMENT WHEREVER YOU FLY

FOR RESERVATIONS AND MORE INFORMATION, CALL YOUR FAVOURITE TRAVEL AGENT OR MALAYSIA AIRLINES/GENERAL SALES AGENT: STIC TRAVELS PTE. LTD., G55, CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, DELHI, INDIA. TEL: 3326302, 3325786, 3324308, 3321605.

AMC-MZC

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

GROOMS IN GLOOM

■ The Madhya Pradesh experiment to bring Government to the common man's doorsteps created a piquant situation recently at Pichhore village in Shivpur district. The visiting minister was faced with an unusual request: 18 young men of the Lodhi community sought his intervention in their search for brides.

Since the minister was a Lodhi himself he understood their plight. Because of the shortage of women in the community, only rich men capable of paying a mehr-like amount of Rs 5,000 to Rs 40,000 could secure a bride. This led to a high turnover in Lodhi brides—with some being sold more than once. Some hard-up bachelors remained single, forced to become brahmcharis.

The sympathetic Government approached a Gwalior orphanage, only to be rebuffed. In matters of the heart the orphanage girls did not want middlemen. So the lonesome Lodhi bachelors remain just that—bachelors.

RAIDING RAJIV

■ All the black cat commandos and sniffer dogs could not stop this enterprising thief. Breaking through the security cordons around the country's most heavily guarded VVIP, he removed the stereo from Rajiv Gandhi's car right outside the prime ministerial residence.

Panic buttons were pressed the moment the theft was discovered last month. Afraid of publicity which would make them look silly, as they did when a fanatic took two pot shots at Rajiv in Rajghat some time back, the security men did not lodge an FIR. But security officials have been searching high and low for the crafty burglar.

An obvious fallout of the lapse: some of the drivers and mechanics were immediately transferred. Officials are worried that the unnoticed prowler could have brought explosives into the house.

The theft may have gone unnoticed, but the commotion it caused within the security set-up can only be described as stereophonic.

DOG-GONE

■ Every dog has his day. With pedigreed dogs it is more so, as a prized Alsatian proved recently by bringing traffic on the Grand Trunk Road in Madras to a grinding halt for an anxious five hours.

The problem began with three men and a dog who tried boarding a bus in Tambaram. The unimpressed conductor refused to let the dog in despite being told that it had political links: it belonged to the local MLA.

The angry dog lovers beat up the conductor. When the police refused to register a complaint, the state transport employees exacted revenge by floating a rumour that the conductor had died.

This led to a wildcat strike and angry bus drivers blockaded the road for a full five hours. All attempts to placate the disgruntled staff failed. Only after the three persons who had beaten the conductor were arrested, was the strike called off. But as the drama unfolded, the Alsatian over whom the fracas began, had vanished. Dog-gone.

PRIESTLY SPIRITS

■ The Nainadevi temple in the salubrious hills of Himachal Pradesh is always crowded with devotees. Most of them go back moved by the magic of the mantras they hear at the temple. But on a recent occasion visiting devotees were puzzled because they could not decipher the unintelligible chants emanating from the temple. Many of them thought that the pujari had worked himself into a frenzy or he was communicating with the gods in a strange tongue.

But the truth was more earthy. The simple pujari, unaware of the priestly code of abstinence, had set up a bar for himself in the temple. Unamused, the devotees raised a chant for his removal. The temple authorities had no option but to act and our highly-spirited pujari found himself facing the prospect of doing time behind bars of a different kind.

BETTING BUG

■ Everyone is acquainted with Chitrahaar, Doordarshan's weekly song and dance ritual, but who ever heard of a Chitrahaar lottery? Ask the residents of Darjeeling. They have. A local entrepreneur is literally cashing in on the popularity of the television programme.

Come Wednesday, and lotterywallahs fan out selling slips of paper to star-struck viewers of Chitrahaar. The slips have the names of film-stars written on them. If the programme happens to feature a film star named on a slip, the bearer wins twice the amount he paid for the ticket. If not, obviously the money spent is lost forever.

Television gambling is certainly becoming a good substitute for those unable to make it to Kathmandu's famous casino. However, the only objectors may be film stars who might not relish people betting on them like racehorses.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

They have been Wonderfloored. How about you?

Step into the world of Wonderfloor Vinyl Flooring. It's simply terrific. In it's quality. In it's finish, it's durability, long life... And economy. Because Wonderfloor is manufactured by an exclusive process, in technical collaboration with Pegulan Werke, A.G. of West Germany. And is available in a wide range to choose from-Robust, Gemini, Designer flooring, Antistatic, Chemical resistant...

Our Exports

This is why our flooring is so popular. Both at home and with our buyers in USSR, UAE, Oman and Bangladesh.

You can see it taking a beating in high traffic areas without a tell tale sign. All our users swear by it. Now what are you waiting for?

Rs. 6.50 per sq. ft. onwards

Please send me FREE Literature

NAME _____

OCCUPATION _____

ADDRESS _____

_____

WONDERFLOOR

PREMIER VINYL FLOORING LTD

IN TECHNICAL COLLABORATION WITH PEGULAN WEST GERMANY

Sales Offices:

New Delhi C-4, Commercial Centre, Safdarjang Development Area, New Delhi-110 016. Phone: 660023/664496. Telex: 031-73157/73178/73100. Gram: 'PREQUI'. Calcutta 3rd Floor, No. 3 Netaji Subhash Rd., Calcutta-700 001. Phone: 281702/281703. Telex: 021-7091 BLKC IN. Patna Shiva - Dham, Nala Road, Kadam Kuan, Patna-800 003. Bombay 328, Kaliandas Udyog Bhavan, Behind Century Bazar, Worli, Bombay-400 025. Phone: 4300289/4228839. Telex: 011-4220 FIRE IN. Bangalore 190/1, 4th Floor, Kota Shopping Complex, Brigade Road, Bangalore-560 001. Phone: 571178. Telex: 0845-2691 PIEB IN. Madras 43, IVth Trust Cross Street, Mandaveli, Madras-600 028. Hyderabad Emerald Complex, 3rd Floor, Adj. Park Lane, P.O. 2029, Sarojini Devi Road, Secunderabad-500 003. Phone: 823025. Telex: 042-56817.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Dear Bharat,

A lot of waterloos have flowed under the bridge since my last dispatch from the trenches. The hot news from the front is exactly that; the battle has really hotted up. Frankly, it's pretty hairy being a war correspondent right now with the conflict getting dirtier by the day. There are missiles and bombshells whizzing around like an extended Diwali celebration and the casualty rate could soon sky-rocket.

The problem is in trying to figure out who is sniping at whom and for what reason. In other words, it's real gorilla warfare out there. One side is using a mixture of ancient ammunition—Bofors and HDW—and some fresh supplies gifted by the enemy like the Ambanis and Mohan Katre. The other side is busy using the latest weaponry—shoot and scoot and burst fire—in the hope that their heavier firepower will win them the war. Their Dirty Tricks Department has also been effective in sowing discord and suspicion in the enemy ranks with secret bank accounts and forged letters circulating like confused confetti.

What is difficult to decipher is what the respective strategies are. General Gandhi has the superior forces but his battlefield tactics are pretty bewildering. Overall, he seems to be the more aggressive, launching offensives on various fronts—Andhra Pradesh and Assam being two prime targets—and trying to outflank the opposing army under General Singh. General Singh seems to be under general anaesthesia most of the time.

Yet, when General Gandhi challenged him to single combat in a televised duel, Singh accepted with alacrity. And, it was General Gandhi who hastily backed out, offering to send major-domo Bhagat in his place. Morally, that particular battle was won by the invaders.

But Gandhi, a five-star general, obviously has the bigger and better equipped army. And though the marksmanship is pretty awry, their long-range weapons have been firing from as distant redoubts as Kuwait, Istanbul and even the obscure St Kitts in the Caribbean—all targeted at General Singh. So far, Singh seems unharmed by the bombardment though there is always the chance that a stray slug could eventually find its mark.

So far, General Singh appears unharmed by the bombardment though there is always the chance that a stray slug could eventually find its mark.

As a strategist, however, General Gandhi seems to have patterned himself on Rambo, a one-man battering ram charging through enemy territory and shooting wildly from the hip. He tried that in Andhra Pradesh against the local chieftain, N.T. Rama Rao, but his shots were wide of the mark. Eventually, his offensive only provided Rama Rao with extra cannon fodder to hit back.

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

General Gandhi has the bigger and better army. Their long-range weapons have been firing from distant redoubts like Kuwait and St Kitts.

That, of course, is what makes the battle such a closely contested one. The defending army is led by a reckless general with the tendency to blunder into his own minefields. Moreover, his second-rank leadership is virtually non-existent or else they are the best-kept secret of the war. The invading army, on the other hand, seems to have too many chiefs and too few Indians with General Singh facing a constant threat to his leadership. Their combat troops are also pretty thin on the ground.

There are other contrasts as well. The more serious the battle becomes, the more ridiculous it appears to get. Just take the latest bit of news from the front—General Gandhi has just elevated his bete noire, General Singh, to the unofficial rank of cabinet minister and provided him with heavy security. There is a strategy in that somewhere. Except nobody can figure out what it is.

Don't worry. Be happy.

—DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BOFORS

GETTING AWAY

THE politically explosive question that has dogged the country and come perilously close to destabilising the Rajiv Gandhi government is, who made the Rs 64 crore that Bofors paid in commissions for India's acquisition of its 155 mm gun?

The recent report by the Comptroller and Auditor General (CAG), while casting doubts on the Government's version of the selection of the gun, did little to unravel the mystery of the pay-offs. But parts of the second major mystery: why the Government did not use the ultimate weapon—cancellation of the contract—have now cleared. Former Army Chief, General K. Sundarji, in a detailed interview to INDIA TODAY (see following pages)—his first since he retired in April 1988—forcefully contradicts repeated assertions by the prime minister that security considerations prevented the Government from exercising the cancellation option. "As Prime Minister I cannot compromise the nation's security to clear my personal name...," Rajiv Gandhi told Blitz in July 1987. He repeated this in an interview to Sunday in November, 1988. Rajiv said: "These questions had come up very long ago. In fact this was one of the first things I asked. Can we do this? And the second question I asked with that was: what is the cost of doing it? The cost is first in terms of security. Do we reduce our security? Second, in terms of money. Do we actually lose money or gain..? So I asked the Defence Ministry to evaluate all this. On the security side they said an almost categorical no."

But General Sundarji reveals that when he was asked by the Ministry of Defence in June 1987, about the security implications of cancelling the contract, he had said it was "an acceptable risk". He wrote this in an official note after polling all his principal staff officers—the heads of all departments in army headquarters. Sundarji, whose earlier recommendation had tilted the competition in favour of the Bofors gun, in fact, advised the Government to go ahead with cancelling the contract 14 months after it had been signed. Not because he had changed his mind about the gun but because he believed that such financial pressure was the only way to force Bofors to come clean on the pay-offs.

During a critical three-month period starting mid-April, 1987, evidence showed that Bofors had lied to the Indian Government about not having used middlemen to get the contract. Clearly, commissions were paid for the deal. The country was awash with rumours that ruling party leaders and army brass had been bribed. For Sundarji, threatening to cancel the contract or even cancelling it, under the circumstances, was a matter of restoring the badly damaged credibility of the country's and the army's leadership—a matter of "national honour".

BHAWAN SINGH

In 1987, Rajiv was urged by Arun Singh and Sundarji to compel Bofors to reveal the names of the pay-off recipients. He chose not to.

This was also Arun Singh's view. So seriously was this step contemplated that in late May 1987, prior to the Sundarji recommendation, the Ministry of Defence prepared a detailed brief—forwarded to the prime minister through his secretary, Serla Grewal—outlining the financial and administrative implications of cancelling the contract along with international legal angles involved.

Now, based on several months of investigations, INDIA TODAY has been able to piece together details suggesting that in July 1987, the prime minister directly called off this hard-line strategy started within the Ministry of Defence which could well have led to the revelation of the names of the recipients of the payments. This led to the resignation of Arun Singh, minister of state for defence and Rajiv's confidant, who had ordered the hard line, but was unable to persuade Rajiv to approve that course of action.

Under Singh's instructions, N.N. Vohra, then additional secretary of defence, now secretary for defence production, had apprised Bofors officials that if they did not reveal the names, the whole deal may have to be called off. Even as Ministry of Defence officials were contemplating this action, Rajiv summoned a meeting on July 4, 1987, and berated the entire scheme. Singh stood by Vohra and told Rajiv that Vohra had been acting under his instructions. No amount of pleading by Singh was able to change Rajiv's mind.

Arun Singh resigned less than a fortnight later. The prime minister was, at that time, a beleaguered man. V.P. Singh, after quitting as defence minister on April 10, had been expelled from the party on June 16. The stink caused by his ordering an inquiry into commissions for the HDW submarine deal had become a personal political embarrassment for Rajiv.

The air was already thick with talk of pay-offs when the story about Bofors pay-offs broke. Insiders say Rajiv did not want Arun Singh to quit at the time because of adverse political ramifications, but Singh remained adamant, believing that the credibility of the army and the government had suffered and he could not in good conscience continue to hold office.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Those urging cancellation of the contract were firmly convinced that the loss of even a few hundred crores in penalties and legal costs—one of the reasons cited by Rajiv for not playing the cancellation card—would well be worth the risk in terms of restoring Rajiv's political image which had taken a battering. He would, with one bold, dramatic sweep, re-establish himself as a decisive leader capable of tough decisions. And the Bofors scandal would simply die and deprive the Opposition of its only issue. They reasoned, also, that India, as one of a few avidly-courted unattached arms buyers in the world market would send a no-nonsense message to all future suppliers not to take its government for a ride. They argued that the nation was no banana republic and was quite capable of withstanding any financial shock caused by cancellation.

Here is how the scenario unfolded:

▶ By March 1986, following years of technical evaluations by the army, the competition had been narrowed to the French and Swedish guns. What helped clinch the decision in favour of Bofors was the financial package. Bofors had progressively reduced its price from Rs 1,620 crore to Rs 1,427 crore. The lowest French offer was Rs 1,436 crore. An additional inducement was the 3.1 billion kroner credit offered by the Swedes for a period of 90 months from the date of signing the agreement—March 24, 1986.

▶ The April 16, 1987, Swedish Radio report that commissions had been paid to obtain the contract, and the June 1 report of Sweden's National Audit Bureau virtually confirming this, knocked the bottom out of Bofors's repeated declarations to the Indian Government—the first one was given on March 10, 1986, two weeks before the contract was signed—that the company had no middlemen or commission agents in the deal. This implied that the contract price could have been cut by at least an amount equal to what the Swedes paid in commissions.

The ball now was in the court of the Indian Government to persuade Bofors to part with the information. Between June and July Arun Singh gave the green light to Vohra and Joint Secretary T.K. Bannerji to start putting the squeeze on Bofors. Several letters from Secretary S.K. Bhatnagar to Bofors asking for the details of "the precise amounts that have been paid by Bofors; the recipients of such amounts; the services rendered by such persons or companies; copies of all correspondence between Bofors and such recipients" received the standard Bofors response which sheltered behind a plea of commercial secrecy. By now a consensus had developed that Bofors would yield only to arm-twisting as it was interested in negotiating another multi-crore project for the joint production of another gun system in India.

▶ On July 3, 1987, Bertil Bredin, vice president of Bofors visited the Ministry of Defence where Vohra hinted that Bofors Managing Director Per Ove Morberg and other top officials may have to be summoned to Delhi to discuss cancellation of the contract and blacklisting of Bofors.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

The news of the pay-offs convinced Arun Singh and Gen. Sundarji that the contract with Bofors should be terminated.

The tactic appeared to be producing results. Bredin offered to put together a top delegation of Bofors officials, including the company president, to visit India within the next several days to clarify questions repeatedly posed to the company by the Ministry of Defence since June 16. But this was becoming an issue on which the political leadership disagreed. The Government appeared to be lacking the political will to go through with what was perhaps the surest way of getting the names of the pay-off recipients.

▶ On July 4, the day Rajiv Gandhi returned from Moscow, this was confirmed. He summoned a meeting of top officials among whom were present Vohra and Arun Singh. He felt that Ministry of Defence officials in pursuing the arm-twisting line had exceeded their brief. The excuse to drop this tactic was that the Government had already committed itself to appointing a Joint Parliamentary Committee (JPC) on June 11 and that it was up to the JPC to get to the bottom of the matter. Bofors was informed not to send the delegation.

▶ On July 18, Arun Singh resigned. His sudden resignation, without any explanations, sent shock waves through the country. Singh became a recluse in his hilltop retreat and has not spoken since.

SOME other startling revelations have been made by former deputy chief of army staff Lt. General Hriday Kaul in another exclusive interview (see box). Kaul has disclosed that multi-crore bribes were offered to army generals to change the order of preference in the army's shortlist of guns. Gun manufacturers and their representatives had infiltrated security at the highest levels of government and procured information circulated only among half a dozen top officials.

This raises the question that if a mere change in ranking on the shortlist was worth crores, how much more would the same manufacturers be willing to pay to those who could ensure they landed the contract.

Coming to the present, there are indications that the Government and Bofors may come to another agreement—that in return for the manufacturing contract, Bofors will, as a gesture of good faith, reimburse the Rs 64 crore to India. This would the Government hopes, clear the air just before the elections—with the money having been returned.

But the fact is, it is too late. The Government's refusal to take decisive action at the right moment—and that moment has now passed—has done untold damage to the nation's vital institutions—the Government, the army, the bureaucracy, and to a prime minister who enjoyed the largest political mandate given to any Indian politician. And institutions are easy to destroy, very hard to build.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR and RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GENERAL KRISHNASWAMI SUNDARJI (RETD.)

I said for national honour we should go to the extreme of cancelling the contract

'WOODSIDE' is a pretty house overlooking the picturesque Coonoor valley in the Nilgiri hills. But its occupant likens it to Alcatraz. The analogy is apt judging by the high-security perimeter of ten-foot-high brick walls topped by barbed wire, and punctuated with watchtowers manned by armed sentries of the Madras regiment. Inside this forbidding fortress lives General Krishnaswami Sundarji (retired), guarded over by a huge slobbering Dobermann named Mechy (after Mechanised Infantry, the regiment raised by Sundarji). It's a life of sad seclusion for the flamboyant former chief of army staff, and a far cry from computerised war games. He now spends much of his time in his kitchen garden growing strawberries and exotic herbs like thyme, basil and marjoram. It's like being under house arrest, he says. "I can move out but my jailors come with me." Some distance away lives Field Marshal Sam Maneckshaw. But unlike Sundarji, the Field Marshal is not tied down to Coonoor and travels around the country.

It is quickly evident to all visitors to 'Woodside' that here is a man whose talents are being wasted. He knows it too, and the frustration of enforced hibernation, so soon after an eventful term as chief of army staff, makes him sad. Breaking his self-imposed silence, Sundarji spent five hours over two days, talking to Associate Editor RAMINDAR SINGH about his role in the Bofors gun selection, the lobbies active in government on behalf of the competing guns, the Government's attempt to make him change his advice to cancel the contract, and the reasons behind the resignation of Arun Singh as minister of state for defence. Some startling excerpts:

Q. Why did the army change its preference at the last minute from the French to the Swedish gun. How did this happen?

A. When I was deputy chief of army staff from about August 1981 till Decem-

SHYAM TEKWANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BOFORS CANCELLATION

ber 1982, I had assessed the contending guns and shortlisted the French, Swedish and British in that order for purchase and licence production. The first two guns were good guns, close to each other and I did not give any special weightage to the Swedish gun at that point.

In November of 1985, after the Government announced that I was to be the next chief, the minister of state Arun Singh asked me, officially but orally, about my views on the relative merits of the two systems. I requested Major General Ajay Singh and then Brigadier T.P. Singh, both from the Directorate of Weapons and Equipment (DWE), to do a thorough, objective analysis in the light of the two factors which had undergone a change in 1985—the gun-locating radar was becoming available to Pakistan and the project of the French self-propelled system was out, so all hopes of commonality were lost. This team suggested they would give the Swedish gun an edge over the French. I was convinced of this and from that point on it became my decision.

Q. Did you tell anyone of the change in preference?

A. I briefed Arun Singh along these lines sometime in November of 1985. After that I heard nothing. I took over as chief on February 1, 1986. Around the middle of February, I was told by my staff that the Defence Ministry wanted us to put our final preference in writing.

My staff was suspicious about this, but I told them not to worry. If we had any ulterior motive in making this change, we would not do it so blatantly but in a much more sophisticated manner. There will be people who believe that it should have been the French gun. I have no quarrel with them. In my mind I apply certain values to certain qualities. Equally honestly and with equal professional competence, you will perhaps apply different values to different characteristics.

Q. One perception, maybe of the Sundarji-baiters or Sundarji-haters, is that you virtually bought your job by this decision. The timing suggests that it was a price that you were asked to pay or felt needed to be paid for the chief's job.

A. Totally untrue. Because I was asked for my view only after the announcement had been made (about my being selected the next chief). Before that, neither Arun Singh nor anybody else sought my views.

Q. There was no quid pro quo ?

A. There was nothing, not even a suggestion that this should be my answer. If our analysis had shown the original order of preference should remain I would have said so. It would have made no difference.

Q. The reason why this question is raised by some people is that from 1982 to 1986 the army listed the French gun as number one. In October 1985 there was a meeting in New York between Rajiv Gandhi and Olof Palme. Bofors officials and the then defence secretary S.K. Bhatnagar told the JPC that the matter was discussed there. It was only then that Bofors started seriously feeling that they were in the picture. In November 1985 Arun Singh speaks to you and you order a fresh evaluation. In January 1986, Palme comes to Delhi and a note is put up to the prime minister by his secretariat equating the two guns. On February 17, your evaluation was handed in, listing the Bofors gun on top, and the Negotiating Committee which had for nearly two years, nitpicked the army's recommendation, accepted your recommendation within days. From all this it seems as if everyone was going out of his way to help the Swedes.

A. If it looks like that circumstantially, I cannot help it. All I can say is that there was no question of my being told by anybody that this was the required choice. If I carry on from there, I will

PHOTO: PUSHKARNA

> I believed that if we threatened to cancel the contract, there was a 99.9 per cent chance that Bofors would cough up the information about who had received the money.

> I analysed the effects of cancellation. I said the acquisition process would be delayed by 18 months to 2 years... Even though it was a risk, it was an acceptable risk.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LT. GENERAL HRIDAYA KAUL

"They were willing to pay Rs 2.5 crore to move their gun up the list"

AS deputy chief of army staff between January 1983 and February 1985, Lt-General Hridaya Kaul was the third ranking officer in Army Headquarters (AHQ), and was directly in-charge of the selection of the 155 mm medium gun for the army. Most of the directorates concerned with the gun's selection reported to him. Kaul was also a member of the Negotiating Committee, but was transferred to Shimla as General Officer Commanding in Chief, Western Command, shortly before the Negotiating Committee okayed the Rs 1,427-crore contract with A.B. Bofors. Kaul who has till now steered clear of the swirling Bofors controversy, finally spoke out in an exclusive interview with Associate Editor RAMINDAR SINGH, about the astronomical bribes offered by the gun dealers, their amazing ability to procure top secret information and the Defence Ministry's failure to blacklist the firm even after he brought the bribe offer to its notice. Excerpts:

Q. Wasn't it you who signed the assessment which placed the French gun ahead of the Swedish gun?

A. Yes. When I took over as deputy chief in 1983 the army badly needed a medium artillery gun. My predecessor Lt-General K. Sundarji had listed the French gun as number one and Bofors second, but his third and fourth choices—the British and Austrian guns—were totally unacceptable to me. In view of this, I made a presentation to the army chief, General K.V. Krishna Rao. He agreed that only the French and Swedish guns should be considered, but we listed all four to induce competition. Through 1983, we pursued the matter but we got no satisfactory reply from the Defence Ministry why there was no decision.

Q. What happened when General Vaidya took over as army chief?

A. He wanted to be put in the picture, so, around February 1984, we made another presentation for him. He approved the Krishna Rao decision. I sent a note to the Defence Ministry and the six other members of the Negotiating Committee, spelling out the AHQ choice of gun and the reasons for the choice. Soon after that I got a strange invitation. A foreigner representing one of the gun manufacturers invited me for dinner at a private suite in a five-star hotel.

Q. Did you go?

A. I declined since I didn't accept invitations from companies. But the company had done its homework. They sent an intermediary whom I had known in the past. He made the offer. He told me the company would pay Rs 2.5 crore in any currency or bunch of currencies anywhere in the world, in return for a favourable recommendation for their gun. They only wanted me to move their gun up in the list, not necessarily to the top. And for this they were willing to pay Rs 2.5 crore. I had a feeling they could go up to Rs 5 crore.

Q. What did you do?

A. Wait. That's not all. The intermediary also told me that the company knew the recommendation I had made (to the Defence Ministry). I went straight to the chief (General Vaidya) and told him we must take some action. The defence minister was out of town, so I requested the Defence Secretary S.K. Bhatnagar, to inform the defence minister. Vaidya is dead, but you can check with Bhatnagar. When we met at Delhi airport in early 1987, Bhatnagar remembered how worked up I had been about this bribe offer.

Q. Which company was it?

A. I don't want to take any names.

Q. Where is the intermediary now?

A. Don't ask me that. I gave him my word that I would not reveal his identity.

Q. So one of the gun companies had access to the top secret note containing the army's recommendations.

A. Yes. I know for certain that two competitors had the information. Maybe all four had it. It worried me like hell. This note was addressed by name to the defence secretary and five other members of the Negotiating Committee. It was delivered by hand and could be opened only by the addressee. I don't know whether these civilian bureaucrats keep such notes with themselves or with their private secretaries. But the information leaked. In AHQ only the chief and I knew what was in the note. And I did not even let my private secretary see it.

Q. What did you do about the leakage?

A. I told the chief and the defence secretary. I also insisted that the firm which had tried to bribe me must be blacklisted.

Q. Did the Government take any action against the company which offered the bribe ?

A. Not that I know of. There was no progress till I left AHQ in February 1985. As far as I know, the matter of the bribe offer never went beyond Bhatnagar. I cannot say whether Bhatnagar or Vaidya put it down on paper.

YASBANT NEGI

Q. What about the defence minister? Did you check with him?

A. I don't even know whether he was informed.

Q. Did this come up when you gave evidence before the Joint Parliamentary Committee probing the Bofors pay-offs?

A. No. The JPC only wanted answers to the questions they asked. I was put certain questions to which I gave answers. The only thing I talked about was the procedure for selecting the gun.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJIV GANDHI

perhaps be able to give you some other circumstantial evidence to show that this was not so.

Q. Such as what ?

A. In April '87 the news about kickbacks broke. In May we had a number of informal discussions with the Ministry of Defence about what line to follow. I urged all along that we should threaten to cancel the contract with Bofors to extract the details of the pay-offs and recipients. Sometime in mid-May ('87) I was asked by S.K. Bhatnagar, one to one, orally, for my considered opinion on the pros and cons of cancelling the Bofors contract. Having given considerable thought to it, I told him I believed that if we threatened to cancel the contract there was a 99.9 per cent chance that Bofors would cough up the information about who had received the money.

Q. And if they didn't?

A. I analysed the effects of cancellation. I said the acquisition process would be delayed by 18 months to 2 years. I based this on the fact that though the French had a tried and tested gun and they had quoted a price in 1986, they could take us for a ride if we entered into negotiations only with them. The British gun, earlier dropped, had by 1986 made certain improvements. So I said we could introduce competition whether we used the British gun for negotiating or as a real contender. The delay would occur because we would have to try out the (modified) British gun. I said in the ultimate analysis, for national honour and everything else we should go to the extreme of cancelling the contract, if necessary.

Q. In spite of the two year delay?

A. Two years delay was acceptable. Even though it was a risk, it was an acceptable risk from the point of view of the totality (of circumstances). Around the same time (mid-May) the same question was addressed to me separately by a senior member of the prime minister's office and I gave the same answer.

Q. Was it Gopi Arora ?

A. It was Gopi Arora, and I gave him the same view. I also told him that I had given a similar answer to Bhatnagar. The next thing that happened was, that on Friday, June 12, I remember the date clearly, I was asked by the Defence Secretary, Bhatnagar in writing, to put down on paper my views about cancellation of the contract. That day I put down on paper all that I had said earlier. It was delivered to Bhatnagar on the morning of June 13. I was convinced that if you threatened to screw that contract, everything would come out, pit-a-pat, sab niklega. Initially my feeling was that MOD was indeed proceeding along those lines.

> The PM was angry. This is hearsay, but Vohra told me the PM lit into him for adopting a threatening approach towards Bofors to force them to come out with the information.
>
> Serla Grewal's letter said the PM was upset that the Defence Ministry had not sent him the assessment he had asked for of the implications of cancellation of the contract.

Q. You were given to understand that the Ministry would act along these lines?

A. I had the feeling that the Ministry was inclined to follow this course.

Q. What happened after that?

A. For three weeks or so I heard nothing. But the day the prime minister returned from Moscow, it was a Saturday, (July 4), he called a meeting at his house, at which Arun Singh, Bhatnagar and N.N. Vohra (then additional secretary, defence) were present, among others. The PM was angry. This is hearsay, but Vohra told me that the PM lit into him for adopting a threatening approach towards Bofors to force them to come out with the information. Vohra came back from the meeting somewhat disgusted and I believe he booked calls to Bofors to tell its officials not to come. They were already coming.

Q. Is this authoritative?

A. Vohra told me himself, almost immediately thereafter. Then sometime in July, maybe the first week, the defence secretary returned my note to me. He tentatively felt me out, asking if there was a possibility of a change in this.

Q. He wanted you to change your views?

A. Modify them, shall we say.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ARUN SINGH

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

He went and had a very big dust-up with the PM. He was torn betwen loyalty to the man and what was right... Till then I had assumed there was nothing wrong with the contract.

One of the major reasons Arun Singh resigned was he felt nothing should be done to harm the army which is untouched by the crumbling processes affecting some other institutions.

Q. In those words?

A. It was very tentatively put. He said 'government has taken a decision and this (note) is awkward and is it possible for you to modify your views.'

Q. What did you do?

A. I asked tentatively what exactly he meant by modification. I then said 'No, this is my considered view and it is going to stay that way. If you don't want it (the note) you need not take it'. So that piece of paper was handed back to me. I took it back, gave it to my military assistant (MA) saying it had been returned and as far as I was concerned he could shred it. But as I learnt later on, he had not.

Q. He kept it on file? Are you sure?

A. Let me finish. This was around the first week of July. On the 14th of July, I remember the date clearly, Bhatnagar rushed into my office waving a piece of paper. It was a letter from Serla Grewal (then PM's secretary) saying the PM was upset that the Defence Ministry had not sent him the assessment he had asked for, of the implications of cancellation of the Bofors contract. Bhatnagar seemed quite agitated about it. I read the letter and said let's go see Arun Singh. We walked into Arun Singh's office. He read it. I said I did not know what the Defence Ministry had sent to the PM, but as far as I was concerned I could give my views again on the strategic impact (of cancellation), on security. I told Bhatnagar I was going back and putting down exactly what I had said in my earlier note.

Q. You did not tell Arun Singh that you had given an earlier note?

A. It was implied in what I stated.

Q. You were indirectly informing Arun Singh you had given your views on this?

A. That's right. That is what was implied. At that moment it did not strike me to enquire from Arun whether he had seen the original note or not. However, I went back to my office, called my MA and asked him if he remembered the points made in the earlier note. That's when he told me that he had not obeyed my orders to shred that note. He produced the original note along with the office copy.

Q. Does that note show it was received in the Defence Ministry and had come back from the defence secretary?

A. Yes, yes. It was dated as received on 13th of June. The receipt given by his private secretary was also on the file. I had the note retyped, dated it 14th of July, 1987 and had it delivered. That's the last I know about it. That (file) stayed with me and when I handed over charge, my MA told me he had handed over the file to my successor's MA.

Q. The whole correspondence?

A. This particular one. At that time it had a lot of security value and was being rated as top secret because it dealt with our assessment, and the security implications of the delay and our vulnerability in the time gap. Today after thinking it over I think the security value no longer attaches to it. It has more historical than security value. For all I know, technically, it is perhaps still top secret. Therefore, I might be accused of discussing with the press a classified matter.

Q. Did you subsequently ask anybody why your views were not accepted?

A. This happened on the 14th and soon after that (July 18) Arun Singh put in his resignation. That was that.

Q. Was his resignation connected with the stand you had taken?

A. I think so.

Q. Arun Singh would probably have taken it up with the prime minister saying this is the army chief's view.

A. Perhaps he would have. That is my belief.

Q. It's surprising that Arun Singh, aware of what the prime minister's attitude was, from the July 4 meeting, still went and took it up with the PM after he got your letter.

A. I think he went and had a very big dust-up with the PM. He was torn between his loyalty to the man and what he felt was right. It's a great pity. That's when my first misgivings started. When you have a very firm perception of somebody it doesn't change suddenly, overnight. It takes time. Even your subconscious refuses to believe certain things which your senses tell you, you ought to believe.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

This was the beginning. Till then I had assumed there was nothing to hide. Turn the screws and get the information.

Q. Till then you had assumed there was nothing wrong with the contract?

A. Absolutely.

Q. If your misgivings started after July 4, then the subsequent letter from the PM's office, saying that the PM had not been informed of the implications of the cancellation, must have appeared to be a deliberate cover-up.

A. To be thoroughly honest, I had given my letter to the Ministry of Defence and I didn't know whether they sent it up.

Q. But since you had also told Gopi Arora, it's fair to assume that either he or the defence secretary, if not both, would have conveyed your views to the PM.

A. Correct. Agreed.

Q. That's probably why Serla Grewal wrote back, rather than Gopi Arora?

A. That was the cause of disgust as far as Arun Singh was concerned. One of the major reasons why Arun Singh resigned was he felt nothing should be done to harm the army, which is one of the institutions left relatively untouched by the crumbling processes affecting some other institutions.

Q. Did he tell you as much?

A: Not perhaps in so many words, but the sense of it was that he would rather resign and take it upon himself than let the army be harmed by the Bofors controversy. He is a totally honest and honourable man and he should come out and help the truth emerge in the interest of the service and the country.

Q. The truth about who took the payment?

A. Whatever. To my way of thinking, in the JPC and subsequently, too much has been made of the nuance-change in judging the qualities of the guns. This has led to an over-emphasis on the rationale, propriety and possible motives behind the nuance-change rather than on the major issue, which is—who has made the money. The real question is: who took the money?

Q. Would you like to say who made the money? Do you have a reasoned guess as to where the money could have gone?

A. I have no proof, so I can only go by the general belief of what has happened in the past. Generally many governments have been getting a percentage of many of these large deals, whether defence deals or otherwise, perhaps for party funds. I don't think this is a new phenomenon. It's been going on for some time. The fact is that irrespective of which weapon is chosen, if the intention is to cream a certain amount off the top for party purposes or whatever, it could be creamed off whichever weapon is chosen.

Q. Any manufacturer would be willing to pay?

A. Of course. It's well known. As a matter of fact if the French weapon had been finally chosen, perhaps they would have got a similar percentage. Most politicians realise this and yet they act as if they are totally innocent. This being so, from my point of view where is the compulsion to push one weapon or the other. This is exactly why, as far as the army is concerned, we make sure that what goes into the shortlist is fundamentally acceptable. Thereafter from our point of view it is immaterial which one is chosen.

Q. But for the person, or the Government looking for a cut, the bigger the cut, the better the gun. If money is the criterion, then more money should be the best criterion?

A. Maybe. I don't know how these things work.

Q. Is this government different from others in that respect?

A. It does not appear to be so. I have no definite knowledge either in this deal or in earlier deals, but the general belief was that money was being made.

Q. Have you heard about army generals being approached with offers of money?

A. I have not heard of any such instances, but it does not appear unlikely given the ethos etc.

Q. We have a statement by Lt. Gen. H.Kaul that he was approached with an offer of Rs 2.5 crore if he agreed to change the order of preference on the shortlist.

A. Did he inform the Government?

THE BUREAUCRACY

S.K. BHATNAGAR

N.N. VOHRA

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Defence Secretary Bhatnagar tentatively felt me out... He said the Government had taken a decision and my note was awkward. And was it possible for me to modify my views?

Vohra came back from the (prime minister's) meeting somewhat disgusted and I believe he booked calls to Bofors to tell its officials not to come. They were already coming.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PAY-OFFS

Bofors delegation to JPC

BHAWAN SINGH

In the JPC and subsequently, too much has been made of the nuance-change in judging the qualities of the guns, rather than the major issue. The real question is: who took the money?

Generally many governments have been getting a percentage of these large deals, perhaps for party funds. I don't think this is a new phenomenon. It's been going on for some time.

Q. He says he informed the Government. He told Bhatnagar. He says he went to see the minister, who was out of town. So he went and met Vaidya and Bhatnagar.

A. Why didn't they take action against the chap who offered the bribe? I had not heard about it but I think it is preposterous that no action was taken. If they know who offered the money and it was based on information the company should not have had, some action should have been taken. At least the leak had to be investigated. The person may deny he offered the money but it has to be investigated.

Q. Bhatnagar told the JPC he informed all four manufacturers in May 1985 that they would not tolerate middlemen. Bofors officials told the JPC that they were told seriously to remove middlemen only in November of 1985, that is following the New York meeting. What has also come out now is that in November of 1985, instead of terminating contracts, Bofors signed an agreement with one of the three agents promising to pay 3 per cent commission on the Indian contract. It conveys the impression that by November of 1985 Bofors was pretty sure it would get the gun order.

A. I get what you are suggesting but I have no idea at all...

Q. If people say General Sundarji was part of that scenario? That you were drawn in?

A. It's totally untrue. Nobody in the Ministry of Defence, or Arun Singh or the defence minister in any way suggested, hinted or indicated to me what my view should be.

Q. Did you ever wonder that your view was accepted too quickly, almost without question by the negotiating committee which had till then questioned every opinion and action of the army?

A. I cannot comment on that. I made my judgement totally on objective factors. The committee had raised questions in the past, and could continue to question, but sometime they had to take a decision. I cannot see the logic of the argument that unless they dragged their feet on it, it was not a genuine decision. As far as the army is concerned, we don't question when someone takes a decision. We just say shukar hai.

But I do want to mention one other thing about the guns. In December of 1982, when I assessed the guns I had taken it that all four guns were capable of 30 km range. That was a basic assumption. It was a reasonable extrapolation, in the view of our artillery experts. Subsequently during 1983 and 1984, somewhere along the line in my view, the assessment got skewed to the extent of wanting to make the French gun the only gun. That skewing had been done, whether deliberately or not. I am not making allegations, by saying that they would take the range of the Swedish gun to be 21 km.

Q. So you felt that the range of the Swedish gun was being held down, almost intentionally, to devalue the gun?

A. Yes. There was no fair competition. It was being tailored to become a one-horse race. The Austrians were out, the British were dropped from the shortlist, and if the Swedish gun was being assessed as having only a 21.4 km range then it had no goddamn business to be on the shortlist. The whole thing was being so oriented: all the matrices drawn up, the values given were in my view totally bogus.

Q. And you corrected what you thought was an injected bias?

A. I believe the DWE had been given instructions which would have biased them against the Bofors gun. One was on the question of range. I told them to forget any instructions which would tilt the competition unfairly and crank in whatever factors had come up in the recent past and make an objective assesment.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Q. How does Lt Gen. Mayadas' choice of the Austrian gun fit into all this?

A. Mayadas himself is honest, but his whole technical evaluation committee was, I believe, set up with the sole intention of pushing the Austrian gun. There was a whole set of people in the Defence Ministry who were dissatisfied with the way the army was pushing the French gun, almost as the only choice. So they started a parallel technical evaluation committee, which had never been done before. The Indian representative of the Austrian manufacturer, Noricum, was the son-in-law of a retired artillery major-general. I have a suspicion, I hope I am wrong, that they got at someone in DWE who more or less stage-managed this whole exercise.

General Vaidya, the deputy chief Gen Kaul and the Director General of Artillery Jaggi Malhotra did not like this one bit. So Mayadas was transferred out as well as his junior who had put him up to it. I think the Government of India also has files on the lobby operating in government on behalf of the French gun. I had the feeling that this lobby was firing their gun from my shoulder (using my 1982 evaluation). From 1983 to 1985 this went on.

Q. So maybe your final decision (in favour of the Swedish gun) was influenced by this realisation?

A. Regretfully it was. I keep asking myself, how much of this ultimate decision was really because I felt so, and how much because I felt so much wrong was going on. I cannot answer it but I keep asking myself every day. You don't know how much better I feel, having told you everything.

Q. About the French lobby being in action. Was it told to you? It could be disinformation, to spur you into acting in a particular manner.

A. Not at all. I was told there was a file and the French gun was being pushed. It was quite blatant.

Q. There appears to be a new willingness on the part of people to talk about things, to cleanse the system of the stigma of this deal. Do you think a lot of people now feel that the truth should be out?

A. I was always convinced that the truth will be out. The truth has to come out. It will be a very sad world if the truth does not come out.

Q. Maybe you will have played a part in that.

A. A minor part.

ON HIMSELF

SHYAM TEKWANI

Too many of us are prepared to go along. You take a joker like me living in Alcatraz. If the Government decides tomorrow that I need no Alcatraz, Alcatraz will be withdrawn.

I am quite prepared to take the consequences for speaking out. They can harass me, they are welcome to. What the hell can they take apart from life and bloody liberty.

Q. Chaturvedi (the CAG) had played a major part.

A. The CAG has had a big role to play. He has done what he had to do, and I have no reservations about the CAG's role. I think he is perfectly justified in commenting on the systems. But I honestly don't know how effectively the Ministry of Defence put forward its defence. Quite often the ministry itself does not understand the finer points of professional decision-making. When somebody who is not a professional, tries to explain to somebody else who is also not a professional there is a vast scope for (misunderstanding). The ministry is not able to carry credibility.

Q. After the CAG report, a lot of people are willing to stand up and be counted. That's a plus point.

A. Absolutely, but I am still cynical enough to believe that too many of us are prepared to go along. You take a joker like me, who is already living in Alcatraz. If the Government of India decides tomorrow that I need no Alcatraz, Alcatraz will be removed.

Q. Does that really worry you?

A. It does not. If it worried me, do you think I would talk to you. I am quite prepared to take the consequences for speaking out. They can harass me, they are welcome to. What the hell can they take apart from life and bloody liberty.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CBI

Playing Politics

The CBI, the country's premier investigating agency, has been transformed into a political tool of the ruling party. Its increasingly controversial role under current Director Mohan Katre has eroded the image of the organisation.

The CBI's credibility as a fair, impartial investigative body, so assiduously acquired over 22 years, has taken a pummelling in the last three years. It is now viewed as the political gendarme of the ruling party, and is derided as the "Congress Bureau of Investigation".

Last fortnight when the Indian Express produced what it called irrefutable evidence linking CBI Director, M.G. Katre's son, Umesh, with Reliance Industries (see accompanying story), and the Opposition demanded Katre's removal, attention was also focused on the CBI's worsening record.

Its once exemplary record of 75 per cent convictions has dipped by around 5 per cent since 1987. The reasons are clear. The CBI's plate is full of politically sensitive cases other agencies should be handling. Many of its top sleuths are engaged in this work and they find it demoralising.

Seven opposition states are yet to give the CBI permission to take up cases under the Prevention of Corruption Act, amended last year. In Andhra Pradesh, 90 cases involving over 200 government servants and over Rs 10 crore in frauds are pending because the state Government barred the CBI.

The Opposition's distrust has also blocked legislation to reorganise the CBI's functions. The committee headed by the cabinet secretary had suggested a major overhaul, involving amendment of the Constitution, in order to allow the CBI to undertake investigations of certain crimes without the permission of the state Government.

Politicisation of the CBI is not new. In 1969, Mrs Indira Gandhi ordered raids against the Birla group because she felt it had links with her adversaries. During the Emergency, Sanjay Gandhi used the CBI to silence critics and raise party funds. And R.K. Dhawan, now officer on special duty in the cabinet secretariat, routinely instructed the then CBI director, D. Sen.

Gurumurthy being arrested

Chandraswamy after his arrest

Nehru and Jalappa

Some of the cases given to the CBI have more to do with politics than crime. Their handling has damaged its exemplary record.

The Shah Commission during Janata rule accused Sen of bending to the whims of his political bosses. When former director, John Lobo, stood firm against political pressure, Charan Singh, the then home minister, created a special cell under protege R.D. Singh. Clearly, its political masters played a major role in undermining the CBI.

But the present crisis in the bureau is unprecedented. It has its roots in the rapid change of roles thrust upon it by the Rajiv Government. From a confident phase, when it was told to prosecute the belligerent Indian Express, the CBI soon slipped into the role of a cover-up agency for a panicky government. So, while the bureau has often been used to harass the Government's opponents, this is the first time it has been accused of shielding corruption.

Katre dismisses the charges as "nonsense". His confidence emanates from his closeness to the Prime Minister's Office (PMO). Since Rajiv Gandhi is also the minister of personnel, Katre deals mostly with the powerful bureaucrats who have Rajiv's ear, earlier Serla Grewal and Gopi Arora, and now B.G. Deshmukh. Though the CBI falls under the Department of Personnel and the Home Ministry, officials in both departments stay clear of the bureau as does Minister of State for Personnel P. Chidambaram.

Initially, Katre used this exceptional clout for the good of the bureau. In the first two years of his tenure, he turned the organisation around. An extra post of additional director was created to streamline distribution of work. The number of vehicles was doubled. Every office got textel and fax machines. And, crucially, special intelligence units were created in the four regional offices. "He gets what he wants," commented a colleague.

But if the Government gives, it takes as well. Some of the cases given to the CBI recently have had more to do with politics than crime. Their

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MOHAN KATRE

"I am doing my job"

Mohan Ganesh Katre, 60, is perhaps the CBI*'s most controversial director. Two years ago he was due to retire. The Government offered to make him special director in charge of sensitive cases. Katre turned down the offer and the Government had to bend—he continued as director. His bosses clearly needed him more than he needed the job. Katre began his tenure in the top post with a bang in 1985, streamlining and expanding the organisation. But soon, allegations of covering up for the Government surfaced. And then, last fortnight, when Katre was at the receiving end of charges linking his son Umesh with Reliance Industries, the Government stood staunchly by him. Katre spoke to Senior Correspondent* PANKAJ PACHAURI last fortnight. Excerpts:

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Q. How do you feel about your family being investigated?

A. They tailed my son for two days before the story appeared. Correspondents parked their jeeps for hours in front of my flat in Bombay. My daughter-in-law was alone with two children. She rang me up to complain about the harassment. I talked to the commissioner of police and only after he sent some plainclothesmen, did the reporters go away. She was so upset answering the calls that I had to ask my DIG to send a peon to man the phone.

Q. What is your reaction to the Express charges?

A. The main charge is that Saras is a benami firm for my son. Saras Director Kamlesh Shah, who is an old friend of my family, has denied that. Now the question is how did my son do business with the Express reporter on the Saras name? If they had approached Kamlesh Shah, produced a bank draft for an order, he would have done the same for my son's company. Why didn't they ask Shah how much he knows about my son's business. They work together and know each other's business.

Q. What about the connection with Reliance?

A. Reliance Industries is only one of the many companies they deal with. They got the agency through a newspaper advertisement.

Q. The charge pertains to your intimacy with Reliance.

A. In 1985 the Industry Ministry requested us to investigate the source of official documents quoted in an Express article on Reliance. I sent the request to my junior who was dealing with such offences. He noted that along with the ministry's request, the charges against Reliance should also be investigated. We filed FIRs against both, though I would have been within my rights to ignore Reliance and ask him to pursue only the charge under the Official Secrets Act.

Q. But now the Law Ministry says that the Official Secrets Act charge against Express is untenable.

A. I don't know about that. We have sent our investigations to the Home Ministry. It's up to them.

Q. Do you think the Wadia conspiracy case warranted CBI intervention?

A. The CBI cannot take up cases on its own. The Maharashtra Government requested the Central Government, which ordered us to take up the case.

Q. Why haven't you prosecuted Reliance in the last two years?

A. We cannot move till the other departments complain to us. The Directorate of Enforcement has decided not to lodge a complaint. The Chief Controller of Imports and Exports has not got back to us yet in two years.

Q. Do you think the credibility of the CBI has been eroded?

A. Our credibility remains the same. Courts all over the country hand over about 80 cases to us in a year. About 50 requests come from the states.

Q. The Opposition has sought your resignation.

A. Why should I resign? A newspaper has levelled charges against my son without talking to him. As a senior government servant I have voluntarily written to my bosses twice, clarifying my position. If they want to start an inquiry, I am ready. We will counter all the charges in court.

Q. The Opposition has accused the CBI of playing a partisan role.

A. It is only when they are involved, that they criticise the CBI. We have also taken up cases against Congressmen. We prosecuted Congress(I) MP Tapeshwar Singh, we prosecuted a former chief minister (of Arunachal Pradesh).

Q. But you failed in the Bofors case.

A. We are a government agency and cannot work like journalists to obtain information. We officially asked the Swiss authorities for access to the Svenska accounts, which received the biggest share. We told them that Win Chadha had evaded tax and committed fraud because he had given false taxation documents to the Government here.

Q. What was their reply?

A. They said non-declaration and evasion of tax was not a criminal offence under Swiss laws. It is a fiscal law offence. Access to bank accounts is given only when the offence is criminal in both countries. If someone concocts documents only then will the Swiss call it a fraud and criminal offence.

Q. What are you doing about it now?

A. We will write to them again.

Q. There is also criticism regarding your extended tenure.

A. The Government has given me this job and I am doing it.

Q. What is your view about having a fixed tenure for CBI chiefs?

A. It is a good idea.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

handling has blotted the CBI record.

For the country's top investigating agency, these are serious lapses. Rues a senior official: "Due to a few rotten fish, the whole basket seems to be smelling." Besides, these cases have taken up a lot of the CBI's time. Despite a 15-per cent vacancy in its ranks, CBI officials are asked to help in proceedings like the Joint Parliamentary Committee probe on Bofors and the judicial inquiry into the hiring of Fairfax. Commented a DIG: "There is a tendency to take up cases which in the past were politely refused."

What is irking officials of the bureau is the fact that while they attract flak on such cases, serious work done by them is totally glossed over. "It demoralises the men," observes one official. But what troubles them most is the inexplicable second extension given to Katre last year. During his first extension, Katre's immediate junior, joint director Radhakrishnan Nayar, had already been announced as his successor by the Government. When he was denied the post, Nayar took premature retirement. Moreover, Katre's continuation as director is blocking the promotions of at least a dozen IPS officers in the organisation.

Says a former CBI director: "The people still trust the organisation as a police agency. But they balk at its political hatchetry." With Katre in the saddle—and his image of being the ruling party's crisis manager—the CBI's legendary detecting skills and its apolitical role now obviously belong to hoary history.

—PANKAJ PACHAURI

PRASHANT PANJIAR

The CBI was often used to harass opponents, but it's now being used by a panicky government to shield corruption.

Controversial Cases

IN recent times, the CBI's role in several sensitive political cases has been criticised. Examples:

► It wrote to the Swiss Government asking it to reveal the names of the persons behind the Svenska account who received kickbacks in the Bofors gun deal. The CBI named Win Chadha as a suspect but is yet to file a case against him. Later, Chidambaram told the Lok Sabha that no Indians were involved in the kickbacks—an example of how the Government changes CBI findings to suit its interests.

► The CBI prosecuted Nusli Wadia for misrepresenting his citizenship and charged that he was financing the Indian Express investigation of Amitabh Bachchan's holdings abroad. Immigration authorities deal with passport matters. But the CBI deputed half a dozen sleuths to probe the matter.

► When the Express was wooing Chandraswamy to elicit information on Bofors, he was grilled by the CBI on the basis of a British resident's complaint that he had been cheated by the godman. However, Chandraswamy soon switched sides and was allowed to travel abroad. Nothing has come of the case.

► The CBI arrested Janata Dal leader Sanjay Singh in the Syed Modi murder case. Selected leaks showed that it was predisposed to implicate him. There was a rift among the officials about the leaks but the official media gave wide coverage to the charges.

► It prosecuted Indian Express financial adviser and columnist, S. Gurumurthy, for violating the Official Secrets Act when he wrote against Reliance Industries, quoting official documents. The Law Ministry has held that the charge does not come under the purview of the Official Secrets Act.

► The bureau filed a case against former Karnataka home minister, R.L. Jalappa, for conspiring to murder Kerala lawyer Abdul Rasheed. Jalappa resigned due to the ensuing controversy. Now the CBI has pinned only two charges on him: that of transferring a deputy commissioner of police to the area where the victim was killed and of partially hiding information from the Assembly.

► The CBI probed the Express report by Editor Arun Shourie on Congress(I) MP Kamal Nath's illegal foreign accounts. It found that the documents quoted were authentic. Instead of taking up the case with the Enforcement Directorate and the Reserve Bank of India, it has been shelved.

► It probed the charges made by S. Thangarasu, an AIADMK (Janaki) faction MP, that the Jayalalitha faction tried bribing him. The CBI found that the amount of Rs 5 lakh belonged to the MP and was not given as a bribe. It has, however, not shown any interest in tracing the source of the money.

► The CBI inquired into the involvement of the Delhi Administration and civic officials in the violation of building plans for a New Delhi hotel. Despite detecting a bungling of Rs 36 crore, no case has been made out. The hotel owner had earlier held posts in the Congress(I).

► In 1988, the bureau raided the house and office of the New Delhi Municipal Committee Chairman, Dharam Dutt. It filed an FIR but is yet to file a chargesheet against the powerful bureaucrat.

► It initiated proceedings against Rajiv Gandhi's adversary, Arun Nehru, for allegedly causing a loss of Rs 19 lakh to the Government in the Czech pistol deal while he was minister for internal security.

—PANKAJ PACHAURI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KATRE-RELIANCE

A Tangled Web

An expose establishes a Mohan Katre-Reliance link

FOR some time now whispers about an underhand link between Dhirubhai Ambani's Reliance Industries and Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) Director, Mohan Katre, have been circulating. But besides the possession of a few hundred shares, no substantial connection could be established.

Until last fortnight when an intrepid Bombay journalist, Maneck Davar, pretended to be a small-scale detergent manufacturer and virtually entrapped Katre's son Umesh, 31, into revealing his potentially lucrative, newly-forged link with the Reliance business empire (see box).

Umesh Katre (left) and Davar; damning exposure

Is Mohan Katre's son a commission sales agent for Reliance Industries? Umesh quit his job with Mafatlal Apparels last December to set up a garment export company called Spice Islands Apparels Pvt Ltd. The company's registration lists two chartered accountants as its shareholders, who, together, had invested just Rs 200 in the company's authorised capital of Rs 5 lakh. Spice Islands was set up on November 17, 1988. Umesh Katre's visiting card identifies him as a director of the company. The address and phone numbers on his card are those of another chartered accountant, Dinesh B. Mehta.

Spice Islands was registered with the Apparel Export Promotion Council only on April 13 this year. Already, it has contracts worth Rs 50 lakh from West Germany, a highly competitive market.

Umesh's friend, Kamlesh Shah, meanwhile, had been running the Modern Chemical Corporation. Modern Chemical is the flagship of a clutch of private limited companies and partnership firms run by Bhogilal Shah, an old friend of the Katre family. In December 1987, Reliance Industries appointed Modern Chemical Corporation as one of the distributors for its new product, LAB. In October 1988, the distributorship was transferred from Modern Chemical to a firm called Saras Chemicals.

Saras Chemicals was incorporated in October 1988, around the time Umesh decided to resign from Mafatlals. But there is another link between Reliance and Saras—the new detergent Sasa, promoted by the Shree Mahila Griha Udyog (makers of Lijjat papad) with Reliance's help

Maneck Davar's Account

August 14, 10 a.m. I spot Umesh Katre entering a white Mercedes with a lady and tail him to Clark House.

August 14, 10.20 a.m. The watchman informs me: "Katre Saab's Saras Chemicals is on the 2nd floor."

August 16, 11 a.m. Posing as 'Naresh Vohra' of Brilliance Chemical Industries, I tell Umesh I need 3 tonnes of LAB.

August 16, 11.20 a.m. Umesh Katre actually rings up Reliance to find out if the material is available.

August 16, 4.00 p.m. I bug my phone and call Umesh to confirm delivery from Reliance. Link established.

August 17, 2.00 p.m. I bring Yogesh Kamdar as witness to Umesh's office. Umesh types order to Reliance.

August 17, 2.15 p.m. Umesh gives me receipts for Rs 1,01,257.80 in the name of Saras Chemicals.

August 17, 2.30 p.m. Yogesh Kamdar visits the Reliance office in Tulsiani Chambers to collect the delivery order.

August 17. I return to my office and collate all the evidence I had collected linking Umesh Katre to Reliance.

August 18. Indian Express front-pages the entire episode in an article titled: "How I got Katre and son."

Illustration by AJIT NINAN and B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

last December. Sasa is without doubt another brilliant move by the Ambanis. Reliance is one of the three Indian manufacturers of linear alkyl benzene (LAB), a petrochemical by-product which constitutes about 20 per cent of the raw material input for synthetic detergent. The total demand for LAB in India is 120,000 tonnes. Reliance's share of the capacity is 60,000 tonnes. Three more companies, including Hindustan Lever and Nirma, both of which produce synthetic detergents, have now been given licences to produce LAB which will add over 200,000 tonnes to the installed capacity. Sasa kills two birds with one stone—it challenges Nirma's domination of the booming inexpensive detergent market while it guarantees an outlet for Reliance's LAB.

The synthetic detergent market is estimated to be worth Rs 1,500 crore, of which nearly two-third is constituted of cheap detergent powders and soaps. But the market is growing rapidly and is expected to double in the next 10 years. Nirma dominates the lower-priced detergent market, and will be competing with Reliance by making LAB also. Sasa can stop Nirma dead in its tracks.

Since December last year, when the first Sasa plant was set up in Bombay, four others have come up, while 31 more are planned throughout the country. By the end of 1990, Sasa could be producing 100,000 tonnes annually, against the current production of 22 tonnes a day. Since the Mahila Udyog comes under the umbrella of the Khadi Village Industries Commission, efforts are on to get Sasa exempted from sales tax and excise. Gujarat recently exempted Sasa from sales tax. If excise exemption is also given, and other states follow Gujarat's lead, Sasa will enjoy a whopping 40 per cent price advantage—enough to wipe out market leader Nirma whose trumpcard so far has been its low price compared with products like Hindustan Lever's Surf.

When Saras Chemicals was launched, Kamlesh Shah and K. Thyagaraj, Reliance's general manager (commercial), told the press that Saras Chemicals would provide turnkey services to set up detergent units and would offer technical know-how along with Reliance. The

Katre-Reliance Link

October, 1988: Saras Chemicals incorporated.
Directors/shareholders: Bhogilal Shah, Kundan Shah, Kamlesh Shah, Aruna Shah and Maharoukh Irani (wife of Umesh Katre's school friend)

October, 1988: Reliance Industries appoints Saras Chemicals as its distributors for LAB.

November, 1988: Umesh Katre quits Mafatlal to set up Spice Islands Apparels Pvt Ltd. His visiting card lists the same fax and telex number as Saras.

August, 1989: Umesh Katre gives 'Naresh Vohra' a quotation for Reliance LAB on Saras Chemicals' letterhead and also signs as Director of Saras. He personally accepts a demand draft for Rs 97,507.80 as payment for three tonnes of LAB.

Katre tells 'Vohra' that Saras Chemicals was supplying LAB to Shree Mahila Griha Udyog, makers of Sasa detergent and helping to set up Sasa detergent plants.

Kamlesh Shah and K. Thyagaraj, a Reliance official, announce that Saras would provide turnkey services to set up detergent units along with Reliance. Mahila Udyog will be the first Saras customer. Shah later says Modern and Saras Chemicals have earned Rs 59,079 as LAB commissions from Reliance so far.

Sasa will also guarantee an outlet for Reliance LAB—estimates are that the Mahila Udyog will require 20,000 tonnes of LAB annually for the 36 Sasa plants it plans to set up.

If the Mahila Udyog were to buy LAB through Saras Chemicals, the company's commission would be around Rs 1 crore a year.

Mahila Udyog says that it is no longer dealing with Saras Chemicals and is buying LAB directly from Reliance.

Mahila Udyog would be the first Saras Chemicals customer. Last month, Umesh Katre told 'Naresh Vohra' that Saras Chemicals was not merely supplying LAB to the Mahila Udyog but was also helping set up the Sasa detergent plants. Yet according to documents supplied by Saras Chemicals, the company sold Reliance's LAB to the Mahila Udyog only between February and April, 1989.

Rukminibai Pawar, head of the Rs 25-crore turnover Mahila Udyog, also insisted that her organisation began purchasing LAB directly from Reliance in April. She described the fact that Saras Chemicals had helped set up the Sasa units as "a lie" and added: "We have only taken guidance from Reliance."

Nevertheless, a Reliance source insisted that "the entire LAB was given to Lijjat by Kamlesh Shah, and Sasa was promoted by Shah". If the Mahila Udyog sets up many of its planned 36 detergent plants, and succeeds in gaining an invincible price advantage through excise exemptions, production could reach 100,000 tonnes annually by end 1990. For this, the Mahila Udyog will require 20,000 tonnes of LAB annually.

If this were to come from Reliance via Saras Chemicals, then the commission from just the supply of LAB to the Mahila Udyog would work out to a staggering Rs 1 crore.

Clearly, if Umesh Katre's negotiations with 'Naresh Vohra' were not just to help out a friend but to promote an actual—if benami—interest in Saras Chemicals, he can look forward to a tidy annual income from LAB sales commissions.

Meanwhile, the joint CBI-Bombay Police investigation ordered by the Supreme Court into the Wadia murder conspiracy case took off sluggishly. The police assigned Senior Inspector, Keshav Sahastrabudhe, who played a

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SIEMENS

Sweet Nothings

Doing away with outmoded methods of sugar manufacture, Siemens have moved into process automation of sugar plants. This ensures faster through-put and fuller utilisation of the plant, better grades of sugar at lower prices for people across the country. Machines to release man from manual labour and highly intricate consoles designed to think for him as well. Automation is a sign of our times, evidence of the application of scientific knowledge to practical problems.

High technology with a human face. Whether it is control and automation systems or railway signalling equipment, medical electronics, switchgear, switchboards, drives, motors or new dimensions in telecommunications, Siemens focusses technology on human problems, human needs. Its close association with Siemens AG, W. Germany, helps keep Siemens in India in the frontline of international technology. With 120 years of experience in the country, Siemens is committed to India's progress and shares its hopes for the future.

As technology changes the face of the future, Siemens will be one of the foremost companies helping India keep pace with the world.

Siemens Ltd.,
P.O. Box 6597, Bombay 400 018

Siemens. Where international technology meets human needs.

LINTAS SM 159 2720

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ARDEN WOMAN.
EVER CHANGING
CT NEVER CHANGING.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

THE EXCLUSIVE 1989 RANGE OF 'STUDIOLINE' SILK AND PURE CHIFFON SAREES IS AVAILABLE AT MOST GARDEN-VARELI OUTLETS.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

G 606 8

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Weston®
The Biggest Name in Televisions

More Weston Televisions are switched on by more people in more towns than any other television.

Everyday over 1.5 million Weston televisions are switched on, with pride.

And everyday millions of people watch their favourite programmes come alive on Weston.

And, of course, nearly everybody has seen at least one programme on a Weston television.

These are a few facts that have made Weston the biggest name in Televisions.

Weston
SERVICE CENTRE FOR HITACHI

Weston®
The electronics people

Ant/WE/409

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

crucial role in the arrest of Kirti Ambani and Babaria, to assist the CBI team along with another inspector. Out on bail, Kirti and Babaria reported at the CBI office every day between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. as ordered by the magistrate. Before their questioning began, the CBI sleuths interrogated 'Shanu' and 'Verma', the two criminals who were to participate in the alleged murder attempt. According to a police source, both stood by their sworn statements given earlier to a magistrate.

Wadia himself got a breather from his latest problem—the Bombay High Court stayed the deportation of the British passport-holding textile magnate until his citizenship case is decided. But some days before the judgement, a large number of Bombay Dyeing employees took out a procession to Raj Bhavan demanding immediate Indian citizenship for the 45-year-old chairman. Once again, it seemed, the Ambani-Wadia squabble had spilled out into the streets, albeit in a peaceful manner. And once again, it was impossible to predict what the next dramatic development would be in the ongoing battle between the two business tycoons.

—M. RAHMAN and RAGHU NANDAN DHAR

VASANT SARAF

"We are not pawns in anybody's hands"

Vasant Keshaorao Saraf, 55, who took over as Bombay's police commissioner in August 1987, has maintained a low profile. Until last month when the arrest of Kirti Ambani, a top Reliance executive, in the Nusli Wadia murder conspiracy case suddenly focused national attention on the Bombay police. In this interview with Bureau Chief M. RAHMAN and Senior Correspondent RAGHU NANDAN DHAR, he responds for the first time, to the controversy generated by the arrest. Excerpts:

NAMAS BHOJANI

Q. How did the police come across the Wadia murder conspiracy case?

A. We have a good criminal intelligence system. The Crime Branch has a number of contacts in the underworld. In this case, a contact of one of our sub-inspectors informed him there was a supari (contract) out for a bada admi (a big fellow). In the beginning, our attitude was the same as yours—we did not believe it. Then we questioned the underworld fixer, Babaria. And along with interrogation, we started trying to corroborate their story independently.

Q. When were you convinced of the veracity of the story?

A. Even after Babaria was grilled a good deal, and his house was checked, we remained tentative. But after questioning the hit man Shanu, and coming across other independent corroboration, we realised that it was not a concocted story. For 13 days, more than one experienced officer questioned them, and the story held.

Q. There have been conflicting reports about the kind of evidence collected by the police.

A. I don't know how these stories get planted. For instance, that the police recovered diamonds given as payment from Babaria's house. There is no truth in it. Whatever we have seized is with the CBI now.

Q. It is said that Kirti Ambani's telephone conversations recorded by the police actually relate to share transactions.

A. Anybody who hears the tapes will not come to that conclusion.

Q. Wouldn't somebody wanting to kill a big businessman go to somebody like Dawood Ibrahim and not small fry like Babaria?

A. Babaria is not a killer. He was an intermediary. He is a blabber-mouth and claimed to be friendly with Dawood Ibrahim's gang, with Dawood's brother Noora, with Haji Mastan. So obviously he was believed.

Q. What about the charge that the police have been manipulated to concoct a case against the Ambanis?

A. I stoutly deny it. It is insulting to say we are a part of some conspiracy. Maybe outside Maharashtra it's not fully realised that the police enjoy a lot of autonomy here. We aren't pawns in anybody's hands.

Q. Could the Crime Branch have been a victim of a hoax?

A. The Crime Branch has a national reputation for its investigative skills. My officers cannot be taken in by such a hoax. If we were so gullible, the first time somebody came to us with the story we would have registered a case and called the press. Our first informant gave us a good enough picture. But we took special efforts to see that the story did not leak out. Why should we have done this unless we wanted enough time to verify every bit of the story?

Q. Did the police inability to interrogate fully Kirti Ambani and Babaria after their arrests affect investigations?

A. Babaria was interrogated before his arrest, though more details could have come out during further interrogation. But in Kirti Ambani's case, perhaps a lot more could have been obtained if interrogation had gone on. Now the advantage of surprise is lost. Moreover, anybody who had anything to do with the case will try and obliterate his prints.

Q. How will the Bombay police and the CBI work together on this case?

A. We are all for cooperation. We gave the case to the CBI without rancour, even though the press said we were unhappy. Nothing of the sort. We did not take up the case because of any personal animosity. It came to us, and I insist—as professional policemen we had no alternative but to pursue the information we received to its logical end. I do hope the CBI will take advantage of our officers who understand the case very well. And we have contacts all over.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

V.P. SINGH

Slush Slinging

As the Mr Clean of Indian politics, Vishwanath Pratap Singh faced accusations of stashing away millions of dollars in the Caribbean, many felt that this was the latest counter-offensive missile fired by the ruling party's Dirty Tricks Department.

FOR some months now, ruling party supporters have been hinting that the Mr Clean of Indian politics, opposition leader Vishwanath Pratap Singh, was going to be exposed as being more corrupt than any of those he has crusaded against. Last week, the expected exposures came tumbling out in screaming headlines claiming that the former finance minister had squirreled away millions of dollars in an off-shore trust corporation in the Caribbean.

Supported by documents and suggestive interviews with the former managing director of the trust, the 'investigations' attempted to prove that Singh, with the help of his son, Ajeya Singh, a middle-level bank executive in the US, had stashed $21 million (Rs 31 crore) in a secret bank account in the Caribbean island of St Kitts during his tenure as finance minister.

On the face of it, the charges were serious enough. If true, they could demolish Singh's advancing political career and completely scuttle the Opposition's chances in the approaching elections. In terms of its timing alone, the exposures were devastating. The main details were:

- Ajeya Singh, an executive of Citibank in New York, opened an account (Number 29479) on September 16, 1986, in The First Trust Corporation Limited, Basseterre, St Kitts and Nevis.
- Vishwanath Pratap Singh was named as the beneficiary of the account.
- Deposits ranging from $ 2 million to $ 5 million were made in six instalments.
- The money was withdrawn from the account on February 13, 1988.
- The reports suggested that the funds deposited in the bank were obtained through kickbacks for imports of zinc and copper from Zaire and Zambia during Singh's tenure as finance minister.

Ultimately, however, the revelations raised more questions than they attempted to answer. For one, the anti-establishment newspaper Indian Express had predicted, two days before the stories about Singh appeared, that the ruling party had set in motion a deliberate plan to smear Singh which included allegations that he held secret funds abroad.

More questionable was the fact that the 'exposures' first appeared in the Arab Times, a newspaper published in Kuwait where strict press censorship does not encourage investigative reporting. The paper generally carries international news picked up from international wire services. Further, India is extremely low down on its list of editorial priorities.

Even more curious was the fact that while the Arab Times story was front-paged in the national dailies based on a United News of India (UNI) report, it was ignored by the government media—which normally has a hyper-sensitive antenna cocked for any news embarrassing to the Opposition. It was only four days after the Singh story surfaced that Doordarshan bothered to mention it in its newscast.

But even stranger was the fact that the most potentially damning documents—photostat copies of a ledger showing the deposits and withdrawals from Ajeya Singh's account and a photocopy of the agreement supposedly signed between

BHAWAN SINGH

What seems almost certain is that the current smear campaign against V.P. Singh is merely a prelude to what promises to be a dirty war. With the media having drawn the battle lines, a virtual free-for-all is on the anvil.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the trust and Singh's son naming his father as the beneficiary—first appeared in an obscure tabloid published from Istanbul in Turkey. Golceadam is published in Turkish and features just one page in English. On August 21, almost the entire page was devoted to the story headlined: 'Opposition leaders too might be corrupt; In India Mr V.P. Singh leader of opposition, in corruption scandal.'

Next, Indian newspapers favourable to the Congress(I), notably The Hindustan Times and The Telegraph—whose editor M.J. Akbar makes no bones about his distaste for V.P. Singh—got into the act. The Telegraph reproduced the documents that had appeared in Istanbul, and frontpaged interviews with George Maclean, the former managing director of the First Trust Corporation. Curiously, Maclean talked only to these two papers.

Expectedly, ruling party politicians demanded Singh's prosecution. Said AICC(I) General Secretary Ghulam Nabi Azad: "The so-called honest leader of the opposition stands exposed. His misdeeds are now known to the whole world."

The target of the attack remained unfazed. Dismissing the allegations as clumsy forgeries, Singh shot off an angry letter to the prime minister challenging him to prosecute him and his son if the accusations were proven. Says Singh: "Only people in the ruling party are capable of such forgeries. They have with them professional forgers in arms dealers, corporate smugglers and others whose only job is to launder money abroad."

The so-called exposures did show signs of being the handiwork of the ruling party's Dirty Tricks Department. The Arab Times, it was later revealed, had based its report "on Indian political sources", a fact the UNI conveniently neglected to mention when it first put out the story.

The Arab Times also sent a correspondent to Delhi, a Ms Porter (though her business card does not mention her designation). She arrived in India on a tourist visa on the day the story first appeared armed with copies of the newspaper. She immediately made contact with Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office, Shiela Dixit. And according to her, she was contacted later on by the Government's Principal Information Officer Ram Mohan Rao. The next day, the Arab Times story was picked up by the Indian press.

By then, it was revealed that the First National Trust in St Kitts had closed shop in August 1988. While the Telegraph had Maclean insisting that account number 29479 did exist, the trust's former solicitor Terence V. Byron told India Abroad Service—an independent media organisation based in New York—that no such account was ever opened. Byron also disclosed that the trust had closed because of financial difficulties and could not pay even its rent and telephone bills. Byron further stated that Maclean "ran out of money" and had returned to Canada. Singh claims that his detractors, by choosing a defunct organisation, had ensured the truth would never come out.

The authenticity of the documents was further questioned by Anne Sorenson who was Maclean's assistant at the trust. She says:

► The corporation serviced just one Indian account in the name of Jeevan Shastri. There were no other Indian accounts.

► That all account numbers were in six digits. (Singh's account number in the documents is given as 29479.)

► That the point of a numbered account was that there are no names mentioned. "If a client wanted a name to appear there would be no reason to open a numbered account," she says. The agreement published in the media carries the name of Ajeya Singh.

► That the trust had no stamps such as those on the documents.

Further, while the agreement was supposedly signed in Basseterre in St Kitts on September 16, 1986, Ajeya Singh insists that he has never visited the island (a British Protectorate) and is willing to produce his passport as proof. Also, the original Arab Times piece mentioned that the funds were connected to kickbacks for imports from Africa when Singh was finance minister. Such deals, if any, would be signed by the commerce minister who, at that time, was P.Shiv Shankar.

Singh's family sources also point out that Ajeya Singh had borrowed money from his employers to buy Reliance debentures in 1986—when he was supposed to be putting millions into the St Kitts account. Moreover, he lives in a two-bedroom apartment in New Jersey and his life-style is hardly indicative of any ill-gotten affluence.

What seems to confirm the theory that the documents are not authentic is the fact that the ruling party is reluctant to initiate any action against Singh. Says opposition leader Arun Nehru: "I think they are not sure whether their forgery will stand scrutiny or not. They dare not arrest Vishwanath or his son."

The Janata Dal leader and his colleagues believe the latest 'revelations' are part of a strategy to divert public attention from the scandals that have dogged the ruling party and also dilute the credibility of any future disclosures against the Rajiv Gandhi Government. A section of the Janata Dal leadership also believes that a group of people led by controversial godman Chandraswamy are behind the release of the documents. Chandraswamy returned last month from a long tour

Reports in Arab Times, The Telegraph, and Golce Adam

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IDBI

Investment Deposit Account Scheme

- Companies, Firms, Individuals & HUF, save tax on income assessable under the head 'Profits and Gains from Business or Profession' as covered under Section 32 AB of the Income Tax Act 1961.
- Deposits under the Scheme are deductible up to 20% of taxable income.
- Deposits should be made within 6 months of closure of assessee's accounting year or before filing of tax returns, whichever is earlier.
- Deposits can be made by post.
- Interest @ 10% p.a. will be credited to the assessee's designated bank account on 1st April every year without tax deduction at source and can be freely withdrawn for any use.
- Principal amounts of deposits can be withdrawn after one year for purchase of plant and machinery, computers etc. for the business or profession of the assessee.
- Outstation cheques are accepted and collection charges will be borne by IDBI. Date of deposit will be the date of receipt of cheque by IDBI.
- Demand drafts received by IDBI within 10 days of issue, will get credit from the date of the draft.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK OF INDIA
'IDBI Tower' Cuffe Parade, Colaba, Bombay 400 005.

Sobhagya-B/IDBI/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

abroad and once again left India two weeks ago.

Said Indian Express Editor Arun Shourie: "This is a portent of what they will inflict on the country for years and years, if they happen to return to power." The Telegraph editor, Akbar, however, is confident about the authenticity of the documents. Says he: "I have done everything a journalist can possibly do to convince myself about the credibility of facts."

But it is undisputable that the documents are only the latest in a series that have appeared in the recent past aimed at embarrassing the Opposition and its supporters. Some examples:

► March 1987: a forged letter from Fairfax, the US private investigative agency, to Express adviser S. Gurumurthy saying that it was investigating the Bachchan family, ostensibly on orders from then finance minister V.P. Singh. The CBI arrested Gurumurthy on the basis of this letter which later mysteriously disappeared. Singh was accused of compromising state security.

► January 1989: Subramaniam Swamy after his visit abroad released a letter from Fairfax chief Michael Hershman stating he was investigating various opposition leaders. Opposition leaders branded it a ploy to divide them. The letter turned out to be faked.

► May 1989: A Gujarati daily published a photostat copy of a letter allegedly by Jayaprakash Narayan stating Singh was "a spineless person". JP's former secretary challenged the letter.

► August 15, 1989: The Telegraph reproduced a letter written by Singh to former underworld don Haji Mastan thanking him for his support in the Allahabad by-election. The letter was released by Ashraf, a former assistant to Singh who was removed because he was suspected to be on the payroll of the ruling party. Though Mastan stood by the letter, Singh claims it was forged.

► August 20, 1989: A weekly from Delhi published yet another letter released by Ashraf. The letter was addressed to 'Agent XXI' c/o US Embassy in India. Singh and the embassy ridiculed the letter.

Two months ago, the Indian media published copies of Arun Nehru's hotel bill during his visit abroad. Nehru says that Indian Government sleuths were tailing him indicating they were the possible source. The impact of the documents, however, was destroyed by the fact that they included a bill from a New York hotel which Nehru never visited.

Opposition leaders are convinced that there is a deliberate strategy by the ruling party to launch a smear campaign against them in the hope that some of the mud will stick. Says BJP President L.K. Advani: "This McCarthy-like campaign is not the result of any over-enthusiasm at the second or third rung of the party leadership. It is part of a planned strategy approved at the top."

They dare not arrest Vishwanath or his son. I think they are not sure whether their forgery will stand scrutiny or not.

ARUN NEHRU
Janata Dal leader

PRASHANT PANJIAR

The so-called honest leader of the Opposition stands fully exposed. His misdeeds are now known to the whole world.

GHULAM NABI AZAD
AICC(I) General Secretary

I have done everything that a journalist can possibly do to convince myself about the credibility of the facts.

M.J. AKBAR
Editor, The Telegraph

PRASHANT PANJIAR

This is a portent of what they will inflict on the country for years and years, if they happen to come to power again.

ARUN SHOURIE
Editor, Indian Express

The ruling party, on its part, is sticking to its stand that Singh is guilty and that further investigations will establish the truth. A section of the party also feels it was opposition supporters like Ram Jethmalani and the Indian Express who started Operation Dirty Tricks in the first place and that they are only getting a taste of their own medicine.

The only thing that can be said with any certainty is that the current smear campaign is merely a prelude to what is to come. And, with the media having drawn the battle lines, it promises to be a very dirty war. —PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JANATA DAL

Game of Brinkmanship

Rocked by factional squabbles and controversy and yet emerging as a growing political force attracting crowds and attention, the Janata Dal presents a strange paradox. But to convert popularity into votes it will have to quickly get its act together.

OFTEN enough it has resembled a circus, a roadside tamasha, even a theatre of the absurd. Accordingly, its leader has taken on the mantle of a ring master, an inconsequential street performer or a cynical sutradhar letting things drift and take their own course, defying logic and rationale. But increasingly now, the Janata Dal, spearheading the national Opposition, has begun to look like an army of sorts—with too many aspiring generals, too many commanders and too few combat-ready troopers.

Worse, it is an army where factional satraps are so busy looking over their flanks that the front is too often left open. It is also an army whose commander-in-chief must often wonder whether his main job is to lead his men into battle and victory, or to keep the peace in his own rear and flanks.

Last fortnight must have given "General" V.P. Singh enough cause to sit back and reflect, rue about the legacy of a fractured opposition he inherited and yet savour the growing strength of his electoral juggernaut. Savour the half a dozen meetings spread from Jaipur to Calcutta and Meerut to Madras where lakhs of cheering supporters braved rain or sunshine to mock at the phony wide-angle camera shots of Rajiv Gandhi's crowds on Doordarshan. Savour also the fact that his rag-tag army showed a rare determination in staying together for yet another fortnight. And yet he had plenty to rue: witness the rehabilitation of just one minor state level official, Raghunath Jha in Bihar, a man with the reputation of a streetside tough incapable of collecting a hundred supporters, almost throwing his entire party into disarray.

The Jha episode that nearly broke up the Bihar unit of the Janata Dal and brought embarrassing resignation threats from seven of its key national leaders served to sum up the siege within the party. All this happened in protest against the changes suggested by the seven member commitee on the restructuring of the party organisation headed by Arif Mohammed Khan. The committee was meant to sort out factional confusion in the states but ended up creating some more as it suggested changes in Bihar, Karnataka and Punjab but the sticking point was the nomintion of Jha to the central parliamentary board.

Just three months back V.P. Singh had dismissed Jha as the party chief in Bihar following allegations of hooliganism. Chandra Shekhar, Jha's patron, was slighted. His removal was a rebuff to Chandra Shekhar. Also, now he became a handy instrument to expose V.P. Singh's weakness: tendency to crumble under pressure. He rehabilitated Jha due to Chandra Shekhar's pressure, and as others quit in protest, bent over backwards to rehabilitate them as well, ending up with a few cuts and bruises on his face. A little like the tired pugilist who punches the bag, then leans back to relax, only to find the bag hit him bang in the face.

One reason for the persistent factionalism is the fact that the Janata Dal is a strange political animal—made up of money and muscle from Devi Lal, a brains trust from the Janata Party, and getting its voice from the conscience-keepers of the Jan Morcha who left the Congress Party in the afterglow of Bofors et al. Regional variations add to this confusion. So if Devi Lal is strong in Bihar and Haryana, he vies with Ajit Singh for the command of

RULES OF THE GAME

- There are no permanent friends or friendships. There are only factional interests that matter: an old and tested rule of centrist opposition parties.
- Your enemy's enemy is a worthy friend. The bigger enemy's enemy is a worthier friend: Ajit Singh and Ramakrishna Hegde join hands with the hope of burying the hatchet in the backs of Devi Lal and Chandra Shekhar.
- Preserving party unity is a long, sometimes embarrassing balancing act: several leaders not belonging to any faction threatened to resign in order to counter the Chandra Shekhar-Devi Lal combine.
- Power unites, at least till such time as you have to sit down to share it: no faction leaders have left the party even though they continue to oppose the party leadership.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

Western Uttar Pradesh voters. The Janata Party has infrastructure and support in Orissa, Gujarat and Karnataka, where other factions are more or less non-existent. Basically, there are four streams of political forces that often pull in contrary directions: the two avatars of the Lok Dal, the Janata Party and the Jan Morcha.

The consequences are obvious. Devi Lal, who has delusions of grandeur—he is known to relish accounts of how his idol is worshipped in the countryside—thinks V.P. Singh is there by sufferance, and he himself will be the king maker. Chandra Shekhar has always believed that he has a much higher place in the nation's history than his poltical career so far seems to indicate. He makes no secret of his ambitions and the fact that he is biding his time.

On the other hand, V.P. Singh and his Jan Morcha colleagues often show irritation with the squabbles among other factions and wonder if it was the best thing to have joined up with them. Many of them still think it would have been better to have trudged alone rather than carry the baggage of the entire Opposition.

This confusion, the issues and rival ambitions are not new. They existed in the Grand Alliance of 1971, in the Janata of 1977 and they haunt the Opposition today as well. So while problems remain, personalities become increasingly inconsequential, engaged as they are in an irrational game of musical chairs, joining one group at one instant, opposing it the very next. Thus if Chandra Shekhar and Devi Lal, have now come together after months of bitter enmity they are only conforming to an old and tested rule of the centrist opposition politics: there are no permanent friends or friendships, there are only factional interests that matter.

SIMILARLY if the developments of last fortnight saw Ajit Singh and Hegde join hands, it was done with the hope of burying the hatchet in the backs of Devi Lal and Chandra Shekhar and in keeping with the next rule of the opposition game: your enemy's enemy is a worthy friend. The bigger enemy's enemy is a worthier friend.

At the same time, as the crazy new alignments took place several leaders not known to belong to any faction, including campaign committee chief George Fernandes and spokesman Jaipal Reddy, threatened to resign along with Ajit Singh and Hegde. They thought it was necessary to take sides to balance the Chandra Shekhar-Devi Lal combine. Rule three: Preserving party unity is a long, sometimes embarrassing balancing act.

For the Janata Dal the saving grace so far has been that despite the wranglings and dissensions no leader of consequence has left the party and many say it is because most faction leaders are convinced the party is going to win power at the next elections. "In a way we are like the Congress(I). However they may hate Rajiv Gandhi, they stick by him as only he gets them the votes. Unity is for us what Rajiv is to the Congress. Rule four: Power unites, at least till such time as you have to sit down to share it.

Devi Lal's alter ego and party General Secretary Sharad Yadav drives home the same point with rustic logic: "Don't take badmashis by people like Chandra Shekhar seriously. His is a psychological case. Tell me, has anyone, even the most bitter person, left the party?" Yadav and others argue that the current differences of opinion and faction-fighting is no more than shadow-boxing in anticipation of power. Each faction wants its own people in key infrastructural positions as later they will play a key role in the distribution of election tickets.

On the face of it the situation may seem ridiculous, but so sure are the Janata faction leaders of winning that they are already carving up the Government amongst themselves. What will happen if the party actually wins is only too predictable. The centrist opposition, now represented by the Janata Dal, can only draw comfort from the fact that factionalism, indiscipline and infighting are to it what sycophancy, personality cult and arro-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GOPAL SUNGER

The presence of an empty chair at V.P. Singh's public meetings, a symbol of Rajiv's chickening out of the debate on Bofors, is an instant hit with the crowds.

gance are to the Congress(I).

Unfortunately for the Janata Dal the latest wranglings surfaced in a fortnight when it had much to feel good about. Its gimmick in placing an empty chair at the dais in each one of V.P. Singh s public meetings, as a symbol of Rajiv's chickening out of the debate on Bofors that he had himself suggested, was an instant hit. Its effectiveness showed in the fervour with which the crowds cheered each time the opposition leaders pointed at the chair and announced: "This battle not for the chair. The chair is lying empty." At each meeting there was also much derisive laughter each time Rajiv darshan was mentioned. Singh himself showed greater sense of purpose, even rid himself of some of his old modesty and tried to look like the leader.

In the past many close to him in the party had complained that he took the commoner image a bit too far while the people wanted to see a Bapu, an anna (elder brother) or even the Raja in him. Now at least he was taking care to look different even if it meant his settling for a drab henna-coloured turban in the Jaipur rally while the other leaders were resplendent in bright ones of bandhni.

If despite visibly increasing popular backing and such sense of purpose it still leaves the Janata Dal leaders assailed by doubts, the fault lies with them. After delivering a fiery condemnation of Rajiv in Jaipur Ajit Singh asked the crowd: "What will happen on voting day? Through the year you kill cobras. But on the day of nagpanchami, you feed them with milk. Please don't repeat that on voting day."

MANY within the party warn that if the party does not wake up to the credibility issue, memories of the Janata betrayal in 1979 will be revived too soon.

To have a real hope at the hustings, the Opposition has to counter the impression that while they can unite over agitational steps, they are incapable of joining hands to run a government.

There is a fear that the current squabbles may make the party fail that vital test. Many say such wranglings could be suicidal when the Congress(I) election machinery has already begun to lumber into action. The ruling party is already reaching out to gram pradhans and other influential people, generously using the Jawahar Rozgar Yojana money for persuasion. "Ours is a case of muddayee sust, gawah chust," (The plaintiff is indifferent while his witness is full of zeal), explained Ram Niwas, a party worker from Ajmer, underlining the irony of a party failing to get its act together despite growing support.

The Janata Dal's infrastructure and grassroots manpower, which brings voters to the booths and makes the crucial difference on polling day, is extremely feeble. It leaves the party totally dependent on the BJP. The Janata Dal leaders have to show a sense of urgency on this matter before the Congress(I) seizes the initiative. Says Rajya Sabha member Satya Prakash Malaviya: "People have made up their minds to defeat Rajiv Gandhi. But have we also made up our minds to defeat ourselves?" Like Malaviya, many Janata Dal leaders were chastened by last fortnight's incidents and were trying to resolve the problem.

But they do not need the wisdom of a soothsayer or a pundit to tell them what is wrong and what they need to do about it. As Sumangal Singh Sirohi, a vociferous member of the cheering crowd at the Jaipur rally, put it: "Asal baat yeh hai ki jansamarthan kee vishaal nadi mein yeh sub chhotey-chhotey taapuon par date hain. (The real problem is that in a vast river of popular support all these people are stuck on their little islands)." Indeed, the various factions of the Janata Dal are like islands. But if the river has to swell into an electoral torrent within a few months, the groups will have to accept the inevitability of it submerging their islands of conflicting ambition and old entities.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

He'll never wear a tie that screams for attention. But he'll never wear a tie that you'll fail to notice. He is the Riviera man. He knows what he wants.

RIVIERA

Designer briefs from premier

For men who know what they want.

Mudra:M:PM:3681

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's got to be

YASHICA

KYOCERA

Japan's first name in premium SLRs and compact cameras

AUTO FOCUS MOTOR II

It's so easy to use. One-touch auto film load/wind/rewind. A built-in high performance flash unit. Sliding lens cap, auto date and time to record moments you want to remember.

MF-2 SUPER W/SELF-TIMER

Yashica quality at an affordable price. 35mm format. Big bright viewfinder, built-in flash, trouble-free loading. 'Top Eye' Cds sensor to help you shoot beautiful pictures everytime.

Buy it in

DUBAI

..for less!

Sole Distributors: Jashanmal National Co. (UAE), P.O. Box 1545, Dubai, UAE,
Tel: 212579, Tlx: 45705 JASHAN EM, Fax: 212651
Abu Dhabi - Tel: 335569, Bahrain - Tel: 251431, Kuwait - Tel: 2412797

Your YASHICA comes with a GUARANTEE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

'YASHICA' IS A TRADEMARK OF KYOCERA CORPORATION.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by SAIBAL DAS

Army flag march at Gohpur market

Map by B.K. SHARMA

ASSAM

A Bloody Price

Bodos and non-Bodos, forgetting old social bonds, attacked each other as enemies in a week-long carnage that left 30 people dead and 40 villages gutted.

THE irony is inescapable. And the drama is turning macabre. More and more blood is let as the leaders of a movement once-labelled separatist grapple with a movement they now condemn, and the Centre, mouthing patriotic homilies, aggravates matters with behind-the-scenes manipulation.

Even as the fury of the Brahmaputra began to ebb last fortnight, the Assamese anger against the agitating Bodo tribals raged leaving death and destruction in its wake. For about a week, parts of North Lakhimpur, Gohpur subdivision in Sonitpur and Mangaldoi subdivision of Darrang districts burnt and echoed with the cries of both helpless Bodos and non-Bodos, who forgot old social bonds, attacking each other as enemies. With 30 people dead, 40 villages gutted, and uprooted people cowering in relief camps, the Bodoland agitation's name stood inerasably etched in Assam's lexicon of violence.

More alarming still was the invidious web of politicking which became visible. Wrote the Guwahati-based English daily The Sentinel: "The Centre has helped to create a division that is far more sinister in its impact than a physical division of the state. That it was done with the diabolic motive of imposing President's Rule should be abundantly clear."

What was certainly clear was that the growing communal and social divide had been concretised. Said Bijen Kalita, an Assamese youth from Bezpur, now sheltering in a relief camp in Mangaldoi, the district headquarters of Darrang: "We could see the Bodo criminals setting fire to our houses." About 40 km away in Khairabari, Bodos taking shelter in a relief camp also expressed hatred. Said Deb Nath Basumatay, 20: "The pre-planned Independence Day arson and killings by Assamese chauvinists with the help of the police prove again that we (Bodos) have no security."

The simmering rancour spilled into the open on August 10 when hundreds of Assamese and non-Bodos from north

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Lakhimpur areas crossed the river Sesha and invaded the Gohpur reserve forest area which has both Bodo and non-Bodo settlements. This led to a free-for-all for three days inside the 35-sq km reserve forest areas. While Assamese and non-Bodo tribes rushed towards national highway 52 setting fire to Bodo houses, the Bodos moved into the jungle-infested Subansiri district of Arunachal Pradesh, torching and looting non-Bodo houses.

It was at this point that the politicking came out into the open. The Congress(I) Government of Arunachal Pradesh headed by Gegong Apang, described by the Assam Government as the Centre's 'agent provocateur', got the news circulated through a news agency that 95 bodies had been picked up from the state's jungles. The news caused nationwide shock and anger. The army was called out and curfew imposed.

UNFORTUNATELY for Apang, amid the confusion the Assam Police intercepted an SP-rank Arunachal Pradesh intelligence officer in the curfew-bound Behali areas under Gohpur forest. Immediately an inter-state row flamed up. Chief Minister Prafulla Kumar Mahanta thundered that Arunachal Pradesh had no business interfering in Assam's affairs. Later when Mahanta confronted Apang in Itanagar in the presence of governors of both states, he pleaded innocence and admitted meekly that only four bodies had been recovered.

The August 10 bloodbath was not unexpected. According to an intelligence report sent to the state headquarters by the then Deputy Commissioner Harish Sonowal, leaders of non-tribal communities held a meeting on August 6, where they decided to attack Bodo villages on August 10. Sonowal told INDIA TODAY: "The same day Bodos and non-Bodos inside the Gohpur reserve area decided to remain united and hold a joint public meeting on August 10. Obviously, some agency did not want this. The unity did not materialise and violence broke out."

People say rumours were set off in some villages that the Assamese had violated a Bodo girl. Simultaneously, on August 7, All Bodo Students Union-Upendranath Brahma (ABSU-UB) activists attacked the house of Kusha Dutta, AGP

An Eerie Journey

Many hide-outs and training camps of the All Bodo Students' Union (ABSU) are in Assam's tribal-dominated Nalbari district, near the Indo-Bhutan border. Chief Correspondent FARZAND AHMED recently trekked through the region right up to the border, visiting some ABSU camps enroute. His account:

Militants relaxing after training

AT around 10 p.m., the taxi-driver begins to show fear. "Sir, we are now entering the jungles. It's better not to proceed further," he says. We are at the edge of the jungle, at the Tamulpur checkpost, near the Assam-Bhutan border. The Bodo villages nearby are dark, deserted, deathly silent. All the able-bodied men have slipped into the jungles. At night, Tamulpur is an eerie spot.

From this point we are to cross dense, hilly jungles before reaching the border. Tapan, a student and an ABSU activist, who has escorted us from Guwahati, too is frightened by what should be familiar terrain for him. "Who will recognise and save us in the night?" he whispers. "During the daytime Bodo militants would not harm you seeing me, and the police might let you go, but night is always different. Both sides go mad."

Reluctant to enter the forest, Tapan stops the car near a roadside hut. He knocks at the door and then makes a low howling sound—a signal used by ABSU activists. Immediately, the door swings open and an infirm old lady peeps out, followed by a youth, who identifies himself as Jagdish. He offers to guide us through the forest provided the names of persons and places are not revealed, "to ensure that it is not possible for our enemies (the police) to trace us".

We return to the car and drive for 5 km with the headlights switched off to avoid detection by a CRPF camp nearby. The driver stops near a church and hides the car behind a thick bush. We continue on foot into the jungle.

The chirping of crickets and the phosphorescent light of the fire flies are the only signs of life. These jungles are part of the Manas Forest Reserve, which extends into Bhutan. They provide ideal cover for the Bodo insurgents, who hit their targets and then disappear into the thick forests or even slip into Bhutan.

Our destination is an ABSU volunteers' force camp 3 km away, but to avoid a CRPF post, we walk an extra 2 km. After an hour, a desolate house on the edge of a tribal hamlet comes into sight. Shafts of light appear through the cracks of the bamboo doors A few chairs, a bench and a cot are scattered across the lawn. The only occupant of the house is an old Bodo who identifies himself as Narzary. He explains that this is indeed the camp, but all the ABSU men are out making arrangements for a bandh which is to begin the next day. "Only an hour ago the volunteers went into action," he says. (The next day the Guwahati police announce that during the night, militants had killed four per-leader of Lakhimpur district. While Dutta escaped, the militants killed his uncle, arsoned the house, and burnt a five-year-old boy alive.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Enraged, the Assamese and non-Bodos attacked Birkrampur, a Bodo-village on August 10. Three days of rioting followed after which, according to a list of the Bodo central relief camp, 108 Bodo villages stood razed to the ground.

The Bodos streamed into the jungles of Arunachal and pitched camps. At this stage Apang moved into the picture. He not only welcomed the Bodos, but even rushed provisions to the camps. He also assumed the role of their spokesman, worsening inter-state relations. Several coincidences pointed a finger at the Centre's involvement too. A fortnight before Gohpur and parts of Lakhimpur erupted, Apang had met with ABSU leaders in Calcutta. Then, Union Minister of State for Home, Santosh Mohan Dev was present in Guwahati on August 11, and had apparently been in touch with Arunachal Pradesh on the wireless network.

DEV was in any case in a corner trying to defend not only his own role but also that of RAW, which was being increasingly accused of providing sustenance to the Bodoland agitation. An organisation of RAW employees recently wrote to Rajiv Gandhi complaining that the intelligence agency was being made to carry out 'Operation Zoom Zoom', with a budget of Rs 3 crore, aimed at destabilising the AGP Government.

Consequently, Mahanta wrote a strongly-worded letter to the prime minister, and his AGP Government took advantage of the prevailing situation to turn a blind eye to the uprooted Bodos. The reaction of the Gohpur mayhem, predictably, followed on August 15 in Darrang district, a Bodo stronghold. Rumours spread that the Assamese were planning to finish them. The Bodo version is that on the night of August 15, AGP workers backed by the police, attacked Tholkwoimari village and once the Bodos had fled, burnt and looted everything.

The AGP and police versions are of course different. They claim that about a 100-odd Bodos first laid an ambush near river Barnadi, then they attacked Boimara village, and finally reached sons and raided some non-Bodo houses in the area).

Bodos cleaning their guns in the camps

The old man, in fact, turns out to be a veritable gold-mine of information about the ABSU. According to him, it is now a well-knit, multi-tier organisation. All Bodo-dominated areas have been divided into 'anchaliks' (zones) and placed under a 'leader'. Every group of 10 volunteers is headed by a 'captain', while the head of two such groups is a 'major'. All the 'anchaliks' in a district comprise a 'unit'. Every 'unit' has a number of 'commandos' trained in guerrilla warfare. So professional has the ABSU become that, says Narzary, every 'anchalik' includes some nurses.

Suddenly, there is the sound of an explosion. Narzary says it is from a camp 16 km away where arms are being tested. Curious about the ABSU's weaponry, we set off towards the camp. After walking through 2 km of dense jungle and wading across a river, we reach a vast sheet of sand. Fifteen young men appear to be sleeping under the starry sky. "They all are trained militants keeping an eye on police movement," whispers Tapan. The young men awake and begin conversing with the guides in their language. "We spend our nights outside the villages due to police atrocities," says Prasantajit, a militant who speaks both Hindi and English.

He also says that it is impossible to reach the camp where arms are being tested as that involves crossing a stretch of the jungle infested with wild animals. Instead, he offers to lead us to another camp at the foot of the Bhutan hills.

To avoid detection, we walk in silence—even the lighting of cigarettes or use of torchlight is prohibited. In the course of a three-hour-long walk we cross just three villages. But the silent hamlets appear bereft of humans; the barking of stray dogs completes the picture of desolation.

At the foot of the Bhutan hills, we sight a machan-like structure surrounded by three thatched huts. A teenaged boy with Mongoloid features is guarding it with a country-made gun. It is a small camp and an ABSU unit office manned by half a dozen Bodo youth. Says one: "Here we train teenagers to handle country-made guns." Adds the young guard proudly: "We can manufacture guns and cartridges here. We also know how to prepare mechanically controlled bombs." All weapons are hidden in the jungles as the Bodo villages are frequently raided by the security forces.

Nearby, the ABSU Vice-President of Nalbari district Madan Mohan Musahari is relaxing on a cot. "We know that sooner or later we will achieve our goals, nothing can stop us," he says.

What has compelled these youth to abandon their families, their villages, and become fugitives living a hard life in the jungles? "We can now protect our womenfolk from police brutality. Assam Police enters a village with a sense of vengeance and their aim is to loot and rape," says a teenaged militant. Another young boy says with undisguised hatred: "We are now ready to challenge the police force and Assamese chauvinists." In the stillness of the night, his words resonate like a pistol shot.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kwoimara village, where they torched 23 houses. This, says the police, enraged Assamese and non-Bodos who in thousands moved against the Bodos and between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. gutted 10 Bodo villages under Khairabari police station. The next day an Assamese mob arsoned more Bodo houses.

WHILE Bodos claimed they had suffered 58 casualties, officials said in three days of violence hardly seven people had died. Whatever the truth, the violence in North Lakhimpur, Gohpur and Khairabai was obviously directed against the Bodos. According to AGP leaders, the ABSU(UB) had planned to evacuate non-Bodos from the proposed 'Bodoland' areas from August 15, and this led all non-Bodos, other plain tribes and Assamese to combine against them. The ABSU(UB) denies this, but the AGP used it to unite all non-Bodos who in a matter of seven days drove Bodos out of their villages, taking advantage of the fact that most ABSU leaders were camping in Delhi, Calcutta and Siliguri.

The leaderless ABSU workers, though trained in guerrilla warfare (see box), were not prepared to face an onslaught like this. The Assamese plan was also well-timed, as the stage was set for the first tripartite talks between the ABSU(UB), the state Government and the Centre. Mahanta, after allowing the violence to escalate during the past six months—in the course of which ABSU militants created mayhem killing 200-odd people and arsoning buildings and bridges—played his cards well. Finding that Assamese in general and non-Bodo tribes in particular had turned against the Bodos, he agreed to hold tripartite talks outside Assam, and simultaneously invoked the "Armed Forces (Special Powers) Act 1958, and the "Assam Disturbed Areas Act 1955" which gave licence to the police to shoot-to-kill militants. Then the Assam Government ruthlessly crushed the agitation in Kokrajhar district. According to ageing Bodo Sahitya Sabha President Jogendranath Basumatary: "It is only police violence in Kokrajhar. It has gone mad and is burning our villages."

(Above) Bodos crossing river to refugee camps; residents salvage belongings; and (bottom) effigy of Mahanta.

But there was no ignoring the fact that the Bodos had been painted into a corner. Most other plains tribes like the Mishing and Koch-Rajbanshis, besides Bengalis and tea-garden labourers had turned against them. This also renders the position of the Bodos at the talks quite uncertain. For as Home Minister Bhrigu Phukan declares: "Any solution to the Bodo demand must be acceptable to all plains tribals." The latest bloody round may have gone to Mahanta, but the bout isn't over. If anything, it augurs to become gorier, and will extract a severe price from all concerned.

—FARZAND AHMED in Mangaldoi, Gohpur and Guwahati

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"We've worked hard to save this money. We must invest it safely, even if we get less interest."

"But what if you can get a high interest? With safety, too!"

DHANASHREE

Minimum 12% dividend.

Assured safety, and encashment facility* too.

Dhanashree is a new investment scheme from the LIC Mutual Fund.

Invest in Dhanashree units with a face value of Rs. 10, available in September 1989 for only Rs. 9.90. You will be paid a minimum 12% dividend. Plus your investment is bound to grow and yield even higher returns.

Dhanashree units are absolutely safe. *They can be encashed at any designated LIC branch, after November 1, 1990.

You can invest any amount, from Rs 1,000/- upwards. You'll get income tax and wealth tax concessions, as well.

Also available:

Dhanaraksha, a recurring investment scheme with life and accident cover.

Dhanavriddhi, a growing fixed investment scheme with minimum guaranteed 12% return, with increasing life cover. And accident cover.

Contact any of the designated LIC branches, for details.

All payments are to be made only at designated branches of the Central Bank of India.

The accounting year for the LIC Mutual Fund is from October 1 – September 30. All dividends will pertain to this time period.

LIC Mutual Fund

We'll help you meet your goals

R K SWAMY/LMF/4415 A

Hurry! 1% discount on Dhanashree units bought before September 30, 1989. Your purchase price Rs. 9.90!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANDHRA PRADESH

Misguided Missiles

Rajiv Gandhi's tour of Andhra Pradesh was all too clearly an election campaign, characterised by a wilful distortion of facts to smear Rama Rao.

THE confrontation ended as it had begun. Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi flinging wild charges at Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao in his presence while G. Parthasarathy, a joint secretary in the Prime Minister's Office, brusquely denied Rama Rao a chance to defend himself. If that was an ugly enough example of Rajiv's political assault on the Telugu Desam Government last fortnight, it was no uglier or any less demeaning than what had gone before.

Clearly, the prime minister's new and increasingly aggressive strategy to bludgeon his political opponents into submission entails a total disregard for the Queensbury Rules. With Rama Rao already under considerable political pressure in his home state, Rajiv turned the screw as far as it could go. In the course of a day-long tour of Andhra Pradesh, Rajiv addressed well-attended party rallies where he attacked and ridiculed Rama Rao on his policies and performance.

His intentions were clear from the moment he set foot in the state. Rajiv's tour did not include any of the flood-ravaged areas of the state. Neither did the APCC(I) President Dr M. Chenna Reddy insist that the prime minister visit those areas although poor implementation of flood relief measures was one of the reasons for the Congress(I)-sponsored state bandh on August 9.

Rama Rao was the sole target and Rajiv's tirade was typical of his acerbic speech-writers. "Your chief minister prefers to be surrounded by cardboard walls and film sets. He wants to present a rosy picture of everything. Everything looks green but if you look beyond the sets there is nothing. There is a world of difference between fact and fiction, between myth and reality," he declared at the first meeting in Anantapur.

Anticipating the attack, Rama Rao had party and police intelligence report to him about Rajiv's speeches and the public response to them, so that he could be ready with his rebuttal. But even he was obviously taken aback by the personalised and wild charges that Rajiv left in his wake.

Rajiv's tumble-weed tour of rural Andhra Pradesh—the third in three months—was all too clearly an election campaign characterised by a wilful distortion of facts. Whether it was on the issue of the state's handling of flood relief, its dealing with the Naxalite problem or distribution of subsidised rice, Rajiv repeatedly twisted the truth in a typically ham-handed attempt to smear Rama Rao.

In his opening salvo, Rajiv charged the Telugu Desam Ministry and Rama Rao with tardiness in submitting its report on the flood havoc to the Centre and for being slow in responding to the plight of the affected people. "I would have liked to do much more and quicker too, but unfortunately the state took a long time in submitting its report," said Rajiv. He pointed out that the report had reached Delhi only two days earlier—on August 17—and added that the Centre would not delay in sanctioning relief.

The truth was somewhat different, as Rama Rao tried to clarify. The state Government had kept the Centre informed of the flood situation regularly. The first telex message was sent to the central control room in the Ministry of Agriculture on July 17. Further, the state Government was in telephonic contact with Central Relief Commissioner S.V. Giri, an IAS officer of the Andhra Pradesh cadre. Rama Rao sent another telex message to Rajiv on July 26 and a semi-official letter the next day asking for Rs 50 crore based on a preliminary estimate of the damage caused by the floods. A report putting the losses at Rs 600 crore was handed over to Giri personally by state Relief Commissioner T. Gopala Rao on August 17—the report that Rajiv referred to. But even before Rama Rao could complete his defence, G. Parthasarathy intervened saying: "Questions should be addressed only to the prime minister. This is not a joint press conference."

At his next meeting, Rajiv accused Rama Rao of not finding time to visit the flood-affected areas and said he had to send a Central minister all the way to assess the damage. Here again, the prime minister was guilty of making baseless allegations. Rama Rao had visited the

RAJIV'S CHARGE

☐ "Unfortunately, the Andhra Pradesh Government took a long time to send the memorandum. We have received it only on August 17."

☐ "My cabinet minister visited the flood affected areas even before the people from the state themselves had gone there."

☐ "The Government lacked the courage to fight the Naxalites. By agreeing to erect memorials to Naxalites, it was running away from the responsibility of maintaining law and order. Such governments have no right to exist."

☐ "Rama Rao is cheating the tribals of 20 paise on every kilogram of rice. While the Centre wanted him to distribute it at Rs 1.80 a kilogram, he is not doing so."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE FACTS

- Rama Rao sent a telex message to Rajiv on July 26 and a letter on July 27 seeking Rs 50 crore for flood relief; the preliminary damage was put at Rs 450 crore.
- Rama Rao visited the flood affected areas on July 21 and 25; H.K.L. Bhagat, information minister, flew over the areas on July 28.
- The Mahabubnagar district administration agreed to rebuild the memorials demolished by the police in seven places as demanded by the Naxalites for the release of the Kollapur Mandal Praja Parishad President.
- The state sells rice to those with an annual income of less than Rs 6,000 at Rs 2 a kg, spending 20 paise more on the common varieties and up to Re 1 on the superfine.

flood-affected areas on two days—July 21 and July 25—while the Central Information and Broadcasting Minister H.K.L. Bhagat, merely flew over the areas on July 28. Commented Rama Rao's son-in-law and Telugu Desam Party leader N. Chandrababu Naidu: "Bhagat went by an Avro aircraft instead of a helicopter and even forgot to carry his binoculars. They were left at the guest-house. Moreover, one of those travelling with him said Bhagat slept on board the aircraft."

Even on a live local issue—the Naxalite menace in the state—Rajiv's attack on the state Government was blunted by his presentation of the facts. "The Telugu Desam lacked the courage to fight the Naxalite violence in the state by agreeing to erect memorials for them and is running away from its responsibility of maintaining law and order in the state. Such a government does not have the right to exist," thundered Rajiv.

IN reality, Rama Rao in his six-and-a-half years as chief minister has made a serious attempt to find ways to end the Naxalite violence. On June 12, Rama Rao gave a month's time to those who wanted to give up arms. Only 50 surrendered and the Government extended the deadline by another month when 128 more CPI(ML) activists gave themselves up. The Government then decided to extend the deadline by one more month to September 12. Says state Home Minister A. Madhava Reddy: "Only 40 of them surrendered in the four years before the offer was made. There are hardcore members among the 220 who have surrendered so far."

Rajiv, however, glossed over this and the fact that the state has been asking for more CRPF personnel to fight the Naxalites. On June 20, Rama Rao wrote to Home Minister Buta Singh asking for more men, arms and training for the state's own police. But in his reply, on June 23, Buta Singh rejected the request and accused the state of lacking in perception to tackle extremism. "If the local police and administrative structure are not effective, heavy firepower and additional forces will not achieve the desired results," wrote Buta Singh. In the same letter he took exception to the "substandard" operations of the state intelligence agency and argued that it could not combat the Naxalite problem.

Meanwhile, the Rajiv bandwagon rolled on. In his speeches at Nalgonda and Warangal, Rajiv raised the pitch of his tirade to incredible levels by accusing Rama Rao of aligning with "communal, obscurantist, feudal and anti-national forces" who were colluding with those who were responsible for the assassination of Indira Gandhi. Though the connection was obscure enough, for the prime minister to stoop to the level of accusing Rama Rao of collusion with the assassins of Mrs Gandhi was nothing short of political heresy.

But tragically, Rajiv seems to have become the victim of his own speechwriters. On his earlier visits on June 15 and 21, Rajiv had made allegations that were a clear distortion of the truth. He had, for example, accused Rama Rao of "cheating the tribal people" of 20 paise on every kilogram of rice, selling it to them at Rs 2 a kg while the Centre wanted him to distribute it at Rs 1.80 a kg. Countered state Civil Supplies Minister G. Narayanappa: "There is no Central subsidy under this (integrated tribal welfare) scheme. With handling and other costs, the price of the common variety sold to tribals supplied by the Food Corporation of India was Rs 2.20. Actually, we are subsidising at least 20 paise if it is the common variety and more on finer varieties to make rice available to tribals at the same price of Rs 2." Says Rama Rao: "It is unfortunate that the prime minister should behave like this. He cannot accuse a chief minister as he likes. There is something called decency in public."

Clearly, with the coming elections in view, the ruling party is intent on pulling out all the stops in its attempt to denigrate

SNAPS INDIA

Next week, Chenna Reddy will submit a plea to the President to dismiss the state Government.

Rama Rao and undermine the Telugu Desam Party. The Congress(I) has also dragged Rama Rao to court in an unprecedented number of cases (see box). In fact, the legal cases are obviously part of the dual strategy the Congress(I) has adopted in the state to keep Rama Rao off balance. While the prime minister uses his vocal blunderbuss, the legal cases could embarrass Rama Rao sufficiently to topple his government.

Coupled with the impending high

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

court verdict on whether it is right for a chief minister to act in a film, the ruling party feels it can engineer the collapse of the Rama Rao Government. Next week, the APCC(I) is to submit a memorandum to the President demanding the dismissal of the state Government. Chenna Reddy says the memorandum "will list the misdeeds of the Government."

But Rajiv's intemperate attacks could scuttle that strategy. For Rama Rao and the Telugu Desam, Rajiv's statements only served as welcome cannon fodder in their campaign against the Congress(I). At a party meeting the day after Rajiv's visit, Rama Rao warned: "Society will not pardon the prime minister for his false and baseless allegations. What experience does this kurra kunta (brat) have to call the opposition leaders names?" In a resolution, the Telugu Desam also accused Rajiv of lowering the dignity of the office of prime minister "by mouthing blatant lies".

Even a supposedly pro-administration paper like The Times of India warned in an editorial: "In the coming weeks and months, such situations with a potential for unpleasant confrontations are likely to recur. They can be avoided by both the Congress(I) and the Opposition observing some rules of the game. The ruling party, which has the advantage of broadcasting its allegations over radio and TV, has a special responsibility to ensure fair play." In his current obsession for opposition-bashing, Rajiv seems to have forgotten one cardinal principle—in twisting the truth, it is his own credibility that will eventually suffer the most damage.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

BABJI JANTA STUDIOS

Rama Rao coming out of a court

N.T. RAMA RAO

Legal Wrangle

With some 200 writ petitions and appeals filed against him, N.T. Rama Rao is starting to resemble a legal pin-cushion. Admittedly, the cases are politically motivated and filed by Congress (I) activists. But they have succeeded in tying down the chief minister to the courts and some could prove politically embarrassing.

The most important case is a 193-page petition listing 197 allegations against Rama Rao. The petitioner is Dronamraju Satyanarayana, a Congress (I) member of the Rajya Sabha. In January, 1988, the high court rejected the appeal but found the chief minister prima facie guilty on seven counts and called for evidence to examine the charges in greater detail. Rama Rao, however, obtained a stay order from the Supreme Court. Some of the other, more significant cases, are:

► Case No. WP No. 2884/87. Petitioner: K. Venkateswara Reddy. Seeking a direction from the court to stop use of government funds and machinery for party propaganda purpose.

► Case No. 18173/87. Petitioner: D.K. Smarasimha Reddy. Questioning the appointment of Aggarwal Commission to go into charges of corruption against Rama Rao's son-in-law N. Chandrababu Naidu.

► Case No. WP No. 2542/88. Petitioner Nadendla Bhaskara Rao. Questioning the appointment of the Justice Chandrasekhara Menon commission to probe a decision Bhaskara Rao took as chief minister.

► Case No. WP No. 310/87. Petitioner: V. Harinatha Babu, asking for directions against the chief minister to stop him from acting in films.

► Case No. WP No. 16114/88. Petitioner: N. Srinivasulu Reddy. Seeking the imposition of President's Rule.

► Case no WP 16115/88. Petitioner: N. Arinivasulu Reddy. Seeking the appointment of a high powered judicial commissioner under the Public Enquiries Act.

► Case No. WP No. 16116/88. Petitioner: N. Srinivasulu Reddy. Prosecution of Rama Rao and others on charges of misuse of office and corruption.

► Case No. WP No. 1901/89. Petitioner: St. Trivikrama Ramananda Bharatiswamy. For a writ of Mandamus to prevent Rama Rao from installing the statue of Buddha in the Hussain Sagar lake, Hyderabad.

► Case No. WP No. 5011/89. Petitioner: V.P. Narasimha Raju. To declare Rama Rao an imposter; the chief minister wearing saffron is unconstitutional; the chief minister acting as Viswamitra in the film or outside is unconstitutional.

► Case No. WP No. 7327/89. Petitioner: Sunku Balaram. To direct Rama Rao to discharge his duties as chief minister under the Constitution of India as a full time job without acting or involving himself in any other way in the production of the film Brahmarishi Viswamitra.

► Case No. WP No. 7232/89. Petitioner: K Lakshminarayana. To stop the Government from executing its plan to issue licences for arms to village defence committees.

The lawyer who pursues most of the cases against Rama Rao with amazing determination is Sriramagiri Ramchandra Rao, 43. "My task is to see the end of a satanic mission. There is nothing genuine about Rama Rao and he loves none but himself," he says. Ramachandra Rao's mission began in 1984 when he saw a 58-year-old village officer relative of his, pedalling a rickshaw in disguise, after he was sacked along with other village officers, following a Rama Rao fiat. The old man knew of no other way to live but died soon unable to cope with the strain of pedalling. The sense of revenge still drives Ramachandra Rao.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CARTIER. THE SANTOS WATCH

A UNIQUE TRIBUTE TO AN INTREPID PIONEER OF AVIATION HISTORY. A SUPERB CREATION IN THE HEROIC SPIRIT. SQUARE OR ROUND, FASHIONED IN GOLD OR SOLID STEEL, REMARKABLE FOR ITS BOLD LINES AND HANDSOME BRACELET SET WITH GOLD SCREWS. TODAY THE NEW CURVED SANTOS WATCH BY CARTIER COMBINES STRENGTH AND SENSUALITY. SPORTY, STURDY, REMARKABLY ACCURATE. RESOLUTELY CONTEMPORARY, A MASTERFUL CONQUEST OF TIME.

* Trade-Mark registered by the Cartier Gro must de Cartier

Cartier

THE ART OF BEING UNIQUE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SERVICE AGENT: MARCKS & CO., 97/103 M. G. ROAD, OPP. UNIVERSITY, FORT, BOMBAY 400023. TEL: 270999

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OVER 50% OF ACN ELECTRONIC TYPEWRITERS

Last year, almost 50% of our sales came from repeat purchases.

Discerning buyers like HLL, HMM, ITC, BEML, Air France, American Express, 20th Century Fox, Hyatt Regency, (to name a few), did not need to think all over again when they needed more electronic typewriters. They just gave us a call.

Because ACN Electronic Typewriters gave them so many distinct advantages.

Ergonomic design. Optimum function efficiency. Superior print head that ensures unmatched print quality. And the unique Spell-Check.

After all, ACN Electronic Typewriters come with technolog

For a free brochure, write to: AUTO CONTROLS PVT. LTD. (A RANUTROL GROUP COMPANY). CORPORATE OFFICE ☐ F-85, Okhla Indl. Area, Phase-I, New Delhi-110 020. Tel: 683 6001. NORTH ZONE ☐ 8-
New Delhi House, Barakhamba Road, New Delhi-110 001. Tel: 331 0132, 331 0464. ☐ 108, Sector 35C, Chandigarh- 160 035. ☐ C-976/77, Sector B, Mahanagar, Lucknow- 226 006. Tel: 77 289. ☐ 312, Guru Nanak Pu
Raja Park, Jaipur-302 004. Tel: 49 007. ☐ HIG-22, 1st Floor, Shivaji Nagar, Hoshangabad Road, Bhopal-462 016. Tel: 55 2478. SOUTH ZONE ☐ Flat No. A-4, 2nd Floor, Parsan Menere, 602, Anna Salai, Madras-600 00

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ARE SOLD BY ACN ELECTRONIC TYPEWRITERS.

from Nakjima All, Japan. That's technology behind international best-sellers like Smith Corona, Olympia, Triumph Adler and Sears. Technology that goes into 35% of the world's electronic typewriters.

That's why customers confidently opt for the ACN Electronic Typewriter. Again. And again.

ACN ELECTRONIC TYPEWRITERS FROM NAKAJIMA ALL, JAPAN.

INTERNATIONALLY, THE BEST.

TECHNOLOGY QUALITY SERVICE ANUTROL GROUP

Tel: 867121. ☐ Natraj Complex, 2nd Floor, 9, Residency Road, Richmond Circle, Bangalore-560 025. Tel: 21 2846, 21 4683, 21 5429. EAST ZONE ☐ Flat No. 5-1, Stephen Court, 18A, Park Street, Calcutta- 700 016. Tel: 29 17
WEST ZONE ☐ 114, 1st Floor, A2 Building, Shah & Nahar Indl. Estate, Lower Parel, Bombay-400 013. Tel:492 6297, 492 7125. ☐ 1012, Embassy Centre, Nariman Point, Bombay-400 021. Tel: 23 3629, 23 44

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

This free service for non-commercial use is sponsored by

Quality Escapades

Five great holiday ideas for Ooty & Mysore. And a special business one too!

Dreams For Two
Rs. 499/-
per couple per day.

Summer Holiday
Rs. 1820/- per person for 4 nights & 5 days.

The Super Double
Rs. 199/-
per person per day.

Weekend Getaway
Rs. 149/-
per person per day.

Meetings Plus
Special Conference Packages.

young merry
Rs. 90/-
per student per day.

Quality Inn Southern Star Ooty.

Quality Inn Southern Star Mysore.

Quality Inn™

Southern Star

OOTY MYSORE

Members of the Quality International worldwide chain of over 1200 hotels in 17 countries.

For Reservations Contact:

Quality Inns India

Bombay-199 Churchgate Reclamation, Pin-400020. Ph: 222262. Telex: 011-3061.
Delhi-51 Vasant Marg, Vasant Vihar, Pin-110057.Ph: 675347, 671327 Tlx: 031-72056.
Calcutta-5 Loudon Street, Pin-700017.Ph: 447772, 448694 Tlx: 021-2028.
Madras-Broadwater, 6 Boat Club Road, III Avenue, Pin-600028 Ph: 453494 Tlx: 041-8193.
Bangalore-Blumoon Complex, M.G. Road, Pin-560001 Ph: 579445 Tlx: 0845-8110.
Ahmedabad-15 Aristoville, Satellite Road, Pin-380054, Ph: 466847
Quality Inn Southern Star Ooty, 22 Havelock Road, Ootacamund-643001. Ph: 3601-09 Tlx: 0853-249.
Quality Inn Southern Star Mysore, Vinobha Road, Mysore-570005. Ph: 27217 Tlx: 0846-256.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JAMMU & KASHMIR

Act of Desperation

A besieged Abdullah resorts to press censorship

Abdullah in the deserted Bakshi Stadium on Independence Day

Photographs by MEHRAJ-U-DIN

THE one thing you can say about Farooq Abdullah is that he has his own distinct set of theories. One seems to run like this: If I see no evil and hear none, evil itself will vanish. Having failed to crush the secessionists in his state, the Jammu and Kashmir chief minister has taken off on another tangent. He is now trying to gag the press instead.

The passage of the Jammu and Kashmir Special Powers (Press) Bill—which amounts to virtual press censorship—by the state Assembly last fortnight was nothing short of a blatant attempt by the National Conference-Congress(I) ruling alliance to find a scapegoat for its own ineptitude and misgovernance. All sections of the press and opposition parties have condemned the act.

Even as Abdullah took this drastic step to bring the press in line, it became clear that he had no control over his own party: a number of National Conference (NC) members inserted advertisements in local papers announcing their resignations from the party. The blow stunned the chief minister all the more as most of the desertions were from Srinagar—considered an NC stronghold. Other partymen publicly announced their lack of faith in Abdullah's leadership.

That he has lost all influence over the people of the valley had already become evident earlier in the month. It was a slap on the chief minister's face when secessionists succeeded in celebrating Pakistan's Independence Day, August 14, with unprecedented fervour. Crackers were burst and gas balloons along with Pakistani flags were released in the valley. Throughout Srinagar, "flag-hoisting ceremonies" were held right under Abdullah's nose. So bold were the extremists that they even held "ceremonial parades" in parts of the city. A good number of people, especially youth, joined the "march past" and saluted Pakistan's flag even as the police watched the scene helplessly.

In Ghani Memorial Stadium in downtown Srinagar, 21 shots were fired by an armed militant and the Pakistan flag hoisted. What added an ominous dimension to this unabashedly anti-national activity is that for the first time, the Pakistani flag was hoisted over the Old Secretariat building in Hindu-majority Jammu.

In complete contrast to this celebratory mood, the next day, India's Independence Day was marked by a complete bandh in the valley. Dubbed a "black day" by the pro-Pakistan secessionists, for the first time on August 15, state transport buses were taken off the roads. And though Abdullah fretted and fumed, even business establishments owned by alliance members remained closed. The black-out called for by the militants was also a grand success as Srinagar and even remote parts of the valley plunged into darkness. At least eight powerful bombs exploded in Srinagar, claiming one life and leaving 27 persons seriously injured. State PCC(I)

While large numbers celebrated Pakistan's Independence, just a handful attended the August 15 function addressed by Farooq Abdullah.

Secessionists burn the Indian flag

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Posters of Zia: anti-national chief Mohammad Shahi Qureshi too was not spared—his car, which was parked outside his residence, was blown up by a powerful device.

Abdullah's humiliation was complete when just a handful of persons turned up at Srinagar's Bakshi Stadium where the official Independence Day celebrations were being held. The attendance at other functions linked to August 15 was also embarrassingly poor. It was a telling indication of whose writ runs in Kashmir valley.

There was no respite for Abdullah the next day—August 16, Zia-ul-Haq's death anniversary. The extremists continued their onslaught and extended the bandh for another day. Again, it was a big success. There were isolated reports of bomb blasts, and terrorists hijacked a bus on the outskirts of Srinagar and set it on fire after ordering all the passengers to disembark.

A few days later, terrorists believed to have been trained in Pakistan, again made a mockery of the chief minister's threats of crushing them, when they boldly gunned down an NC member, Mohammad Yousuf Halwai, in broad daylight right in the heart of the capital. Halwai met a bloody end simply because he refused to put out the lights in his house on August 15. His murder was clearly intended to frighten NC members into quitting the party. And it could also be one of the factors leading to the spate of resignations that followed soon after.

It was, in fact, soon after Halwai's murder that Abdullah told the House that some measures restricting press freedom, were in the offing. Nevertheless, he tried to create the impression that these would only apply to news about the pro-Pakistan secessionists. In actuality, however, the new law empowers the Government to censor virtually all types of news reports.

The August 16 bandh called by the secessionist groups in the state to mark Zia-ul-Haq's death anniversary was a grand success.

It is being speculated that this measure could be a prelude to some drastic step the Centre might be planning to take in the state. Others say that this could be because the chief minister's patience with hostile sections of the press has run out.

Abdullah, in fact, is known to have made churlish outbursts against critical sections of the press. Recently he vented his spleen against INDIA TODAY and the Newstrack video magazine for their coverage of rising secessionism in the state. Newstrack in particular, carried interviews with the militants which must have embarrassed Abdullah. Branding the coverage "premeditated and biased" he told the Assembly: "What INDIA TODAY wrote caused much damage to tourism. So when the Newstrack team came here, two hotels refused them accommodation as they were connected with INDIA TODAY." Newstrack rebutted these charges in a press release stating it was a balanced story which featured the police chief and Abdullah speaking for over five minutes in a 20-minute story. It objected to being made a scapegoat for Abdullah's problems.

Aside from the fast deteriorating situation in the valley, the last month has seen the emergence of a new problem for the state Government—communal riots in Buddhist-dominated Ladakh. Indefinite curfew was clamped on the district headquarters, Leh, and the army called out, after fighting broke out between Buddhists and Sunni Muslims, most of whom have only recently settled in Ladakh after it was opened to tourism. In the arson that followed, houses of both communities and 150 vehicles belonging to Kashmiri Muslims—mostly taxis—were set on fire. Even some foreign tourists were attacked by a group of armed Buddhists near Khalsti town. The Buddhists' demand is separation from the state and Union territory status for Ladakh. Since the violence broke out, foreign tourists have stopped visiting Ladakh and no private vehicle has crossed Zojila, the gateway to the border district.

Simultaneously, violence continues unchecked in the valley, where the death toll for the past one year has risen to at least 60. Abdullah, however, recently told the House that just 12 people have died in 170 bomb blasts and 165 cases of cross-firing during this period. But then, Kashmir's chief minister obviously believes in hiding the facts—as is evident from his resorting to near press censorship. Though Abdullah's authoritarian instincts have come to the fore, he cuts a pathetic figure, completely at sea in the political tinder-box that is the Kashmir of today.

—ZAFAR MERAJ

Advertisements in local papers announce resignations of NC members

اظہارِ لاتعلقی

میں نیشنل کانفرنس حلقہ مجاہد منزل کے نائب صدر کے عہدے سے مستعفی ہوجاتا ہوں اور آئندہ میرا کسی بھی سیاسی تنظیم سے کوئی تعلق نہیں ہوگا۔

عبدالحمید بٹ عرف حلوائی ولد غلام محمد بٹ حلوائی
ساکنہ اردو بازار فتح کدل (نائب صدر نیشنل کانفرنس حلقہ مجاہد منزل سری نگر)۔

No: 8634

اظہارِ لاتعلقی

میں کاروباری مصروفیات کی وجہ سے نیشنل کانفرنس محلہ مندر باغ کی صدارت سے مستعفی ہوتا ہوں۔ آج سے میرا کسی بھی سیاسی پارٹی سے کوئی تعلق نہیں ہوگا۔

محمد یعقوب خان
صدر محلہ نیشنل کانفرنس - مندر باغ

No: 8633

اظہارِ لاتعلقی

ذاتی مصروفیات کی بنا پر ہم نیشنل کانفرنس سے مستعفی ہو رہے ہیں۔ آج سے ہمارا کسی بھی سیاسی پارٹی سے کوئی بھی تعلق نہیں ہوگا

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

How TouchWood protects your beautiful wooden furniture in ways no polish can

Introducing TouchWood Polyurethane Clear Wood Finish. It forms a tough layer over wooden furniture — a layer that resists scratches and stains many times better than polish.

Polish is just not tough enough

Immediately after you apply it, polish makes wooden furniture look beautiful. But, the first spill leaves a stain — one that remains until you polish your furniture again.

That's because polish can only form a weak and thin coat: a coat that just can't stand up to spills and scratches.

So within a few months, your furniture starts looking stained and scratched.

It starts looking ugly.

TouchWood: polyurethane strength

TouchWood contains polyurethane: a tough plastic. It forms a thick transparent layer that clings tenaciously on to wood.

A layer which resists hot spills, cold spills and scratches for a very long time.

And it lets the natural beauty of wood shine through, years after the average polish is not even a memory.

Brush on. Takes longer to dry to protect better

Like paint, TouchWood can be brushed on; a job any painter can do. So the next time, instead of getting your furniture polished, try TouchWood.

And because it forms a tough, thick, protective layer, unlike polish, it takes longer to dry. But no longer than the paint on doors and windows.

What's more TouchWood protection spreads to every intricate carving, reaches every hidden corner.

And though TouchWood costs a little more than polish, it more than pays its way by the protection it gives your beautiful wooden furniture: many times longer than polish.

Glossy or matt finish

TouchWood is available in two finishes glossy and matt — unlike polish. And unique TouchWood stainer can make even ordinary wood look special.

Freely available

You can find TouchWood at any Asian Paints dealer: just walk in and ask for it.

TouchWood. You need to try it just once and you'll see how well it preserves your furniture's beauty.

TOUCH WOOD

Brush on. And keep wood looking new.

OBW/8350

asian paints

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The day is drawing to a close in Shahjahanpur, Uttar Pradesh. Sitting at one of his largest looms, Abdullah leans back to scrutinise his handiwork. On the semi-finished carpet, the pattern is coming alive; and in his eyes is the craftsman's gleam of pride. As he tucks one last loose thread into place, his thoughts go back to that day in 1977 when ITC's Triveni Handlooms came to his help...

Abdullah of Shahjahanpur. Even the skills inherited from his forefathers weren't getting him two square meals a day.

Until ITC established Triveni Handlooms to export his carpets and give his talent a new lease of life.

As an export agency, ITC matches requirements of foreign buyers.

ITC established Triveni Handlooms to inspire the revival of this traditional craft. Under Colonel Prem Sahgal (of INA fame), Triveni has helped over 2500 talented but poor weavers. Wages have increased from Rs 4 per sq. ft. in 1977 to over Rs 150 and the quality of product has improved impressively. With all their carpets being exported, Triveni earns close to Rs 1 crore in foreign exchange.

Apart from carpets, ITC's Exports Division markets a range of other products across the world. These include computer software, marine foods, garments and handicrafts. With fresh fruits, vegetables, spices and processed food being added to the portfolio, and with new markets showing significant potential, ITC is increasing its foreign exchange contribution to the country.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Where else is ITC working for India?

Agro-industry : ITC's technological expertise, gained from decades of R&D in seed development, is being transferred to produce high-yielding oilseeds. With the manufacture and marketing of edible and non-edible oils and their derivatives, ITC is helping reduce imports.

Family Health and Welfare : Through its far-flung marketing network, ITC distributes millions of Nirodh contraceptives and promotes the advantages of a small, well-spaced family: an effort acknowledged by the 1988 FICCI Award for Family Planning.

Paper and Board—in the core-sector : The ITC-promoted Bhadrachalam Paperboards is a leader in its field. It has set new standards by combining record productivity with exemplary concern for wood conservation, environment protection and tribal welfare.

New horizons, new hopes.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Love at first sight...

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CS–5121 DX

and ever after. Optonica colour TV wins your heart at first sight. And remains your true love ever after with its advanced technological features.

Technology: Brilliant

So many features in one set. On display: programme channels, transmission band, timer setting, balance time. Plus contrast, colour, brightness and volume settings. On screen: Vibrant colour every time.

No other manufacturer has all these features in one set.

Systems: Ultra Automatic

Optimatic Picture Control. Automatic Distortion Clearance through Auto Linearity Control. Automatic switching off after 30, 60, 90 and 120 minute pre-timed intervals. Automatic High Sensitivity Electronic Tuner. Automatic Blue Back at end of transmission.

Dependability: State of the art

25-key remote control of all TV functions. Engineering excellence that delivers high performance, true life vision and great viewing pleasure.

Come fall in love with an Optonica TV and be happy for the rest of your life.

OPTONICA

SHARPLINE

TVs • VCRs

Dependable for the rest of your life.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Manufactured in India by: Kalyani Sharp India Ltd.

Mudra:B:BF:5522

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The friendly Man from Eureka Forbes is about to demonstrate the most convenient way to keep your home free of dust and dirt.

One of these days the friendly Eureka Forbes salesman will ring your doorbell and introduce himself with his identity card.

This man inspires confidence – which is only natural. Because he is a member of the largest, most successful sales organisation of its kind in India. Backed by dependable after sales service.

He will introduce modern home products to cope with today's problems – dust, pollution, contaminated water and the lack of domestic help.

He has two unique products to demonstrate: EUROCLEAN all-purpose cleaning system, which is much more than a vacuum cleaner, and AQUAGUARD on-line, water filter-cum-purifier.

EUROCLEAN removes minute specks of dirt and dust in your home effortlessly. Even dust you didn't know existed. AQUAGUARD gives you clear, safe drinking water on tap – at the flick of a switch – even if the raw water has high bacterial contamination.

The Eureka Forbes salesman will show you – in your own home – how these products can bring the advantages of modern cleanliness and hygiene to your family. Making it a cleaner, safer world for you.

You need not wait till his rounds bring him to your doorstep. For further information do write to us at Eureka Forbes Limited, P.O. Box 936, G.P.O., Bombay 400 001.

Euroclean
The all-purpose cleaning system which is much more than a vacuum cleaner.

Aquaguard
On-line, water filter-cum-purifier.

EUREKA FORBES LIMITED
Pioneers in modern cleanliness and hygiene.

everest/89/EFL/188 R1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

Singh was waiting for a direct confrontation when Rajiv Gandhi made the offer of a one-to-one debate on TV. Singh lapped up the offer. But the Government was soon thinking of ways to wriggle out.

TV DEBATE

Shoot and Scoot

Rajiv Gandhi challenges V.P. Singh, then backtracks

At each opposition rally nowadays, there is one chair on the dais which is invariably empty. The absence is politically pregnant. The effect dramatic. Speakers point fingers at the chair and gleefully accuse: "The man for whom it is meant has run away. Rajiv Gandhi did not turn up for the open debate on Bofors." The audience explodes in laughs and cheers.

Ironically, Rajiv has invited his own embarrassment with typical recklessness. Addressing the national council members and state unit chiefs of the National Students Union of India (NSUI)—the Congress (I) student wing—in Delhi on August 12, the prime minister could not resist the temptation to impress. With brashness, the bait was laid: Rajiv challenged his bete noir, Janata Dal President V.P. Singh to an American style face-to-face Doordarshan debate on the Bofors issue.

The following morning wire agencies reported Rajiv's latest quote: "I am for an open discussion and let V.P. Singh accept the challenge. Let people judge and form their opinion before the country goes to the polls."

But events so transpired that Rajiv's impromptu act of bravado was to prove quite costly. Singh, under siege in his own party thanks to factional infighting, gratefully latched on to his new electoral life-line. In an open letter to the prime minister, he wrote: "I am delighted that you have challenged me to a face-to-face debate on Bofors. I accept the challenge and will look forward to an early encounter with you."

The prime minister already sensed his pending embarrassment and called for a meeting with Information Minister H.K.L. Bhagat and other office-bearers. The objective: to find an escape route out of the obvious mess, minimising the unavoidable political loss. The next day, Bhagat provided an ingenuous clarification: he declared that since Singh was merely a factional leader of the Opposition, the prime minister could not debate with him alone. Proposing a debate between the government side and a group of opposition leaders, Bhagat commented contemptuously: "The prime minister is not a factional leader of our party as you are in the Janata Dal."

The prime minister's retreat was expected. The Opposition was determined to extract the maximum political capital out of Rajiv's backtracking. Janata Dal spokesman, S. Jaipal Reddy accused him of "running away from a TV debate" with Singh. Said he: "It is yet another example of his gigantic guilt complex on the Bofors question." The Bofors issue had been pushed right back to the political centrestage.

As the Opposition barked in harmony, eager to snap at Rajiv's wagging tongue, the Prime Minister's Office (PMO) maintained a strategic silence. Meanwhile, the NSUI decided to issue a so-called clarification, declaring that the prime minister wanted a debate between the Government and the Opposition on any forum, including TV. Party insiders confide that a complete denial by the PMO or the NSUI would have created a credibility problem for Rajiv.

In a belated attempt to gain political mileage out of an obviously tough situation, the Congress (I) has been trying to launch a counter-offensive missile at Singh. Congress (I) General Secretary, Ghulam Nabi Azad said: "The prime minister only said that we are ready, let V. P. Singh come for the debate. A prime minister has never engaged himself in such a debate."

But, it already seems too late to save Rajiv's political face. The Government has worsened the situation by ignoring the Opposition demand for producing the tape of his speech. The Rajiv-hunting Indian Express, in a caustic editorial, mocked: "If there is one person who can shoot and scoot faster than the Bofors gun surely it is Rajiv Gandhi."

The whole episode has brought home a moral to Rajiv, which he can only ill-afford to ignore in the sensitive atmosphere of an election year: think before you speak.

—BHASKAR ROY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

PRESENTING INDIA'S FIRST ANA DIGI WATCHES

SO MUCH MORE THAN JUST TIME

HMT introduces 'Ana-digi' watches.

India's first. With analog and digital display, pre-programmed calendar, stop watch, alarm, hourly chime... wonder how you ever managed without them.

You don't have to. Anymore.

hmt
QUARTZ

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Despo scene, man. This arbit wardi's getting real agi at the disco about my roomi !"

In simple English this means "it's a desperate situation. The arbitrary warden is getting agitated about my room-mate at the discipline committee."

(India Today, Sept. 30, 1988)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Read today, quoted tomorrow

India Today on Youth

Listening. Ears close to the ground. Ceaselessly listening. To the accents and accidents of youth. The whispers, the screams.

Witnessing. With concern and with care. The vigour and vitality of youth. The delinquencies, the drama, the despair.

Discovering. And rediscovering. The passions and power of the young.

Chronicling change. Fortnight after fortnight.

Always, looking events straight in the eye.

And telling the story with style, clarity and credibility.

Reaching out to those who know the difference between being informed and being well-informed.

Subscription Offer

A special Speed Delivery system gets you your copy well on time. Safely home-delivered. At Rs 2/- off per copy for a one-year period. Mail a cheque/demand draft for Rs 192 (Rs 197 for a non-Delhi cheque) for 12 months' subscription payable to 'Living Media India Ltd.' and address the envelope to Living Media India Ltd., P.O. Box 29, New Delhi-110 001.

INDIA TODAY

Keeps you ahead

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hawkins
Inframatic Cuisinette

Nothing else cooks so many foods so fast.

Pizzas and Dosas. Grilled Chicken and Sheesh Kababs. Closed Toasted Sandwiches and Marinated Paneer. Waffles and Cakes. Your family had to go to fancy restaurants and Five-Star hotels to eat many of these tasty snacks. Now you can cook all these delicious dishes and more – super fast. With the Hawkins Inframatic Cuisinette.

Save the expense. Be sure of the hygiene. Entertain your family at home. And your friends and neighbours – if they are nice to you!

More than 30,000 Hawkins Inframatic Cuisinettes have been sold. From the makers of Hawkins pressure cookers. Quality India trusts. Hawkins.

Also available – the Hawkins Simmermatic Cuisinette that simmers delicious food slowly, the way granny used to – without the stirring, the smoke and the tears! Maximum price: Rs. 1,500, local taxes extra.

In case of any difficulty write to Hawkins, Dept No. 007, P.O. Box 6481, Bombay 400 016.

HAWKINS INFRAMATIC CUISINETTE
MAXIMUM PRICE RS. 3,000 LOCAL TAXES EXTRA

Super Speed Chart

CAKES	6 MINUTES
CHICKEN	6 MINUTES
PANEER	1 MINUTE
8 CLOSED TOASTED SANDWICHES	5 MINUTES
4 OPEN TOASTED SANDWICHES	8 MINUTES
WAFFLES	4 MINUTES
SHEESH KABABS	8 MINUTES

Hawkins®
INFRAMATIC CUISINETTE
Makes eating in as exciting as eating ou

REGISTERED TRADEMARK 1989 COPYRIGHT RESERVED BY HAWKINS COOKERS LIMI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Hawkins Inframatic Cuisinette available at:

DELHI

DELHI: Cannaught Place, M/s Janki Dass & Co. 23-F • M/s Manohar Dept. Store, 10-A • Fatehpuri, M/s R.D. Stores, 6504 • Kamala Nagar, Crockery Emporium, Shop No.11-F • Karol Bagh, Bengal Potteries & Allied Store, 6/30-31, Ajmal Khan Road • Virmani Appliances, 2537, Ajmal Khan Road, Vishal Bartan Bhandar, 2568, Ajmal Khan Road • Lajpat Nagar, M/s National Bartan Bhandar, 34 Central Market • Sadar Bazar, Khanna Agencies, 68-124, Crockery Market • Sarojini Nagar, M/s Vandana, 93 Main Market • Subzi Mandi, Crockery & Allied Stores, 1535, Chandrawal Road • Trinagar, Jain Electronics, 1532, Tota Ram Bazar

ASSAM

GUWAHATI: Fancy Bazar, M/s R. Champaklal Assam & Co., S.R.C.B. Road • Lakh Tokia, M/s City Centre, • S.S. Road, M/s C.M. Stores, Rly Gate No. 2 • M/s Ravi Prakash Anand & Co. S.S. Road

KARNATAKA

BANGALORE: Brigade Road, General Electricals • Pots and Pans International • Chickpet, Raja Trading Co., 802, Near Balepet Square • Indiranagar, Balaji Electricals, 325, Chinmaya Mission, Hospital Road • 4th Jayanagar, Anupam Electric Co • M.G. Road, Indiana Crockery • Richards Squares, Adams And Co., 19

MAHARASHTRA

BOMBAY: Andheri, Hemco Steel Centre, 212-S.V Road • Bandra (West), Shazaan, Hill Road • Chembur, Akbarally's, Jaswant Baug, Sion Trombay Road • Natraj Emporium, Nataraj Cinema Building • Dadar, M.C. Jawle Road, Kiran Steel Centre, 6, Laxmi Building • Jacob Circle, Ramanlal Jayantilal and Co., Arthur Road, Opp. Church, Satrasta • Lohar Chawl, Asiatic Electric Trading Co., 46-48, Vittal Sayana Bldg • Sanghvi International, 62 • Malad (West), Bharat Appliances, 34 Natraj Market • Santacruz (West), Akbarally's, Sai Darshan Apartment, S.V. Road • Mahavir Stores, Station Road • S. Bhagat Singh Road, Akbarally's, A-132, Great Western Bldg • Sion Circle, Shri Murugan Steel House, 11/39 Maryland Corner □ PIMPRI: Near Arya Samaj, Rajkumar Enterprises □ PUNE: M.G. Road, Chandan, 217 • Shan Hira, 13 □ NAGPUR: Dharampeth, Bapat's Shop • Pandit Commercial Complex, Gondwana Exports And Trading Co., Modi Lane No.3, Sitabuldi • Residency Road, Frontier Electric Stores, 32 • Sadal, Wox Sales (P) Ltd., 5, Residency Road • Sitabuldi, M.S. Pande & Sons, Main Road, Variety Square • Pandey General Agency, Main Road, Variety Square.

ORISSA

BHUBANESHWAR: Ashok Nagar, T. Krishna Patra, Rajmahal Chawk • Bapuji Nagar, Premier Enterprisers, Choudhuri Market • Reeta, Rajmahal Chawk • Eastern Market Building, Lalchand & Sons • Sahid Nagar, Suruchi □ CUTTACK: Choudhury Bazar, Janata General Stores • Link Road, Royal

TAMIL NADU

MADRAS: Evening Bazar, Formra & Co. 24 N. S. C. Bose Road • M A Etirajulu Naidu, No. 18 • Nyniappa Naicken Street, S Santosha Nadar Son Firm, No. 88 • Purasawalkkam, Raja Metal Stores, No. 264, Purasawalkkam High Road.

UTTAR PRADESH

LUCKNOW: Hazarat Ganj, M/s Domestic Appliances, Opp. Halwaria Market • Hazrat Ganj, M/s Mullicks Emporium • Lalbaugh, M/s Radio & Electric House, Shop No. 13 • Nazirabad, M/s Kanhaiyalal Prag Das, Shop No. 7

WEST BENGAL

CALCUTTA: Bhupen Bose Avenue, Steel Craft Syndicate, 100/2 • Chandni Chawk, Nag And Son, 6, Chandni Chawk Street • Esplanade, Italian Stores Pvt Ltd, 9/2 Chowringhee Road • Gariahatmore, Anandamela, G-9 Gariahat Market • Lenin Sarani (Opp. Chandni Chawk), Navee Electronics And Electricals, C/o Wachel Molla And Sons (P) Ltd, 8, Lenin Sarani • New Market, Bhiswadev And Co. B 70-71 • Ghosh And Ghosh, B-65 • Old China Bazar, Amarnath Kundu And Bros, 14/3, Old China Bazar Street • Satcowrie Dass & Co., 196, Old China Bazar Street • S L Coondoo And Co., 206, Old China Bazar Street • Poddar Court, ABC Traders, 18, Rabindra Sarani, Shop No. 13, Gate No.4 • Rash Behari Avenue, Nepal Sankar And Co., 85 • Sarat Bose Road, Channel Four Electronics Pvt. Ltd., 19C. • Tobin Road, Mullika, 83/2, B. T. Road

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL NADU

Back in Action

Jayalalitha reasserts herself

THE call was for a change of role. And taking the cue, AIADMK's leading star, General Secretary Jayalalitha, who had been incommunicado for over three months, hogged the spotlight in the political arena once again.

To most the transformation was unexpected. For some time it had been rumoured that Jayalalitha would quit politics. Party members, in fact, had been expecting Joint General Secretary R.M. Veerappan to take over the reins while she recuperated from her ailments.

But last fortnight Jayalalitha showed that she meant business. She met the press six times; convened and presided over the first general council meeting of the AIADMK after MGR's death; cemented an alliance with the Congress(I); and hit out against the Karunanidhi Government.

Galvanising Jayalalitha into action were the sobering results of a private opinion poll commissioned by her in July-end. A senior AIADMK leader told INDIA TODAY that the poll showed that less than 30 per cent of the respondents thought she was serious about politics. Surprisingly, even in Jayalalitha's constituency, Bodinayakkanur, nearly 50 per cent thought they had made a mistake in electing her. And as if that was not enough there were serious indications that the Congress (I), desperate for a firm toehold in the state, was exploring possibilities of tying up with the DMK.

Jolted by the startling poll revelations and the shifting political undercurrents, Jayalalitha woke up from her slumber. And as a curtain-raiser, she addressed a series of press conferences to pour ridicule on the resignation of opposition members from the Lok Sabha, oppose the August 30 Bharat Bandh, and express her unstinting support for Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and the Congress(I).

The next act had her reasserting her hold over her party by convening the AIADMK general council. The party named her permanent general secretary, giving her the authority to conduct negotiations she deemed necessary with any party. The council also passed resolutions praising the Centre for introduction of the Panchayati Raj and Nagarpalika bills in Parliament and attacking the DMK Government for giving up MGR's populist schemes.

Jayalalitha also catalysed the formation of a six-party group led by the AIADMK and the Congress(I) to oppose the Bharat Bandh. Said Jayalalitha: "We will work actively to frustrate the DMK's bandh ambitions."

Subha News Photo

Jayalalitha at AIADMK meeting

Expectedly, the DMK Government was up in arms over her statements. And what gave it the upper hand temporarily was her party's council resolution castigating the DMK for halting the distribution of 20 kg of rice per week to ration card-holders. Food Minister Arcot Veerasamy offered to resign if Jayalalitha could prove that 20 kg of rice had been supplied each week during MGR's regime. Said a shame-faced Jayalalitha: "It was a typing error. We meant 20 kg a month."

Retorted Revenue Minister Nanjil K. Manoharan: "What can one say of a political leader who does not know the difference between a week and a month? Does she have the standing to criticise the chief minister?" But Manoharan's sarcasm notwithstanding, it was all too apparent that Jayalalitha was back in harness, ready once again to tilt at the DMK bastions. —GUHA PRASAD

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UTTAR PRADESH

Gory Episode

Gruesome incident in college

SANDWICHES smeared with human blood 'sauce' may be Dracula's idea of a sumptuous breakfast. But it was a hellish one for a junior doctor, still severely traumatised by the recollection of eating the gory 'snack'.

The blood-soaked sandwich was served to Dr Rajesh Singh Rautella of the Moti Lal Nehru Medical College of Allahabad last fortnight by an unlikely personage: his professor, Dr R.C. Gupta.

According to an FIR lodged by Rautella, the gruesome incident took place soon after an operation performed by Dr Gupta, an orthopaedic surgeon. In the ante room, where a lecturer Dr S. K. Chaurasia was also present, Gupta asked Rautella whether he was a vegetarian or a non-vegetarian. Recalls Rautella: "I told him I was a non-vegetarian. Then he gave me a red-coloured sandwich, saying it had a special sauce brought by his daughter from the U.S."

The unwary doctor took a bite and then another. Says Rautella: "I told him that the sandwich tasted sour. He said it was because I was trying the sauce for the first time. After the third bite, I realised the strange odour was familiar. Then I knew it was blood."

R.K. GUPTA

Gupta; and (inset) Rautella undergoing treatment

Talking to INDIA TODAY, Chaurasia confirmed the incident. Says he: "The sandwiches were made with the blood of the patient operated upon just before the incident." In a statement to the college authorities, Chaurasia said Gupta had told one of his residents to put the blood from the Romovac (machine used for storing blood) on the bread.

Initially, Gupta confessed to the act before the medical college authorities and the local press, but later denied it. Says Dr Baldev Raj, principal of the MLN Medical College: "Dr Gupta admitted before me and other members of the staff

INSAAF PARTY

Lone Ranger

A world separates rhetoric from realpolitik. Syed Shahabuddin, the diplomat-turned-politician has always argued persuasively that instead of having a separate political party, Muslims should strengthen their lobby within the mainstream parties. So, when the firebrand leader launched the Insaaf Party last fortnight, he was only contradicting himself.

It was obviously the desire to reap political gains from the communal divide that made Shahabuddin do an about-turn. The MP from Krishanganj, Bihar, it appears, is caught in the cleft. After campaigning for V.P. Singh in the Allahabad by-election last year, he was expected to join the Janata Dal and bring in the Muslim votes. But that did not happen. Shahabuddin blames V.P. Singh's ambivalence on Hindu fundamentalism as the reason for the rupture of relations. Opposition leaders accuse him of getting close to the Congress(I).

This charge is not unfounded. Shahabuddin undoubtedly has links with some prominent Congressmen including AICC(I) General Secretary K.N. Singh. He, however, cannot afford to come out openly in support of the ruling party as it is blamed for the failure to prevent the massacre of Muslims in Meerut, Maliana and Hashimpura. Hence the subterfuge of the Insaaf Party.

Says Baseer Ahmed, the new party's general secretary: "Any poll alliance with the Janata Dal is ruled out in the event of its adjustment with the BJP—which is our enemy number one. The proposal from the Congress(I) can be considered depending on the implementation of its earlier promises to the minorities."

Shahabuddin

Shahabuddin, meanwhile, is at pains to insist that his new political party is not a platform for Muslims alone. "Our objective is to promote the ideals of the freedom movement and defend the secular order," he says.

The party will undoubtedly be another pressure group in Indian politics. Both the Congress(I) and the Janata Dal will have to redo their political arithmetic for the general elections as Shahabuddin has considerable influence over Muslims in Uttar Pradesh and Bihar—where they can tilt the balance in over 30 constituencies.

The response from both camps has been guarded. There was no official reaction from the Janata Dal though Mufti Mohammed Sayeed remarked that the Insaaf Party would "alienate the Muslims further (from the mainstream)". The AICC General Secretary Ghulam Nabi Azad cautiously said: "Insaaf means justice—there can be no objection as far as the name goes."

Immediately after launching his party, Shahabuddin went on a week-long tour of south India where he addressed a Muslim conventions. Next month he will tour western Uttar Pradesh, Rajasthan and Maharashtra. Shahabuddin's aim appears to be to impress upon the two major centrist parties that even if he is unable to ensure victory for his own candidates he can at least ensure the defeat of his opponents.

—BHASKAR ROY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

R.K. GUPTA

la aurasia e: "The blood of fore the college pta had e blood used for the act horities enied it.

the MLN
dmitted
the staff

nsid-Ittar can nsti-

has icial ugh rked arty
Mus-
the AICC
tary causaaf can r as after rty, n a here ons.

ttar ash-o be trist e to ates
f his

ROY

Introducing Shoe cream supreme

Cherry® BLOSSOM LEATHER NOURISHING CREAM

Cherry® BLOSSOM LEATHER NOURISHING CREAM ALL-COLOUR

Cherry® BLOSSOM LEATHER NOURISHING CREAM

New Cherry Blossom Leather Nourishing Cream. Extra creamy richness that goes deep down into leather, nourishing and protecting it. Specially formulated by the makers of Cherry Blossom.

New Cherry Blossom Leather Nourishing Cream. Use it alongwith Cherry Blossom Shoe Polish— and give your shoes a softer, suppler, richer shine!

You can use Cherry Blossom Leather Nourishing Cream on leather of any colour.

LINTAS (CAL)/CBLNC/1/2720

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

1919. A year of turmoil that was witness to the Jallianwala Bagh massacre. And the start of the Swadeshi Movement against the British Raj.

The very year that gave birth to India's first Public Limited insurance company.

New India. Founded by the Tatas.

The pioneering spirit

Quick to recognize the security needs of a fledgling Indian industry, New India began providing innovative insurance covers. Backed by prompt, personalised service.

At the same time, it led a protracted struggle for reforms and relaxation of British tariff policies. That were detrimental to local Indian enterprise.

Thus developed a corporate ethos based on service and innovation. That was to take New India to the top of the general insurance industry in India.

This leadership was consolidated soon after nationalisation in 1973. When New India expanded its activities to also cover rural India. Through much needed welfare-oriented insurance covers for the weaker sections of society.

70 years later

Today New India is India's leading insurance company. With a premium base exceeding Rs.725 crores.

A range of innovative insurance covers. From Cancer and Crop. To Sericulture and Satellite.

And the services of nearly 800 experts, including engineers and veterinary surgeons, that help New India provide customised services. In urban and rural areas.

New India. The giant, 20000-strong insurance company whose success lies on the solid foundation of service.

Service with a special personal touch.

For us, times change. Values endure.

NEW INDIA ASSURANCE

A subsidiary of the General Insurance Corpn. of India

BORN TO LEAD

A public sector enterprise with the entrepreneurial spirit.

CONTOUR ADS-NIA-161 E/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

I don't like taking people for a ride, but when I do they seem to enjoy it.

DIGJAM

SUITINGS FOR THE CONNOISSEUR

A Product of VXL India Ltd.

WE EXCEL

Available at Mill's SUMANGAL showrooms
and other leading stores

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya S[illegible]mai and eGangotri

[illegible]ion, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I helped make the green revolution possible...

ICI India, previously IEL, has a 30-year relationship with agrarian India... from the time the seeds were being sown for the green revolution, till today. Consistent high quality, a wide distribution network and a strategy of demonstration and farmer education programmes have created high acceptability for 'Chand Chhap' urea.

The company's agrochemicals, 'Cymbush' and 'Gramoxone', have helped cotton farmers protect their crops and the tea plantations achieve higher yields.

Today, ICI India looks forward to the future with confidence and a sharp sense of competitiveness.

Behind it are several decades of pioneering work. An ICI Group worldwide turnover of Rs.32,000 crores, R&D expenditure of Rs.3 crores per day, and over 33,000 inventions.

▪ Agrochemicals ▪ Catalysts ▪ Explosives ▪ Fertilizers ▪ Fibres ▪ Paints

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

... I am ICI"

With these strengths, the future is promising, specially in the area of value-added products that represent the world's finest technology and expertise. Products that help improve the quality of life.

Products that, as always, make us proud to say, "I am ICI".

ICI

ICI India Limited

Looking forward to the challenges of the 1990s.

- Pharmaceuticals
- Rubber Chemicals
- Research & Development
- Specialty Chemicals

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Non-Stop

Every week, Thai flies non-stop 3 times to London, twice to Paris and 8 times to Bangkok. From Bangkok, Thai flies non-stop and direct to over 45 Asian and Australasian destinations, and daily to 12 key European destinations.

Savour the luxury of Thai's renowned in-flight service. You'll sample delicious delicacies, dine in the finest fare, and sip wine from the world's most celebrated vineyards.

Fly Thai International to discover what flying is really all about !

LONDON PARIS INDIA BANGKOK

Thai
Smooth as silk.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

that he had given Dr Rautella a sandwich with human blood sauce. He said it was part of an experiment that he had been working on for many years."

Gupta claims it is a conspiracy. He told INDIA TODAY over the telephone: "The Government was giving me an extension after my retirement on August 31. Some persons in my department, who do not want me to continue, have concocted this story." Questioned whether he had been conducting the experiment, he admitted: "I have been thinking on these lines for quite some time. But I have not yet tried it."

Outraged junior doctors have painted slogans describing Gupta as an adamkhor (cannibal) and his deserted chamber as adamkhor ka gufaa (den of the cannibal). Red-painted cardboard sandwiches can be seen hanging in corridors as junior doctors prepare for a statewide strike, demanding Gupta's punishment. Says an angry Dr H.S. Rawat, a junior resident: "Dr Gupta has no right to be called a doctor after such an heinous offence." Dr Gupta, who has been suspended by the state Government, faces a police case.

Meanwhile, Rautella undergoes treatment in the intensive care unit of the college hospital for gastric trouble, nausea and pyschological trauma. With acute revulsion towards food, he is being administered 'per-enteral' feeding. Says he, "Even if I drink milk, I feel I am drinking human blood."

—DILIP AWASTHI in Allahabad

R.K. GUPTA

Writings on hospital walls

BOTTOMLINE BY D. BUNKER

Drama Rao

Andhra Pradesh chief minister N.T.Rama Rao's face was suffused in saffron. "I am all the rage", he thundered, which translated from Telugu, meant he was very angry. The reason: Rajiv had just toured his state and let loose a flood of charges, leaving NTR shaking like a tendu leaf and invoking divine retribution on the prime minister. Summoning his son-in-law and other related issues, the chief minister ordered them to come up with a damage-control strategy. Here's how the strategy session, held in utmost secrecy, went.

NTR: We are not called the Telugu dishum dishum for nothing. We must find a way to hit back. How much damage has been done?

Son-in-law (SIL): About Rs 600 crore worth. That is only a provisional estimate...

NTR: Idiot. I don't mean the floods. I meant that brat and the lies he said about me. What is the people's reaction?

RI (Related Issue): We can't tell. That chap from the PM's office has told them to address their answers to the prime minister and not to you.

NTR: (shaking his trishul) This is a clear infringement by the Centre on the state's internal affairs. Can't we take them to court?

NRI (Non-related issue): They already have 200 cases filed against you. Any more, and they will have to set up a special court and change your name to Non Transferable Respondent.

NTR: But he can't be allowed to get away will all these lies. He accused me of being a traitor. Me? By the beard of Vishwamitra, I am....

SIL: Well, you did put up all those memorials of Naxalites.

NTR: That was my carrot policy. I can't help it if it went bust.

RI: What about all those arms you gave to the people?

NTR: You can't have carrots without sticks. How was I to know they would sell the arms to buy rice?

NRI: It's certainly put you out on a limb.

SIL: It also raised the price of rice. He is now accusing you of cheating the poor.

NTR: This is ridiculous. Next he'll be accusing me of the assassination of his mother.

RI: He did.

NTR: This has gone too far. I am shaking with rage.

NRI: That's not rage. That's your chief minister's chair.

NTR: You people are no help. I called you here to ask for advice, not listen to criticism. I need a hard-hitting speech attacking Rajiv Gandhi and it should read like a film script.

IB (Innocent bystander): How about this. "He is surrounded by cardboard walls. Inside, everything is rosy, everything looks green. But if you look beyond there is nothing. There is a world of difference between fact and fiction, myth and reality."

NTR: That's it. It's perfect. I'll use it.

IB: Actually, it has already been used by somebody else.

NTR: Never mind. I'll buy the copyright. Who is it?

IB: Rajiv Gandhi. That's exactly what he said about you.

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Cash Conflict

● A 'banking war' is on in Bihar. And pitted against nationalised banks is the state cooperative bank. The bone of contention: the massive deposits the state Government has made in nationalised banks.

The indignant state cooperative bank has fished out a four-year-old government directive to different departments asking them to deposit government funds in the cooperative bank. Argues B.K. Sinha, managing director, cooperative bank: "There are advantages to making deposits in the cooperative bank. Not only do they provide more interest, but they also ensure that the deposits get invested in the state."

On the other hand, nationalised banks have lucratively invested a bulk of the deposits in other states. Sinha claims the Bihar Government is losing around Rs 20 crore in interest alone.

But last fortnight, a change in attitude was intimated when the Primary Education Department decided to transfer Rs 20 crore from the nationalised banks to the cooperative bank. The nationalised banks were naturally perturbed by the decision. As a result they tried to find flimsy pretexts to stall transfer of the money. Among the tactics to delay the transfer: it was claimed that the Director, Primary Education, M.M. Jha's signature had not tallied with the specimen in their possession.

Worse followed. Says Jha: "Numerous officials visited my office and hinted that for every crore of rupees deposited with their banks, they were willing to pay a sum of Rs 10,000." Curiously enough, Rs 20 crore had been released by the Centre towards the Operation Blackboard programme. However, instead of utilising the money, it was allowed to remain with the nationalised banks for almost six months.

MADHYA PRADESH

Dons of the Fourth Estate

R.C. SAHU

Journalists' demonstration: a split within

● THE fourth estate's credibility has hit a new low in Madhya Pradesh. Racketeers, masquerading as journalists, are bringing out rags to extract official patronage.

Last fortnight, they locked horns with professional journalists when the Hindi daily Jansatta described how editors of small weeklies queue up before the chief minister's office for advertisements. Campaigning for Jansatta's boycott, the local unit of All India Small and Medium Newspapers' Federation held a demonstration outside the newspaper's office, submitted a memorandum to the governor and tried to forcibly enter Patrakar, the headquarters of the Bhopal Working Journalists' Union.

Rallying to Jansatta's support, union member Shalabh Bhadoria said: "We have complained to the Government about the undue patronage extended to these newspapers. But they have their reasons for nurturing such elements." And the reasons needn't be spelled out.

UTTAR PRADESH

Another Star Sparkles

● FILM star Raj Babbar is now facing the arclights on the political stage. After the success of his visit to Lucknow University on August 8, he plans to address public meetings on other Uttar Pradesh campuses—including Gorakhpur and Varanasi in September—to mobilise students against the present 'raj'.

Explains Anil Singh, former Jan Morcha activist and organiser of the meetings: "Babbar has been a student leader. He can communicate with them better than anyone else." At Lucknow, Babbar told a 5,000-strong audience: "The rulers have always been using you. Tell them this will not happen this time."

Speculation is rife that Babbar may be joining active politics. Denies Babbar: "I am only interested in the ouster of this government." Sounds familiar.

Babbar at rally: mobilising students

R.K. GUPTA

MAHARASHTRA

Posh Prostitutes

● PROSTITUTION has shifted to high-rise residential buildings in Bombay these days. Posh premises are increasingly being invaded by the practitioners of the oldest profession.

This year the Vigilance Branch officers of the Bombay Police have raided as many as 14 residential areas, compared to five last year. During the raids they found that flats in areas like Malabar Hill, Napean Sea Road, Bandra, and Versova are being booked by operators to entertain wealthy customers.

According to Joint Police Commissioner(Crime) Arvind Inamdar, who is directing the action against the brothels in the city, high-rise prostitution is high-paying too. Says he: "The same girl who would have charged not more than Rs 50 for a short-time rendezvous gets Rs 1,000 for the same."

NAMAS BHOJANI

A raid: high rise brothels

Those involved include married women and girls from respectable families. Says D.M. Khairnar, a senior inspector with the Vigilance Branch: "The younger clients prefer girls who can carry themselves well and speak in English." As for the girls themselves, once they get used to the luxurious life-style they cannot leave off.

And checking this prostitution is not easy, because it is carried out discreetly in residential areas by the rich, and is difficult to monitor.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Take the world in your stride.

dinesh

Exclusives ▲ Suitings ▲ Co-ordinates ▲ Safaris

The choice of leading fashion houses, internationally.

Woolmark
PURE NEW WOOL
HI-COMFORT WOOL

Authorised dealers: DELHI: Jainsons • Jainsons Westend • Sri Ram & Sons • CHANDIGARH: T. R. & Sons • KANPUR: Gopaldas Sarab Dayal • Mohan Bros. • Pahoolal Vedprakash • LUCKNOW: Bhasin Agencies • H. Sugnamal & Co. • Sahu Cloth Emporium. (IT/2)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OFFICE AUTOMATION

The Great Shake-Out

The office automation industry is being turned on its head. New companies are furiously leaping into the fray, while some industry old-timers are fading out, amidst price wars and hard sell.

SITTING in his glass-panelled office in Delhi, Arjun Malhotra, vice-chairman of the Rs 170-crore office automation company HCL Ltd, looks pleased with himself. He has every reason to be happy. Innovative marketing and pricing have taken HCL to the top of the Indian office automation industry. This year, sales burgeoned by 70 per cent, from Rs 100 crore to Rs 170 crore.

But it's an uneasy perch at the top. Rivals are jostling to push HCL off. Says Malhotra: "Competition will be fiercer as new players get in while others merge with bigger companies."

"Competition will be fiercer as new players get in while others merge with bigger companies."
ARJUN MALHOTRA, HCL Vice-Chairman

That sums up the office automation—copiers, facsimile machines, computers, electronic typewriters, and office telephone exchange systems—business today. It's an industry that's being turned on its head. New companies are leaping in, some old-timers are fading out while others are consolidating their market positions. "Before, a lot of fly-by-night operators who assembled kits had entered the office automation industry," says Raghu Murti, managing director of Gestetner (India) Ltd. "Those who're entering now are serious players in the market."

The latest to plan a foray into office automation is Reliance Industries, which has tied up with Wang Laboratories of the US to turn out computers. It will join a growing band of big business players in

COMPUTERS

Tumbling Bits

COMPUTER companies have been going down like ninepins. Look at what's happening:

- In Bangalore, PSI Data Systems' sales dropped from Rs 18 crore in 1987-88 to Rs 15.3 crore last year. Says Managing Director Vinay Deshpande: "Our company fared poorly in personal computers. Ours was a high-performance, high-cost operation."
- In Bombay, the Rs 14-crore International Data Management went into a bevy of products. But it had spread its capabilities too thin. Last year, sales grew by just 4 per cent. This year, it was taken over by market leader HCL.
- In Delhi, the Rs 40-crore Pertech Computers Ltd saw turnover zooming by 515 per cent in a year, but finances have been sharply squeezed.

Across the country the squeeze is on. Companies are bowing out. Prices are tumbling. And some, to cut costs, are switching to buying products from low-cost small manufacturers.

The survivors are those who set the rules of the game, the Rs 600-crore mini and micro computer industry plays by. An example is the Madras-based Sterling Computers. Two years ago, it stormed the market with a personal computer 30 per cent cheaper than any comparable product. That set off a dizzy dive in prices. HCL, which was selling computers for Rs 1.20 lakh, is now selling them for Rs 25,000.

To push sales, firms are resorting to other strategies. Many have appointed dealers, instead of hawking computers directly. DCM Data Products is setting up a 100-dealer network. HCL is developing 24 dealers.

Then, DCM Data Products is granting higher discounts to dealers who sell more than 10 personal computers. Computer giant Wipro is operating on zero margins in personal computers, compensating at the upper end of the market where margins are higher.

To avoid price wars firms seek sheltered niches. Modi Olivetti, playing on technology consciousness, is launching a computer introduced in the West only months ago. Others are hawking computer-aided design systems.

Even so, no company can take its position for granted. The competition is only half a step behind.

—SURAJEET DAS GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the market: the JK group (facsimile machines), Escorts (electronic private branch automatic exchanges—EPBAX), the Tatas (EPBAX), the Modis.

Amidst the heated action, HCL and Wipro, the Bangalore-based computer company, are busy working out strategies to maintain their pre-eminence in the market. Meanwhile, some of the older players have been bloodied. In computers (see box), the Bangalore-based PSI Data Systems Ltd has gone into a financial tailspin. So has DCM Data Products. And International Computers Indian Manufacture (ICIM), which has a major presence in mainframe computers, has seen business slow down by 24 per cent this year. Both DCM Data Products and ICIM are now trying to make a come-back. In copiers (see box), Gestetner had red ink all over its ledgers and had to seek a fresh infusion of cash. Newly-formed IDC Ltd—in which the company has a 40 per cent stake—is now taking a shot at the market.

To stay ahead of the competition many will segment the market and cater to specialised niches."
B.K. MODI, Chairman, Modi Xerox

The numbers provide some chilling evidence of just how high the casualty rate can get. In the early '80s, 18 companies started making copiers. Today there are only six. In 1984, 142 companies were given licences to manufacture personal computers. About 80 went into production. Only 42 still remain.

Rivalries are equally fierce in the electronic typewriter business (see box). Some 12 companies battle for the Rs 25-crore market, but just one—Indian Communications Network Ltd—accounts for more than half the market. And it successfully fended off challenges from mechanical typewriter manufacturers. A foray into the electronic arena met with mixed results. Facit Asia, for instance, has abandoned plans to set up a separate factory for electronic typewriters in Uttar Pradesh.

The story is much the same in computers. And in copiers. Cutthroat competition. Falling margins. And an unprecedented shake-out.

Why then is everyone dashing into the industry? "There's a massive market waiting to be tapped," says B.K. Modi, who heads office automation enterprises, Modi Xerox and Modi Olivetti. Valued at Rs 800 crore, the market is growing at an annual clip of 35 per cent. That's faster than the electronic industry's growth rate of 30 per cent or the engineering industry's 10 per cent crawl.

The din of competition has led to a wider awareness of office automation options. An independent survey done a year ago showed that more than 42 per cent of users now want more people to use computers in their offices.

Companies have to adopt a variety of strategies to survive. Some are cutting prices, content for the time being with lower margins—making up profits with higher volumes. Last year, HCL cut the prices of its copiers to below Rs 50,000. Result: its sales shot up by 60 per cent.

But low prices can be based only on low costs. Indigenisation is one way—and especially effective given the depreciation

COPIERS

Bruising Battle

"We made a mistake," admits HCL Vice-Chairman Arjun Malhotra. He's talking about the copiers war. HCL lost the first round to rival Modi Xerox last year, but round two promises to be bloodier.

Earlier, HCL priced its copiers high to reap high profits. Modi Xerox, however, operated on low margins to capture a large market share. The gambit paid off. HCL's didn't. It's believed that Modi Xerox raised its share of the Rs 200-crore copiers market by 5 per cent to the present 43 per cent. In 1987-88 HCL sold just 1,033 copiers versus 1,676 the previous year.

The second spot may have been grabbed by BEE Electronics, which manufactures Canon copiers marketed by Dynavox which commands 70 per cent of the market for shop-operated copiers.

Now HCL is hitting back. Its new game plan: retrain the sales force, offer a wider range of products, reduce price by indigenising and launch an advertising war. Two years ago, the company had only one model. Today, it has six. But it's mainly banking on low prices. It has introduced a copier priced at Rs40,000—about half that of its rivals—followed by an advertising blitz. HCL claims that post-campaign sales shot up by more than 200 per cent.

If that's true, rivals should be readying for another price war. But T.S. Ramakrishnan, general manager (marketing) of Modi Xerox says: "We have scored on our service network. We have avoided playing the pricing game." It's chosen to market specialised copiers.

Others are using similar strategies. Says W.T. Balaji, managing director of Dynavox Electronics: "We will not compete on price but on features."

Underdog IDC Ltd—an associate of Gestetner—is also planning a come-back by wooing a new customer: the Government, which buys more than 60 per cent of the copiers in the country. By year-end, it expects to corner 10 per cent of the market. Managing Director Raghu Murti is confident: "We could well be the dark horse in the market." But in the copiers war, there are no white knights to rescue companies in distress.

—SURAJEET DAS GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

of the rupee against both the dollar and the yen. The Rs 12.51-crore Tata Telecom, which manufactures EPABX systems, has indigenised by as much as 30 per cent in just over a year. And Modi Xerox has achieved an indigenisation level which enables it to hold prices in check—even if the rupee continues to depreciate.

Low prices have to be backed by aggressive marketing. Says Deepak Maira, marketing manager of Network: "The consumer's need to buy automation equipment is a latent one. You have to go to him and push your products."

Our company fared poorly in personal computers. Ours was a high-performance high-cost operation."
VINAY DESHPANDE, Managing Director, PSI Data Systems

It's a solution every company has latched on to. Network has a 150-strong sales force hawking its electronic typewriters. Salesmen are provided with liberal incentives—hefty cash prizes, free foreign trips and Maruti cars. Others are going on an advertising blitzkrieg. This year, PCL jacked up its advertising budget by 40 per cent. And last year, HCL nearly doubled its advertising budget and got into a messy advertising war with rival Modi Xerox when it claimed that its products were superior.

But it's no cheap solution—selling costs amount to 18 per cent of the sale price. In computers, the figure is as high as 20 per cent of the sale price and in EPABX systems, 15 per cent.

So many companies are trying to avoid getting caught in profit-sapping competition by marketing products that are different. "To stay ahead of the competition, many will segment the market and cater to specialised niches," says Modi.

Many are discovering that there's money in add-ons. DCM Data Products is marketing PC-faxes, PC-telexes and computer-aided design systems which can be linked to its personal computer. The company expects its margins to go up by 5 per cent as a result. Says Chief Executive Veer Sagar: "Our margins have gone down very drastically to a mere 10 per cent. The market for add-ons is not so price sensitive."

But it's a game everyone can play. So it's necessary to constantly keep one step ahead of the competition. The other option is to create new market niches and retain control of them. Says B.K. Modi: "The tendency is to segment the market and cater to a particular consumer demand." So Tata Telecom is concentrating on the higher end of the EPABX market, namely, exchanges with over 250 lines. DCM is trying to get into large office segment needs by introducing a super-mini computer, employing technology made available in the West just three months ago.

The obvious beneficiary is the consumer. He gets access to the latest technology, a wider choice of products and of course, lower prices.

—SURAJEET DAS GUPTA with CHIDANAND RAJGHATTA in Bangalore, SHIV TANEJA in Bombay and bureau reports

ELECTRONIC TYPEWRITERS

Survival of the Fittest

LAST year, after a bruising war, Pertech Computers Ltd cornered 24 per cent of the electronic typewriters market. This year, the Delhi-based company is pulling out of electronic typewriters to concentrate on computers. The reason: profits in the Rs 25-crore market are not attractive enough. Usha Computers and Peripherals too has called it a day. Clearly, the electronic typewriters market is in the throes of a shake-out.

Until last year, one company—the Rs 16-crore Indian communications Network—dominated the scene with a 53 per cent market share. Second ranker Godrej straggled far behind with 25 per cent. Now rivals are preparing to dislodge Network from its vantage position.

The one-year-old Modi Business Machines is introducing a bilingual electronic typewriter and taking on manual typewriter manufacturers. A month ago, it introduced a model that cost under Rs 7,500. Says its Chief Executive Rajan Kohli: "Last year, one lakh mechanical typewriters were sold. We aim at making a 5 per cent dent on this market." Godrej too will launch an electronic typewriter that will compete with Network's high-tech product launched last year.

Companies are also switching marketing strategies and containing costs. Says Manu M. Parpia, vice-president of the electronic business equipment division of Godrej and Boyce: "The aim is to be the lowest cost producer so that in case of a price war, we do not suffer." The Modis are developing a network of 60 dealers instead of selling directly to consumers.

Not everyone can cope with such competitive pressures. Pertech and Usha have opted out. And mechanical typewriter manufacturers, Facit Asia and Remington Rand, are finding the market for electronic typewriters sticky. With sales of mechanical typewriters stagnating at one lakh a year, and expected to fall sharply, both had diversified into electronic typewriters. Clearly, it is a battle where only the fittest can survive.

—SURAJEET DAS GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

POWER BEHIND THE LIFT!

UB-MEC Traction batteries are built tough to withstand rigorous material handling operations. Consistent and unerring in performance these batteries are trusted as O.E. by Godrej & Boyce, Voltas, Jost's, Maini Materials and Mahindra Stiller. Its no surprise that UB-MEC Traction Batteries are regularly being exported to the U.S.S.R. in large quantities for two decades.

Bursting with power, bursting with reliability, bursting with energy — That's a UB-MEC Traction Battery.

MEC UB-MEC

TRACTION BATTERIES

BUILT TO PERFORM

UB-MEC Batteries Ltd., Regd. Office & Works: Mec. Factory Road, Yeswanthpur, Bangalore-560 022 Ph: 360161, 361112, 361113 Grams: 'MECWORK' TELEX: 845-2341
UB-MEC Batteries Ltd., Adarsh Ice Factory Compound, Marve Road, Malad West, Bombay-400 064 Ph: 6823579, 6820743
UB-MEC Batteries Ltd., 8/1B Chowringhee Lane, Calcutta-700 016 Ph: 241963
UB-MEC Batteries Ltd., McDowell House, No. 3, 2nd Line Beach, Madras-600 001. Ph: 521474, 516179
UB-MEC Batteries Ltd., No. 51, II Floor, Rani Jhansi Road, New Delhi-110 055 Ph: 771067
UB-MEC Batteries Ltd., Kodakkat Bldgs., 38/2204, Opp. YMCA, Chittoor Road, Ernakulam, COCHIN-682 035. Ph: 369257
UB-MEC Batteries Ltd., 161, Cherry Road, SALEM-636 001. Ph: 62513
UB-MEC Batteries Ltd., Amrit Ice & Cold Storage Compound, Begumpura Road, Nawabwadi, SURAT-395 003. Ph: 52415, 37413
UB-MEC Batteries Ltd., No. S-54, 'C' Scheme, Radha Marg, JAIPUR-302 001. Ph: 73504
UB-MEC Batteries Ltd., Rachana Building, Nehru Garden Road, JALLANDHAR-144 001. Ph: 57652

AAA/UB-MEC/8974

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INVITING FRESH BIDS?

IS Philips N.V. of Holland, which has a 40 per cent stake in Peico Electronics and Electricals, inviting a fresh round of bids for 10 per cent of the Indian bulbs and consumer electronics company's equity? Peico officials decline to comment, but financial circles say this is the case. After Peico landed in the red by Rs 20 crore in 1988, Philips decided to bring in an Indian partner, but a few months ago granted Peico a year's time to effect a turnaround (INDIA TODAY, May 15, 1989). Philips had also sounded out RPG Enterprises on a partnership, but the talks fell through recently. So it is believed to have put part of Peico's equity on the auction block again. Why it would change its mind is not clear, but Peico needs a major infusion of cash—which an Indian partner could provide. Peico recently appointed retired State Bank of India chairman D.N. Ghosh as its chairman, and roped other nominees of institutions on to its board—which is seen as a peace offering to banks disenchanted by its performance.

SPIRITED DIVERSIFICATION

WHAT do pistons and piston rings have in common with Indian Made Foreign Liquor? Plenty, if the company is Goetze (India) Ltd. The Rs 50-crore automobile components manufacturer has sought official clearance under monopoly laws to enter the liquor market. The idea: to produce and bottle 10,000 kilolitres of potable alcohol from grain in a backward district in Uttar Pradesh. The waste product is to be converted into cattle-feed. Expected annual sales from the Rs 10 crore project: Rs 60 crore. Keen on becoming a major player in food processing, Goetze has been exporting canned fruit and will be introducing cereal-based 'Muesli' bars coated with nuts or chocolate. It also plans to launch supermarket chains (INDIA TODAY, October 15, 1988). Clearly, it has much to toast.

DRINKS TO RESORTS

FROM soft drinks to hosteliery is but a short leap, as Campa Cola producer Pure Drinks—which runs Le Meridien hotel in Delhi—has shown. Now, rival Parle of Thums Up fame is planning to follow suit. Parle boss Ramesh Chauhan has registered a separate company to launch beach resorts, mostly for foreign tourists. Initially, just one resort outside Bombay is planned. The project is still largely on the drawing-boards. Parle officials are talking to foreign tour operators to assess requirements. Several details such as the project's cost have yet to be worked out. Also, after signing up to put up three bottling plants in the Soviet Union, Chauhan has clinched a deal for a fourth plant. Plainly, the Russians are going to 'taste the thunder'.

LOOKING OUTWARD

AFTER years of concentrating on the highly profitable home market, there are stray signs that big business is seriously eyeing overseas markets. The latest to do so is Indian Aluminium Ltd. The Calcutta-based company has a small presence in foreign markets, and has set up Indal Exports Ltd to take over the export functions of Indian Aluminium, and later become an export house. Estimated annual turnover: Rs 50 crore. RPG Enterprises is turning a small trading concern into a trading house. Food Specialities Ltd has an export house on the anvil, as does M.R. Chhabria's Dunlop, and the JK group Singhanias are toying with the idea. One reason for the rush: export profits are tax exempt. Another: the Government has been brandishing the stick.

BIG SPENDERS

AS rivalries in the market-place get fiercer, companies are spending more and more on pushing their products. According to a study by Calcutta-based financial daily Business Standard, 100 corporations in 1987-88 spent 26 per cent more on sales promotion (advertising, discounts, commissions) than in the year before, with advertising taking 57 per cent of total expenditure. The study picks 100 large corporations and ranks the big spenders of 1987-88. Logically, companies with huge sales turnovers would be expected to spend more. But this is not always the case. Hindustan Ciba Geigy leads, followed by Reliance Industries, Hindustan Lever, McDowell and Colgate-Palmolive (see chart). But, as the study points out, stepping up sales promotion expenditure doesn't always lead to higher sales.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

NAME CHANGE

INDIAN Communications Network Ltd, which is promoted by promoters of computer company HCL Ltd, is readying to float a new company and merge with it. The new concern will be called Network India Ltd. Indian Communications Network is a closely-held enterprise, and these moves are part of a complicated, undisclosed financial exercise aimed at broadening its equity base—by going public. The change in name is due to its current and future business portfolio. The Rs 16-crore company started in the communications business—it used to hawk telephones—and moved into electronic typewriters. It is diversifying into desktop publishing systems, microprocessor-based industrial automation systems, computer peripherals and ribbon cartridges for electronic typewriters and computers. Network will join other corporations that are changing names; Glindia (back to Glaxo), IEL Ltd (ICI India), and United Breweries (the UB group).

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Performance.
As if life depended on it.

ONIDA VCR

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If you have to sit on a plane for hours at a stretch,

ONE HOUR

TWO HOURS

FOUR HOURS

The next time you're flying long-haul, consider Air Canada. Because we've considered you. We asked frequent flyers what would take the 'haul' out of 'long-haul'. As a result, we've revamped and updated our Executive Class. You asked for a better seat.

Much more recline.

You've got it. You asked for more cabin space. You've got it. New seat layouts mean a wider aisle, and no more than 32 seats per cabin.

You asked for more overhead space. You've got it. Our larger overhead stowage bins can store up to 4 times

Fewer seats, better cart.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

pick a seat where you can stretch for hours.

more than before, which means you no longer need to sit with your hand luggage tucked under your seat, and your knees tucked under your chin.

You asked for more washrooms. You've got them. What's more, there's more space to hang jackets and coats, too.

You asked for more choice in your food. You've got it. There is a choice of two meals, including a special Nutri-cuisine that's low in fat, low in salt and low in sugar. Ideal, in fact, for high flyers.

So, if there's anything you haven't got that you'd like, let us know. We're never too stretched to consider it.

EXECUTIVE CLASS. A BREATH OF FRESH AIR.

Air Canada

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/AC/7741

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

STAR OF THE TIMES.

AC 6645-57H

AF 2072-54P

AC 6663-55P

AC 6653-59E

He's got star quality. Whichever face he shows the world, it's there. That aura of elegance. Those perfectly timed movements. Water resistant timepieces famous the world over. Citizen. For the man of fashion, it's time to be the star.

Available at Duty Free Shops in India (Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and Trivandrum).

CITIZEN

CITIZEN IS A REGISTERED TRADEMARK OF CITIZEN WATCH CO. JAPAN.

SUPPORTED BY THE MOST EXTENSIVE SERVICE CENTRE NETWORK IN INDIA: BOMBAY: Crown Watch Corporation, 1/F, 24 Mahendra Chambers, 136 D.N. Road, Opp. V.T. Station, Bombay 400 001 • 16/18 Abdul Rehman Street, Bombay 400 003 NEW DELHI: Amarson Watch Co., 10-C Connaught Place, New Delhi 110 001 • 71 Janpath, New Delhi 110 001 COCHIN: Kaniampuram Bros. Watch Co., P.B. No. 2582, Broadway, Ernakulam, Cochin 682 031 MADRAS: Doshi & Doshi, 3 Blackers Road, Next to Casino Theatre, Mount Road, Madras 600 002 • 28 Devaraja Mudali Street, Park Town, Madras 600 003 • 116 Royapettah, High Road, Mylapore, Madras 600 004 CALCUTTA: Anglo-Swiss Watch Co., 4 Bipin Badal Dinesh Bag, Calcutta 700 001 HYDERABAD: Khaleel & Co., 4-1-848 Abid Road, Hyderabad 500 001 BANGALORE: Kapur & Co., 17 Commercial Street, Bangalore 560 001

(For information only)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

L&T DEBENTURES

Contentious Issue

Questions are raised about the Rs 820-crore issue

IT was billed as the biggest issue in Indian corporate history, bigger than the Rs 593-crore Reliance Petrochemicals issue last year and the recent Rs 360-crore Tata Steel issue. But even before Larsen and Toubro (L&T) hit the stock-markets, its Rs 920-crore convertible debenture issue kicked up a storm, with questions being raised about the Ambani-controlled engineering company's intentions in floating the issue.

The debenture issue is scheduled for the last week of September. Approval for the issue at an extraordinary meeting of shareholders, convened by the company on August 21, seemed to have been a foregone conclusion.

And then the fur began to fly. In a series of articles in the Indian Express last fortnight, S. Gurumurthy, financial adviser to the newspaper's proprietor, Ramnath Goenka, pointed out that the convertible debenture issue would raise L&T's equity capital from Rs 75 crore to Rs 227 crore, after portions of the debenture issue were converted into equity. As a result, L&T's shareholding profile would change dramatically. The public's holding of roughly 58 per cent of L&T's equity would drop to 26 per cent; the 30 per cent stake of the financial institutions would fall to just 16 per cent; and most important, the holding of the Reliance group and associates of about 12 per cent would climb to over 32 per cent.

The implications were obvious: the Ambanis were increasing their stranglehold on L&T, at the cost of the other shareholders—and the financial institutions were helping them along by diluting their stake in the engineering enterprise.

Gurumurthy also set his sights on one of the resolutions on the agenda. Resolution 8 stated that the company's board of directors would be empowered to advance loans up to Rs 1,000 crore to other companies "in view of the proposed expansion of the company's business activities and the expected large volume of turnover, especially in view of the new growth strategy involving innovative financing for large turnkey projects..." The Indian Express charge was that the intention of the controversial resolution was to siphon off Rs 1,000 crore from L&T and that the resolution would transform the engineering company into a full-fledged financial institution.

Dhirubhai and Mukesh at shareholders' meeting: consolidating hold

The proposed debenture issue will raise the Ambanis' stake in L&T from about 12 per cent to over 32 per cent.

At last fortnight's extraordinary meeting, the Ambanis beat a retreat on one point. Resolution 8 was dropped. L&T Chairman Dhirubhai Ambani also announced that the size of the debenture issue would be scaled down from Rs 920 crore to Rs 820 crore, because the Government had informally declined permission to offer some of the debentures to international financial agencies. Said an L&T spokesman: "In the bargain, we felt that the issue should be made more attractive to shareholders. So we offered a discount of Rs 10 on the (Rs 300) face value of each debenture."

Still, the other resolutions sailed through. So the Ambanis' stake in L&T will go up. Two questions arise here. Why did the institutions dilute their equity holding? And why did the L&T management introduce the resolution seeking to lend up to Rs 1,000 crore?

While the heads of three financial institutions declined to comment on the first matter, a Reliance spokesman said: "People are reading too much into the resolution. We dropped it because we did not need it."

Many are unsatisfied by that explanation. Says a merchant banker: "The company does not have convincing reasons for reducing the size of the issue. And it arbitrarily introduces and drops a potentially damaging resolution." It is true that companies routinely introduce all kinds of resolutions as a matter of abundant caution. These are meant to give them the flexibility to take action if the need arises. But this does not seem to have been the case here.

Questions also persist on why L&T is floating an issue now. Most merchant bankers and stockbrokers argue that the objectives of the issue are vague. L&T (18-month income: Rs 1,107 crore) has amended its articles of association to permit it to enter all kinds of businesses, including farming, electricity generation and distribution, money-lending, real estate, petrochemicals and pharmaceuticals. Right now, however, L&T does not have major expansion plans on its drawing-boards. Though the L&T spokesman said that the company had received several letters of intent from customers to execute turnkey projects, he declined to divulge the nature of these projects.

One major project of L&T is the erection and civil work of the Reliance Petrochemicals Ltd (RPL) venture at Hazira. RPL is implementing a Rs 750-crore project to manufacture a range of commodity plastics. The company had a mega issue in August 1988. Today there are charges that the RPL project has fallen way behind schedule. Says an industry observer: "They will be lucky if they can implement the project by 1992." The Reliance spokesman replies that the charge is not new and the company's past record of implementing projects on time should speak for itself.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Nonetheless, the rumour mills have been working overtime. Two market rumours: the money is meant to help fund the general elections; and that it's meant for repairing Reliance's damaged Patalganga complex. There has been talk too that the cash raised for RPL has not been utilised for the venture.

All this is probably wild speculation. Certainly, the Ambanis have been quick to deny that the RPL money is being utilised for anything other than the project. And Dhirubhai Ambani has officially stated that the L&T debenture issue was meant to fund working capital needs to the tune of Rs 300 crore, leaving a balance of Rs 643 crore for investment in several undisclosed new projects. Says a Reliance spokesman: "The institutions will not allow any company to raise money arbitrarily. The L&T issue will be appraised by them thoroughly." The institutions, however, say that the L&T management has not approached them so far.

The company has, however, approached the Finance Ministry's controller of capital issues formally to seek approval for the issue. Says a merchant banker: "The ministry should be more rigorous. The terms of the issue are scandalous. Do they expect shareholders to blindly invest money?" Whether the Finance Ministry will raise tough questions on the issue is unclear. Controller of Capital Issues P.G. Mankad was abroad and so unavailable for comment. But the Ambanis have had more successes than failures in the corridors of power, and their track record spells hope for the L&T issue.

Nevertheless, these are not exactly the best of times for the Ambanis. Last month, senior Reliance executive Kirti Ambani was arrested—and later released on bail—by the Bombay Police in a conspiracy case to murder Bombay Dyeing chief Nusli Wadia. Then, the Indian Express in a series of articles identified Umesh Katre, son of the Central Bureau of Investigation Director Mohan Katre, as a major dealer in linear alkyl benzene, which Reliance produces. And now, they've been caught in a messy controversy about a share issue.

L&T officials claim that the preparations for the issue are proceeding "full steam ahead" and that the controversy is nothing more than a "malicious" campaign of sabotage. Come September, and it will be known whether investors feel the same.

—S.N. VASUKI

BUSINESSPEAK

JAYATIRTH RAO

Foreign Banks

Jayatirth ("Jerry") Rao, 37, Citibank's chief executive officer for India, is a persuasive presenter of the case for foreign banks continuing in India. Recently, however, the Government has signalled its intention to slap stiff new conditions on foreign banks, including increased lending to the priority sector. That could discourage more foreign banks from setting up shop in India. But Rao told Assistant Editor PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI last fortnight that while higher priority sector lending requirements could squeeze profits, the new rules wouldn't discourage most foreign banks.

FOREIGN banks in India represent just 2 per cent of the banking system. But we get disproportionate publicity because we operate in the metropolitan cities. The media sees us as being sexy.

We're a private sector island in a public sector ocean. We're also seen as being privileged. If the chairman of a nationalised bank says that foreign banks are privileged, he's really saying that he is denied flexibility and autonomy in decision-making. The nationalised banks feel they're as smart as the foreign ones, but are being held back by the Government.

They should be pleased that the Government has asked foreign banks to: step up priority sector lending from 10 per cent of deposits to 15 per cent over a three-year period; retain 20 per cent of annual earnings in India; and pay for new office space in foreign exchange.

Also, some percentage of a foreign bank's capital in foreign exchange may have to be kept in India. This is not unreasonable, if like elsewhere in the world, India permits forward cover against currency fluctuations (now allowed only to importers and exporters). If a foreign bank gets into trouble, the Government will have to get involved; so some of its capital might as well be kept here. The 20 per cent retention requirement already exists in the Banking Companies Regulation Act.

Yes, increased priority sector lending will affect our profits. There'll be lots of rethinking by many foreign banks that have applied for licences to open branches in India. But profitability is only one issue. The question arises: is this the beginning of a new regime for us, some kind of a concerted attack? If so, there's a problem. I don't think this is the case.

Here, it's important to look at who's rooting for us. First, there are the Indian corporations. They feel that we set a standard and that they can go to other banks and say, hey, Hongkong Bank or Citibank is offering such and such, what will you offer? The second set comprises people who're interested in joint ventures and foreign trade. They understand the value of saying that a foreign bank is their banker when they go to their collaborators. Lastly, there's an important group in and out of government who've come to the conclusion that "Fortress India" has to go, that India has to open out to the world and that we're an important link in this.

In the unlikely event that we're forced to leave India, non-resident Indian inflows would take a beating, a lot of domestic customers wouldn't be able to shop around and get a better deal, and the nationalised banks would largely lose the incentive to innovate.

Right now, the Government should try and get in eight or 10 investment banks (Wall Street banks and Japanese securities companies). That's the really interesting issue about the proposed guidelines. The foreign exchange laws exclude service industries from India, except branches of foreign banks. Merchant banks and mutual funds are not bank branches. I suspect the Government's focus is not really on us but on these new banks and firms. It wants to attract them—but only good ones. By imposing these requirements, the Reserve Bank is saying that it's separating the men from the boys. The new restrictions won't discourage the serious guys.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

THIS IS THE STORY OF A BORING MONTHLY NEWSLETTER

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THAT SUDDENLY PUT PICTURES BETWEEN THE LINES AS TEMPTATION TO READ ON!

Few people ever admit to actually sleeping over a circular or a market report, or even an important strategy presentation.

But the fact is ... nothing could be more monotonous than going through pages and pages of typewritten words, with not a picture to break the monotony.

That's why just about anyone, who wants to present a piece of office communication as something that's attractive enough to catch the reader's eye, can now benefit from the Quantum Desk Top Publisher from Blue Star.

For presentation power that adds visual impact to all written documents. And is the fastest, most economical alternative to getting jobs done through professional printers.

Business correspondence or sales reports, product catalogues or company newsletters ... the Quantum DTP lets you process text, include graphics, design page formats, vary typefaces, change, shuffle and edit till the very end. Then print out artwork quality material at the speed of up to 8 pages a minute.

All this not only in English but in 10 Indian languages as well with Linguist — Blue Star's Multilingual DTP Software Package.

The System? The Quantum PC/AT, with Hewlett-Packard LaserJet, the largest selling laser printer in the world, and the HP ScanJet. The Hewlett-Packard connection gives you the advantage of an unequalled 50-year-old reputation for quality and reliability.

THE QUANTUM DESK TOP PUBLISHER FROM BLUE STAR.

Supported by Software designed for specific applications.

The Quantum DTP from Blue Star is among India's largest selling DTP Systems. With a client list that includes Reliance Industries, Tata Consultancy Services, Hong Kong Bank, ET&T, C-Dot, Bharat Electronics and Exim Bank.

Add to that Blue Star's own Response Centre Support. Offices in 12 major cities have qualified engineers at your service, within hours of calling in.

Please mail in the coupon to the address for a free brochure of the Quantum DTP. Discover the power of presentation which can transform the ordinary ... into the unforgettable.

Yes, I want to know more about the Quantum DTP. Please send me the brochure.

Name: _____

Designation: _____

Company Name & Address: _____

_____

_____ Phone: _____

Ashwini Aggarwal,
Hewlett-Packard Division, Blue Star Limited,
13, Community Centre,
New Friends Colony, New Delhi-110065. Tel. 683482.

A QUANTUM LEAP IN PRESENTATION POWER.

BLUE STAR
the hi-technology Company

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/BS/7491

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNISTAR®

To help you reach higher targets.

UNISTAR. The omnipresent element in the Indian industrial scene.

• PEX power cable LT/HT/EHT • Flamuni cable FRLS/FS/HF • PILC cable MIND/Draining • PVC power and control cable • Elevator cable PVC/Rubber • Railway signalling and Loco cables • Aircraft wiring/Airfield lighting cable • Mining cable. Fixed and Trailing • High Temp. cable Silicone/Fluoroplastic • Oil exploration cable (Rig and Data-Logging) • Welding cables GP & HR • Ship wiring cable • Nuclear Radiation Resistant cable • DC HV cable precipitator/X-Ray • High frequency cable Audio/Video/RF/Cable TV, Microwave • Multipair screened Instrumentation/Data cable • Winding wires for submersible pumps and motors.

Also available UNISTAR Capacitors.

AMA-UC-383 X

UNIVERSAL CABLES LTD.

P.O. Birla Vikas, Satna-485 005 (M.P.) Tel: 2762, 2763 & 2708. Telex: 0766-202 UCL IN. Telefax: (07672) 3333.

BOMBAY: Industry House, 159, Churchgate Reclamation, Bombay 400 020. Tel. 202 6340, 202 3410, Telex: 011-3652 BIRLA IN. Telefax: (022) 202 7854.
CALCUTTA: 27-B Camac Street, Calcutta 700 016. Tel. 444351, 446198. Telex: 021-7653 RMCO IN.
NEW DELHI: UCO Bank Bldg., Parliament Street, New Delhi 110 001. Tel. 384851, 382750 Telex: 031-62646, 031-62598, Telefax: (011) 381561
BANGALORE: 5, Palace Cross Road, Bangalore 560 020 Tel. 362674, 368179, Telex: 0845-2653.
MADRAS: 20, Greams Road, 1st floor, P.B. No. 737, Madras 600 006. Tel. 472427, 477551, Telex: 041-8428, Telefax: (044) 478581.
BARODA: 'SATYAM' 1st Floor, Opp. State Bank of India, Fatehgunj, Baroda 390 002. Tel. 328994. Telex: 175-661 UCL IN Gram: 'UNISTAR'

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Beautiful ideas for a beautiful home!

Classic workmanship. That tells the story of expertise handed down through generations to inspire you to decorate, furnish, and dress-up at your imaginative and appealing best!

NAA/D/UPEC-89

GANGOTRI

At: New Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta, Bangalore, Hyderabad, Nagpur, Bhopal, Allahabad, Agra, Lucknow & Kanpur.

UPEC

U.P. EXPORT CORPORATION LTD.

(A Govt. of U.P. Undertaking)

B-27, Sarvodaya Nagar, Kanpur-208 005 (India)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ALLWYN
QUARTZ

As individual as you are

You have your own sense of style, your own set of values. In a world driven by time, you stand apart by having time on your side...

Time FOR THE NEW GENERATION
ALLWYN

Manufactured under licence from
SEIKO

The time-proven Allwyn Quartz collection. Created with the world's finest watch technology. Superior quartz movement encased in elegant gold or sleek stainless steel. Choose from the widest variety of over 250 models that dazzle the eye and imagination. Each as individual as you are.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BACKWARD INTEGRATION

Building a Base

Self-sufficiency drive by giants

WHAT do synthetic yarn and fibre giant J.K. Synthetics, steel producer Mukand Ltd, adhesive manufacturer Parekh and Apollo Tyres have in common? At first sight, they're a disparate lot. But look at the projects on their drawing boards, or those just off the ground. Each of these companies is either setting up or planning to set up a project to reduce its dependence on others for raw materials or components.

The name of the game is backward integration, and it's the hottest game in town. In industries as diverse as petrochemicals, pharmaceuticals, tyres, steel, paints, automobiles, packaging, detergents, adhesives and consumer electronics, companies are scrambling to protect their raw material flanks. Though its now widespread the rush was triggered off barely two years ago by the private sector leap into an industry that readily lends itself to integration: petrochemicals.

J.K. Synthetics is but one example. The synthetic yarn and fabric company is investing Rs 850 crore in an aromatics complex which will enable it to produce purified terephthalic acid (PTA), a crucial raw material for its products. Then the company will no longer be at a disadvantage vis-a-vis competitor Reliance Industries, which has its own PTA plant.

Says Viren J. Shah, chairman, Mukand Ltd: "The uncertainty of metal scrap imports has prompted us integrate backwards. We get only 30 per cent of our scrap requirement." And short supplies have also meant skyrocketing prices. After a 40-per cent price rise last year, Mukand applied to the Government for permission to put up a 750,000-tonne plant to manufacture sponge iron—an alternative route to steel-making.

Backward integration is the buzzword in the tyre industry too, where nylon tyre cord accounts for nearly 35 per cent of the production costs. Both Apollo Tyres and its rival company Ceat, are setting up their own captive nylon cord plants. Says Apollo Chairman Raunaq Singh: "The entire industry is in the clutches of just three or four tyre cord producers. And they have raised their prices by 26 per cent last year. We are left with no option but to set up our own captive unit." The company's proposed Rs 150-crore plant is meant wholly for captive use. Expected reduction in production costs: a substantial 15 per cent. Ceat is also setting up a Rs 150-crore subsidiary nylon tyre cord unit, half of whose production will be used for captive consumption. Besides the assured supply, There is an added bonus: no sales tax need be paid on the cord since it is to be used in-house.

For some companies, the decision to integrate backwards is forced upon them. Television tube manufacturer Samtel India, for instance, decided to set up a Rs 80-crore plant to manufacture glass tubes because of pressure from its Japanese suppliers. They refused to sell particular varieties of glass shells to prevent Samtel from exporting to certain countries. Says Managing Director Satish Kaura: "We're setting up a glass tubes plant because we were becoming too vulnerable to our suppliers. Now they can't pressure us." And with glass shells contributing 50 per cent to production costs, the company will save on prices too, especially since the yen is appreciating rapidly.

For others, backward integration is part of a continuing process. Says Sanjeev Goenka, vice-chairman of RPG Enterprises: "Backward integration gives you a certainity about raw materials. So Ceat is setting up a nylon tyre chord plant." But even in acquiring new companies, the group seems to be adhering to a plan. New acquisition Harrisons Malayalam, for instance, assures it of a supply of rubber in case natural rubber becomes scarce in the market. Another group company Phillips Carbon Black supplies carbon black, to be used in tyres.

Sometimes, companies integrate because if they don't and rivals do, the disadvantage can be disastrous. So both Hindustan Lever and Nirma Chemicals applied to set up plants to manufacture linear alkyl benzene (LAB)—the raw material for detergents. Both projects were cleared recently.

Backward integration can also provide companies with a degree of flexibil-

"Backward integration gives you a certainty about raw materials. So Ceat is setting up a nylon tyre chord plant."
SANJEEV GOENKA
Vice-Chairman, RPG Enterprises

"We're setting up a glass tubes plant as we were becoming too vulnerable to our suppliers."
SATISH KAURA
Managing Director, Samtel India

"Producing monoethyl glycol will give us the flexibility to sell it if the polyester staple fibre market is down."
AJIT SINGH
MD, Swadeshi Polytex Ltd

"The uncertainty of metal scrap imports has prompted us to integrate backwards. We get 30 per cent of our needs."
VIREN SHAH
Chairman, Mukand Ltd

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'Men and women who have ideals and objectives before them and the urge to achieve them, do not wait for the turn of fortune's wheel.'

Jawaharlal Nehru

At Mahanagar Telephone Nigam, we too have our ideals, our objectives, our set goals. And we have the determination and financial strength to make them a reality.

- 100% increase in revenue earnings
  From just Rs. 540 crores to over Rs. 1000 crores in only three years.
- Record dividend declared
  A massive Rs. 84 crores – a record for any public sector undertaking – maintained consistently.
- Over Rs. 990 crores payment to Department of Telecommunications
  Inter alia, towards development of telecom services in rural and semi-urban areas during the last 3 years.
- Contribution to the national exchequer
  Over Rs. 79 crores by way of taxes to the national exchequer.
- Over 100% increase in internal resources in the last 3 years
  From Rs. 196.32 crores in 86-87, internal resources have shot up to Rs. 391.35 crores in 88-89.
- Self-sustained growth
  Expansion and upgradation of services mostly through self-financing and not through loans or borrowings.
- Working towards our main aim of customer satisfaction
  Over 200 bill collection centres in Bombay and Delhi to facilitate quick and convenient payments by subscribers.

At MTNL financial self-reliance has been our constant endeavour so as to make it a strong and independent organisation, working for the nation's telecommunication needs.

महानगर टेलीफोन निगम लिमिटेड
(भारत सरकार का उद्यम)
MAHANAGAR TELEPHONE NIGAM LIMITED
(A GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ENTERPRISE)

We carry Nehru's vision with us.
It makes us stronger.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ity. Swadeshi Polytex, the synthetics textile company, makes polyester staple fibre (PSF). It's now planning to produce monoethyl glycol (MEG), a raw material for PSF. Managing Director Ajit Singh says: "If the PSF market is not in good shape, we can reduce PSF production and sell MEG in the market."

The Rs 23-crore Nuchem Plastics—manufacturers of adhesives and moulding powders—is integrating backwards for another reason. Says Managing Director R.C. Barar: "The small sector does not have to pay sales tax. How can we compete with it without saving some raw material costs?" So the company is setting up its own plant to produce methanol—its principal raw material.

But the same argument could work against backward integration. Big companies tend to have large overheads, so it might be more cost effective to buy raw materials from small manufacturers.

Worse, the fortunes of both the original company and the backward integrated unit get inextricably linked. Says S. Ganesh, president of petrochemicals company India Glycols Ltd: "If market demand for your finished product falls, your captive unit also suffers. The fortune of one company is tied to another."

Lastly, huge surplus capacities can be created in the same industry just because many companies are eager to ensure captive input supplies. In some cases, exports are an answer. A Hindustan Lever spokesman said that the soaps and detergents giant would be exporting half its LAB production to Pakistan and other nations through the network of its UK principal, Unilever.

Despite all the dangers inherent in backward integration, the Government is gung-ho. Says a senior Industry Ministry official: "We are for it. It is time for specialisation in industry. And backward integration will surely help."

Official policies are intended to accelerate the process. For instance, pharmaceutical manufacturer Ranbaxy Laboratories, has floated a new company to manufacture amino penicillin acids—which were imported until now—used in the manufacture of penicillin tablets. Says Chairman Bhai Mohan Singh: "Once indigenous manufacture grows, the Government increases the import duty to make imports cost ineffective."

With encouragement from the Government forthcoming, many companies have decided that the advantages of backward integration far outweigh the disadvantages. The rush continues—clearly a case of one step backwards being two steps forwards.

—SURAJEET DAS GUPTA

PHARMACEUTICALS

Legal War

A small unit takes on a giant

THE relationship is common in industry. A big enterprise is faced with a host of government controls on pricing and manufacture. It farms out production to a small unit which is free of such restrictions. The big company then markets the products.

But such arrangements don't always have a happy ending. It certainly didn't for the Rs 250-crore plus Ahmedabad-based Ambalal Sarabhai Enterprises (ASE) and small-scale drug producer S. Jayant. In 1979-80, ASE transferred its rights to manufacture seven drugs to two of the Bangalore-based Jayant's companies (combined sales: Rs 1 crore), but later tried to reobtain these licences after the Government relaxed restrictions. Jayant, a 38-year-old engineer, fought back. The result: a welter of court cases.

Last month, the David versus Goliath story moved to a denouement. ASE virtually pulled out of the battle when it withdrew a petition from the Madras High Court to quash a lower court's order. The lower court had summoned ASE's directors to explain why they should not be prosecuted for manufacturing drugs without a proper licence.

Evidently, problems cropped up between ASE and Jayant four years after they struck their deal. Jayant claims that ASE delayed payments. In 1982, the Sarabhai company wrote to Karnataka's drugs controller saying that it wanted to withdraw its letters permitting Jayant's companies to produce the drugs. It also obtained licences from Gujarat's drugs controller to manufacture them, without stating that it had given up the licences to Jayant.

By the end of 1986, ASE began making the drugs. Charges Jayant: "ASE's actions indicate that from around 1986-end to September 1988, it had manufactured these seven brands of medicines valued at not less than Rs 26 crore."

So a flurry of court cases followed. Jayant filed suits last year in the Madras High Court arguing that ASE's transfer of licences to him was irrevocable. He also challenged ASE's right to produce the drugs when he held licences for them. In September 1988 the court restrained ASE from producing the drugs. ASE got the stay vacated this March. In May, Jayant successfully petitioned the court's bench to reimpose the injunction and withdraw ASE's products from the market. ASE appealed to the Supreme Court. Finally, the Supreme Court dismissed ASE's special leave petition in June.

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

These were not the only legal battles. ASE successfully complained in March 1989 to a joint district judge in Baroda that Jayant's companies were infringing trademark laws by making these same drug brands. In June, Jayant got permission from Tamil Nadu's advocate general to file a contempt of court case against ASE for pursuing its application in the lower court at Baroda while the Madars High Court was deliberating on the subject.

That case is to be resolved, and an ASE spokesman declined to comment on the disputes with Jayant saying they were sub-judice. But small drug manufacturers feel Jayant's battle is unique. "Lacking financial and marketing muscle, small drug units are often at the mercy of large companies," says C. Rajagopalan, president, All India Small Drug Manufacturers' Association. In a world where Goliath normally emerges the victor, a David has won a round.

—PARANJOY GUHA THAKURTA
with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BATA

Stepping Out

The footwear giant diversifies

BATA is a shoe company, right? Well, at the moment, yes. But pose the same question a couple of years down the road, and the answer will be an ambiguous 'maybe'. In a bid to diversify its business portfolio, the Rs 259-crore shoe company is striding into an amazing range of products—fashion garments, sports goods and sports wear, and uniforms—and promoting "fitness centres". The gambit is to use Bata's retail outlets to market an array of upscale family products—and change its profile. Footwear now accounts for an overwhelming 98.4 per cent of sales, but the goal is to initially trim this to 90 per cent in the next few years, and possibly more later.

Bata has already begun marketing clothes, under the North Star and Ambassador labels. Sales are estimated at around Rs 5 crore at present, but are expected to touch the Rs 50-crore mark by 1992. The company also hawks sports goods like cricket bats and balls, footballs, wrist bands, and Power carry bags for sportsmen. It has set up a "fitness centre" in New Delhi, plans to set up more in other cities and is negotiating franchising arrangements with hotel chains like ITC's Welcomgroup.

Though the new businesses still account for under 3 per cent of the company's turnover, future plans are ambitious. Bata has tied up with Adidas of Germany to produce sports shoes (for export) and gloves. Besides, it has test-marketed school uniforms in three cities and plans to make uniforms for factory workers and defence personnel, if it receives bulk orders. It also plans to market hi-fashion garments, specialised sports wear—tennis wear, golf wear, swim wear—belts, ties, jackets and possibly electronic goods.

The name of the new Bata game is "multiple retailing". Quite simply, this means that the company's outlets won't sell just shoes but a whole lot of other wares too. Says a company publication: "The old idea of a retail store with a counter, four walls and racks of shoes which all customers would buy is no longer sufficient today." So Bata aims at setting up "family stores" catering to the entire family. Two such outlets have already been set up in Bombay and in New Delhi. Indeed, Bata's 1,300-strong retail chain is to be strengthened by franchising hundreds of new stores by next year. Officials from Bata are playing their cards close to their chest, but Vice-President (Legal and Corporate Affairs) K.V.S. Shanbhogue explained in a written response to questions: "The object of diversification is to become the most skillful retailing and distributing organisation."

It's a gambit that makes sense. Production costs in the organised footwear industry have soared over the years. Competition has turned fierce with small, low-overhead units flourishing, and the company has often found itself at the mercy of a disgruntled work-force. To cut costs, Bata has trimmed its work-force from 18,000 at the beginning of the '80s to less than 11,000 now. And it has increasingly farmed out production to small units. Yet these were not permanent solutions.

Multiple retailing was the answer. Bata's shoe-shop chain could be used to market other goods—an extension of a business in which Bata has decades of experience. And market surveys showed that a sizeable population with a large disposable income was willing to spend money on trendy products.

Still, it will be some time before the new divisions bring about a noticeable shift in Bata's product blend. Says Shanbhogue: "Footwear will continue to be the core business."

Today, Bata has a 14.96 per cent market share. But the emphasis is shifting to up-market products where small units cannot compete with them.

While the mood at Bata's corporate headquarters in Calcutta is upbeat, the company's workers are not so joyous. Nine months ago, they were forced to accept a humiliating deal after a 124-day lock-out. Says Rabin Majumdar, Bata Mazdoor Union leader: "The saddest part is that the management is taking delight in becoming traders and commission agents."

A member of Bata's management committee replies: "The purpose of getting into retailing is very simple. Bata's retailing network has a high reputation and credibility. We are just trying to exploit our goodwill and earn profits. What's wrong in that?" The workers apart, the company has a more pleasant headache. Its old slogan—"Bata understands shoes"—has held good for years. For a company that's stepping out in style, that clearly won't do anymore.

—KAMALJEET RATTAN

Retailed goods: amazing range

From just shoes, Bata is moving to retail an amazing array of upscale family products.

Bata

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

An exclusive start to a new decade

SLIM-LINE DIARY 1990
Code: IT 102
Size: 82 mm × 177 mm
Price: Rs. 65

INDIA TODAY YEAR BOOK 1990
Code: IT 101
Size: 222 mm × 289 mm
Price: Rs. 250

POCKET DIARY 1990
Code: IT 103
Size: 79 mm × 127 mm
Price: Rs. 35

India Today Diaries and Address Book

The India Today Yearbook 1989 established distinctive standards which were widely appreciated by discriminating users, for meticulous attention to production and the quality of information offered. This year's edition, the India Today Yearbook 1990 upholds these fine standards and comes with a comprehensive range of exclusive pocket diaries and an address book produced with an eye to detail—a hallmark at India Today.

INDIA TODAY YEAR BOOK 1990

Much more than just a diary, this yearbook puts invaluable information on your desk where it belongs.

The information includes a statistical overview of the Indian economy, a political profile of India, a complete travel guide, city guides, International Time, and 16 pages of full colour maps.

The diary section is laid out with busy executives in mind. The easy-to-read, easy-to-write format includes: a week-at-a-glance, hourly slots for appointments, current and forward year planner, ample space for notes, address and phone number section.

Attractively produced with a burgundy red cover, gold leaf embossing, gilt-tipped pages and a handy ribbon marker, the India Today Yearbook 1990 belongs on your table.

DELUXE MINIATURE DIARIES.

To match the diary on your desk, there is now a slimline for your jacket or the briefcase and a pocket diary specially designed to be carried on your person. With these miniatures, you can now carry all the day-to-day information you need with you. Alongwith provision for space for your appointments, you get 35 pages of invaluable information like India at a glance, Conversion Tables, ISD and STD codes, International Times and a 3-year Calendar 1989-1991.

Make your selection now and send in the order form before 15 October for a special 10% pre-publication discount and free delivery.

More from India Today overleaf.

Personalize these beautiful diaries.

Whether you're ordering for yourself, friends or favoured clients, give these diaries a personal touch. For a nominal sum of Rs. 10, you can have upto 3 initials printed in gold-leaf on the cover of the India Today Yearbook 1990, Slimline diary 1990 and the Pocket diary 1990.

If the order for any of the three sizes individually is 10 copies or more, the facility of gold embossing of three initials on each diary is free.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Elegance & Quality Forever...

...Address Book from India Today

This year INDIA TODAY brings you an attractive address book which features upto 8 pages to each letter of the alphabet, personal information section, emergency phone numbers, International Times, ISD & STD codes, and a ready reference ABC index.

ADDRESS BOOK
Code: IT 201
Size: 139 mm × 216 mm
Price: Rs. 65

Elegantly bound in real herring bone tweed, this address book will be appreciated for its classic style and for the amount of space provided for names, addresses and phone numbers.

Place your order before 15th October and avail of special pre-publication 10% discount.

IF THE ORDER FORM IS MISSING
Just mail your enquiry/order to Living Media India Ltd., P.B. No. 29, New Delhi-110001

Your order should be accompanied by remittance drawn in favour of 'Living Media India Ltd'. (add Rs. 5/- to outstation cheques, i.e., outside Delhi).

Please add Rs. 10/- for each set of upto 3 initials to be printed in gold leaf (facility available only for the diaries).

ORDER FORM—1990

Product Code	Product Details	Regular Price (in Rs.)	Spl Price for Orders Recd. Before Oct. 15, '89 (in Rs.)	Qtty Ordered	Total Amount (in Rs.)
IT 101	India Today Yearbook 1990	250	225.00
IT 102	India Today Slimline Diary	65	58.50
IT 103	India Today Pocket Diary	35	31.50
IT 201	Address Book	65	58.50
				Total (in Rs.)
				Gold Embossing of Initials @ Rs. 10 per item
				Total Amount of Order (in Rs.)

Please give maximum of 3 initials per diary ordered, on a separate sheet.

I enclose my crossed cheque/DD for Rs. _____ (add Rs. 5/- for outstation cheques, i.e. outside Delhi) payable to 'Living Media India Ltd.' Please send the diaries and address books, as listed in the coupon, at the following address:

Name _____

Address _____

_____

_____

_____ Pin _____

Mail your order to:

Living Media India Ltd.
P.B. No. 29,
New Delhi-110001

FREE DELIVERY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NO DETAIL TOO SMALL

At Emirates we believe a large part of our work lies in paying great attention to what might seem small details.

Making sure our delectable food is impeccably presented,

EVEN

and that our flights are at agreeable times.

Precisely trained, our multi-lingual staff are as charming and courteous on the ground, as they are in the air.

Because we care for your

TIME

comfort, our aircraft are ordered with spacious seats and legrests, and sizeable overhead storage bins. Surprising how a little extra space helps shorten a long trip.

Wherever we fly there's always the same understanding service, wide choice of drinks, and colourful international cuisine. So it's easy to unwind and feel completely at home.

FLIES

Even children have the time of their lives on Emirates — with soft toys, books and colouring kits. We never forget they are our time-travellers of the future!

ON

Small details maybe, but they're the reason why such large numbers of people choose to fly Emirates — time and time again.

The International Airline of the United Arab Emirates.
Offices: Bombay: Mittal Chambers, Office No. 3, Ground Floor, 228, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021. Tel: 2871650/2871651 2871652. Delhi: Kanchanjunga Building, 18, Barakhamba Road, New Delhi 110 001 Tel: 3324665/3324803/3324824.

Emirates

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

"National is famous for creating new trends in audio and video products. Now they've done it again with an exciting new line-up of TVs, videos and portable stereos that will make you glad you waited to buy National. From Super VHS movie cameras that make video movie making so pretty they nearly rival professional level equipment... to large-screen TVs that incorporate National's Dome Sound System, providing cinema-like listening as well as viewing right in your own home. From "soft" design video cassette recorders that permit NTSC (as well as PAL) playback on PAL-format TVs...to portable stereo double cassette component system that overcome the inherent size disadvantages of conventional portable stereo with the Extra Bass System. Yes, National has done it again. They've set the trend in audio and video enjoyment."

A Note About NTSC Playback:
The playback picture will shrink vertically, and black bars will appear both on the top and bottom of the screen. This is not an indication of a malfunction.
And the playback picture may roll up or down, adjust it with the V-HOLD control on the TV.

RX-CW55F
Portable Stereo Double Cassette Component System
- "XBS"-Extra Bass System
- AFD (Acoustic Flat Diaphragm) Woofers
- 60 Watt PMPO Output Power
- 4-Band FM/MW/SW1/SW2 Radio
- 5-Band Graphic Equalizer
- Double Auto-Reverse
- Digital Clock/Timer

Panasonic NV-MS50E S VHS C VHS PAL
Compact Super VHS Movie Camera
- Super VHS High Quality Picture
- Hi-Fi Stereo Sound System
- Improved Piezo Auto Focus
- AV-9-Head System with Amorphous Pro Heads
- Compact and Lightweight: Only 1.4 Kg

NEW TREND

TC-AV33XR DOME sound system
Type 33 (84 cm) World 17 Multi System Colour TV
- Astonishingly Realistic Dome Sound System
- Built-In 10W × 10W Stereo Amplifier
- 600-Line Horizontal Resolution
- TV/Video Dual Remote Control
- S-Video In Terminal
- Video/Audio In and Out Terminals
- 30-Position Auto Tuning

NV-L18EN VHS PAL
VHS Video Cassette Recorder
- Digital Multi-Screen Functions
- NTSC Playback on PAL TV
- Digital Programme Controller
- Variable Double Super Fine Slow (1/5-1/25)
- 8-Hour Recording and Playback (LP Mode)
- Digital Intro Scan
- "Soft" Design

NEW TREND

National

National

• For Information Only

National Authorized Service Centres in India

Bombay: Esquire Service Centre Tel: 234226/230311 4131857/4133470 533506
Associated Electrical Agencies Tel: 4930074/4930075
Indus Air conditioning Pvt. Ltd. (For home appliances only) Tel: 4223729/4223737
Madras: Associated Electrical Agencies Tel: 478559
Esquire Service Centre Tel: 479507
Bangalore: Associated Electrical Agencies Tel: 220275/225577
New Delhi: Positive Commercial Co., Ltd. Tel: 262179/268964
Esquire Service Centre Tel: 697285/611327
Calcutta: Esquire Service Centre Tel: 440840
Trivandrum: Master Electronics Co., Pvt. Ltd. (For audio/video products only) Tel: 64259
Cochin: Master Electronics Co., Pvt. Ltd. (For audio/video products only) Tel: 361788

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

On a See-Saw

Institutions aid recovery

IT'S a scene that's becoming familiar on the country's stock-markets. Share prices plunge, the financial institutions step in and buy stock and the precipitous price drop is arrested. Last fortnight saw a replay of this tired drama. The Galahads that bailed out the share markets were—you guessed it—the Unit Trust of India (UTI) and, to a lesser extent, the Life Insurance Corporation of India and the General Insurance Corporation. UTI alone reportedly bought shares worth Rs 25 crore.

As a result, share price indices began climbing. The Economic Times all-India share index went to 372.9 on August 18, up from 362.4 on August 8. The Bombay Stock Exchange's (BSE) 100-scrip national index rose to 371.20, from 362.94. Nevertheless, the markets are in a bear hug. Late in the fortnight, price indices had begun slipping once more. While a further drop may be averted by the institutions intervening in the market again, the overall mood seems to be momentarily downbeat.

Adding to the market's problems, a major Calcutta broker nearly defaulted on payments at the time of settlement of business, to the tune of Rs 1 crore. The Calcutta Stock Exchange was compelled to suspend trading for two days. The broker did finally meet his dues.

There is no denying that few punters are buying equity, apart from the institutions. Trading on the floor of the stock exchanges has been reduced to a trickle.

It's a scenario that's in sharp contrast to that in July. According to BSE figures, the value of 30 per cent of the 937 scrips traded in July appreciated, the prices of 30 per cent remained more or less the same, while the prices of 40 per cent of the shares dropped. The reason, quite simply, is that 45 companies whose results were announced in July reported an upswing in profits and sales. Clearly, the fundamentals remain sound.

What is more, after the institutions entered the market in a big way, the stock-market authorities have cut contago charges—the interest imposed for not taking delivery of shares bought on a forward basis—from over 30 per cent per annum a couple of weeks ago to under 12 per cent. Logically, this should encourage speculative buying and serve as a deterrent to such selling—so helping to prop up share prices.

Nonetheless, a contrary trend could emerge over the next few weeks as companies approach the public with huge share and convertible debenture issues. With most issues being offered at below-market prices, the punter will be tempted to subscribe to the new issues and then hawk them for a profit. That could spark off a selling wavelet.

What all this means is that the share markets are in for a period of uncertainty. The next fortnight could provide some clues to the direction in which they are headed—provided the financial institutions don't influence the outcome, as they commonly do.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1989 HIGH	1989 LOW	1989 CLOSE 21.8.89	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	84.00	61.00	62.00	4.00 –
Associated Cement	345.00	230.00	241.00	5.00 –
Asian Paints	226.25	165.00	192.50	1.25* –
Atlas Copco	53.00	32.00	34.00	1.00 –
Bajaj Auto	450.00	310.00	322.50	7.50 +
Baroda Rayon	582.50	285.00	550.00	25.00 +
Bata India	89.00	60.00	64.50	2.00 –
Bayer	910.00	580.00	725.00	45.00 –
Bharat Forge	202.50	70.00	83.75	1.25 +
Birla Jute	73.75	41.50	50.00	1.00 –
Bombay Dyeing	162.00	104.00	123.00	5.50 +
Britannia Ind.	120.00	89.00	102.00	10.00 +
Brooke Bond	155.00	75.00	79.00	3.00 +
Century Spinning	2050.00	1230.00	1995.00	45.00 +
Chloride India	88.50	72.00	80.50	0.50 –
Colgate Palmolive	371.25	281.25	307.50	nil
Cyanamid	92.00	55.00	77.00	1.00 +
DCM	85.00	31.00	55.00	3.00 +
Dunlop	95.50	70.00	79.00	5.50 +
E.I. Hotels	68.00	50.00	58.00	nil
Escorts	75.00	58.00	74.00	7.75 +
Finolex Cables	430.00	312.50	317.50	nil
Food Specialities	224.00	154.50	158.00	1.00 +
Garware Nylon	50.50	36.00	45.00	3.00 +
G.E. Shipping	46.50	33.75	40.25	1.75* +
G.S.F.C.	177.50	123.75	157.50	2.50 ±
Grasim Ind.	137.00	75.00	108.50	4.50 –
Hind. Aluminium	327.50	155.00	235.00	17.50* –
Hind. Ciba	1090.00	600.00	800.00	5.00* +
Hind. Cocoa	126.25	98.75	115.00	nil
Hindustan Lever	99.00	69.50	94.50	3.00 +
Hindustan Motors	52.50	26.75	32.60	2.00 +
ICI India Ltd.	68.00	39.00	58.50	5.50 –
Indian Organic	46.50	23.00	38.50	1.25 +
Indian Rayon	106.00	75.75	77.00	0.50 –
Indrol	335.00	218.75	282.50	15.00 +
Ingersoll-Rand	423.75	267.50	405.00	25.00 +
ITC	129.00	46.25	120.00	9.00 +
J.K. Synthetics	92.00	66.00	75.00	0.50 +
Kinetic Engineering	395.00	130.00	137.00	2.00 +
Kirloskar Cummins	88.75	54.50	65.00	6.00 +
KSB Pumps	445.00	305.00	370.00	nil
Larsen & Toubro	128.00	81.50	107.50	6.50 –
Lipton	85.00	65.00	68.00	1.00 –
LML Ltd.	28.00	12.50	17.00	0.75 +
Madura Coats	104.00	92.25	97.00	nil
Mahindra & Mahindra	113.50	76.50	87.50	1.25* –
Milk Food	300.00	180.00	190.00	3.75 –
Motor Industries	695.00	560.00	595.00	5.00 –
Mukand Ltd.	140.50	75.00	126.50	1.50 +
National Organic	1080.00	710.00	975.00	15.00 +
Nirlon	17.00	8.00	9.50	1.75 –
Orkay Silk Mills	29.00	13.50	15.00	0.50 +
Pelco Electronics	30.50	16.50	20.00	nil
Pfizer	80.00	58.00	60.00	1.00 –
Ponds	212.50	151.25	161.25	1.25 +
Premier Auto	65.00	40.00	54.50	2.50 +
Raymond	85.00	65.50	83.25	0.25 +
Reliance Industries	158.00	105.00	106.00	4.50 –
Siemens India	95.00	65.00	70.00	3.00 +
Shaw Wallace	103.25	62.00	87.00	7.00 +
Shriram Fibres	94.00	64.00	81.00	3.00 +
SKF Bearings	3020.00	1140.00	1200.00	20.00 +
SPIC	67.00	39.00	45.50	0.25 –
Tata Steel	1580.00	1062.50	1212.50	72.50 –
Telco	1075.00	657.50	1017.50	20.00 +
Vam Organic	178.00	136.00	150.00	8.75 –
Videocon Int.	137.50	55.00	110.00	10.00 +
Voltas	885.00	470.00	845.00	10.00 –
Wimco	32.00	15.00	17.00	1.00 +

* Ex-dividend  Ex-right

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	TT Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	12.6503	12.5246
Austria	Schilling	1	1.2117	1.1988
Bahrain	Dinar	1	43.8626	43.7322
Bangladesh	Taka	100	52.9621	52.8810
Canada	Dollar	1	14.1679	14.0200
Denmark	Kroner	1	2.1908	2.1680
Egypt	Pound	1	6.25	6.10
France	Franc	1	2.6420	2.5773
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	2.1422	2.1206
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	0.0900	0.0850
Iran	Rial	100	22.5300	22.4500
Italy	Lira	100	1.1560	1.1020
Japan	Yen	100	11.8624	11.5607
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7500	0.7200
Kuwait	Dinar	1	54.2660	54.1060
Malaysia	Dollar	1	6.2257	6.1616
Mauritius	Rupee	1	1.0700	1.0500
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6590	0.6200
Netherlands	Guilder	1	7.5512	7.4729
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7996	0.7528
Singapore	Dollar	1	8.5253	8.4363
Spain	Peseta	1	0.1299	0.1106
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.5126	0.5000
Sweden	Kroner	1	2.5154	2.4896
Switzerland	Franc	1	9.8832	9.7792
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.1160	0.1000
Thailand	Baht	100	60.000	59.0000
UK	Pound	1	26.1028	25.9134
USA	Dollar	1	16.7224	16.5563
UAE	Dirham	1	4.9000	4.6500
USSR	Rouble	1	25.8200	25.7600
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	8.6580	8.4388

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo, Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 21.8.89.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Put your PCs on-line on a network on time... on OASIS.

OASIS: On-line Advanced Structured Information System

On-line capability, information management and networking in a unique synergy of hardware and software. For the first time on PCs!

Immediate Operational Capability

Your OASIS OLTP system could become operational in as little as one day! With the unique OASIS utilities,all the hardwork of programming and debugging which precedes an operational network, is eliminated.

On-line Data Processing

OASIS instantly accesses and up-dates information in a distributed data base, a huge advancement over traditional batch processing.

Any PC can act as both file server &client

OASIS is based on a unique LAN (Local Area Network): 10 NET,a product of Digital Communications Associates (DCA), USA, which allows any node on the network to function as file server or client.

Maximum utilisation of existing investments

OASIS links any brand of IBM compatible PC, XT or AT; utilises your current investments in secondary storage on each PC.

Unlimited growth capability

OASIS can link up to 100 PCs,in a LAN without appreciable loss of speed in communication,but it could be operational on a minimum configuration of two PCs.

OASIS: that's right... no one comes close to it

ITI, the organisation synonymous with telecommunications in India, is also an active player in the field of computers and microelectronics. ITI has carried out extensive research in the area of information management system for many years -- and now offers OASIS -- a break-through solution for distributed information management based on Local Area Networks.

OASIS is backed by ITI's promise of comprehensive support at all levels: beginning with, if need be, a site survey and turnkey installation of an OASIS network.

If you're thinking of OLTP, OASIS is the most painless way to get it working for you.

Contact or write to us, for more details.

See us at CSI-'89 Bangalore, 19-23 September, 1989.

OASIS

ON-LINE ADVANCED STRUCTURED INFORMATION SYSTEM

ITI

Marketing & Sales Department,
Microelectronics and Computer Division,
Indian Telephone Industries Ltd.,
Doorvaninagar, Bangalore 560 016

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Following a short respite, prices have started going up once again in spite of a good monsoon. Macro conditions continue to remain in control and are a good sign for prices in the long term. Devaluation continues and despite the fact that exports are responding well, the J-curve effect keeps imports rising faster in the short run. The stock exchange stagnation has caused a mild flutter in the bullion market.

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of six months' (weekly data) or one-and-a-half years' (monthly data) figures.

Wholesale Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
2.1% p.a.

Last fortnight saw another spurt in prices—rising at an annual rate of 9 per cent over the fortnight.

Consumer Price Index

1960 = 100

Current Trend
8.0% p.a.

Consumer prices increased last month at a 6 per cent annual rate—below the long-term trend rate.

Money Supply

Rs Crore

Current Trend
16.3% p.a.

Money supply growth has slowed down considerably recently—auguring well for inflation in the future.

Commercial Bank Credit

Rs Crore

Current Trend
26.0% p.a.

Credit conditions were very tight last fortnight with credit availability contracting by over 1 per cent.

Foreign Trade

Rs Crore

Current Trend
33.1% p.a. EXPORTS
21.8% p.a. IMPORTS

Although exports shot up by 10 per cent last month, the trade balance worsened as imports increased by 20 per cent.

Foreign Exchange

Rs per $

Current Trend
18.4% p.a.

The rate of devaluation continues to be around 20 per cent per annum—at this rate the US dollar will cost Rs 20 next year.

Share Price Index

1984-85 = 100

Current Trend
1.2% p.a.

There were not even faint signs of recovery in the sluggish stock-market as share prices remained stagnant.

Closing Gold Prices

Rs per 10 gm

Current Trend
7.5% p.a.

With the stock-market dull, life has entered the bullion market with gold prices up sharply last fortnight.

WHOLESALE PRICES

Growth of items in the 2nd fortnight of July 1989

	% Growth
Rubber	19.04
Tapioca	17.50
Whisky	11.42
Bananas	7.96
Fish	6.76
Ball Bearing	6.22
Jowar	6.18
Gur	5.59
Rape & Mustard Seeds	5.17
Khandsari	4.64
Solvent Extracted Oil	4.61
Paper	4.39
Mustard Oilcake	4.05
Betel-Nuts	3.81
Hides Raw	3.67
Silk Raw	3.47
Mustard Oil	2.89
Cotton Raw	2.65
Tea	2.52
Barley	2.34
Sugar	2.23
Nylon/Terene and Mixed Cloth	2.00
Bajra	1.95
Groundnut Oil	1.85
Gram	1.82
Tyres	1.70
Onions	1.66
Ragi	1.62
Urad	1.60
Maize	1.48
Groundnut Seeds	1.38
Tobacco Raw	1.34
Linseed	1.30
Jute Textiles	1.24
Synthetic Fibres	1.13
Trucks	1.04
Tubes	0.92
Ghee	0.88
Atta	0.81
Cashew-Nut	0.73
Cotton Cloth	0.63
Gingelly Oil	0.56
Dairy Products	0.54
Art Silk & Artificial Fabrics	0.44
Arhar	0.44
Linseed Oil	0.39
Cotton Seeds	0.37

Of the 138 series considered, 57 of them with a total weight of 43.309 had a positive growth and 20 of them with a total weight of 15.647 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1989	1988
Coal
Thousand Tonnes, July	13880	13090
Saleable Steel
Thousand Tonnes, July	709.7	727.5
Cement
Thousand Tonnes, July	3289	3493
Petroleum Crude
Thousand Tonnes, July	2835	2655
Petroleum Refinery Products
Thousand Tonnes, July	4606	3635

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MADHYA PRADESH

Criminal Progress

The Madhya Pradesh 20-Point Programme Implementation Committees abound with murderers, rapists, underworld dons, land grabbers and profiteers. The committees have only a one point programme: to help their members.

THE Madhya Pradesh 20-Point Programme Implementation Committees must rate as one of a kind. Consider the luminaries who have been manning them. For example, there is one Ashok Vir Vikram Singh alias Bhaiya Raja, 39. A feudal overlord of Chhatarpur district, and dubbed the terror of Bundelkhand, he is reputed to have used pythons to terrorise women to submit to his will. There are other stories about him, a gory mix of fact and fiction—of murder, rape, plunder, and of corpses that disappear with the help of captive crocodiles. As many as 32 cases are registered against him.

Last month Bhaiya Raja, who was recently detained under the NSA, was arrested by the Uttar Pradesh Police in connection with a murder at the farmhouse of Janata Dal leader Akbar 'Dumpy' Ahmed. In a statement from his cell, Bhaiya Raj a sanctimoniously declared: "I am a committed Congressman and I shall continue to serve the party."

The Congress(I), however, quickly dropped him from the committee last fortnight; and he was not the only one to go. The state-level committee was reconstituted, and a massive exercise undertaken to induct new faces in district-level committees. Said Vidyadhar Joshi, minister of state for 20-point programme implementation: "We are purging the committees of criminal elements and troublemakers. It's a very difficult task."

The nature of the hurdles was more than evident as ruling party dissidents, led by former chief minister Arjun Singh, rushed to the prime minister to complain of political vendetta. Indeed, ever since the Motilal Vora Government came into power in the state early this year, an estimated 400 members have been sacked from the committees. Alleges Mukesh Nayak, a dissident MLA: "The Government has removed workers belonging to our group and has packed the committees with loyalists." Vora refutes this, asserting that complaints of indiscipline and nuisance at meetings had made the move necessary.

The fact of the matter is that though the committees—state-level, district-level and block-level—are meant to monitor the implementation of the 20-point programme, overseeing official execution and charting out fresh plans, they are actually used as vehicles for bestowing patronage by chief ministers, whose prerogative it is to nominate the members. The committees are packed with criminals and dubious elements, who lobby hard for nominations as the attractions of committee membership are many, and the responsibilities none. Office-bearers of the state-level committees are given ministerial 'status' and the impressive perks and privileges that go with it—allowances, free house, car, telephone, office and office staff. But what members cherish above all is the access they gain to the bureaucracy, and the licence they earn to approach officials to get work done.

This accounts for an unmistakable pattern that Vora's protestations cannot explain away: that the committees inevitably transform—new faces edging out the old—each time there is a change of chief ministers.

Routinely, each chief minister declares that his predecessor has packed the committees with criminals, economic offenders and self-seekers. Examples:

"Police screening is a must for committee membership. We will not allow criminal elements to become members."—Vora, March 11, 1987. As many as 1,300 members were dropped.

"Several persons with criminal records have been appointed to various boards, 20-point committees and other bodies. They should be removed immediately."—Singh, August 19, 1988, in a note to the chief secretary. The subsequent official dossier, a copy of which has been obtained by INDIA TODAY.

The committees should be disbanded. Else they will harm the party's image.
SURESH SETH
former Congress(I) minister

We are purging the committees of criminals and trouble makers.
VIDYADHAR JOSHI
Minister of State for 20-point programme implementation

Wanted criminals rub shoulders with officials at committee meetings.
BHAI VERMA
freedom fighter and former MP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NAVIN SOOD

A member of the Chhindwara district committee, he was arrested in a rape case.

K.K. MISHRA

An expelled member, he warns that no more meetings will be allowed in Indore.

VIR VIKRAM SINGH

Dubbed the terror of Bundelkhand, he has as many as 32 cases registered against him.

RAKESH SHARMA

Arrested and expelled by Singh's government, he was reinstated by Motilal Vora.

contains 429 names with criminal tags.

"Indiscipline and nuisance will not be tolerated. The committees are not a platform to create a nuisance, but to implement the prime minister's national programme."—Vora, June 21, 1989.

On the face of it, the sentiments have been laudable. But that they have been no more than lip-service is clear: the committees still abound with murderers, rapists, underworld dons, land grabbers and profiteers.

In Indore, every 10th member has a criminal record—19 out of 190. In Khandwa, every sixth member has a police record. Among the criminal 'stars' of the 20-point committees are:

▶ Akhtar Beg: member of the Indore district committee. Police dossiers describe him as the "uncrowned king" of gambling operations in the town. Nine cases registered against him. Once convicted on the charge of attempt to murder.

▶ Ratan: member of the Indore district committee. Involved in 38 criminal cases. History-sheeter and a listed political goonda.

▶ Gopal Das: member of the Gwalior district committee. History-sheeter. Has 45 criminal cases, for murder, dacoity and sodomy, registered against him. Once convicted on the charge of looting.

▶ Sunil Goyal: member of the Indore district committee. Ten cases registered against him. The day he was nominated to the committee last year, he was in jail on the charge of rioting.

▶ Navin Sood: member of the Chhindwara district committee. A liquor contractor. Arrested in connection with a rape case in the MLAs' rest house in Bhopal two years ago.

▶ Abdul Rashid Siddiqui: member of the Surguja district committee. A murder convict.

▶ Om Nahata: member of the Ujjain district committee. Was held for murder.

▶ Anand Bahadur Singh: was removed from the Sidhi district committee after his arrest on the charge of misbehaving with the collector's wife.

Committee memberships are highly sought after, for their attractions are many, and the responsibilities none.

EXPECTEDLY, these stalwarts lack concern for the 20-point programme or its implementation. Committee members are known to allot plots meant for landless labourers to their family members. In Raigarh district, forest contractors, notorious for illegal felling of trees, are members.

Points out Janata Dal leader V.C. Shukla: "The committee has only a one-point programme: to help its members." For the 20,000 ruling party members, accommodated at the state, district and block levels, the help has been in the way of sharing the spoils of power. Says S. Thakur, former convener of the committee's publicity cell: "If the panchayat-level committees are also constituted, we can accommodate about 1.80 lakh party workers."

From a national programme, the 20-point programme has been blatantly turned into a party programme. And the implementation is at the cost of the state exchequer. About 70 per cent of the state Government's total budget allocation (Rs 3,678 crore in 1979-80) is spent on the programme. A crore is spent every year on running the committees.

The Opposition has no participation in the programme and no say in the running of the committees. Points out state Janata Dal General Secretary Vinay Dixit: "Since the money comes from the state exchequer, all political parties should be involved."

But as far as the Government is concerned, membership of the committees is meant only for those with "full faith in the programme", which is a euphemism for those belonging to the ruling party. Says Vora: "The Opposition does not have faith in the programme." Questioned about communist parties, which supported the programme even during the Emergency, the chief minister declares: "Constitution of the committees is the Government's prerogative."

The Government presumption has been that faith in the programme can last only as long as an individual is a member of the ruling party. The moment he leaves—as in the case of V.C. Shukla—he is kicked out of the committee.

On the other hand, the committees continue to grow in size. The reason, as Shukla points out, is that: "Every chief minister wants to pack the committees with his favourites." And with changes in the Government, members with allegiance to an opposing group are dropped. In 1987, Vora reconstituted the district-level committees, purging it of Singh's

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Modi Champion bags an Indian star

Modi Champion Bi-metal Spark Plugs Now come as OE with Maruti

MARUTI

After a roaring approval by Bajaj Auto, Kinetic, LML Vespa, TVS Suzuki, Hero Motors, Hindustan Motors and others for fitment in their vehicles as Original Equipment, Modi Champion Bi-metal spark plugs now come as OE with the Indian favourite Maruti.

This is indeed a befitting tribute to the internationally acclaimed state-of-the-art Bi-metal technology of Champion, USA.

Technologically superior Modi Champion Bi-metal Spark Plugs, perfected to Indian conditions, ensure :

- Maximum fuel economy
- Instant starts
- Faster acceleration
- Long trouble free service &
- Cleaner exhaust

Fit Modi Champion Bi-metal Spark Plugs today and feel the difference.

MODI CHAMPION® BI-METAL

The Petrol Saver

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

supporters. When Singh returned to power last year, he brought in 1,200 new members, increasing the committees' strength to 3,000. Now Vora is again dropping the pro-Singh elements.

Consequently, the committees have been reduced to a farce. Some of them have as many as 200 members as against the norm of 40. In fact, only one of the 45 district committees has at present less than 40 members. During Singh's regime, even young students were included in the Indore committee. And as the committees grow, there are more and more nominated members wandering around, trying to arm-twist officials into doing all sorts of odd-jobs for them.

Apparently, there is some official realisation on this score, even if it yields next to nothing. The vice-chairman of the state-level committee, Y.D. Sharma, told members of the Raipur district committee: "If any member is under the illusion that he has become a political dada and he has got a licence to intimidate officials or get anyone transferred, he is vastly mistaken ...I've noticed that after the meetings are over, the members approach the officials either for some personal work or for transfers and postings."

Says Prakash Joshi, permanent secretary of the Indore city Congress(I) and member of the district committee: "The members talk of everything except the programme at the meetings." Not long ago, some members at Indore moved a resolution hailing Arjun Singh's 'victory' in the Churhat lottery case. Not to be outdone, the minister presiding over the meeting, S.B. Solanki, moved a counter-resolution congratulating Vora on his election to the state Assembly.

THE Indore committee made other absurd recommendations: Congressmen with more than two children should not be given election tickets; and a minister with two or more children should be sacked from the Cabinet for aggravating the population explosion.

The committee meetings are not only forums for plain politicking, but are also arenas for rampant displays of rowdiness. Says Solanki: "No one talks sense and no one is willing to listen." Members frequently insult officials who attend meetings, and in fact, the Madhya Pradesh Gazetted Officers' Association has threatened to boycott the committee meetings if the members continue to misbehave with them. Says association President Brajesh Shrivastava: "The officials are duty-bound to discharge their responsibilities. But they have self-respect and will not tolerate humiliation and insult."

Last year all government employees of Sagar went on a one-day strike in January after a member, Rakesh Sharma, misbehaved with an engineer at a committee meeting. Sharma, who belonged to Vora's camp, was arrested by Singh's government. He was also expelled from the committee.

However, soon after Vora returned to power, the engineer was transferred and Sharma reinstated. Asked to explain the reason, a brazen Vora told INDIA TODAY: "He was included in the committee because I decided to do so."

The 191-member Indore committee has not been able to hold its monthly meeting properly since last January because of gross indiscipline. The Government took action by dropping seven of the members. The expelled members retaliated by throwing chappals and eggs at Solanki's car in June. K.K. Mishra, an expelled member, threatens: "They cannot hold the meeting in Indore now." Similarly, at Gwalior, unruly Congressmen prevented a meeting from being held after 40 Singh-supporters were expelled.

Although Vora maintains that the committees serve a useful purpose, insiders point out that they have almost nothing to do with the implementation of the programme. If anything, the committee members prove to be a hindrance. For instance, programmes related to land reforms are hardly appreciated by big landlords and those violating land ceiling laws and the minimum wages act.

It is not surprising then that honest and sincere workers feel cheated. Says Suresh Seth, former Congress(I) minister: "The committee should be disbanded. Otherwise it will do immense harm to the party's image." Ram Singh Bhai Verma, 81, well-known freedom fighter and former member of Parliament and the state Assembly, makes a plea for reverting to the old system when officials fulfilled the targets on their own. Says he: "Wanted criminals whose proper place is behind the bars, rub shoulders with officials at committee meetings." Similarly, asserts a collector: "Rather than helping us implement the programme, most of the members are a nuisance. No officer wants to attend the meetings."

Complains a disillusioned Verma, who is a member of the Indore committee and has not missed a single meeting: "People object when I speak at the meetings and I am shouted down." Probably that is because the old Gandhian talks about subjects like poverty that are irrelevant to them. Says he: "They claim that nine lakh families were helped to rise above the poverty line in the district. But, on the other hand, the number of families below the poverty line has risen from 22 lakh in 1984 to 37 lakh in 1988. I've been trying to raise this issue, but no one is willing to listen." That is, literally, a case of criminal neglect.

—N.K. SINGH in Indore

Several persons with criminal records have been appointed to the committees.
ARJUN SINGH

Police screening is a must. We will not allow criminal elements to become members.
MOTILAL VORA

The committees are used simply as vehicles for bestowing patronage by the state's chief ministers.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JINDAL

CHAIRMAN'S SPEECH AT THE 18TH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF SHAREHOLDERS ON 5.8.1989

SHRI O.P. JINDAL, CHAIRMAN

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me immense pleasure to extend to all of you a warm and cordial welcome to the 18th Annual General Meeting of the Company.

The Annual Accounts and the Directors' Report highlighting the operations of the Company for the period ended 31st March, 1989 is already in your hands and with your permission, I shall take it as read.

A New Era

Your Company has entered a new era of growth and profitability based on a strong foundation in terms of net worth and gross block. Financial results for the period under review bear ample testimony to the same. Your Company achieved a remarkable growth of 79% on an annualised basis in total revenue to Rs. 140.33 crores (9 months). The growth can be seen in better perspective when you also take into account the growth of 39% in the previous year and 34% in the year before. Thus, over three accounting periods since the Company went public, the gross revenue has gone up from Rs. 59 crores to Rs. 140 crores (9 months), an aggregate growth of 137%, & gross profit has gone up from Rs. 4.10 crores to Rs. 9.06 crores (9 months), a growth of 121%. I hope the shareholders will consider this adequate vindication of the faith they reposed in the management at the time of public issue. As of 31st March, 1989 the Company's net worth was Rs. 23.06 crores, its gross block was Rs. 40 crores against the paid up capital of Rs. 3.30 crores. From this strong base, your Company is launching new projects which, along with ongoing modernisation, will sustain the tempo of growth in turnover and profits, and pave the Company's entry into the league of the topmost companies in the country.

Bonus 1 : 1

In keeping with the higher profits achieved during the nine month period, the Directors have decided to declare a dividend of Rs. 2.5 per share which works out to 33.3% per annum as compared to 25% in the last year. Further, the Company has decided to make a liberal issue of Bonus shares in the ratio of 1 equity share for every share held by capitalising Rs. 3.30 crores out of share premium account and general reserves subject to your and other consent.

Business Environment

After failing consecutively for three years, the monsoon was bountiful in 1988 and it has had a tonic effect on the economy. Growth in industrial production during 1988/89 has been estimated at around 8.5% and the economy as a whole has also grown handsomely. The Government policies continue to be pragmatic and we look forward to a very healthy business environment even if it means more competition in the market place. Very recently, the Government has announced major changes in steel policies which will enable free growth.

Your Company's business consists of manufacturing stainless steel and mild steel cold rolled strips. In both the business lines, there has been a fair amount of competition all along and more capacity is coming up, particularly in the case of M.S. cold rolled strips. In a growing market, this is a welcome development. Our country faces a difficult foreign exchange position and it would be ideal to achieve self sufficiency in steel products.

I would like to share with you your Company's strategy for the future. Briefly stated it consists of cost control, modernisation and research. I can state, with a fair degree of confidence, that the capital cost of our projects and the production cost in our factories are amongst the lowest in the stry. We have been modernising regularly including the current phase, the mpany has spent substantial amounts on dernisation. What probably sets your mpany apart from the rest is its emphasis esearch and innovation. Whether it be chine building, process technology or new ducts, your Company is striving all the e.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

STRIPS LIMITED

IR YEARS' REVIEW

Rs. in lacs

culars	31.3.89 (Nine Months)	30.6.88	30.6.87	30.6.86
l Income	14034	10428	7417	5911
s Profit	906	814	603	410
Profit	577	487	173	139
Generation	798	722	397	284
end — share	2.5	2.5	1.8	0.6
y Capital	330	330	329	80
Value Per e Rs.	69.90	54.63	41.02	15.36
al Employed	6182	4445	3414	2982
s Block	3792	2697	2251	1811
Block Current ts	3067	2199	1744	1467
s Profit/ s Sales%	2991	2125	1554	1425
fit/ s Block %	6.5	7.8	8.1	6.9
ings Per e Rs.	15.2	18.1	7.7	7.7
/Equity Ratio	17.48	14.75	5.25	17.38
	1.67	1.46	1.53	1.43

ew Projects — Pig Iron & ponge Iron.

major development out of these efforts been a new technology to manufacture on and sponge iron by reduction of Iron with non-coking coal through Rotary Kiln. e is a tremendous potential for Sponge and Pig Iron and your Company has, fore, decided to straight away mercialise the new developed technology h, on trial runs in a pilot plant set up at r, has given excellent results. These s will be set up in Raigarh, M.P. an area ample iron ore and coal reserves. We d all feel proud of the work done by the pany's engineers in this regard. While untry has ample reserves of non-coking which the Company proposes to use in ants, it is scarce in coking coal presently by the integrated steel plants for the manufacture of Pig Iron through blast furnace route. The project cost of these new plants is estimated to be a mere Rs. 25 crores, one more instance of the management's emphasis on low cost projects.

Your management is continuing to look at new investment proposals, particularly in areas which provide business synergy. Your directors have also proposed to raise Rs. 25 crores by way of fully-convertible debentures on a Rights basis to finance the new projects and to augment long-term resources. The management, in consideration of suggestions received from many shareholders, has now decided to raise the entire sum of Rs. 25 crores from Rights Issue of Fully Convertible Debentures instead of partly Rights issue and balance Public Issue. Now it has been decided to offer One Fully Convertible Debenture of Rs. 140/-each for every two shares held on Rights basis. It is proposed to convert the said debenture into two shares at a premium of Rs. 60/- per share after 6 months from the date of allotment subject to necessary approvals. Necessary amendments in the earlier Resolutions are proposed accordingly. The proposal will hopefully meet your approval.

Performance during the current year

In the first four months of the current year i.e. from April 1989 to July, 1989, your Company has achieved a sales turnover and other income of Rs. 76 crores compared to Rs. 40 crores during the corresponding period in the previous year. We expect to improve the performance further to achieve our targeted sales turnover of Rs. 260 crores for the full year.

Industrial Relations

Any industrial unit is a product of several factors such as entrepreneurship, technology, finance etc. but the single most important factor is the human factor which may take the form of a worker on the shopfloor, his Engineer, Supervisor, the General Manager or a member of the Board of Directors. We are extremely proud of the highest quality of this human effort at the Jindal Organisation. While the management tries to look after the needs of its employees as a matter of topmost priority, it is to the credit of the loyalty and purposefulness of our staff that industrial relations, or should I say human relations, are of the highest order at "JINDALS". My whole — hearted appreciation for their co-operation.

Acknowledgements

It is my pleasure to express our sincere thanks to the Central Government, the Governments of Haryana and Maharashtra, All India & State Level Financial Institutions, Banks for their guidance, co-operation and financial help in full measure. I am grateful to my colleagues on the Board, specially the Nominee Directors — for their enthusiastic participation and wise counsel at all times.

JAI HIND

Note : This does not purport to be a report of the proceedings of the 18th Annual General Meeting.

JINDAL

Sobhagya/291/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUJARAT

Popular Prisoner

After seven reprieves, Parmar is condemned to hang

Photographs by PRAVIN GAJJAR

THREE murders. A death sentence. Seven reprieves. Chief ministers appealing for mercy. Donated eyes, kidneys and body. National sympathy. Public sainthood. These are snippets from the fascinating story of Shashikant Keshav Parmar, a murder convict who has been condemned to the hangman's noose but commands tremendous public attention today for what are being recognised as inherently humane qualities.

Parmar was condemned to the gallows in 1981. The death sentence was confirmed by the Gujarat High Court. The Supreme Court rejected an appeal in 1982, paving the way for Gujarat's first execution in 25 years.

In the intervening years, Parmar had built up an admirable track record in human service and sacrifice:

- He has already donated his kidney to Rushikimar Mittal, a wealthy businessman. Although poor, he even refused to accept hefty compensation.
- He has also willed away his eyes.
- The Jamnagar Medical College is to receive his body after his execution. A few days before his scheduled hanging on June 23, Parmar gave up eating solids to ensure that his body reached the students clean.
- When Haribhai Panchal of the Sadvichar Parivar—a voluntary organisation which has been espousing Parmar's cause—met him on June 22, a day before his scheduled hanging, Parmar expressed his last wish: percolation tanks should be constructed for 56 talukas.

When the Gujarat High Court granted him a fresh lease of life on June 22, around 200 prisoners in Rajkot jail broke their fast—in prayer for him—to celebrate.

His sacrificial qualities induced prominent citizens to board the save-Parmar bandwagon in hordes. On August 5, former Gujarat chief ministers, Ghanshyam Oza and Babubhai Patel, noted dancer Mrinalini Sarabhai and Congress (I) leader Sanatbhai Mehta appealed to President Venkataraman for mercy.

Parmar's transformation as a person while in jail waiting for the noose prompted many prominent citizens to make an impassioned plea for his life.

Soon after, the Gujarat High Court deferred the hanging to allow Kanchanben, Parmar's sister, to tie him a rakhi on August 17. Most recently, Parmar was blessed with his seventh reprieve when the Supreme Court stayed his August 18 execution. The court further stayed the execution on August 22 since a fresh petition for Presidential mercy has been moved keeping in view Parmar's kidney donation. But the Supreme Court finally dismissed Babubhai Patel's petition on August 25 and once again cleared the way for Parmar's hanging.

Parmar, a boiler attendant at a fishing plant in Verawal, challenged the factory owner in an effort to wrangle a better deal for his fellow-workers. In 1977, he lost his job for engaging in trade union activities. His mother, Triveniben, 70, says: "He could never tolerate injustice." A Rajkot labour court directed his reinstatement in 1979 but awarded a mere Rs 1,000 to compensate for the 22-month lay-off. In protest, Parmar decided to begin a fast unto death in the court premises. The President of the Rajkot Bar Association, Hashubhai Dave convinced him to end the fast, promising to take up his case.

When the court marginally raised the award to Rs 1,300, Parmar felt let down. He now suspected that Dave had betrayed him to favour the factory owner. Enraged, he reached Dave's house. Not finding him, Parmar emptied his frustration on the lawyer's family members: he knifed to death Dave's father, sister-in-law and six-year-old niece on October 17, 1980. Known to be prone to bouts of hysteria as a child, he was considered sober as an adult till his murderous frenzy when he was 29.

The family of Parmar's victims argued that the man did not kill in cold blood. Recently, former Gujarat chief minister, Hitendra Desai, has supported the hanging. Pitted against him are current Gujarat Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhury and his predecessors, Oza and Patel.

Parmar's supporters had based their case on his transformation as a person while in jail awaiting the noose. Meanwhile, Parmar remains unruffled. He told his mother: "I have been telling you not to waste your time and money after me. I will get whatever is written in my kismat (destiny)."

—UDAY MAHURKAR in Rajkot

Parmar (top); and his mother and brother signing the form donating his body: reformed

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE RIGH
FOR T
FOR T

bajaj group

When you're driving down a rain-swept highway, improper lighting could mean the difference between life and death...

TRUST BAJAJ TO DESIGN LIGHTING SYSTEM. RIGHT SITUATION. RIGHT RESULT.

Bajaj brings you a range of luminaires and lighting systems. Designed by computers to suit virtually every lighting need. Be it for industries, commercial institutions or street lighting.

Each made to our own demanding standards. As well as to the stringent specifications of the Bureau of Indian Standards, Commission Électrotechnique Internationale and of other international organisations.

For our advisory service on lighting and/or lighting installation design, write to, General Manager (Lighting), Bajaj Electricals Limited, 51, Mahatma Gandhi Road, Bombay 400 023., or contact our nearest regional/branch office.

bajaj

bajaj LUMINAIRES

Spreading Light – scientifi

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I was impressed when my doctor said Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer really stops hair loss.

But I was convinced when I used it."

"My doctor told me Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer* is a unique scientific formula based on extensive research. He also told me it provides all the essential proteins, co-enzymes and vitamins for strengthening hair roots.

All I know is that it has certainly stopped my hair from falling and checked dandruff."

Here's an excerpt from the research report :

"66.66% gave excellent and 33.33% gave good results with complete disappearance of dandruff in all cases and nearly cent per cent stoppage of fall of hair... So, success rate with Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer may be stated to be cent per cent.

Indian Medical Gazette 118, 223 (1984)

The proven scientific way to prevent hair loss and dandruff.

* It is not a toilet preparation.

Dey's® Dey's Medical. Care you can trust.

TSA-C/DMHV/189

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIAN AIRLINES

In a Tailspin

Exodus of pilots to international carriers

AT Indian Airlines problems keep soaring. Armed with a fleet of the hi-tech fly-by-wire A320s, it had boasted only in July that its bad days were over. But now there is a fresh crisis: a crippling shortage of pilots.

In an unprecedented exodus, 27 pilots, including some of its best, have resigned from the corporation in the past year and have joined international carriers. And at least a dozen more are likely to follow suit. Since all of them flew the Boeing 737, the work-horse of the airlines, their sudden exit has led to a desperate shortfall in cockpit crew. R. Prasad, the airline's managing director, admits: "We are just about maintaining normal services. If more leave we would be hard hit."

The airline has already been hit badly. In a frantic bid to run its services, the management cancelled leave for all pilots. It then called on executive pilots (those who also hold administrative posts) to put in extra hours of flying, violating accepted norms. The result: pilots who were permitted to fly 30 hours a month, were logging 70 to 80 hours. Several of the Airbus pilots were also asked to put in additional hours flying the Boeing 737—another unsafe step as the controls of the two aircraft differ.

Alarmed, the National Transportation Safety Board last month pointed out these violations to the Civil Aviation Ministry. The Indian Commercial Pilots' Association, the airline's pilots union, has also lodged a protest. As an agitated spokesman of the association says: "Fatigued pilots are a hazard in the air and we have already warned the management that it could result in a crash soon."

His warning may be too drastic. But if the exodus continues, there could be a breakdown of its services. Already, subtle pruning measures are on. On routes that don't run full, flights are being clubbed together to save on crew. But if more pilots leave, the airline may be forced to ground many of its 30 Boeing 737s. And since these aircraft handle over 50 per cent of the traffic, it would shatter hopes of cutting down waitlists and flight delays.

The corporation, meanwhile, has tried to get tough with pilots who are resigning, but with little success. Last year, when there was no threat of a shortfall, it had accepted the resignations of three pilots. But this year, faced with an exodus, it refused to accept the resignation letters of 23 pilots. But this is no deterrent. In a veiled threat to potential "deserters" the management even dismissed a pilot who had joined another carrier without first resigning from Indian Airlines. But as a veteran pilot points out: "It is only aggravating the situation, not stopping the outflow."

If the airline finds itself in a tailspin, it has itself to blame. It failed to take cognizance of a global boom in commercial air travel that saw demand for pilots in the past decade leap from 3,000 a year to over 10,000. The result: almost all the major airlines are busy poaching experienced pilots from their rivals.

Indian Airlines, however, recruited pilots in brief surges followed by long inexplicable gaps. Now its Boeing 737 pilots are prime targets for foreign airlines who offer sky-high salaries. For instance, an Indian Airlines pilot with 10 years experience gets a basic of Rs 3,500 and with allowances grosses around Rs 10,000. Whereas airlines such as Malaysian Airlines and Gulf Air are offering $4,000 (Rs 66,400) a month plus perks like subsidised accommodation, discount travel for relatives and free education for children.

Many pilots have jumped at these offers even though most airlines assure only a three-year contract. But as one pilot, who has joined Malaysian Airlines, points out: "In those three years I'll save much more money than I could in 10 years here."

Members of the pilots association say that it is not higher salaries that are the main incentive. With Indian Airlines in a constant turmoil, man management was in disarray too. Says a senior Indian Airlines pilot: "We were being treated like dirt. Our authority was constantly being eroded. And we were getting blamed for all the lapses that the airline committed."

The association is now pressing for higher wages to stem the exodus. But the management has been adamant on that point. Says a senior official: "We certainly can't pay the kind of salary foreign airlines pay. And if we increase it now, their demands would keep going up." Instead, it has been concentrating on checking future erosion. It recently jacked up the bond money for pilots leaving before seven years of service from Rs 35,000 to Rs 7.5 lakh.

However, that doesn't help the current problem. One solution being worked out is to promote co-pilots to captains more rapidly. But if inexperienced pilots man flights, safety would be the first casualty. The other is to get the Government to ban pilots from taking jobs in other airlines. But the pilots would certainly challenge its legality.

With the airline's options severely limited, only turbulent times lie ahead for it.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cars at a petrol pump (above left); and fruits and vegetables being unloaded: living with less

NEPAL

Coping with the Crunch

A show of normalcy, but things continue to look grim

THE Himalayan kingdom has, after all, not melted. At least so far. Five months after the lifelines from India to Nepal were blocked, the country of 18 million still breathes, if spasmodically. In a remarkable show of resilience and defiance, the Nepal Government has weathered the crisis caused by non-renewal of its trade and transit treaties with India. But a heavy toll has been taken of the kingdom's economy and the people's suffering is enormous.

At a time when there should have been panic, there are deceptive signs of normalcy in Kathmandu. Buses taking tourists to Pokhara run down the mountains from Kathmandu. Goods-laden trucks groan uphill. Mitsubishi buses and Toyota cars are back on the roads. Japanese motorcycles are roaring again. Even Tribhuvan University, closed in April due to acute shortages, has re-opened. Nepal Oil Corporation tankers trundling up from Amlekhganj, Nepal's main petroleum storage centre, indicate the availability of petroleum products. In Kathmandu, queues for kerosene are rare. And at Pauka Bazaar near Moongling in central Nepal, shops seem to be doing well.

Foodgrain and fuel supply has indeed improved. Says an Indian doctor working in Kathmandu: "For two days in May my orderly didn't have fuel to cook food. Now supplies are more regular." A Nepali Communist partyman put the improvement in another perspective: "We're stoical by nature and don't display our emotions. Hence the superficial normalcy."

It's not clear how long this enforced normalcy will last. The Government has withdrawn the rationing of petroleum products introduced after the expiry of the treaties. But this may just be a sign of overconfidence. After rationing was introduced, panic spread and people feverishly hoarded fuel. Says B.P. Poudial, a businessman: "It is due to hoarding till late July that you find so many vehicles on the road. A few more weeks without supplies will revert us to the situation in April."

But even after withdrawal of rationing, fuel prices have risen by 40 per cent. Transport charges and bus fares have skyrocketed. Rues Ram Sharma, a cigarette seller near Moongling: "Earlier we used to get a bus every 20 minutes, now we have to wait hours." Adds K.P. Bhattarai, leader of the Nepali Congress: "Now I can't afford to either pay or wait for taxis."

Nepal dismisses these as minor irritants. On Durbar Marg, Kathmandu's stately avenue leading to the royal palace, a Nepali official surveys the Sunkosi restaurant teeming with tourists and remarks: "We haven't collapsed, have we?"

But the surface normalcy hides the enormous price Nepal has already paid to ensure supplies. And things outside the pampered capital of Kathmandu are ve different. A retired Indian Army havilda Pupna Bahadur Gurung, now settled Darechowk in Nepal's Chitwan distric complains: "Even clothes are being sold the black market. Kya karega?"

Nepal has in fact been importin goods in huge quantities. Border custom officials confirm that on an average trucks enter Nepal daily, with goods im ported from countries other than India goods which could be more easily im ported from India even after paying th normal taxes levied after the expiry of th treaties. Everything from sugar to cycl from Japan, China and Singapore hav filled the stores. Asks an incensed Bhatta rai: "Who needs clothes from Hong Kon and shoes from Bangkok? The commo ers usually go to the border to buy cheap Indian clothes. The Brahmins and Ksh triyas in the hills need dhotis which can come from Singapore."

Nepal's effort to show it can survi without India's help has evinced sarcast reactions. "This is perhaps the first time country has cut its nose to spite its neigh bour," comments an Indian official. Med cines, sugar, textiles and bicycles are ju some of the items Nepal could import fro India but is now buying elsewhere.

In a bid to breathe life into the gaspin economy, Nepal has liberalised impor disbursed open general licences and di ped into its meagre foreign exchange re erves to stock up whatever petroleum could with its limited storage capacity Said a member of the Rashtriya Pancha yat, Nepal's parliament: "The Govern

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Even clothes are being sold in the black market. What are we to do?"

PUPNA BAHADUR GURUNG
retired Indian Army havildar

"Earlier, we used to get a bus every 20 minutes, but now we sometimes have to wait for hours."

RAM SHARMA cigarette-seller

ment has ruined our economy for years to come. Funds have been diverted from development works to finance imports and provide cash incentives for exports."

The Government has announced cash subsidies to promote export of things like noodles, biscuits and ginger which it can afford to send out. Earlier Nepali goods were not levied import duties in India. Now after paying import duties, these goods cannot compete in Indian markets. Nepal hopes subsidised goods will sell in Pakistan and Bangladesh. "Subsidies ranging from 10 to 25 per cent have been announced to export semi-finished leather for which there's tremendous demand," says a member of the Nepal Chamber of Industries and Commerce.

THE situation is indeed grim. The Nepalese Government itself admits to a revenue loss of Nepali Rs 100 crore (Rs 59.5 crore) and a production loss of Rs 200 crore (Rs 120 crore) during the last three months of the last financial year that ended in June, due to the expiry of the treaties with India in March. And Finance Minister Bahadur Pradhan says the situation could worsen in the current year.

The fuel bill for Nepal which stood at around Nepali Rs 80 crore in the first nine months of the last financial year is projected to rise to Rs 160 crore this year due to the higher cost of imports. And Nepal owes India over Rs 2 crore for petroleum.

Pradhan admits that Nepali Rs 400 crore (Rs 240 crore) earmarked for development could not be spent last year and that funds were diverted, presumably for import of essential goods. Taxes have been imposed on even vegetables and fruits, airport taxes have been hiked and tourists and film makers are charged more. Nepal is looking to Pakistan and Bangladesh for goods supply and trade talks with the two countries have been described as optimistic. Nepal is also increasing its storage capacity to lessen dependence on India.

In the absence of coal from India, coal-based industries like cement and brick kilns have closed down in Nepal. The Hetauda cement factory near Birganj has been closed for one and a half months, rendering 500 workers unemployed.

Yet, the Nepalese tenacity has taken New Delhi by surprise. The Nepalese economy has been so dependent on India, it was inconceivable that it could withstand the pressures of imports at considerable cost. Nepal's rear-guard action has only underscored the length it is ready to go to assert political independence.

A section of the Nepali press and anti-India coterie in the palace suggests that Nepal wait for Rajiv's possible defeat in the forthcoming polls, then negotiate treaties with the new government. Till then, Nepal should survive by begging, borrowing and scraping the barrel. But beneath this impressive show of defiance is a lurking sense of defeat. Says a Nepalese politician sadly: "You can fight history but it is futile to fight geography." Concurred a Nepal-watcher: "You cannot even draw the map of Nepal without drawing either India or China." For a poor country hemmed in by two giants, solace it seems, lies in conciliation, not confrontation. —UTTAM SENGUPTA in Nepal

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For leaders of tomorrow in industry, government and commerce.

IN SEARCH OF EXCELLENCE

MANAGEMENT DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE ANNOUNCES ITS THIRD NATIONAL MANAGEMENT PROGRAMME

A unique and exclusive management programme specially designed for experienced officers and managers who have potential to be leaders and undertake ever-increasing managerial challenges. This distinctive programme offers:

- Content and pedagogy in Management Education suited to the experience and position of participants for assuming higher responsibilities.
- The programme in co-operation with the Indian Institutes of Management at Ahmedabad, Bangalore, Calcutta, and Lucknow, and Xavier Labour Relations Institute, Jamshedpur.
- The support of the Ministry of Personnel, Public Grievances and Pensions.
- A distinguished faculty drawn from the IIMs, and other famous institutions.
- The opportunity to interact with the country's high-flyers in industry and government.....all destined to play significant roles in their organisations.

PARTICIPANTS

Officers in all India Services and in Group 'A' Services of Central & State Governments, Managers in Public and Private Sectors of Industry, and Decision Makers in family owned enterprises.

QUALIFICATIONS

Graduates with a minimum of 50% marks, age not more than 35 years as on 1st July, 1990; and a minimum of five years' work experience.

DURATION

12 months at the Campus of the Management Development Institute at Gurgaon, near Delhi, and 3 months on project work at the sponsoring organisation.

DATE OF COMMENCEMENT

July 1, 1990.

SELECTION PROCEDURE

Intending applicants are required to take the Common Admissions Test (CAT) of the IIM's, followed by interviews. The CAT will be held at different centres all over India. The last date of receiving applications is October 27, 1989.

ACTION REQUIRED

Collect CAT forms on payment from any State Bank of India Branch listed in IIMs' advertisement for CAT, appearing on September 12, 1989.

For Prospectus and NMP Application form, write immediately to:

The Dean
NATIONAL MANAGEMENT PROGRAMME
MANAGEMENT DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE
Post Box 60, Mehrauli Road, Gurgaon-122 001

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For over three decades, we've been turning opportunities into achievements

ELECTROSTEEL

Our Pioneering Efforts

- India's largest private sector manufacturer of Spun Pipes
- India's only manufacturer of Large Diameter Spun Pipes by the 'de Lavaud' process
- Pioneer in Alloy Steel Castings and Grinding Media
- First to introduce Hi-Chrome technology for Cement Plant Ball Mill Internals

From modest beginnings in 1958, Electrosteel is today India's largest private sector manufacturer of Spun Pipes, with a total annual capacity of 1,25,600 tonnes. The Company also manufactures Grinding Media and Alloy Steel Castings. Its products cater to the diverse needs of Water Supply Schemes, Cement Plants, Ore-Processing Units, Thermal Power Stations, etc.

In 1982, Electrosteel acquired a sick and closed Spun Pipe manufacturing unit at Elavur near Madras. And, brought to it the strength of its experience in industry, through modernisation and induction of professional managerial skills, which helped turn this unit into a viable plant within a short span of time.

The Company's superiority is established by its modern facilities and tradition of product innovation. Now, a fresh modernisation plan involving a capital outlay of Rs.8.9 crores has been taken up This includes introduction of improvements in Melting Technology in collaboration with a leading foreign firm. This will enable direct reduction of iron-ore and result in energy savings, increased productivity and reduced costs.

The tradition of product innovation and technology upgradation continues...

The imprint of excellence

ELECTROSTEEL CASTINGS LIMITED
Regd. Office : Rajgangpur, Orissa
Admn. Office : 4 B.B.D. Bag (East), Calcutta 700 001
Units : Khardah (West Bengal) ● Ghaziabad (U.P.) ● Elavur (Tamil Nadu)

PRESSMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNITED KINGDOM

Spreading Tentacles

Two gangs of Indian youth have links with major crime syndicates

IT began last January as a routine low-level police probe into street-fights between two Asian gangs in Southall, London's largest Indian settlement. Five months into the investigation, Scotland Yard sleuths realised that beneath many street-scuffles, were the dangerous tentacles of mafia-like syndicates that operated far beyond Southall's High Street, in Birmingham, Bradford, Bombay and Karachi. Worried Yard detectives soon formed a crack team of 14 officers to launch a secret inquiry codenamed Operation Shampoo.

The results, announced last month, were astounding. The warring second generation Indian youth seemed to be part of an Asian crime syndicate with a finger in every sleazy pie—drugs, illegal immigration, credit card thefts, protection packets and frauds involving building societies, banks and insurance. The police swooped down upon 190 youths and, quite suddenly, Indians were on the list of mafias in the jungle of London's cosmopolitan underworld.

Clearly, Operation Shampoo was a sensitive project. To start with, it involved strict secrecy—arrests are still being made in a bid to bust a syndicate involving operatives in nine countries and Scotland Yard has been acting in tandem with authorities not only in India and Pakistan, but also in Canada, West Germany and Belgium. Yard detectives privately admit that booking the well-connected and wealthy bosses of the mafia may be a different proposition altogether.

At the centre of the racket are two gangs—the Tooti Nungs (have-nots) and the Holy Smokes—who had clashed sporadically on the streets of Southall over the last decade, but without any serious fall-out. The gangs are offshoots of the Southall Youth Movement (SYM), which grew out of the early '70s resistance to racial attacks by the then powerful white right-wing organisation, National Front (NF). The first gang to be formed was the Tooti Nungs, whose members were unemployed youths. The Holy Smokes was a breakaway group formed by sons of well-to-do Indian businessmen.

Said Pyare Lal Khabra, Southall-based chief of the Indian Workers Association: "The two gangs began to take the colour of caste-based groups. The Holy Smokes seemed a jat-dominated gang, while the Tooti Nungs was said to comprise supposedly lower caste youths."

Over the last two years, the two gangs had begun to openly defy the law and mark their presence on the streets of Southall, worrying police officials like Inspector Geof Bryden, the community liaison officer in the area. Said Bryden: "They had their trade marks, they would go cruising in two or three cars—either black Capris or Stags—to stimulate trouble. They would often arm themselves with knives and pickaxes. There would be disorder in pubs but at other times, they would blend in with the local population. They seemed to affect no one but themselves."

But unknown to unsuspecting locals, the two gangs had begun to grow menacingly and had become involved in serious crimes. A stunned Indian community heard the Yard disclose that the gangs indulged in:

► Protection rackets: they had their territories of operation marked out and, within those areas, would extort protection money from shopkeepers and restaurant-owners.

► Illegal immigration: immigrants were smuggled in from the subcontinent with forged passports and documents. Twenty illegal immigrants were found sheltered by the gangs. According to Scotland Yard Detective Superintendent Roy Herridge who supervised the operation, Bombay was a major link in the smuggling in of Sri Lankan immigrants. The immigrants usually seek political asylum after entering a West European country.

► Credit card fraud: some of the illegal immigrants found jobs as postmen and stole credit cards which were used to buy goods that would be re-sold. The fraud was put at £200,000.

► Bank, building society and insurance

Scotland Yard has detected that the gangs are involved in drug running and immigration rackets

■ SYM building: embarrassing links

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

frauds: police busted a £4 million fraud to obtain building society loans. Other frauds were unearthed, including one involving more than £ 12 million.

▶ Drugs: the gangs smuggled in drugs, including heroin and cocaine. Detectives recovered heroin with a street value of £ 500,000.

At the end of the six-month-long probe, Herridge declared that violent crime in Southall had dropped by 38 per cent and robberies by 26 per cent. But he knows that nabbing the bosses may not be easy. Though he is tight-lipped about their identity, the possibility is that they are not based in Southall and are influential men. But Herridge is optimistic: "I have received 100 per cent cooperation from authorities in India, who have written to me praising the operation and I have the people's support."

ACCORDING to well-placed sources, Tooti Nungs over the years has received the patronage of some powerful figures in Southall. Unconfirmed reports associate a slain Sikh moderate with the gang while others say Tooti Nungs was paid £16,000 by a well-known figure to intervene in a dispute over the trusteeship of a gurudwara and to illegally transfer money to India. The claim if true, could throw a very different light on the activities of the gang. But said Bryden: "The claim (about their links with militants) has never been substantiated and it's not something we are looking into."

Scotland Yard was quick to defend the Indian community as a whole. "The scale of the criminal activity did surprise me, but I strongly maintain that Indians in Britain are a very peaceful community. It's only a small number of youths who has taken advantage of British laws and the peaceful nature of the Indian community," Herridge said.

But one person who is angry with the media hype over the happenings in London is Khabra. As news of the Yard's success hit the front pages of national dailies and was highlighted with characteristic verve by the tabloid press, Khabra rejected the assertion that the gangs were part of a mafia. Said he: "These were unemployed kids picked up by outsiders to act as a cover and divert police attention. This was no Mafia. The gang leaders used Southall to make money while the small fries got the blame."

That's an argument which finds support. According to the last census taken in 1981, 9.1 per cent of Southall's male Asian population is unemployed—a proportion described by local politicians as "quite high". Also influencing Southall's perception of the arrests has been the fact that Tooti Nungs was involved in efforts to physically combat the NF in pitched street battles in the early '80s, especially in protecting Indian women from harassment by front members. Said Virendra Sharma, a leading Indian member of the Labour Party, Britain's largest Opposition: "People used Tooti Nungs to give them respectability. At one time, they were thought to be the best way to strike against racism."

Sharma also admits that community leaders in the area have ignored the needs of the youth and that it was only a matter of time before the situation was exploited. "Local governments have ignored Southall for years. There are hardly any youth clubs and the pressure on youngsters to adjust to the differing life-styles at home and outside is enormous. On top of that there is the unemployment factor. We turned a blind eye to these gangs, thinking that things would be all right once they got jobs. We didn't anticipate anything like what has come out."

Operation Shampoo may have mopped up crime in the area, but it clearly has shocked Southall's estimated 80,000 Indians. Said a restaurant owner on Southall's busy High Street: "This has given us a bad name." Even so, it's an episode locals have begun to shrug off, unmindful of the heavy police presence on Southall's bustling, shop-filled lanes. It's the future they have to look to with apprehension.

—DIPANKAR DE SARKAR in London

■ Gang graffiti: rising violence and crime

■ A Southall street by night: strict police vigilance

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CRICKET

On the Front Foot

Banned cricketers challenge board decision

IT all ain't over till it's lost. Six senior Indian cricketers—Dilip Vengsarkar, Kapil Dev, Ravi Shastri, Mohammed Azharuddin, Arun Lal and Kiran More—have certainly picked up this baseball lesson during their North American sojourn last May which led the Board of Control for Cricket in India (BCCI) to ban them from playing cricket for one year. For when the Working Committee of the BCCI met in Bombay on August 19, the stars displayed a resolve that would have done them wonders in West Indies. They sent the board a stiff, quasi-legal notice challenging the legality of the contract, and arguing that the offending Clause 7 only prohibited them from playing in South Africa.

Obviously, the cricketers had done a little homework—like reading the contract—and went on the front foot. They argued the ban was unjustified as the agreement was coercive; the players were prohibited from playing for private promoters only in South Africa; and only during the tour (three months). Their letter argued: "We have not contravened any provision of the contract in a manner that warrants this punishment or any punishment at all."

The board was momentarily stumped. Said A.W. Kanmadikar, member of the Disciplinary Committee: "We were taken aback by the tone of the letter. A sincere apology would have helped solve the matter." Officials said they would consult lawyers and decide on a course of action—even as the Supreme Court, hearing a writ petition against the ban filed by an official of the Delhi Cricket Association on August 23, observed that the board and players should arrive at a compromise if necessary with the attorney-general being "umpire". "Let's get on with the game," Chief Justice E.S. Venkataramaiah said.

The punishment did seem harsh as the board does not have a terrific record in enforcing discipline. As a board member sympathetic to the stars said, it let off Pataudi's team lightly after drunken street brawls in Nagpur in 1969, and failed to discipline a captain found drinking on a rest day in Australia, losing the match and the rubber subsequently.

The players were also divided. Kapil Dev—with his significant business interests—allegedly did not want to antagonise the board authorities. The five (Ravi Shastri is currently playing county cricket) met K. Srikkanth and Sunil Gavaskar to try and hammer out a strategy. But Srikkanth—who has captaincy aspirations—refused to issue a statement, and Gavaskar's suggestion that they shouldn't rock the boat didn't prevail.

Apart from the Clause 7 defence, advocates have pointed out that while the board reserved the right to select, punish and drop players, a player had no choice. Gavaskar adds: "The players have other things on their mind, like equipping themselves (when they are given the contract). They have no time to worry over it or chase lawyers." Board Secretary Ranbir Singh disagrees: "The agreement is given well in time."

Players argue that the ban is a restrictive trade practice, citing the ruling in Greig vs Insole—when Tony Greig and Mike Procter sued the Test and County Cricket Board which banned cricketers who joined Kerry Packer's World Series from first-class cricket in England in 1978.

Board officials have retaliated by approaching former stars to find out if they'd return. Kanmadikar issued an open appeal to Sandip Patil and Gavaskar. Roger Binny, Anshuman Gaekwad and Syed Kirmani may also get a call.

Officials sympathetic to the players—including president B.N. Dutt—are few and their hands are tied. Lobbying with the Prime Minister's Office didn't help, nor was aid forthcoming from Board Vice-President Madhavrao Scindia and former president N.K.P. Salve. Reports about cricketers receiving offers from South Africa came in the midst of all this. London-based left-arm spinner Dilip Doshi, whose name cropped up as a possible contact man, told INDIA TODAY: "I don't believe any Indian would ever go to South Africa. The money offered is massive, but we can't sell ourselves."

The last ball has not been bowled. A cricket official admitted: "The ban stays as of today—I can't tell what will happen tomorrow." Either way, the match seems wide open.

—SALIL TRIPATHI

M. NAL KANTI SAHA

Disciplinary Committee: harsh decision

NAMAS BHOJANI

Vengsarkar and Kapil: new stance

The banned cricketers have sent the board a stiff, quasi-legal notice challenging the legality of the contract.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri prevail.

defence, hat while to select, er had no
e players hind, like they are e no time s." Board ees: "The he."
pan is a g the rulony Greig Test and banned Packer's
MAS BHOJANI stance ricket in iated by nd out if ssued an d Gavas-Gaekwad et a call.

he playutt—are Lobbying ce didn't ng from rao Scin-
P. Salve.
ng offers midst of spinner
ed up as a
A TODAY:
uld ever offered is selves."
owled. A pan stays
l happen
e match
TRIPATHI

The European Connection.

Short transit times, fast ground handling facilities and excellent onward connections make Lufthansa's Frankfurt the best gateway to Europe and the world.

Lufthansa

LH 5707-1 DEL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHUTAN

Between Two Worlds

In less than three decades the tiny mountain kingdom has come full circle. From complete isolation to frenetic development—causing an erosion of culture—and now a conscious effort by the regime to revert to the traditional Bhutanese way of life.

NOT long ago, it was the mystery mountain kingdom with names as vivid as its scenery—"the land of the hidden treasures"; "the land of the thunder dragon". Then suddenly, in the mid-'60s, the doors of this Shangrila swung open. But the pace of the development that followed was so frenetic that somewhere down the line Bhutan lost its equilibrium. So when a few months back, King Jigme Singye Wangchuck launched 'Driglam Namza'—which means a revival of Bhutanese tradition and culture—Bhutan appeared to have come full circle in less than three decades. From complete isolation to rapid modernisation and equally suddenly, an attempt to return to the traditional way of life.

So inaccessible was the hill kingdom in the early '60s that Pandit Nehru had to travel for a week on ponies and yaks from Gangtok in Sikkim to reach Paro and Thimpu in Bhutan. After this arduous journey he gifted Bhutan its first road. With this, Bhutan was on the road to modernisation—often with Indian assistance. Bhutan's Foreign Minister for over 15 years, Dasho Dawa Tshering, says that before this, "there were no schools, no roads, no communication, no air link, no currency and no central administration."

The jump from the medieval to the modern was sudden—tiny Bhutan appeared to be in a mad rush to catch up with other countries, make up for lost time. In 1971 the barter system was ended and Bhutan introduced its own currency, Ngultrum; in 1974 it opened its doors to tourists; two years later it established a telegraphic network; in 1983 it launched its own airlines, Druk Air; and early this month Bhutan got an STD line.

But alongside the beginnings of modern communication, trade and industry there came an erosion of the Bhutanese way of life. Western norms became the rage. Commercialisation disturbed the tranquillity of yore. Says Chenkyab Dorji, a senior minister and secretary of the Planning Commission: "The transformation of Bhutan is too great. From nothing

JIGME SINGYE WANGCHUCK

"Haste to develop eroded our traditions"

EDUCATED in Darjeeling and Britain, Jigme Singye Wangchuck, 34, ascended the throne of Bhutan when he was only 17. He has set his country on the road to modernisation, even while trying to retain its centuries-old traditions. He spoke to Senior Correspondent KAMALJEET RATTAN in his resplendent throne room. Excerpts:

Q. Bhutan was surging towards modernisation. Why the sudden halt?

A. Since we opened up in the early '60s, modernisation has been our main aim. It still is. But the haste to develop was eroding everything Bhutanese. There was resentment from the clergy. We had to take steps.

Q. Steps which were unpopular...?

A. That is not true. The laws which are part of Driglam Namza were introduced after a lot of thinking. The clergy wanted it. Besides, modernisation may make the people happy materialistically but they won't be content in the long run. We must keep the youth aware of the Bhutanese way of life.

Q. Won't it retard development?

A. No. We consider the per capita contentment of people the yardstick of development. Gross national happiness is more important than gross national product. We are aiming at a perfect blend of modernisation and culture.

Q. That's a Utopian task. Besides, won't it cause a lot of resentment?

A. There shouldn't be. We are willing to change. Only values should not change. We are religious people who respect spiritual values, elders and the joint family. We must preserve this.

Q. Why do you restrict tourists?

A. Ninety per cent of tourists flocked to our monasteries. They invaded the privacy of the monks, barged into their living quarters, kitchens, everywhere. They disturbed prayer gatherings. The monks protested. So we restricted visits to certain monasteries and imposed a ceiling on the number of tourists.

Q. But tourism can get Bhutan much-needed foreign exchange.

A. If that were our aim we would have accepted the proposal to make Bhutan the Switzerland of the East long back. Unhindered tourist flow would lead to drug trafficking and smuggling. We've already lost 40 antiques.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Golf replaces the national sport, archery (above); and youngsters put up posters of western stars

Change came so suddenly to the mountain-ringed kingdom that many of the country's youth today confuse modernisation with westernisation.

to everything would be the best way of describing the change."

Development always comes at a price and today Bhutan is paying it. Abandoning their dress, customs and lifestyle, many youngsters blindly ape the West. In the towns, the idols of the young are western rock singers and Indian film stars—two favourites are Vinod Khanna and Dharmendra. The elite have abandoned the national sport, archery, and are more comfortable playing golf. They speak English with an American accent. "The present generation is not inclined towards our folk songs and traditional mask dances. They prefer discos," laments a Thimpu elder. The advent of the dollar-wealthy western tourist has also led to the smuggling of priceless Buddhist antiques. Worse, the untouched Bhutanese have been exposed to drug abuse.

"Our people were very simple till we opened our windows to the outside world. They survived on subsistence farming and cattle rearing. No Bhutanese was in business or trade," says Dorji. The locals' ignorance of trade and commerce resulted in many Indian businessmen setting up shop in Bhutan in the late '60s and '70s. Indians not only monopolised business and trade but also grabbed most of the contract jobs. But along with building roads and a communications network, these businessmen also changed the demography of Bhutan as they brought

Photographs by SAIBAL DAS

Q. Does Bhutan have trained manpower to ensure real modernisation?

A. That's our greatest worry. Free education and health are our major investments. Our priority in the sixth plan is to build a cost-effective administration.

Q. Why the ban on Indian TV?

A. We are investing nearly $ 6 million on our own satellite. If people get used to Indian or Bangladesh TV they won't patronise Bhutan TV whose programmes will be inferior initially. Once our TV is on, they can see TV of neighbouring countries. Besides, a lot of western films are shown on Bangladesh television. We do not want youth to confuse westernisation with modernisation.

Q. Have anti-India feelings grown?

A. There are no anti-India feelings. That was played up by a section of the Indian press when we dismantled 29 illegal dish antennae. Some entrepreneurs without licences installed dish antennae for Rs 20,000 and gave connections for Rs 1,000 to Rs 2,000. For 100 connections, they made Rs 2 lakh.

Q. Even you have removed the antenna from atop your palace.

A. How can I do something I do not want my people to do?

Q. Do you see India as a big brother?

A. Our friendship is based on mutual respect. Friends never bully each other.

Q. What is the role of SAARC*?*

A. We are a small country and want to coexist peacefully with neighbours. SAARC nations must trust each other. Smaller countries must realise that India offers a big market and opportunities to avail of the latest technologies.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's time to work with the trim & trendy look

Philips Trim Series of Luminaires. Sleek and smart. Adding style to your interiors.

Slender, Smart, Efficient. That's the Trim Series. With energy saving ballasts, improved lampholders and starters. Ready to install. Easy to connect. Truly, then, it's time to work with the trim, trendy look. It's time to work with the TRIM Series.

AVAILABLE IN TWO SIZES—2 FEET & 4 FEET

When it comes to lighting all you need is PHILIPS.

HTA 3688

Philips Lighting

PHILIPS

PHILIPS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

thousands of labourers from India and Nepal to work on these projects. And today, southern Bhutan has a larger population of Nepalis than Bhutanese.

All these changes have alarmed many—particularly the older generation and the Buddhist monks. "In the haste to develop we had almost neglected our distinct culture. We do not want to become dummies of the West or lose our identity," says a senior official, who welcomes the imposition of Driglam Namza.

But if many of the changes in Bhutan are drastic, so are some of the rules laid down by the regime as part of Driglam Namza—a phrase which at best can be explained as a revival of Bhutanese culture, spiritual values and their distinct way of life. When it was launched in April this year, one of the first steps taken was to ban viewing of television—as Bhutan has no TV, viewers watched Indian and Bangladesh TV. It was an unpopular step, particularly with the Indians and Nepalis living in southern Bhutan. Says Pema Pradhan, a young Nepali woman: "Why should we be denied watching Mahabharat and Ramayan on Indian TV?"

Another controversial step was to make the national dress—baku for men and kira for women—compulsory for every Bhutanese national. Again, it was the Bhutanese people of Nepali origin who protested the most. Says Mani Rai, a resident of Thimpu: "We don't even know how to wear this dress." Many ethnic Bhutanese youth—who prefer jeans and T-shirts—too have not taken kindly to this rule. Tshering, however, says: "Every country has a national dress so why not Bhutan? This step has not been opposed."

More popular is the effort to develop the official language, Dzongka. It has been made the compulsory second language in all English medium schools and throughout Bhutan free evening classes are held to teach Dzongka to government employees.

Though much of the trade in Bhutan is currently in the hands of Indians, there is now a conscious attempt by the Bhutanese administration to restrict their numbers.

Computers gain currency (top); and an Indian sets up a pavement stall

Also part of Driglam Namza are the curbs on Indians entering Bhutan. Work permits are not being renewed and the Government has stopped issuing fresh trade licences to Indian businessmen. Besides, orders have been issued to businessmen, traders and factory owners to reduce the number of Indian labourers in their units. In a short span of time the number of Indians in Bhutan has gone down from one lakh to half a lakh.

Bhutan's monarch, King Jigme Singye Wangchuck is quick to clarify that he means no insult to India (see interview). Says he: "None of our decisions is anti-India. We are just trying to involve our people in all aspects of national development. We want more and more Bhutanese to get into trade as well as industry." He stresses: "All that we are doing is to see and ensure that Bhutan remains Bhutan."

That is more easily said than done. Though the sentiment behind Driglam Namza is laudable, punishing people for watching television or dressing as they please, is unlikely to restore Bhutanese traditions. And though certain values have been lost, Bhutan has also gained much from the three decades of modernisation. Methods of farming have, for instance, improved. Earlier, farmers refused to use improved seeds or fertilisers though they were distributed free of cost. Today, there are long queues for agricultural aids. The result: a jump in agricultural yields.

There's also an increase in the literacy level. Dorji recalls parents refusing to educate their children though the king would bear the cost of sending them to schools in India. "Now parents hide their kids' age and send them to school before they are six years old," he adds.

Though there has undoubtedly been a certain bastardisation of culture, just the fact that the regime has woken up to it, indicates that Bhutan could be one of the rare nations which reaps equally the benefits of both the ancient and the modern. —KAMALJEET RATTAN in Bhutan

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"How I gave my family a fascinating vacation without going North, South, East or West."

"No, we didn't stay at home. Neither was it a vacation to the middle of nowhere.

This year it was centre stage Madhya Pradesh!

And aren't we fortunate? We discovered a rich historical and cultural legacy. Ancient sites of great dynasties. Formidable forts that still echo battle sounds and tales of rare heroism. Legends of intense love and passion exquisitely chronicled in stone. Gorgeous palaces that still whisper the opulence, the style, the royal ambience.

Dense forests, the hunting ground of erstwhile emperors, transformed into vibrant wildlife sanctuaries."

"Madhya Pradesh!

It's where centuries seemed to be so charmingly preserved.

Unfolding great, golden moments everywhere we went.

Mandu — The City of Joy. The love of a poet prince for his beautiful consort is still alive in the many architectural wonders. You'll fall in love with Mandu. We did.

Gwalior Fort — This massive monument so inspired Emperor Babur that he called it the pearl amongst the fortresses of Hind.

Khajuraho — Magnificent. Beautiful. Sensuous. Khajuraho is many things to many people.

Sanchi — So serene! Glorious stupas and pillars stand as in deep meditation.

Pachmarhi — Enchanting. Tranquil. Myriad green shades embrace mountains. And everywhere there's the murmur of cool, crystal streams.

Amarkantak. Chitrakoot — Further, splashes of Nature's colourful canvas. And near Jabalpur wasn't the boat ride at the moonlit Marble Rocks a memorable experience.

Kanha. Bandhavgarh. Shivpuri — Wildlife reserves with such a profusion of species of birds, deer, antelopes, sambar, blackbuck. And, of course, the tiger.

Ujjain. Omkareshwar. Maheshwar — This is where a hundred gods have taken abode.

And Bhopal — The capital city. Hugging the shores of a magnificent lake. It is a quiet blend of mosques and museums, parks and gardens, broad avenues and modern buildings.

Madhya Pradesh!

The gods indeed destined that this vast 'wonderland' be located nowhere else but in the very 'heart of India'.

There are well organised tours from Delhi, Bombay or Calcutta. To make sure that the holiday was the most memorable we lived in log huts, tourist villages and retreats with true environmental flavour. And we tried the tourist bungalows and holiday homes too. So economical. So easy on the pocket. Transportation too is so planned with a choice of cars, jeeps and coaches.

Madhya Pradesh! You surprise me."

Come to Madhya Pradesh... It's surprising a lot of people like you.

For more information and instant computerised bookings, get in touch with Madhya Pradesh State Tourism Development Corpn. Ltd. NEW DELHI : 204-205, IInd Floor, Hotel Kanishka Shopping Plaza, 19, Ashok Road, New Delhi-110 001. Tel. : 3321187, 3324422 (Ext. 2353). Textel : 011-3327264. BOMBAY : 74, World Trade Centre, Cuffe Parade, Colaba, Bombay-400 005. Tel. : 214860, 219191 (Ext. 299). Textel : 022-217603. CALCUTTA : 'Chitrakoot', Room No 7, 6th Floor, 230A, A.J.C.Bose Road, Calcutta- 700 020. Tel. : 448543. Textel : 033-448543. BHOPAL : 'Gangotri', T.T. Nagar, Bhopal-462 003. Tel. : 66383, 66342, 64388. Telex : 0705-275 TOUR-IN. Textel : 0755-6[illegible]

MILESTONES/MPT/15-[illegible]

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Militant Menace

AS a national park, Manas in Assam has few parallels. It is not only one of the country's largest wildlife preserves but its vast grasslands and verdant foothills harbour as many as 19 of the most endangered species. Apart from tigers, it is home for such diverse animals as the hispid hare, the pygmy hog, the hoolock gibbon (India's only ape) and the clouded leopard.

Now, this magnificent park faces an unusual threat: Bodo agitators. Ever since the Bodo tribals locked themselves in a dangerous battle with the Assam Government, the problem has spilled over into the national park. Forest officials say that not only do militants use the park as a safe hide-out but frequently attack their staff. After 11 of its employees were killed, the department withdrew its guards from several ranges and S. Deb Roy, chief conservator of forests, admits that they have lost control over these areas.

PRITAM NARAYAN

Slaughtered rhino: increased poaching

That has seen both extremists and poachers going on a rampage: mowing down forests and killing animals. In just three months, four tigers, four rhinoceros, two elephants and over a dozen hog deer have allegedly been killed by the extremists or poachers. Widespread cutting of the forests for timber has been going on too. And the Government, busy quelling the agitation in other towns, has so far done little to stop the damage. If the situation continues, ecologists fear that Manas will soon be reduced to just a graveyard for wild animals.

Whistling Hunters

IN the '60s they were treated as vermin. State governments even offered hunters Rs 20 for producing their bushy tails as evidence of killings. Today, the dholes or Indian wild dogs are found only in stray forest ranges in India and are on the endangered list.

The dholes don't bark. Only whistle gently. And they are ferocious hunters. When they were in plenty few bothered to study them. Now as Naresh Bedi, noted wildlife film maker, would testify, it is difficult to even sight one. Bedi, along with brother, Rajesh, spent three years tracking the dogs and recording their life in the wilds on 16 mm film. Since the dogs bolt at the slightest suspicion of being watched, the Bedis used the overpowering stench of elephant dung to cover their tracks.

Mating dholes (above); and a pack feeding on a deer

Photographs by RAJESH BEDI

Their film on the dholes, Whistling Hunters, released last month, has some of the rarest footage ever taken of the animal. Among them: a sleek brown dhole bounding across emerald grasslands, a dramatic sequence of a pack hunting deer and rare scenes of the dogs' mating and breeding habits. There was also a moving shot of a bitch caring for her partially paralysed pup—indications that dholes are not as ruthless as they are made out to be. The Bedis' film has been telecast on the popular BBC programme Wildlife on One. Unfortunately, Doordarshan is yet to follow suit.

Cruel Corridor

FOR centuries wild animals had roamed freely in the forests ranging from Rajaji near Haridwar to Corbett at the Nainital foothills. Over the past two decades the crucial corridors linking these two major reserves have been steadily blocked. The Ramganga reservoir, an antibiotic factory, an army camp and a village to rehabilitate Tehri dam evacuees have come up on the dividing line between these reserves.

Now the only passage is the Chila-Motichur corridor, barely as wide as a cricket stadium and hardly three-km-long. The tract is a harrowing stretch for the 750 elephants, 140 tigers and herds of deer that are forced to use it. The animals have to climb a bridge across a channel, wade across the Ganges, cross four islands and walk past an army ammunition dump and a tiny village. Naturally, most prefer not to cross over at all. Only the more daring bull elephants and some tigers use the corridor. Worse, even the islands where animals stop to rest are being degraded.

Elephants in the passage: blocked

A.J.T. JOHN SINGH

The corridor is crucial for preventing inbreeding that weakens species. Fearing that it may be lost for ever, ecologists such as A.J.T. John Singh, joint director, Wildlife Institute of India in Dehra Dun, have been campaigning for the removal of the ammunition dump and the village. Two years ago, the Uttar Pradesh Forest Department promised to acquire the area and estimated that it would cost Rs 60 lakh. But so far the project has been only a lot of corridor talk.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya

Are you forcing your child to smoke?

Every time you smoke, your loved ones are forced to breathe in the dangerous air you breathe out...

Cigarette smoke contains vaporised tar, nicotine, hydrogen cyanide, carbon monoxide, and over 200 other deadly chemicals. These poisons slowly destroy your family's health : corroding the lungs, weakening the heart, and bringing on heart attacks, paralytic strokes, and cancer of the throat, lungs, pancreas and bladder.

So stop smoking. After all, do you love your cigarettes more than your family? Go for a cancer check-up today, and follow it up once a year.

Cancer Insurance : a big helping hand

It's an unpleasant thought, but ... if cancer strikes, it could cripple you financially. The Indian Cancer Society can protect you with India's only Cancer Insurance Policy.

It covers you, your spouse and two dependent children upto Rs.50,000 - 75,000 for all cancer diagnosis and treatment costs. The premium is low : it works out to less than a rupee per day. Isn't that worth it? Write or phone for more details - and get insured today!

For appointments at our branches, contact:
- B-82, Defence Colony, New Delhi 110 024. Phone: 617628.
- 15-A, Sarat Bose Road, Calcutta 700 020.
- c/o.Madura Coats Ltd., 144, M.G. Road, Bangalore 560 001. Phone: 578121.
- 127, Angappa Street, Madras 600 001. Phone: 587678/589800.

INDIAN CANCER SOCIETY

National HQ., Lady Ratan Tata Medical & Research Centre, M. Karve Road, Cooperage, Bombay-400 021. Phone: 2029941/42

Early discovery, early recovery

Please donate generously. Donors are exempted from income tax for the entire amount gifted to the Society as per clause (II) sub-section (1) Sec. 35 and Sec. 80 G of the Income-Tax Act, 1961.

daCunha ICS 4 89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUJARAT

Schools for Scandal

Stir against extortionate methods of private schools

JAVED RAJA

THE issue was the admissions-for-donations practice in the private schools of Vadodara. And the uproar was unprecedented, the agitators cutting across party lines and political affiliations. The people responded with alacrity; and gained by it. Those who lost were the city's private school managements.

The stir which began in May in Vadodara, and spread to other parts of the state last fortnight, has yielded much: 110 Vadodara schools have refunded Rs 25 lakh and promised to repay by end-August a staggering Rs 2 crore, collected since 1987.

The trouble began when Janata Dal worker, Yogesh Patel, drew attention to Vadodara schools compelling students to buy uniforms from specific shops. The management of one school, Zenith, went to the extent of asking the girls to buy their underwear from a particular shop. Says Yogesh Patel: "The school used to get a cut ranging from Rs 25 to Rs 50 on every dress sold. Some schools even changed their uniform every alternate year." Donations for admissions was the other alarming irregularity.

Patel floated the Vidyarthi Hitrakshak Samiti along with Congress(I) worker Suresh Rajput and the Janata Dal's Ajay Dave to redress disgruntled parents' grievances. The samiti aroused public opinion by organising street plays and demonstrations. It performed a mock Shikshan Shuddi Yagna to "purify the field of education". And it called for a bandh in Vadodara on July 12, which met with great success, with even five hotels agreeing to shut shop. The Vadodara stir's success had its echo in Bhavnagar, Ahmedabad, Rajkot, Surat and other towns of the state.

As the movement snowballed, the state's Education Department was forced to sit up. At the end of last month Education Minister Arvind Sanghvi despatched a team of 10 inspectors to look into the charges—and unusually, even gave official sanction to samiti members to check the schools' accounts. Declared sanghri emphatically: "We will not tolerate schools which compel parents to give donations. The district education officers have been directed to take strict action against them."

The stir against school donations in Vadodara has spread across the state and already yielded significant results.

Consequently, skeletons have been tumbling out of the schools' cupboards. A school called Little Flower had extracted Rs 14 lakh from parents, while another had collected Rs 20 lakh. A probe by District Collector Pradip Pujari and Municipal Commissioner S.K. Verma into the alleged use of the money for the construction of buildings revealed that nothing had been built.

Immediate action was taken. Show cause notices were slapped on the errant schools. Explained Pujari: "Our primary concern was to get the donations refunded. Now, we may also launch criminal prosecution against the schools." Finding that 110 schools out of a total of 192 were involved in the donation scandal, the state Education Department recommended that the Government terminate grants to 49 schools and derecognise another 26 of them.

Encouraged by the positive response, several parents lodged police complaints. Says Praful Patel, who had to shell out Rs 1,000 : "We are indebted to the samiti. Politicians are obsessed with issues like Bofors and do not care about the common man." The managements of kindergartens have been particularly guilty—charging an exorbitant monthly fee of Rs 150—because they do not come within the purview of the Primary Education Act. The samiti is now pressing the Government to redress this.

But the schools are in a Catch-22 situation: if the donations are discontinued they will be forced to close down while a fee raise will affect parents adversely. Says Sudhir Shah, president of the Ahmedabad Schools' Management Association: "Compulsory donations cannot be tolerated but the schools need funds to survive. So voluntary donations should be allowed." But then the dividing line between voluntary donations and coercive ones is razor thin, and private school managements can hardly be trusted to abstain from crossing it.

—UDAY MAHURKAR

VALLABH SHAH

Sanghvi: determined stand; and a mock yagna: purifying education

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RADEUS/AMC/5-86

Amul Chocolates

a gift for someone you love

Marketed by:
Gujarat Co-operative
Milk Marketing
Federation Ltd., Anand

Six delicious varieties...
Amul Milk Chocolate, Amul Crisp, Amul Coffee,
Amul Fruit & Nut, Amul Bitter, Amul Orange.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The birds flew in from Siberia

Announcing the flight from Siberia.

After flying 5,000 kms, the travellers are settling in for winter.

It's Mother Nature's 'Event of the Year'. The coming of the Siberian Cranes to India.

Yes, the flight has arrived.

And so have the cars, vans, de luxe coaches, motorbikes and trains.

Bringing strange kinds of beings who don't give the wild life a chance.

Or a damn.

Tell that to the birds

Because of music which must be heard at 300-watt power.

Wild dances that must be accompanied by loud yells.

And the cat calls that are made when the creatures mate.

The birds can't tell us how they feel.

"But man is superior to animals".

You can tell that to the birds.

Help protect the heritage to which you belong

As you travel, you discover.

India's golden heritage, unparalleled anywhere else in the world.

पर्यटन विभाग भारत सरकार

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The animals came by car.

5,000 years of history in countless forts, monuments and shrines.
And the splendorous diversity of nature.
In myriad hues and colours.
Don't remain silent when someone defaces a monument, shows disrespect to a place of worship or pilgrimage, or in any other way damages or dirties the surroundings.

Persuade him.
Prevent him.
Report him.
Help protect your priceless heritage.
It's the only one you have.

We can & We will
Keep India Beautiful

Department of Tourism Government of India

HTA 6243

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

What did the Skypak Man say to the Chinese Buddha?

"Yes I know! It's always a great feeling to have delivered the message one has come to deliver!"

We'll deliver. Wherever on earth. SKYPAK The worldwide couriers.

Skypak House, Off M. Vassanji Road, Marol, Andheri (E), Bombay 400 059.

Avenues:SC:497:89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sensitive Servings

Deshpande and Sidhwa fetch notice

THAT LONG SILENCE
by SHASHI DESHPANDE
Penguin Books, India
Pages: 193;
Price: Rs 55

ICE-CANDY-MAN
by BAPSI SIDHWA
Penguin
Pages: 277;
Price: Rs 111.75

IT'S the ladies' serve now. Fiction from the Indian subcontinent sparkled on the British literary landscape this decade: Salman Rushdie, Amitav Ghosh, Upamanyu Chatterjee. But more recently, fiction by women writers from the subcontinent seems to be in—and feted. Anita Desai won a Booker nomination a few years ago, and Nayantara Sahgal has been praised for her recent work of fiction. Feminist publishing houses like Virago and Women's Press have brought out works by half a dozen women writers in the last five years—though some were forgotten no sooner were they published...

Now, Shashi Deshpande's That Long Silence and Pakistani writer Bapsi Sidhwa's Ice-Candy-Man have both won wide critical acclaim. The two novels could not be more different. The Bangalore-based Deshpande has journeyed to the core of the stifling inner world of a middle class Indian woman, picking it apart with an almost brutal honesty. Sidhwa, who shuttles between Pakistan and the US where she teaches, has given what is probably the first Parsi look at the Partition in fiction. Yet the writers do have a few things in common: both are roughly the same age—late 30s, early 40s. And both navigate in what is fairly an uncharted terrain.

Ice-Candy-Man shows the Indian subcontinent being ripped apart—as well as a hilarious awakening to sensuality—through the eyes of Lenny, a young Parsi girl growing up in Lahore. There have been other books on the horrors of the Partition holocaust: Train to Pakistan, Tamas, Freedom at Midnight. But for us, this is the first fictional account to come from the other side of the Indus.

What distinguishes Sidhwa's account is the prism of Parsi sensitivity through which the times are depicted—a view from the outside, almost like watching a film. It is also filtered through the precocious innocence of the child. This is how Lenny sees an area go up in flames: "It is like a gigantic fireworks display in which stiff figures looking like spread-eagled stick-dolls leap into the air, black against the magenta furnace." Soon after, she picks up a "big, bloated celluloid doll....I turn it upside down and pull its legs apart."

Many Parsis, despite being in the eye of the storm, imagine themselves a community apart, close to the British. But even they are caught up in the violence, whether it is through their friends or servants. In Lenny's case it is the sensual Hindu ayah, who is like a "magnet" for the ice-candy-man and others. The Parsi dilemma is: whom do they cast their lot with? One of the community leaders, Mr Bankwalla ("precise as the crisp new rupee notes he handles at the bank"), reminds the congregation discussing Home Rule: "...We are to run with the hounds and hunt with the hare."

The choice is obviously difficult. Says an "impatient voice": "If we're stuck with the Hindus they'll swipe our businesses from under our noses and sell our grandfathers in the bargain: if we're stuck with the Muslims they'll convert us by the sword! And God help us if we're stuck with the Sikhs."

This is an enjoyable book, despite the grim subject, because of the author's effervescent mix of the ribald and the horrific—and her apt use of the vernacular slang, like "clucking clusters" of Parsi ladies who "go goos-goosing and whispering". Sidhwa's humour comes in Ice-Candy-Man's pungent one-liners and her style is highly visual: "the flashy woman with the blazing lipstick and chalky powder and a huge pink hibiscus in her hair, and unseeing eyes enlarged like an actress's with kohl and mascaraed eyelashes..."

Deshpande, too, is strong on the descriptive, with a made-to-be-filmed quality about her style. The novel That Long Silence unfolds in the mind of a woman (Jaya) cloistered in a seedy flat in Dadar, Bombay, into which she and her husband have moved, temporarily, while an inquiry into her husband's

EXCERPTS

The truth was that we had both lost the props of our lives. Deprived of his routine, his files, his telephone, his appointments, he seemed to be no one at all; certainly not that man, my husband, around whose needs and desires my own life revolved. There was nothing he needed, so there was nothing for me to do. My own career as a wife was in jeopardy. The woman who had shopped and coooked, organised and cared for her home with such passion...where had she gone? We seemed to be left with nothing but our bodies, and after we had dealt with them we faced blankness. The nothingness of what had seemed a full life was frightening.

THAT LONG SILENCE, S. DESHPANDE

There is much disturbing talk. India is going to be broken. Can we break a country? And what happens if they break it where our house is? Or crack it further up on Warris Road? How will I ever get to Godmother's then? I ask cousin. 'Rubbish,' he says, 'no one's going to break India. It's not made of glass!' They'll dig a canal...' she ventures. 'This side for Hindustan and this side for Pakistan. If they want two countries, that's what they'll have to do—crack India with a long, long canal.' And I become aware of religious differences. One day everybody is themselves—and the next day they are Hindu, Muslim, Sikh, Christian.

ICE-CANDY-MAN, BAPSI SIDHWA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Dishergarh Power Supply Co. Ltd.

(A member of the Andrew Yule Group of Companies)

Speech of Shri K.S.B. Sanyal, Chairman, at the Annual General Meeting on 23rd August, 1989.

Friends,

It gives me great pleasure to welcome you to this Annual General Meeting. The Annual Report of your Company has been in your hands for some time now. I am proud to be able to say that it reflects another year of successful operations, numerous constraints notwithstanding. Your Company has performed well in all spheres : generation and sales of electricity have grown, so have profits. This has enabled your Company to increase the pre-tax profit by 11% enabling us to finance replacements and augmentation projects through internal generation of funds and to recommend a dividend of 20% to the Ordinary Shareholders.

Sterling Performance

Your Company's sterling performance needs to be viewed against the backdrop of the broader social and economic objectives to which your Company is inalienably wedded. As a responsible licensee, your Company has maintained its base tariff structure during the last three years, even though its confreres in the power sector have enhanced their rates in tandem with cost escalations. Also, over the last three years, your Company has increased its supply to the West Bengal State Electricity Board by 12.5% per annum for township consumers at a comparatively cheaper rate. The power factor of the load for collieries has improved as well. Although measures such as these affect your Company's marginal revenue earnings, we welcome these trends as being commensurate with government policies on energy conservation and providing economic support to small consumers.

The point I would like to emphasize here is that despite these factors, and after absorbing escalations in operating and maintenance costs, your Company has been able to repeat its excellent financial performance. On the operational front, plant load factor has been maintained at a high of 66%, which compares very well indeed with the national average estimated at 56% for thermal power generation. Another significant figure is that transmission losses have also been held down to 3.7%. While on the topic of operations, I must add that fuel utilisation efficiency of our old stoker fired boilers has been further improved. I have consistently advocated that a normative approach to performance evaluation must be adopted as the basis for fixation of tariff. The way in which your Company has held the price line and yet improved performance only reflects the cogency of this view.

Private Sector Role

As you are no doubt aware, the Planning Commission has prognosticated that in order to achieve the annualised growth rate of 6% in the Eighth Five Year Plan, the country needs to generate additional power to the tune of 38,000 MW. Because of the long gestation period of hydel power projects, the country has no other alternative but to invest in thermal plants.

However, in view of the massive investment required in the power sector, a severe resource crunch seems inevitable. The Hon'ble Union Minister for Energy has rightly invited the private sector to participate in the power generation sector. We welcome the Government's constructive approach in this regard, particularly its dispensations which allow for a debt-equity ratio of 4:1, an enhanced rate of return at 15% subject to fulfilling a 62.5% plant load factor and the granting of licences for an initial period of 30 years with a provision for extension by another 20 years. These are positive and encouraging moves. I am confident that the private sector will respond to the government's initiative and take up the challenge of meeting the country's future power requirement needs.

Experience. Expertise. Efficiency.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In this connection, I would like to take this opportunity to voice a plea on behalf of existing licensees. I would urge the government to recognise the yeoman services rendered by existing licensees, of which your Company has been one, over the past two decades in a difficult situation within statutory limitations of a low rate of return. As such, it would be in the fitness of things if the licence period of all existing licensees was to be extended by 20 years with immediate effect.

Small is beautiful

Last year, I had made the point that in the field of power, while big might be majestic, small is still beautiful. Indian industry provides plenty of scope in this regard, only if the extant opportunities are innovatively used. For instance, the fuel based captive power units installed by individual industrial units have proved to be rather inefficient and expensive source of power, not least because captive plants inevitably involve a measure of unutilised investment.

To ensure both optimum utilisation of resources and efficient capacity utilisation, I suggest private power agencies which have already developed expertise should be entrusted with the task of generating electricity for a group of industries. Industrial units could contribute to such power agencies via a pooled fund in return for a guaranteed quota of reserved capacity. By evolving such a method, users could significantly reduce their captive power costs.

Transmission Reliability

Another indispensable condition for alleviating the power problem is in toning up reliability of transmission. The importance of efficient transmission and distribution services cannot be over-emphasized. The Committee of Secretaries in the Union Government has already approved a proposal to set up a Transmission Corporation, which is a welcome move.

In the 618 sq kms licensed area served by your Company, a reliable transmission & distribution network has special importance considering the safety of miners working in highly gaseous coal mines. Your Company gives utmost attention to the reliability aspect inter alia by continuously augmenting and updating transmission & distribution system needs and also by attending to faults round the clock. However, it is becoming increasingly difficult to handle our customers' increased power demand through an 11 KV network. Considering the need to provide a stable voltage to consumers, installation of 33 KV lines in our licensed area needs to be considered.

Chinakuri Project

I had also reported last year that your Company has entered into an agreement with Eastern Coalfields Ltd. for setting up and subsequently operating a 2x10 MW captive thermal power plant for their Chinakuri group of coalmines. I am extremely happy to say that the project is coming up ahead of schedule. All civil foundation work in the power house complex and boiler area stands completed, and delivery of critical mechanical equipment for boilers and turbogenerators has begun.

It is with pride that I inform you that at a time when machinery imports are the order of the day, we have placed all orders for plant equipment on indigenous suppliers. Since the proposed power plant will meet captive needs of gaseous coal mines, great care is being taken on the safety and reliability fronts. At the same time, the cost, quality and time management aspects are being continuously monitored.

Acknowledgements

The success of your Company could not have been achieved without the total involvement and support of all levels of workforce. To the officers and employees we record our appreciation. I gratefully acknowledge the continued support given to your Company by the Government of West Bengal, particularly its Department of Power, the West Bengal State Electricity Board, the Damodar Valley Corporation, Coal India Ltd. and Eastern Coalfields Ltd. On behalf of the Board, I assure them of our continued commitment to the cause of excellence.

Chairman

Note. This does not purport to be a record of the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

Board of Directors

K.S.B. Sanyal
N.K. Biswas
Durgaprasad Chakravarti
M.K. Mukherjee
Brig. D.N. Mullick
S.N. Singh
J.N. Uppal

Chief Executive

Maj. Gen. A.K. Mukherjea

PHOENIX-1177B/89

A tradition of 77 'light' years.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection,

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

malpractices takes place. The protagonist dissects the marriage with the cold precision of a student cutting open a frog in a laboratory. In the end, there is nothing left, not even hope.

The novel is really about the anatomy of the 17-year-old marriage in which Jaya sees herself and her husband as "a pair of bullocks yoked together". Finally, she breaks "that long silence". That cry within that she did not know existed.

In the blare of truth, Mohan the husband, devoid of the props of his job, of the roles and rights of the Indian as male and husband, and those provided by an unquestioning devoted wife, is like a tyre with the air let out of it. He is the hollow man; only Jaya can prop him up again: "I have looked at his face for clues and then given him the answer I know he wants. I have only to do this now and authority will seep into Mohan once more."

Finally, Jaya after long empty years of playing the role of mother, wife and sister, wants a role of her own. The silence becomes a shout. The intensity can be a bit too suffocating—it does skate close to becoming cloying at times. But it is one of the most honest portrayals in contemporary writing of the hypocrisy of middle-class India and the door mat status of the Indian woman, both within and outside marriage.

—MADHU JAIN

KALI FOR WOMEN

Rights Writing

Photograph by PRASHANT PANJIAR

Kali is an attempt by Ritu Menon and Urvashi Butalia to try and progressively alter the perspective on women through publishing.

WHEN Kali for Women started out as a feminist publishing house, it was written off as a flight of fancy, an unviable venture doomed to a quick demise. Today, five years and 20 books later, it is hailed as South Asia's first and only feminist publishing house (though New Delhi-based 'Manushi' too publishes books), credited with bringing out quality literature. The acclaim that Vandana Shiva's Staying Alive, Kali's biggest success so far, has achieved has given sceptics food for second thoughts.

Kali's tie-ups with publishers in the US, Europe, South and South-East Asia and Africa are a major reason for its success. It publishes books in collaboration with radical publishing houses like Zed, Women's Press of London and Forlaget Oktober, a Norwegian publishing house, thus ensuring a good distribution network. In UK and the US, several Kali publications have sold all rights and its titles have sold even before publication.

Says David Davidar, editor and publisher of Penguin India: "Kali for Women is doing wonderful work. It's one of the few radical and committed publishers around." A review of Staying Alive (India: Rs 125; UK: £28.95) in The Spectator hails it as: "A uniquely modern Green mixture of Hindu mythology, social disquiet, dry statistical tables and assault on Western male science." The book is an off-beat articulation of the challenges women in ecology movements are creating and an explication of their struggles.

Kali's small office has an informal, academic look. Brimming with cane-furniture, indoor plants and books, it is basically a two-women show. Frail and articulate Ritu Menon, 41, and the matter-of-fact Urvashi Butalia, 38, say their long stints in the publishing industry and involvement with women's issues have made Kali a success. Menon's years with Vikas and Orient Longman and Butalia's stints with Oxford University Press (OUP) and Zed prompted them to try and progressively alter the perspective on women through publishing. Says Menon: "Through our academic titles, we question the biases against women, through our general books we create awareness on social issues which also pertain to women and, we actually give people an alternative." An example: Kali's non-sexist children's book in Hindi, Ulti Sulti Mitto (Rs 3), by Kamla Bhasin which has sold 38,000 copies. Its central character Mitto is, unconventionally, a girl and the book refrains from stereotyping characters on a sexist basis.

Kali's primary concern is publishing Third World studies on women, but it also brings out titles in fiction, reprints, monographs, pamphlets and diaries, publishing in English, and occasionally in Hindi.

Kali's first book Women and the Media (Rs 15) published in collaboration with Isis International of Italy and Pacific and Asian Women's Forum of Sri Lanka, which dealt with the negative depiction of women in media and the agitations launched by women's groups in Asian countries against it, sold 4,000 copies. Truth Tales (Rs 45), a collection of short stories, has also done well. Institutional buying is its mainstay but Menon says there's been tremendous response from individuals. Most of Kali's books are commissioned, but Menon also gets three to four manuscripts a month for consideration. She claims Kali has no prejudice against male authors and the fact that it's yet to publish one is a mere co-incidence. Says she: "We are activist publishers. This ensures quality and honesty in our work." But says R. Advani, OUP's chief editor: "Kali is a creditable venture though it has not yet come up in a major way in terms of number of titles and their visibility in the market."

Kali's forthcoming books include Phaniyamma (Rs 45) by M.K. Indira, a novel about a child widow translated from Kannada, and The Quilt and Other Stories (Rs 50) by Ismat Chugtai. It is also starting a book club with "like minded" publishers. Clearly, Kali has shown that activism and publishing can be wed in harmonious and profitable enterprise. —SHARMILA CHANDRA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COMPACT disc DIGITAL AUDIO

SONY®

CLARITY TO RIVAL CRYSTAL.

Tailor Your Digital World from a Wide Variety of Sony CD Players.

CDP-M27
• 4fs digital filter • 16-linear Music Calendar Display • Custom Edit, Shuffle Play • Matches Sony's Dynapower Series stereo component systems

CDP-S37
• 4fs digital filter • Shuffle Play • Matches Sony's Super FH Series portable hi-fi component systems

D-20 Discman
• Dry battery operation • 3-way Repeat mode (1/all/Shuffle) • Optional Remote Commander

CDP-270
• 4fs digital filter • 16-linear Music Calendar Display • Custom Edit, Shuffle Play

CDP-C500M CD-Roulette
• Holds 5 discs for hours of entertainment • 4fs digital filter • Matches Sony's Dynapower Series stereo component systems

Sony The CD Pro

CC-0. Panini Foundation. Chennai and eGangotri, Hari

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WIDESPREAD ACCEPTANCE
ESCALATING DEMAND
DYNAMIC PROGRESS

Apollo Tyres.
Major expansion with a new hi-tech plant in Gujarat

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Escalating demand

By March 1990, Trucks & Buses in India will be using more than 50 lakh tyres. Jeeps and cars more than 29 lakh tyres and tractors more than 10 lakh tyres. A total demand of more than 204 lakh tyres in just one year. A fast growing market worth more than 2900 crores of rupees a year. About 10 crores of rupees every single day.

The Gujarat plant – new frontiers

In order to meet the growing demand, Apollo is setting up a state-of-the-art plant in Baroda, Gujarat. It has a licenced capacity of 10 lakh tyres per annum and will utilise tested technologies from General Tire International, USA.

The plant will go on stream from day one with a proven range of hi-quality tyres for trucks, cars, tractors and LCVs.

Pioneering pays

Locating the plant at Gujarat is yet another instance of managerial genius. It gives us a pioneer unit status and an exemption of sales tax of over Rs. 100 crores during operating years.

The location has other advantages: close proximity to raw materials, lesser transportation costs, a healthy industrial climate & excellent infrastructure.

Heading towards a golden future

With the coming of the Gujarat unit, the company's growth and assets will take a quantum jump.

Yes, our horizons are expanding. Our growth accelerating. Our profitability soaring. But we're still looking beyond. Because for us success means breaking our own records of excellence. And ensuring that its rewards continue to flow... long into the future.

SWARNA GANGA

THE FLOWING REWARDS OF EXCELLENCE

APOLLO TYRES

LEADERSHIP THROUGH QUALITY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BAGPIPER

Club Soda

All the makings of a great occasion

Shatrughan Sinha

everest 88 HL 322

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

BY K. NATWAR SINGH

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Candour and Confessions

WHILE reading serious and worthwhile books I have at the back of my mind something Franz Kafka (1883-1924) wrote: "If a book we are reading does not wake us, as with a fist hammer on the skull, then why do we read?... The book must be like an ice-axe to break the sea frozen inside." If we were to apply this extreme criterion to all our reading, we would end up having Kafka's negative vision. So I use his criterion selectively, sparingly, and I do so unconsciously.

Sarvepalli Gopal is the son of a very famous, world-renowned philosopher—Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan. I finished reading his masterly, and in some ways unique, biography of his father last week. It is unputdownable.

In his preface, Gopal writes: "This is a son's book. But I have tried not to be swayed by personal affection and have shirked nothing." Through the 408 pages he keeps his word. There is no tactful omission of inconvenient or embarrassing events.

Biography as a literary form is just beginning to take root in our country. We Hindus are particularly secretive and devious about our private lives, but perfectly loud-mouthed about other people's lives. The 'fist hammer' of Kafka knocks the reader on the head on page 10. Gopal writes: "More important is the doubt whether Veeraswami was his father. Parental responsibility lay, according to village rumour, with an itinerant Vaishnavite official. Sitamma's brother, who served in the local administration, was thought to have arranged the rendezvous to oblige a superior officer. Credence is lent to the story by the difficulty in believing that Radhakrishnan and his four brothers and sister belonged to the same genetic pool. Intellectual endowment and physical appearance both suggested that Radhakrishnan belonged to different stock. Radhakrishnan himself accepted this version and critical of his mother's conduct, always, through her long life, kept her at a distance. But he was attached to the man who passed for his father."

Only Gandhiji has written about himself with similar candour, similar luminous intellectual honesty. I hope Gopal is a trail-blazer. I had the good luck to come in contact with Dr Radhakrishnan at a young and starry-eyed age. Gopal used to take me to see his father from time to time. In July 1961, I had my appendix operated in Safdarjung Hospital. The vice-President of India turned up unannounced to see me. Gopal was with him. What an unforgettable gesture of gracious concern for a young man. No one will dispute Gopal's claim that his father, "throughout a long life had never been guilty of a mean deed; and it is unlikely that he ever had a mean thought". Of how many human beings can that be said?

Radhakrishnan was the outstanding, perhaps the greatest, Indian thinker of the 20th century. Gopal devotes many pages to the intellectual, philosophical and spiritual development of his father. Unlike his son, Radhakrishnan was very reticent and guarded about his private life. In 1950, he wrote in Fragments of a Confession: "No particular good fortune has lifted me above the sphere in which our common humanity struggles along, and I have had my own share of the burdens and anxieties of life. Although these are of immense importance to me, discretion forbids me to speak of them. Besides, they are of no particular interest to the philosophical public." And that was that.

Pandit Nehru wanted Dr Radhakrishnan to become President in 1957 but was opposed by Maulana Azad. Five years later, in 1962, Nehru made sure that Radhakrishnan got the top job.

His philosophical writings and ideas attracted international attention. An Idealist's View of Life is among the important books of the 20th century. Deep down he felt that to transform was far better than to inform.

His tenure as vice-president was distinguished and generally problem-free. Pandit Nehru wanted him to succeed Dr Rajendra Prasad as President in 1957 but due to strenuous opposition from Maulana Azad this did not happen. Nehru made sure that Radhakrishnan did get the top job in 1962.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Unfortunately for Radhakrishnan, his five years as President were a depressing half decade. The Chinese invasion left the country bewildered and shaken. Pandit Nehru passed away and the conflict with Pakistan in September 1965 put a heavy burden on the country's resources. Lal Bahadur Shastri's unexpected death at Tashkent was another setback.

Politics was not Radhakrishnan's domain. He was helpless before the slow intrigues of highly-placed political operators. He did not have a nose for sensing political trouble and paid the price. Mrs Indira Gandhi did not take kindly to Radhakrishnan's reckless public criticism of her government. (I have personal knowledge of how strongly she felt.) She denied him a second term in 1967. This was a great blow to Radhakrishnan. Consequently, the closing years of his life were empty, lonely, depressing and sad. The most articulate of men lost his power of speech, then the body gave way and lastly his mind. Gopal puts it most poignantly: "Finally, in the early hours of 17th April 1975, Radhakrishnan drifted out of the harbour of a silent tide." Here is great English for you.

I must not end on a melancholy note. In 1962, the king of Greece came on a state visit to India. Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan welcoming him said: "Your Majesty, you are the first king of Greece to come as our guest. Alexander came uninvited."

RADHAKRISHNAN: A Biography
by SARVEPALLI GOPAL
Oxford University Press
Pages: 408; Price: Rs 250

EXCERPTS

'The end of a long chapter', was his remark as he returned from the funeral. Doubtless he lived through again in his mind the years when she had supported him and recollected his need for her love at later times even though he had not rejected self-indulgence elsewhere. The black misery that enveloped him on her death was no assumed posture.

Sivakamu had not been educated in the conventional sense. But she was proficient in Telugu and, while in Calcutta, engaged a tutor to teach her to read and write English. Perceptive, lively and courageous, she easily held her own with those who could claim to have gone through school and college. Even more, she was a woman of character, veined with fire. She who had once sunk her existence in that of her husband, later, when lacerated by his non-marital wanderings, pretended to be independent of him and gain satisfaction in motherhood. She was too proud to let the public know how much she had been hurt, especially by his mistress from the forties, a hard, bitchy woman of jarring and aggressive gracelessness who was determined to flaunt to the world her place in Radhakrishnan's life. To Sivakamu her marriage seemed, if not broken, certainly fractured; the human relationship was now a half-lie even if she would not allow it to become merely a social habit. But total devotion to him was still the bedrock of her existence, weathering all his wounding actions; and the sudden fits of rage which marked her last years were in fact explosions of possessiveness and expressions of unspoken pain. It has been asked recently about three wives of great men whether, given a second chance, they would have married the same husbands. In Sivakamu's case there is no doubt about the answer. Being the wife of the greatest creative intellect of his generation in India had not been easy; but she would not have had her lot cast otherwise.

Radhakrishnan with wife Sivakamu: uneasy bond

◆

In his private talks with Mao, no immediate problems were raised; but there were some remarks of significance. Mao, when discussing prospects in the two countries of reducing expenditure on defence, said that for them it was not just the question of Taiwan and Indochina; 'we have to watch Japan too.' China was not worried much about Korea or Vietnam, but she was definitely concerned about the possibility of Japan building up her military might with the backing of the United States. China felt about Japan as the Soviet Union felt about West Germany. When Radhakrishnan said that if India and China stood together it would be a lesson to the rest of the world, Mao's reply, even then, in September 1957, was guarded and conditional: 'If India and China stood together for a score of years, no one will ever be able to pull us apart, but I am aware that there are some forces which are constantly trying to separate us.' During the general discussion Radhakrishnan asked Mao if he believed in coexistence. Mao replied that he did. Then Radhakrishnan asked if coexistence meant only with those with whom one agreed or also with those with whom one disagreed; coexistence meant converting in a friendly way the one who disagreed and not suppressing him. Mao had no adequate reply. Then, while saying goodbye to Mao, Radhakrishnan patted him on the cheek. Mao appreciated the gesture; but the others round him were visibly taken aback. Noticing this, Radhakrishnan remarked, 'don't worry; I have done the same to Stalin—and to the Pope.'

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Innovation
that fosters diversification

From automotive instruments to precision machine tools to electronics.... it's an inherent strength, Pricol has built on successfully.

Innovation.

It's the driving force behind a rapidly diversifying company.

Pricol.

The clear leader in automotive instruments.
And a source for precision engineered Textile Counters, Wind Speed Monitors, Small Machine Tools, and Oil Pumps for Two Wheelers. Products fostered by research and innovation.

Today Pricol is diversifying again, into products that represent the technology of the future.

Electronics.

Colour TV Tuners. SMPS & UPS Systems. Powerline Conditioners. And Micro processor based products. Each an example of innovative engineering. To give you products that are truly world-class and reliable.

Pricol has a rich heritage of proven innovations for over fourteen successful years. You can trust Pricol when it comes to electronics.

AUTOMOTIVE INSTRUMENTS
SMALL MACHINE TOOLS
COUNTERS & CONTROLS
WIND SPEED MONITORS
ELECTRONIC TV TUNERS
SMPS & UPS SYSTEMS
POWERLINE CONDITIONERS

pricol Technology at your service.

Premier Instruments & Controls Limited
Post Box No. 6331
1087 B/C Avanashi Road Coimbatore 641 037 India
Phone: 0422 — 31521-4 Fax: 0422 — 33028
Telex: 0855 — 376 PIL IN Cable: PRICOL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

MAA COMMUNICATIONS PRICOL 289A

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Seccolor Styles

New dimensions to Indian Architecture.

AJANTA, ELLORA, KONARK and HAMPI from NCL Seccolor in collaboration with the World leaders — Secco of Italy. Innovative technology of roll forming perfect profiles out of special pretreated and prepainted steel sheet for a lifetime of luxury. Profiles that are being used with pride in over 30 Countries around the World, for a whole range of Windows and Doors, Railings and Partitions.

Seccolor Windows are now available in three distinctive styles — AJANTA, ELLORA, and KONARK, and in colours to match any decor. Functional, elegant, durable and with a definite cost advantage, Seccolor system adds new dimensions to Indian architecture.

ncl seccolor THE Face in a crowd.

For further details · PHONE : BOMBAY 591319, 255003
HYDERABAD 233637-236878 VISAKHAPATNAM 57020.

NCL SECCOLOR LIMITED
(Member of NCL Group of Industries)
7th Floor, Raghava Ratna Towers,
Chirag Ali Lane, Hyderabad-500 001.
Tel: 240562, 241769. Grams: SECCOLOR.
Telex: 0425-6887 NCLH IN
Fax: 0842-236496

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUESS WHAT HAPPENS TO PUMAPLY IF YOU BAKE IT FOR ONE HOUR IN AN OVEN AT 200°C ?

NOTHING. ABSOLUTELY NOTHING.

Water boils at 100°C.

Pumaply can take more. Much more.

Because it is 100% Heat Resistant.

Think of what this means for your kitchen cabinets exposed to the continuous heat of ovens, pressure cookers, toasters and everyday frying and cooking.

And, yes ! Pumaply is also Termite Resistant.

No wonder, it is the ideal plywood to use in your homes and offices—wherever long life is of prime importance.

So, the next time you're making furniture, ask for Duro's Pumaply. And be 200% sure of plywood that's virtually indestructible.

DURO PUMAPLY ™

FROM THE MAKERS OF DUROBORD

VIRTUALLY INDESTRUCTIBLE !

rda Plywood Industries Limited

cutta • Delhi • Bombay • Ahmedabad • Madras • Bangalore

Look for this full width Strip & Label.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Zeba: dream girl

◆ "Dad would have really been pleased," said Randhir Kapoor. He would indeed. For Zeba Bakhtiyar, 22—selected after months of painstaking search by Randhir for the title role in Raj Kapoor's unfinished dream film, Henna—is just what the grand showman would order. The Pakistani actress "has that old world charm" typical of R.K. heroines. Henna, especially written for Raj by Pakistani author Begum Hasina Moin, is a love story in the R.K. tradition: an Indian boy (played by Rishi Kapoor) falls madly in love with a Pakistani girl but obstacles come in the path of their happiness.... The Raj Kapoor touch, it seems, never dies.

Kapur: show time

◆ Dressed in the white overcoat hunched over the stumps as the white-flannelled men play cricket, Anjali Rajgopal, 19, looks just like the many other aspiring Dickie Birds who umpire Bombay's league matches. The country's first woman umpire, Anjali played as an all rounder for Bombay University's women team before she decided to sit for the qualifying examination for umpires last year and scored more than the required 80 per cent marks. Just one more exam, and Rajgopal can officiate First Class matches. And then of course, Tests. "I sometimes get the feeling that male players feel I don't have enough knowledge," she says. "But I don't mind." Howzaat!

Anjali: judging men

◆ He was scouting around for a girl who looked like an athlete—to cast in his new film, Champion—when BBC's Channel 4 found him. Film director, actor and model, Shekhar Kapur has now been invited to anchor a current affairs programme dealing with the problems faced by the Asian community in Britain.

On the Other Hand, in seven episodes, will discuss issues that range from racism to astrology. "I'm very hot about the idea," says Mr India enthusiastically. And serious about it too. He's going ahead to London for a week's research before the show actually goes on the floors. For the Masoom man, here's the big chance.

◆ For once, it was drama in real life for N.T. Rama Rao. The Andhra Pradesh chief minister's name was unwittingly dragged into a bedroom—and courtroom—drama recently. The main characters were his estranged son-in-law, Naren Rajan and Uma Reddy, 27. And at stake was the custody of two-year-old Rashmi, Uma's younger daughter. Rajan, who is "very attached" to the child, had abducted her some months ago.

The curtain came down on months of legal battle and emotional scenes last week with the Supreme Court ruling that maternity is a certainty. And so restored the child to the mother. "Who cares if he is the chief minister's son-in-law?" said the triumphant Uma, who however refused to comment on her relationship with Rajan. "I put up an independent fight and it feels great to win the case and get my daughter back." About Rama Rao, she says: "Poor man! I'm sorry he got involved."

Hussain: run to stardom

◆ He is the saviour England has summoned from the lush green playfields of country cricket to breathe new life into a gasping team. For Madras-born right-hand batsman Naseer Hussain, 21, it was indeed a quick single from obscurity to stardom in one season: he scored 1,000 runs for Essex and a stylish 1[illegible] for Combined Universities against Somerset in a Benson and Hedges Cup quarter final.

Hussain's father, Jawad, played for Madras in the Ranji Trophy before he went to England in 1974 with six-year-old Naseer in tow. A protegé of former England skipper Keith Fletcher, Naseer joins the royal ranks of Indians like Ranjitsinhji, Pataudi senior and Duleepsinhji who played for England. Says the nineteen history student: "I'd love to play a Test match against India in Madras."

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Uma with Rashmi: happy ending

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj

Every genuine
WILLS GOLD FLAKE cigarette bears the name
W D & H O WILLS

STATUTORY WARNING: CIGARETT[illegible]G IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

CLARION C-GFK-16

Regn. No. R. N. 2858/75
Regd. NW/FBD/5; D (C) 757
WB/CC-528, MH/BY/SOUTH/103, TN/MSN/644

The Bajaj Believe it or not

Bajaj's next three competitors are itself.

Did you know that India's four top selling scooters are all from Bajaj? The Super, Chetak, Cub and Priya.*

Bajaj makes a scooter every thirty-five seconds. That's 2000 a day. 50,000 a month. Or 6 lakhs a year. But demand continues to grow.

So production is being increased to a record 2700 scooters a day. For you to get your favourite scooter faster.

But how do we maintain top quality and such high production levels? It's simple.

We have two of the most modern plants in this part of the world. Where every scooter goes through 4000 quality tests.

Therefore over three million happy Bajaj owners believe – You just can't beat a Bajaj!

*Priya is a Bajaj licensed product

Bajaj Auto Ltd.,
Akurdi, Pune-4110

stardom

bajaj

LINTAS BAJ 148 2720

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IN FOCUS THIS FORTNIGHT

Falling Apart

Sri Lanka's slide into anarchy seems to be endless. More than 4,000 people have died in the last one month as splinter groups of trigger-happy militants have run amok, mowing down innocent civilians. With economic chaos mounting, the island paradise is being rapidly destroyed beyond redemption.

COVER STORY 22

Sundarji Replies

The Government's rebuttal to former army chief General K. Sundarji's interview, contained in a defence ministry release, is not convincing enough in the light of available evidence. It contains gaps and contradictions. Sundarji also vehemently denies the charges against him in a separate interview.

SPECIAL REPORTS 30

Politics of Plenty

With the electoral battle hotting up, INDIA TODAY begins a series on people, issues and constituencies. This fortnight's focus is on Uttar Pradesh—a comparison between Amethi and Rae Bareli constituencies; an assessment of Chief Minister N.D. Tiwari; plus a report on V.P. Singh's campaign.

ELECTION SPECIAL 42

Money Muscle

The country's four premier financial institutions have helped spur industrial growth by pumping capital resources into the private sector. But of late they have become the target of allegations: succumbing to political pressure to unseat managements and take sides in take-over battles.

BUSINESS FEATURE 92

Heels on Wheels

Vroom... and they are off zigzagging through traffic. Middle class women all over the country are no longer willing to submit to the rigours and constraints of city bus rides. They are increasingly taking to mopeds and scooters and enjoying the new-found feeling of freedom and convenience.

SPECIAL FEATURE 134

"I don't know the Ambanis"

In his first interview since the expose about his business links with the Ambanis, Umesh Katre, son of CBI Director Mohan Katre, insists that he is just a garment exporter and whatever dealings he had with Reliance Industries was for Kamlesh Shah, his friend, whose office space he shares in Bombay.

INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT 146

CONTENTS

COMMENT 11
CAPITALOOK 12
VOICES 14
INDIANOTES 19
THE FORTNIGHT THAT WAS 21
COVER STORY
Sri Lanka: Falling Apart 22
SPECIAL REPORTS
Bofors: Sundarji Replies 30
Punjab Police:
Uniformed Brutality 34
ELECTION SPECIAL
Politics of Plenty 42
CURRENT EVENTS
Haryana: Miscued Missives 54
Goa: Sex Scandal 59
Assam: False Hopes 60
Women's Perspective Plan:
Skirting the Issue 71
Backward Communities:
Job Gambit 74
Bottomline: Belgrade Bash 79
STATENOTES 80

SPECIAL FEATURE
Afghan Mujahedin:
Chasing a Distant Mirage 82
BUSINESS FEATURE
Financial Institutions: Money Muscle 92
TRADE WINDS 98
BUSINESS
Mahindra & Mahindra:
Stepping on the Gas 103
Businesspeak:
Surendra Ambalal Dave 106
Oil Industry: Hitting a Slick 111
Finance Commission: Unequal Slice 112
Communication: Home Show 117
The Markets: Scrips Spurt 118
THE ECONOMY MONITOR 123
GLOBE-TROTTING
Indian-Americans:
The Lobbying Game 126
SPORTS
Athletics: Fast Forward 132
SPECIAL FEATURE
Women: Heels On Wheels 134

NEIGHBOURS
Burma: The Islamabad Link 142
INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT
Umesh Katre:
"I don't know the Ambanis" 146
RELIGION
Deoghar Temple: The Long March 150
TELEVISION
Doordarshan: Patriotic Plugs 155
ENVIRONMENT
Trawling: Plundering the Sea 158
DEVELOPMENT
Bihar: Monuments to Anarchy 164
MEDIAWATCH
A Shocking Surrender 166
BOOKS
Moving Mail 171
EYE-CATCHERS 176

Cover photograph by SHYAM TEKWANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Sarayu Trust Foundation and eGangotri

The Mughal Miniature. A formal four piece ensemble that uses gold buttons for expression. And borrows autumn for colour. Easy day-formals. Also dates well with moonlight.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Mughal Miniature. A formal four piece ensemble that uses gold buttons for expression. And borrows autumn for colour. Easy day-formals. Also dates well with moonlight.

Black and gold kundan jewellery weighing fingers.

Tassle ended scarves for effect or contemplation.

Kurta shaped in classic A-line for stance.

Exquisite, Exceptional. Rapturous. For the girl in every woman.

The Superlatives VIMAL® A RELIANCE PRODUCT Dress Material

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra A RIL 4777

The only Indian company to get this far.

LIBERTY INDIAN BOUTIQUE
FONTANA VACI U.16.
BUDAPEST, HUNGARY

True to its own philosophy, Liberty has stepped out of the country in style.

Today, it's the only Indian footwear company to have exclusive boutiques abroad. With no less than five different showrooms in Hungary alone!

But then, Liberty has been ceaselessly exploring the world for 25 inspiring years. Taking high quality leather footwear, shoe uppers, garments and leather accessories to some of the most demanding global markets — the USA, Italy, UK, USSR, Hungary and more.

No wonder Liberty is also the first Indian company to export leather manufacturing expertise – to a giant like the USSR.

Leather lined with silver, you might say.

SPREADING THE MAGIC OF INDIAN LEATHER ACROSS THE WORLD
LIBERTY 25 YEARS OF EXPORTS
ESTD. 1954

LIBERTY®
One step ahead, always!

Liberty Footwear Co.
Liberty House, Karnal-132 001
Ph : 0184-4391 (5) lines Tlx : 396201/396202 LIFO IN

Marketing Office :
4/42 Punjabi Bagh, New Delhi-110 026
Ph : 011-594371/594214 Tlx : 31-76020 LIFO IN
Fax : 011-5455567/5439647

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XIV NUMBER 18
FOR THE FORTNIGHT SEPTEMBER 16-30, 1989

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
DEPUTY EDITOR DILIP BOBB
SENIOR EDITOR PRABHU CHAWLA
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR SHEKHAR GUPTA
ASSOCIATE EDITOR RAMINDAR SINGH
ASSISTANT EDITOR P.G. MATHAI

CORRESPONDENTS
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT RAJ CHENGAPPA
NEW DELHI MADHU JAIN
PARANJOY GUHA THAKURTA
SIMRAN BHARGAVA
DAVID DEVADAS
PANKAJ PACHAURI
SURAJEET DAS GUPTA
BHASKAR ROY
AHMEDABAD UDAY MAHURKAR
BANGALORE CHIDANAND RAJGHATTA
BHOPAL N.K. SINGH
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN
SALIL TRIPATHI
S.N. VASUKI
CALCUTTA FARZAND AHMED
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
LUCKNOW DILIP AWASTHI
MADRAS C.S.G PRASAD
PATNA UTTAM SENGUPTA
TRIVANDRUM RAMESH MENON
NEWS COORDINATOR SANDHYA MULCHANDANI

ART EDITOR SHIRLEY JOSHUA

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
CHIEF OF PRODUCTION ANURADHA KAPOOR
LAYOUT ARTISTS PEALI DUTTA GUPTA
PRABAL MANDAL
KAMINI SINGH

ASSISTANT PICTURE EDITOR BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA
PRASHANT PANJIAR
NAMAS BHOJANI
SHYAM TEKWANI

COPY EDITOR TARUN J. TEJPAL

COPY DESK SABA NAQVI BHAUMIK
NANDITA SARDANA
VIDHU KHANNA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

REGIONAL MANAGERS ADVERTISING
BOMBAY NEENA MONGIA
NEW DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL

ADVERTISING MANAGERS
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE S.J. NAIDU

• EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD. F-14/15, CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4, TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTIONS: LIVING MEDIA INDIA LIMITED. POST BOX 706. FARIDABAD-121007, HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER. F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE, NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8, TELEX: 31-62634 INTO IN • ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029435. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BOMBAY • K-9, CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONES: 3325378, 3323576, 3321323 AND 3321273. TELEX: 31-62124 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188, 479163. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. MADRAS • 74/1 ST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 213037, 212448; CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BANGALORE • 12C EVEREST 46C CHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726. CABLE: LIVINMEDIA. CALCUTTA • COPYRIGHT 1987 LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY AROON PURIE FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ASTOUNDING DISCLOSURES

Your cover story ("Getting Away", September 15) was explosive. General K. Sundarji has candidly narrated how his attempts to seek the truth from Bofors were frustrated. It is intriguing that he did not reveal these facts earlier. Yet, the interview has revived the issue in a manner that not even the CAG report did.

New Delhi — PUNAM RIJHWANI

■ General Sundarji's interview has answered the questions regarding the Defence Ministry's inability to terminate the Bofors contract on grounds of breach of faith, Arun Singh's sudden and unexplained resignation and the role played by the prime minister and his office.

Bhopal — DR SANJAY KUMAR

PECUNIARY POLITICS

The Ambani-Wadia war ("Crime, Money and Politics", August 31) is a clear case of the Ambanis' insatiable greed—emboldened by their political clout. The Government's overt and covert manoeuvres stink of attempts to protect its 'friends'.

New Delhi — GEORGE JOHN

■ It is shocking that the Ambanis should plot to kill Nusli Wadia. The prime objective of industrialists today is to amass wealth at any cost.

Jamshedpur — B.N. BOSE

■ The Ambanis appear to be following Gay Talese's dictum in his book, Honour Thy Father: "Whether men's ambitions are fulfilled in the arena of politics or business or banking or crime, it makes little difference; and the most brutal acts are easily justified in the name of necessity and honour."

Amritsar — R.C. KHANNA

■ The Ambani-Wadia story reads like a Ken Follet novel. The triangle of politics, crime and money is bizarre and beyond the common man's comprehension.

Delhi — G. JANAKI

DIVERSE PULLS

To expect that those born in the US ("American Born Confused Desis", August 31) will be brought up just like those back home is unrealistic. One has to adopt the native language, dress and food habits. But these youngsters have everything to gain by understanding and trying to follow old-world virtues.

Pune — D.B.N. MURTHY

■ Your special feature outlines a problem that Indian-born confused desis ought to consider before they scramble to foreign lands. I sympathise with these children who are the victims of parents who want the best of both worlds.

New Delhi — MALA BHARGAVA

■ The article unwittingly advances the myth that the Indians in the US are well-to-do, and their children go to college and form an aware, educated community. But the majority of them are not doctors and engineers but are travel agents, clerks, shop assistants and small merchants.

Trichur — G.K. KAMATH

BROKEN CONVENTIONS

It is sad that many well-intentioned parliamentary conventions ("Chamber of Chaos", August 31) have either been broken or manipulated over the years by the powers that be for political ends. Let your special report be an eye-opener to those who represent us.

Ahmedabad — SASIDHARAN. K

UNEXPECTED BOUNCER

The BCCI's action ("Stumping the Stars", August 31) is unjustified. After all, people spend their money to see the cricket stars and not the board and its disciplinary committee. Would the board have taken the same decision if India had won the series in the West Indies?

Mangalore — S. JAGADISH NAYAK

■ The board's decision is a welcome step. Now it is important for the board to stick to its decision despite all pressure.

Ahmedabad — SIDDHARTHA SINGH

AGAINST ALL ODDS

"Struggling to the Top" (August 31) was really inspiring. One must remem-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ber that spastics are human beings who should be allowed to live a normal life.
Kanpur NIKESH CHANDRA

RAY OF HOPE

The fresh wave in Bengali cinema ("A Silver Streak", August 31) could be strengthened by allowing this sick industry to extend its business to neighbouring Bangladesh where the mother-tongue is Bengali.
Siliguri SANTOO PALCHOWDHURY

TRUE TRIBUTE

Calcutta through Raghu Rai's lenses ("Smile in the Squalor", August 31) proves his class. However two more pages of photographs would have done justice to this lensman par excellence.
Bhubaneswar SANJEEB KUMAR DAS

DECLINING VALUES

It is painful ("Hollow Politics", August 31) that one of the most envied democracies is beset with problems like parochialism, mud-slinging and communalism. Politicians show utter disrespect for Parliament and the CAG.
Patna JAYANT KUMAR

■ When one looks at the democratic systems of the US and the UK and compares it with ours, the greatest difference noticed is the precedence of national interests above party politics.
Bombay RISHI SINGH

SHADY CORPORATORS

The report ("Goon Show", August 31) on criminals being elected corporators in Lucknow and Allahabad gave a vivid picture of the state of affairs. Does the prime minister wish to delegate powers to these people through the highly publicised Nagar Palika Act?
Nainital SOM PANDEY

MALICIOUS COMMENTS

It was disturbing to read the review of Vijay Singh's book, Jaya Ganga ("Flowing Fatuously", August 31). Far from being a book review, it resembled a pseudo-psychological analysis of the author's personality or a political harangue. It was in fact worse than that—an exercise in slander and in mudslinging a young writer.

Equally serious was the perverse degradation of the renowned French school of historiography, the Annales (referred to as "Anal history") and of the most respected French historian of the 20th century, Ferdnand Braudel (referred to as "Ferdnand Brothel"). To spoof, or to pun, as a literary device, is supposed to give punch and humour but, in this case, it descended to cheapness and nausea.

In fact, the book under question, aptly described as an "interior travelogue", is not an imitation of the 1920s surrealism; it is an experiment in the use of cinematic writing.

Of course a critic is free to express his or her opinion about a book, the author, the author's mind or his subconscious drives. There is a fair amount in the review; there could even have been more. But the malicious comments that appeared in your columns, coming from an editor of a reputed publishing house, are indeed regrettable and in poor taste.
Paris LAJPAT JAGGA

STRATEGIC MANOEUVRE

The mass resignations by opposition MPs from the Lok Sabha ("Stunning Strike", August 15) was not a political gimmick as pointed out by the prime minister. By doing so, they gave up a lifetime pension of Rs 500, a monthly salary of Rs 10,500 for the remaining months before the elections, free train travel, 16 single air journeys, and other perks.
Madras S. RAMACHANDRAN

■ There is nothing stunning about the mass resignations by the Opposition. The people of our country are used to such election stunts by the Opposition, when they fail to beat the ruling party in debate. The Indian masses will never forgive them for their betrayal of faith.
Pune VIJAYA MOORTHY

DAMAGING PROCESS

The misconcieved craze to beget sons ("Male Order Service", August 15) is utterly ridiculous. We have perhaps crossed all frontiers of male chauvinism. What is even more surprising is that Dr Pandya, being a woman herself, is perpetuating this damaging process.
Meerut P.N. BANERJI

■ So far nature has wonderfully maintained the male-female ratio. The Erricson technology of sperm separation will only help to reduce the female population. Isn't it time we introduced some code of ethics in scientific research?
Sirmaur(M.P.) RAVINDRANATH M.

TWILIGHT OF LIFE

The Congress(I) leadership's neglect of Kamlapati Tripathi ("Autumn of the Patriarch", August 15) is a result of his over-indulgence and lack of conviction to quit the party at an opportune moment. His marginalisation is pathetic.
Kanpur SHARAD SHUKLA

PROPER DISPLAY

While amending the Motor Vehicles Act ("Motoring Manners", July 31), offences like driving without a licence should have been viewed more seriously than laying emphasis on minor traffic offences like parking in no parking areas. The authorities should ensure that signboards are displayed properly and that they clearly indicate the parking space. When I was on vacation in Mangalore recently, I was given a parking ticket but the 'No Parking' sign was not visible.
Tubarao, Brazil ARUL F.I. ARANHA

LEARNING TO LAUGH

Thank you for the outrageously funny ("Indiana Jokes" August 31). Here are some more rib-tickling ethnic quips: A bragging Assamese is called Phoo! ka(u)n. A firebrand Bengali leader is Gun-goli. An angry Parsi is God-rage. A botanist from Uttar Pradesh is Agni-hot tree. A business house in Gujarat is Kala-bhai-Salabhai.
Tezpur REETEN GANGULY

■ Ethnic jokes are not new in India. I recollect as far back as in 1963, a secretary in the Government of India (whose name figures in the joke) asking this riddle: How do you say father, son and Holy Ghost in Tamil? Mahalingam, Ramalingam and Bhoothalingam.
Poona MICHI SETH

■ More Indiana jokes: What is a female Khalistani terrorist called? Hard Kaur. What is the Khalistani profession? Jarnailism. What is the Khalistani national song? Bande maarte hum.
Patna ARNAB MUKHERJEE

■ Your collection of ethnic jokes was hilarious. Many more of them are currently making the rounds. An example: How do you identify a Mallu? Zimbly.
Noida SUBHAMAY CHATTOPADHYAY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Project a gracious lifestyle. Through Amarsons.

amarsons
collections®

63 A, Bhulabhai Desai Road, Breach Candy,
Bombay 400 026.
Tel: 8225130 • 8227746 • 8223512
• 8227111 • 8221949

Amarsons/AO/101/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RX100

YAMA

RX100
AUTHENTIC YAMAHA

ESCORTS

A

Collection, Haridwar

MAHA

RIDE THE INTERNATIONAL FAVOURITE

AHEAD OF THE 100'S

HEADSTART TSC 600

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Here's a hint on how often Swissair flies Bombay-Zurich non-stop.

The correct answer is once every day, as all regular shavers and Swissair regulars will know. The arrival in Zurich is early morning, in good time to catch our frequent and prompt connections to over 50 European business centres and to the four gateways in the USA. Our heart-warming hospitality and three-class option to all destinations add a sharp edge to whet the business traveller's preference for flying Swiss-style.

swissair

For details call your IATA travel agent or the nearest Swissair office:
AHMEDABAD 449149 • BANGALORE 211983 • BOMBAY 287210 • CALCUTTA 444643 • COCHIN 360380 • DELHI 3325511 • HYDERABAD 224244 • KATHMANDU 222452 • MADRAS 861583

everest/89/SW/11 R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Indianise Kashmir

As the turmoil in Kashmir worsens, the state Government's reaction to it follows a tiredly familiar pattern—blame it all on a handful of anti-national miscreants; enforce drastic police measures; threaten to gag the press on the pretext that reportage of the deepening crisis is the cause of the crisis itself.

A silent press will, instead, exacerbate tensions because it is now probably the only escape hatch for the steam of popular frustration in Kashmir. And the state and the country, will be caught between the crossfire of the self-serving puffery of government handouts and extremist pamphleteering.

All attention will then be diverted from the dreadful mistakes, the lack of vision, that have brought the valley to this pass. And any scope for salvage will rapidly vanish. Today, the state Government and Centre are stressing that secessionist activities are confined to a few districts and that not all Kashmiris are anti-India.

Precisely. But the rulers can't have their cake and eat it too. The "anti-Indian, pro-Pakistani, fundamentalist" epithets have been politically convenient labels to brand all opposition in Kashmir, whether it stemmed from student unrest against rigged entrance exams, popular ire against corruption, or demonstrations against blatantly unfair electoral practices.

Unpopular state politicians have regularly invoked this fear to convince the Centre that they are the saviours of secularism and national integrity and must be supported at all costs. And herein lies the agony of the valley. Because it is the only Muslim majority state, the rest of the country is easily convinced that if Kashmiris take to the streets to air economic or social grievances, they are demanding another Pakistan, or asserting fundamentalist convictions and must therefore be bullied into submission or controlled by the Centre through puppet governments. Conversely, many Kashmiris believe that the Centre, while subsidising unpopular governments and looking the other way when elections are rigged, does so because the state is a communal aberration, and they will be given their rights only in Muslim-majority Pakistan.

But all this ignores history and demographic reality. When Sheikh Abdullah was pledging accession to India in 1947, Nehru was talking about a plebiscite for Kashmir in the United Nations. The Kashmiri struggle—they fought subjugation under the Mughals, the Sikhs, the Dogras—has been to preserve a special identity called Kashmiriyat. Linguistically, Kashmiris comprise about half of the state's 32 lakh Gujjar, Pahadi, Punjabi, and Kashmiri-speaking Muslims. They are the ruling class. But if the state were to join Pakistan Occupied Kashmir (POK), this ruling class would become a minority as POK has a massive Gujjar and Punjabi-speaking population. So, it's incongruous that a community, so conscious of preserving its identity would want to be subsumed altogether in Pakistan.

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

THERE have always been pro-Pakistan elements and fundamentalists in Kashmir. But historically they have never prevailed because of the liberal Sufi traditions and because Sheikh Abdullah never allowed Jinnah or the Muslim League to make inroads into his state. Kashmir's recurrent pro-Pakistani slogans have often been used for blackmail: if-you-don't-give-us-our-rights-in-India-we'll-go-to-Pakistan. And this image simply feeds on itself when Kashmir's own politicians, beset by problems of their own making, brand every dissenter pro-Pakistani. It is a vicious circle.

And there are reasons enough for Kashmiris to fulminate. The Centre, for one, has never had a clear and stable policy towards the state and has often preferred to let it burn a little in order to play the Pakistan card whenever convenient. It has run the state from Delhi through the toppling game—support Sheikh Abdullah, then drop him and imprison all the leaders of the movement. Prop up Bakshi Gulam Mohammed then dump him. Support G.M. Sadiq as a strong administrator, then destabilise his government. Shake hands with the Sheikh, then destabilise him. Bring on his son Farooq and topple him. Ease in G.M. Shah, then dismiss him. Once again, shake hands with Farooq Abdullah, fight what is the most-widely denounced election in the state and, in the process, alienate the people.

Today, thanks to rampant nepotism, corruption and notorious maladministration Farooq's compact with his people seems to have broken. He has lost his trust with them. Some of them have turned to guns and others, who initially blamed only Farooq's Government for their woes, now increasingly blame New Delhi. The ball is as much in the Centre's court as it is in Farooq's.

Now that both are stressing that not all Kashmiris are anti-national, they must act courageously on that conviction to end the current drift and violence. They must build upon what is the most positive aspect of Kashmir: compared to the rest of the country, there have never been communal riots there. They must ensure that Kashmiris come into the mainstream by ensuring more jobs in government and private industry. They must send their best administrators to the state to clean up the regime. They must ensure free and fair elections. But most of all—and if they can do this in Assam, Punjab and Mizoram, they can do it in the valley—they must begin a new dialogue with the alienated youth. The broader, liberal outlook, no matter how long it takes is the best bet for Indianising Kashmir. Press censorship and the police jackboot will simply play into the hands of Pakistan.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Critical Choices

● The Indian Express falls into controversy not only in the arena of political warfare, but in such removed areas as cinema appreciation. Surprise ranged wide when some weeks ago the names of the delegates for the Canadian film festival were announced.

The journalists chosen, Amita Malik, Iqbal Masud and Anil Saari, were well-known film critics, but also happened to be associated with the Express, the Government's bete noire.

Predictably, Director of Film Festivals Urmila Gupta began to fetch flak. The Hindustan Times critic K.M. Amladi alleged Gupta had been partisan—tilting essentially at Saari—and took up the issue with I&B Secretary B. Murari. Going a step further he took it up with Rajiv Gandhi who in turn asked concerned officials for an explanation. Meantime, Masud backed out saying he was busy and with Saari's inclusion a contentious issue, Malik left for the festival which began on August 25. Gupta tried to exonerate herself saying that when the Canadian Film Festival Director Serge Losique asked her to name an Indian critic to cover the international film festival in Montreal which focused on Indian cinema, she sent seven names, leaving Losique to make the final choice. And Losique, blissfully ignorant of the media-government battles that ravage the Indian political scene, chose the Express threesome.

Facing the Crunch

● Foreign Secretary S.K. Singh's exclusion from the Indian delegation to the Non-aligned Movement (NAM) summit at Belgrade has caused consternation in South Block. But to foreign office veterans this is no surprise. The soft-spoken career officer, they say, has been on the outs for several months. The crunch came when during his Pakistan visit (June 15 to 17) his counterpart Humayun Khan announced that the two countries had agreed to pull-back to the pre-1972 positions in Siachen. New Delhi immediately denied this.

Ever since, Singh has been increasingly bypassed on critical foreign policy issues which are tackled within the Prime Minister's Office (PMO). This is the first time a foreign secretary has not been taken to a NAM conference where delegations work around the clock to draft sensitive papers. An official from the PMO explained that with so many senior people in the delegation S.K. Singh was required to stay in Delhi "to mind the fort". But another top ministry official said Singh has been deliberately playing it low-key. Is this another Venkateswaran episode in the making?

Beaming the Bandh

● No matter what the arguments about how successful the recent Bharat Bandh was, there is agreement on one point: it would probably not have enjoyed the success it did achieve without the help of Doordarshan. In order to build public antipathy to the event Doordarshan launched a public relations blitzkrieg in its news bulletins and through slick advertisements. In fact, on the eve of the bandh, the Hindi newscast started off with an anti-bandh message. But all this served to build free publicity for the Bandh. And after it was all over, Doordarshan spent 18 minutes saying what a flop it was. Eighteen minutes to describe a non-event surely must have made television history.

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

In the aftermath, there has been heartburn aplenty within the ruling party circles about who was responsible for the television campaign that backfired so embarrassingly. Congress(I) high command sources say that the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting was virtually excluded from any decision-making on the anti-bandh campaign. It was handled directly by Rajiv Gandhi with the help of a few trusted aides. More than anybody else Rajiv was responsible, therefore, for turning the bandh into a successful bandhwagon.

Doghouse Days

● Julio Ribeiro, Punjab's supercop of yesteryear and the blue-eyed boy of the Centre, appears to have fallen in disfavour and right now the bosses don't quite know what to do with him. For more than a year he has virtually hung around as advisor to Governor Siddhartha Shankar Ray without any clearly defined duties.

Ribeiro was recently informed by the Centre that he would be sent as governor of Mizoram. That, however, fizzled out. Then came word that he would be sent as ambassador to Rumania. But no final clearance has followed since.

Last fortnight, however, Ribeiro received his biggest snub. The Centre scheduled four separate meetings in Chandigarh to discuss new methods to combat terrorist activities in the state. The meetings were attended by the governor, the Union Minister of State for Home P. Chidambaram, Director-General of Police K.P.S. Gill, and the state's senior police and civilian officers. Ribeiro was excluded. Even supercops, it seems, can be put in the doghouse.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

35 Reasons To Have 35 Children

Tinker has 35 toys to make your child smile

Tinker TOYS

Imagination at play.

WOODEN TOYS · BOARD GAMES · CONSTRUCTION SETS · JIGSAW PUZZLES · MAGNETIC TOYS · HOBBY SETS

Official Licencees of Walt Disney Co., USA

KNOSTUFF 206, Desain House, DLF Commercial Complex, G.K. Part-II, New Delhi-48.

HERALD - KS-007/89

lic Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ELECTIONS 1989

The greatest event to mark the end of the decade is about to happen — The world's largest democracy goes to the polls. Do you have all the facts at your finger-tips to make a sound judgement on the outcome? Will you be counted among those who predicted correctly?

You could be right ✔

Prannoy Roy, Ashok Lahiri and David Butler present in INDIA DECIDES, a detailed analysis of how freedom of choice has been practised since 1952. Its a barometer of electoral trends and the mood of the nation at the time of each election. No political analysis is complete without this unique publication.

- Statistically significant election figures.
- Analysis of electoral changes.
- Insights into the correlation between votes cast and seats won.
- Complete bibliography for cross referencing.
- For the first time, Lok Sabha results of all general elections, constituency results, close contest results, bye-election results, and lots more — all in one volume.

Free Offer

Order immediately, and this 380 page deluxe hardcover edition will be delivered to your doorstep at NO EXTRA COST.

Just mail your Cheque/Demand Draft for Rs. 350/- (Add Rs. 5/- for outstation Cheques, ie., outside Delhi) payable to LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD., alongwith details of your name and address to: LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD., P.O. Box 29, NEW DELHI-110001.

INDIA DECIDES.
Another exclusive from
INDIA TODAY

The Times of India

- Mr Rajiv Gandhi gives extensions to Mr Katre, and Mr Katre gives extensions to Mr Rajiv Gandhi. ■ V.P. SINGH

- The people, who are expected to run the Government, are erecting film sets. ■ RAJIV GANDHI on N.T. Rama Rao

- Why did General Sundarji not say so (that the risk of cancelling the contract was acceptable) before the JPC headed by Mr Shankaranand? He was deposing before the committee. And INDIA TODAY is not a statutory body. ■ J. VENGAL RAO, Union minister for industries

- Maybe General Vaidya was killed because he knew too much about those who had received the pay-offs from foreign suppliers of armaments. This suspicion will occur to any citizen. ■ N.T. RAMA RAO in Indian Express

- If this accident of birth that I was born in the Gandhi family can be used in any way to bring some honesty, equality and cleanliness in our national life, I would be very glad. ■ RAJMOHAN GANDHI, grandson of Mahatma Gandhi, on joining the Janata Dal

- The bandh proved that he (Rajiv) is not only an Alice in the Blunderland of South Block but also a Don Quixote tilting at the administrative windmills of the country. ■ JAIPAL REDDY, Janata Dal general secretary

- If Doordarshan has become so incredible, so bad and so distrusted and despised by the Indian people, why do the opposition members want television in their constituency? ■ H.K.L. BHAGAT in The Week

- I have no doubt that Ambani and Katre are practically one. ■ RAM JETHMALINI in Newstrack

- I do not know if there is a difference between Mr Devi Lal and a terrorist. ■ K.N. SINGH, AICC(I) general secretary, in The Telegraph

- I have signed contracts at the airport. Why, I have even signed a blank contract. Given this background, how could we anticipate such drastic action now? ■ DILIP VENGSARKAR in Sportsworld

- I thought I'd be a wanderer and a vagabond. Well, I guess I'm still that, wandering from one studio to another. ■ JACKIE SHROFF in G

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Eden 'Paradise'

Eden
FURNISHINGS
IRRESISTIBLE TO ALL.
FORBIDDEN FOR SOME.

From the makers of eden drape with Italian collaboration.
Created by: Eden Agencies, V.P. Road, Bombay-400 004. Phone: 357472/3, 355805.

AVAILABLE AT: BOMBAY- Bharat 366050; Pride 220209; Polite 8110863; Anokhee 230958; Drape Shoppe 545079; A-Z 342087; Novelty 6428679; Khilchi 364041; Suburban Ceramic 6124909; DELHI - Jagdish 5717985; Mehta 630509; Pandit 3315716; Mridula 5729173; Home Saaz 6838721; CALCUTTA - Times 292749; Skipper 299618; BANGALORE- Innovations 566104; MADRAS-Raghurams 443450; Indo Furnishings 565477; Saagar 470155; HYDERABAD- Dream Decor 844884; Mahajans 234441; CHANDIGARH-Krishna 25005; Anand; Juneja 27417; LUCKNOW-Kaysons 48200; Sajavat 35344; Raj 32127 AHMEDABAD-Arodrape 463761; Selection 449605; Kombination 449501; SRINAGAR-Fabrico 77469; Bhat 72865; COIMBATORE- Kwality 43626; POONA-Indo-Foreign 663021; Kejals 33776.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Energy management is a way of life at Tata Steel... the very heart of TISTECH."

Mr A. Ahmad, Divisional Manager, Energy & Economy. He has a very clear perspective of the role of TISTECH in Tata Steel's concern for energy conservation and utilisation. In fact, he neatly sums up a very long story.

This is the story that started as early as 1928, when Tata Steel, the pioneer in many fields, also established an independent Energy & Economy Department.

As a result, years later in the 1970s when the world faced an energy crisis, Tata Steel was not caught unawares. It is no mean achievement that in a situation of spiralling fuel costs, Tata Steel actually saved on energy.

And these savings were passed on to fund a massive modernisation drive that in turn today is helping save more energy.

As the world is fast running out of energy reserves and the cost of energy is skyrocketing, industries across the world are exploring all possible ways and means of maximising energy conservation.

Today, the Tata Steel plant has the lowest specific energy consumption among Indian steel

The Energy & Economy Department building

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

plants. Despite the fact that India is lagging behind in the energy conservation race, Tata Steel is taking steps in the right direction.

To enforce these steps, Tata Steel, today, is producing power from washery rejects at Jamadoba. Running a waste recycling plant with 99% efficiency. Reducing coke consumption in blast furnaces and heat time in steel melting furnaces. Utilising top gas from the LD shop in soaking pits and reheating furnaces. Making high grade coke from low grade coal with stamp charging technology. Making sinter from blue dust that had been lying waste in the mines.

Because TISTECH ENERGY is more than an energy conservation programme in a steel plant. It is a pioneering attempt at evolving a technology that is relevant and an attitude that is contemporary. TISTECH ENERGY is a deep rooted commitment towards meeting the country's needs of today without compromising its tomorrow.

- Reduction of specific energy by 1.14% per annum
- Recovering 50% of blue dust fines to make sinter
- Utilising washery rejects to generate power
- Using LD top gas recovery system to save 8,000 KL of fuel oil
- Adopting KORF technology to double productivity in steel melting shops
- Using Concast to eliminate an entire stage of energy consumption

TATA STEEL
The first and still the foremost

Control room of the new Sinter Plant

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Thirst Togetherness

Limca in times of hot words
Limca in times of cold war

When you're hot and thirsty after a yelling session or a spell of silence... reach for zero-bacteria Limca with isotonic salts to quench your thirst.

RADEUS/PE/L/5-89

Limca®
is veri veri lime'n' lemon!
SERVE CHILLED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ARTIFICIALLY FLAVOURED. CONTAINS NO FRUIT JUICE OR FRUIT P
® THE REGISTERED TRADEMARK OF PARLE (EXPORTS) LTD. BOM

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

DOWRY DOGS

■ Dowry-harassed women can now take a cue from Rajasthan's Jogi community. The Jogis, a nomadic community tracing their origin to Rajputs, recently congregated in Jaisalmer district's Jerat village. The occasion: a marriage mart. The aim: to fix matrimonial alliances in traditional Jogi fashion.

One thing that became clear to those attending the congregation was that Jogi wedding customs have really gone to the dogs. The dowry accompanying the brides contained no refrigerators or scooters, but fully trained guard dogs and hunting dogs. Brides with ferocious dogs in tow would not make easy prey for greedy husbands. The dogs provide the brides with adequate insurance against harassment. And for anyone planning to go jogi-ing in Rajasthan, the standard warning should suffice: watch out for the dogs. One outcome of this custom is that among the Jogis you hear of no dowry deaths, only dowry dogs.

FOOT FINALE

■ Politicians of all hues and officials have clout which enables them to cut through corruption and the reams of government red tape. But the common man cannot get anything done without greasing a few palms along the way. This is the lubricant which makes government machinery run, but open corruption can sometimes rebound as a Madhya Pradesh official discovered recently. A naive villager of Paloha in Bareilly tehsil approached the official and placed an application before him for processing. The villager was a little nonplussed when the official made an unusual request: the papers could do with a little "weight", the official remarked, using the commonly-understood euphemism for bribe.

The simpleton from the village immediately removed a muddy shoe and placed it on the application as a paperweight. Feeling like a heel, the official had no option but to take care of the matter immediately.

LAUNDERING MONEY

■ The heart of old Delhi, Chandni Chowk, is known for many things. It is best known as north India's largest textile wholesale market, and for its jalebi and parantha restaurants. What's not known is that here you can literally 'launder' money, black or white. A local dhobi runs a money laundry where he replaces soiled or torn notes with crisp new bills.

The rates may vary—for a slightly soiled Rs 10 note he gives as much as Rs 9 in crisp new notes, whereas the exchange price for a Rs 50 note, half eaten by mice, is as low as Rs 23. The damaged notes are then cleaned, pasted together and exchanged at the Reserve Bank of India for their actual value.

If laundering money is profitable business around the world, it's no less so in Chandni Chowk. And our dhobi-entrepreneur strikes silver every day. His daily profit is staggering, it sometimes touches Rs 20,000. Not bad going for someone who normally washes dirty linen.

MAMMOTH PROTEST

■ Even up to a century or so ago, elephants used to be a common sight in the walled city of Delhi. The stately pachyderms were the chosen mounts of kings and noblemen. Elephants returned to old Delhi recently as part of a novel protest march by a citizens group protesting against the spate of unauthorised construction which was destroying the very character of Shahjehanabad, the graceful capital that Shahjehan built.

What better way to attract attention than a demonstration led by an elephant. Walking behind were members of the citizens group, all wearing elephant masks. The group had earlier sent the mayor 200 protest notes against such construction, but there had been no response. Would a trumpeting elephant draw the mayor's attention? The citizens group is waiting to see if they have made a huge impression on the mayor.

SWEET RELIEF

■ Hungry, marooned villagers of Maharashtra's Raigadh district recently came within a whisker of being bombarded by laddoos from the air. A senior official of the state Government, supervising the packaging of food meant for air-dropping, was horrified to see the catering contractor making laddoos for the flood victims. The enthusiastic contractor explained that he thought laddoos would make a better meal than a drab combination of puri-bhaji.

In time, the official dissuaded the contractor. What would the stranded flood victims think the Government was celebrating by dropping laddoos? And had the contractor thought of what the impact of landing would do to the laddoos? What good would a shattered laddoo be to a starving man? Finally the contractor saw reason, and the flood hit victims got dinner instead of just dessert.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For leaders of tomorrow in industry, government and commerce.

IN SEARCH OF EXCELLENCE

MANAGEMENT DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE ANNOUNCES ITS THIRD NATIONAL MANAGEMENT PROGRAMME

A unique and exclusive management programme specially designed for experienced officers and managers who have potential to be leaders and undertake ever-increasing managerial challenges. This distinctive programme offers:

- Content and pedagogy in Management Education suited to the experience and position of participants for assuming higher responsibilities.
- The programme in co-operation with the Indian Institutes of Management at Ahmedabad, Bangalore, Calcutta, and Lucknow, and Xavier Labour Relations Institute, Jamshedpur.
- The support of the Ministry of Personnel, Public Grievances and Pensions.
- A distinguished faculty drawn from the IIMs, and other famous institutions.
- The opportunity to interact with the country's high-flyers in industry and government.....all destined to play significant roles in their organisations.

PARTICIPANTS

Officers in all India Services and in Group 'A' Services of Central & State Governments, Managers in Public and Private Sectors of Industry, and Decision Makers in family owned enterprises.

QUALIFICATIONS

Graduates with a minimum of 50% marks, age not more than 35 years as on 1st July, 1990; and a minimum of five years' work experience.

DURATION

12 months at the Campus of the Management Development Institute at Gurgaon, near Delhi, and 3 months on project work at the sponsoring organisation.

DATE OF COMMENCEMENT

July 1, 1990.

SELECTION PROCEDURE

Intending applicants are required to take the Common Admissions Test (CAT) of the IIM's, followed by interviews. The CAT will be held at different centres all over India. The last date of receiving applications is October 27, 1989.

ACTION REQUIRED

Collect CAT forms on payment from any State Bank of India Branch listed in IIMs' advertisement for CAT, appearing on September 12, 1989.

For Prospectus and NMP Application form, write immediately to:

The Dean
NATIONAL MANAGEMENT PROGRAMME
MANAGEMENT DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE
Post Box 60, Mehrauli Road, Gurgaon-122 001

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cycle of Shame

CAN this ever change? This remorseless cycle of crisis and conflict, of scandal and shame, of desperation and deceit. It may have resurfaced in the fortnight that was, but now seems to have been with us forever. There is a permanence about the present situation that is sadly self-sustaining; one lie feeding on another, one crisis precipitating a larger one, one pebble amassing an avalanche.

Once again, there is a conflict of crisis, a leadership under renewed siege, the return of a scandal that refuses to let go. And once again, there is an aura of deceit and desperation as a government battles with its conscience—and its compulsions. It is now abundantly clear that Bofors is no ordinary issue. For, in the end, it is a scandal that has succeeded in tainting all of India—and all of its people.

More than any other issue, it is this that has destroyed the credibility of the present government—and raised the level of public cynicism. No matter how convincingly the Government reacts to each new revelation, it has now entrapped itself so intricately in its own contradictions that even the denials have become an embarrassment.

Bofors is no ordinary issue. In the end, it is a scandal that has succeeded in tainting all of India and all its people.

But finally, the shame, and the sham, reflects on us all. It is not, in the end, the Government of Rajiv Gandhi that has soiled its stature but the Government of India. What is more crucial is the fact that the Indian Government has allowed itself to be compromised by one foreign company—and that too for the sake of a mere Rs 64 crore. That is a cross every Indian will, perforce, have to bear.

The former chief of army staff has forcefully reminded us of something that seems to have lost its true meaning: 'national honour'. It is precisely that which is being compromised, and with such unrelenting regularity. At any other time, Bofors would not have been as incendiary an issue as it now is. But there is today a discernible lack of faith in the institutions that sustain—and protect—that fragile thing called national honour.

It is for this reason that Bofors is no longer an issue of corruption alone. It is an issue that affects this country's pride and its image in the larger world. And yet, the Government has adopted a strategy that is as fatal as it is facile: any attack on the prime minister is an attack on India. Now, with an election at hand, that strategy is already acquiring a sadly familiar theme; of conspiracies, of traitors and of foreign forces out to destabilise the country.

The real reason once again comes back to Bofors. Ensnared in a crisis of leadership, the Opposition has just one gun, albeit a powerful one, to fire at the ruling party—Bofors. But in their desperate bid for power, opposition leaders are using Bofors to denigrate not just the Government, but the armed forces and the effectiveness of the weapon itself. That is a despicable game.

And all this because of just one wretched gun, one single scandal, one cycle of shame that never seems to end. Bofors cost the country Rs 64 crore. The eventual price is already unbearably high.

—DILIP BOBB

There is today a growing lack of faith in the institutions that sustain that fragile thing called national honour.

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SRI LANKA FALLING APART

FOR a microsecond the roar of gunfire came as a relief, shattering the nervous silence of the night. A groan, and then the silence again. When a man is shot in the head with an M-16 rifle at 30 metres, he just drops dead. The body lay in the middle of Galle Road, Colombo's shopping pleasure strip studded with casinos and shopping malls. Soldiers jumped past streams of blood and poked it with gun-barrels. "Anyone who tries to take a picture will join this body in the ambulance," barked the officer.

It was a public execution, in full view of hundreds. The victim had been clutching a bag. Soldiers suspected it contained a bomb. First shot in the shoulder he lay writhing in pain. "Shoot him. Kill. Now," shouted the officer. A sharpshooter pulled the trigger. Five minutes later, the road was open and life back to normal.

The chilling execution typified the Sri Lanka of today. Not long ago, the island paradise was a virile country on the threshold of an economic miracle. It was called the new Korea, another Taiwan. Today it is compared with Cyprus, Lebanon, Cambodia, even Afghanistan. Sri Lanka is even more of a socio-ethnic powder keg. Centuries of racial hatred was blown into open warfare by Sinhala-dominated Sri Lanka's anti-Tamil policies. Ideological contradictions and economic imbalances have today created a macabre scenario where Tamil fights Sinhala, pro-India Tamil fights anti-Indian Tamil who in turn fights India, leftist Sinhala fights conservative Sinhala and so on: anarchy abounds.

With more than 5,000 dead in the past five weeks—bringing the toll for the year close to 10,000—Sri Lankans are locked in a hopeless war with themselves. Its economy, once booming at 5.5 per cent annual growth is now in ruins with a pedestrian growth of around 1.5 per cent and faces hyperinflation and atrophy of the three Ts: textiles, tea and tourism that bring most of its foreign exchange.

Corpses flow down the rivers, hang from the trees, smoulder by the roadside, emitting a stench that is a mix of burning flesh and rubber—evidence that most executions in Sri Lanka are not done

"We are all completely shattered. What kind of democracy is this? My country is becoming a graveyard."

SIRIMA KARIAWASSAM, 46
Ruling party legislator

She and husband Merril, a UNP leader, seemed headed for a bright political future till gunmen broke into his office and shot him dead.

Photographs by SHYAM TEKWANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

mercifully with rifles but through "necklacing": tie the arms, put a tyre round the neck, throw a tin of kerosene and a lighted cigarette. Last fortnight the state-owned Daily News reported that the price of fish was crashing. It chose not to give the reason why: people don't want to buy fish which are eating human bodies. And the Colombo commuters'—and schoolchildren's—favourite pastime now is to hang around the crowded bridge on the Kalani Ganga flowing through the town, looking for bodies. A drive along the countryside gives an idea of the tragedy: there is hardly a village without a few houses displaying white flags of mourning.

Cynicism overwhelm a once-boisterous people. Last fortnight The Island, the most important independent daily, left its editorial columns blank saying: "This column wishes to be silent in symbolic representation of the helplessness and despair which we are sure the whole country feels." Warns Vasudeva Nanayakkara, 50, the firebrand leader of the five-party opposition alliance in the parliament: "We are in a state of anarchy. There is a total breakdown of governance. For each death officially reported, three go unreported." Admits key Premadasa aide and Industry Minister Ranil Wickramsinghe: "Unless we stop the slide we could all drown in our own blood." But he claims things are looking up.

Last fortnight there was little evidence of that as death and destruction overshadowed everything—the possibility of an agreement on the IPKF withdrawal or the all-party conference to find a way out of the mess. In fact, even President Ranasinghe Premadasa's diaphanously veiled offer to the opposition middleground—and even to Janatha Vimukthi Peramuna (JVP) rebels—to share power was clearly an act of desperation. There were signs too of a rebellion building up within his own party. Many of the rebels were asking for a change openly. Said Agriculture Minister Lalith Athulathmudali: "It is time to think in terms of constitutional

Map by B.K. SHARMA

SHEKHAR GUPTA

"We are in a state of severe anarchy. There is a total breakdown of governance."

VASUDEVA NANAYAKKARA
Opposition Leader

"Doctors can't treat, teachers can't teach, lawyers can't defend. The very basis of our life is under threat."

NEELAN TIRUCHELVAM
Lawyer and Analyst

"Unless we stop the slide we'll drown in our own blood. But the Government is coming to grips."

RANIL WICKRAMSINGHE
Industry Minister

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DEATH ROLL

Some of the prominent Sri Lankans killed during the past two months

AMIRTHALINGAM

MAHESWARAN

YOGESWARAN

KARIAWASSAM

- September 12
Gladice Jayewardene
Former President J.R. Jayewardene's sister-in-law

- September 11
Prof. C. Paravatavithana
Moratuwa University vice-chancellor

- September 10
Kahawe Vimalasiri, Buddhist monk

- September 5
Merril Kariawassam
Former deputy minister of teaching and director of Rubber Research Institute

- September 1
Tannadassi Nayake Tehro
Buddhist monk

- August 29
Kanchana Abeypala
Civil liberties lawyer

- August 13
Kulasiri Smaratunge
Chief news editor, state-owned television network, Rupavahini

- August 9
K.G. Gunaratnam
Businessman and film producer

- July 31
Premakirthi De Alwis
Announcer and lyric writer, Sri Lanka Broadcasting Corporation

- July 23
Thevis Guruge, chairman, SLBC

- July 18
Uma Maheswaran, Leader, PLOTE

- July 13
V. Yogeswaran, Leader, TULF

- July 13
Appapillai Amirthalingam
Secretary-General, TULF

changes." The reference obviously was to the widely orchestrated opposition demand that Premadasa step down, bring in a Westminster-style government headed by a prime minister but consisting of all parties. "There is no hope for Sri Lanka with this current Government of mass unpopularity," says Nanayakkara.

While these political harangues go on, the country that rival politicians are vying so bitterly to rule is cracking from its very core. With all the ethnic, racial and economic tensions blowing up at the same time Sri Lanka today is an active volcano. Post-independence Sri Lanka deliberately followed a policy to exclude Tamils from better education and key jobs under what was later institutionalised as the Sinhala Only Act. The consequence was a Tamil diaspora that finally resulted in the northeastern insurgencies and the Cyprus-like divide. The strife in the Sinhala mainland is really economic in origin: left-wing analysts say that when the pro-West UNP took over in 1977, 10 per cent of Sri Lanka's population controlled 39 per cent of its wealth. Today they hold 51 per cent.

Cursed with such a history and imbalances it was only a matter of time before

"Life is like a hand grenade. You wait more than a second after pulling the pin and it is all over."

SEKHAR, 18
EPRLF fighter

He joined the Tigers five years ago when the Sri Lankan Army killed his father. Now he's totally committed to fighting them.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CHIDANAND RAJGHATTA

Corpses can be seen floating in rivers or burning with tyres round their necks. The last five weeks' toll: 5,000 killed.

the racial and economic tensions peaked. As it battles the Tigers and feverishly arms the rival Eelam People's Revolutionary Liberation Front (EPRLF) and the Eelam National Democratic Liberation Front (ENDLF), the IPKF has lost more men in the past six weeks than in the entire preceding year. In the Sinhala heartland of the south and the west, a trigger-happy army fights what could be termed a private battle, shooting suspected JVP extremists at will even as the JVP kills soldiers' families and burns their houses. Intermittent strikes have paralysed key sectors. Last fortnight hundreds of foreign visitors walked past empty immigration and customs counters with their passports unstamped as officers failed to turn up for work because of the JVP's week-long strike.

THE trains have not run more than a skeleton service for four months and schools and colleges have not held examinations for four years. Almost two-thirds of the country has been totally without electricity for more than six weeks because the power pylons near Matale were destroyed by the rebels and several attempts by the Government to re-erect them have been foiled. "My country is finished," said a senior bureaucrat, "the only people doing better than before are florists and coffin-makers."

But the overwhelming majority, not able to cash in on the macabre dance of death, is looking for options. One sort is visible in the long visa queues outside the western embassies every morning. "There are thousands of educated Sri Lankan women working in Pakistan as maid-servants," says a minister. Those with skills are going to more promising lands. "Society is being skimmed. The best people are going," he adds.

The JVP has been able to paralyse almost any arm of the Government at will. Stealing a march even over Mao, from whom its goateed leader Rohana Wijeweera learnt the art of throwing a government into chaos, the JVP has also succeeded in paralysing the professions. Laments internationally noted lawyer and political analyst Neelan Tiruchelvam: "Now lawyers can't defend, doctors can't treat, teachers can't teach. The very basis of our existence is being questioned." A minister goes a step further. He likens the state of his nation's "My shop is finished. So are my sons. Where do I go now?"

INDIRA ADIARUNACHALAM, 45
Velvettiturai mother

She was in her shop when a passing IPKF patrol was ambushed. Hell broke loose, a grenade hit her shop and her three sons are missing.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

institutions to "total quadriplegia".

Three civil liberties lawyers who took up habeas corpus cases of JVP suspects have been killed in the last month by pro-UNP vigilantes and last fortnight Prins Gunasekhara, the best-known civil liberties activist, went underground after his nephew and fellow lawyer Kanchana Abeypala was killed. Meanwhile, even the Government is finding it difficult to get lawyers to defend its officials. Most striking is the case of a superintendent of police, accused of highhandedness against JVP suspects, who sought government permission to hire a foreign lawyer as even the advocate general of Sri Lanka refused to defend him fearing retribution.

AMID such chaos, any group of people with arms can take the law into its own hands. And they do. Premadasa admitted as much last week when he told a gathering of the party's parliament group in Colombo: "The militants have arms in their hands. Representatives of all political parties have also secured arms for their security..." What he left unsaid was that many politicians have built their own private armies often going under fancy taxonomy like Yellow Scorpions, Black Panthers or Green Tigers. And since the JVP has already killed 17 tea garden superintendents to take over the sprawling estates the plantation managements too are hiring private defence groups.

Retribution is swift, brutal, and at the cost of innocent people. The guilty simply vanish into the jungles. The JVP gave the soldiers an ultimatum to either leave service or have their families killed. The army retaliated by putting up huge banners in red, warning the JVP that "for each one of ours, we will take 12 of you, including your families". And while the JVP continued to implement its threat, the soldiers retaliated. Each time a soldier or his family member was killed, scores of people from surrounding areas known to have even the slightest sympathy for the JVP were picked up. They ended up in the rivers, on the trees or burning by the roadside. Not surprisingly, many Sri Lankan police stations stock a generous supply of used tyres in their backyards.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

The best illustration of how total the free-for-all has become came last fortnight in the small town of Panadura, 25 km south of Colombo.

Premila Chandrakanti, a sprightly, 18-year-old clerk with the army was shot dead along with her parents, brother and sister in her house on the outskirts of the town, presumably by the JVP. The army struck in retaliation. The next morning 31 unidentified bodies, their hands tied behind their backs, some "necklaced", some shot through the head, were recovered from Panadura. A day later it turned out that the family had been killed by an estranged cousin seeking a share in the inheritance. Instant retribution has replaced justice and throughout the countryside, bodies smoulder in what are called "eternal fires": a crater where an army vehicle has been blown up by a rebel landmine is filled up by soldiers with the bodies of suspects and burnt.

The key author of this new code of retribution is Premadasa Udgampola, the 46-year-old deputy inspector general of police now based in Kandy. Often called the Dirty Harry of Sri Lanka, Udgampola has just one mission in life: to finish the JVP. "I have good reason. How can I forget July 28, 1988?" That was when the JVP raided his family home in Galle, killing his 78-year-old mother, brother, sister-in-law and two children. It is an open secret

"My family is wiped out. So are those of thousands of others in Sri Lanka. Can't Christ stop this madness?"

NALINI DIAS, 59
Panadura matriarch

An estranged nephew wiped out the family of her grand-daughter, an army clerk. The army, thinking it was the JVP's doing, killed 31 people.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"First you fight for revenge. Then you can't do anything else."

MANGALRAJA, 26
ENDLF leader

He runs the pro-India party's office in Batticaloa right next to Gandhi's statue. Soon he will be fighting the LTTE.

that he sought out each one of the killers and supervised their executions, slowly, painfully. "They showed me no mercy. I show them no mercy," he says.

Evidence of that lies scattered all over his desk, in his half-open drawer and behind his chair: dum-dum bullets, snub-nosed ones which, fired from his favourite .38 Browning, could shatter a human body.

NONE of these would pass the Geneva Convention rules for "humanitarian" killing. His drawer bristles with grenades of various sizes, a Uzi submachine-gun lies to his right, a light machine-gun next to his chair, and a commando knife under his pile of files.

"There are no second chances in this business," he says. But behind the merciless vendetta lies the realism of a family man. His wife and children are now safely tucked away in the US and he will join them "once my work here is over".

Far away in the Tamil-dominated northeast a similar vendetta controls the fortunes of the people. In early August a patrol of the Sikh Regiment was ambushed in Velvettiturai, 35 km north of Jaffna. Six soldiers died. That evening, the village, known for producing smugglers and top LTTE leaders, lay in a shambles, 120 houses reduced to burnt out shells and at least 50 people killed. "Not one of the dead belonged to the LTTE. They were all shot in cold blood," chafes N. Selventhran, chief of the local citizens' committee. The IPKF denies this, claiming six were militants and the rest were caught in the crossfire. The bottom line is: thrice as many civilians died as combatants.

No wonder then that in just three years, from being the West's favourite Third World showpiece, its free trade zones churning out products from Pierre Cardin labelled textiles to Noritake bone-china and its long beachline drawing tourists in droves, Sri Lanka is now nearly a basket case. Estimates of exchange reserves range between one week's imports and a fortnight's. "Everything depends on the IMF going ahead with the standby agreement to provide the money we need now," says economist Sonali Deraniyagala at the Colombo-based International Centre for Ethnic Studies.

Inflation is running above 20 per cent (versus 14 per cent last year). The value of the local rupee has slid for the past three weeks, from 30 per dollar to 39 (three years ago the rate was 25). The black-market rate is 44, exactly what the IMF wants Sri Lanka to devalue its currency to. Many of the foreign entrepreneurs who crowded the free trade zones have fled—many of them Indian. And even if factories function despite strikes, harbours don't, holding up shipments for weeks. "I shudder to think what buyers will do next year," says a well-known textile exporter. Tea auctions have been erratic too. "To destroy us, India need send no armies. It only needs to manipu-

"We're waiting to be 15. Then we will use guns, not leaflets."

JAYANTAN, 10, and PARANDAMAN, 12
Velvettiturai cousins

They have become experts in dodging IPKF patrols while going about their daily routine of distributing rebel leaflets in the city.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

late the international price of tea by a rupee," says Minister for Plantation Industries Gamini Dissanayake.

The third major exchange-earning sector, tourism, has been predictably devastated. For a whole decade, as tourist arrivals swelled (to 300,000 in 1983) and brought in $ 120 million a year, vast sections of Sri Lankan society, particularly along the coastline, merrily feathered their nests with the western tourists' travellers' cheques. Today, the entire 150-km strip of hotels and beach resorts along the south-western coast lies depressingly vacant, wiping out this new rich class with little by way of economic resilience and plenty of loans to pay off.

THERE is no hope at all for lesser entrepreneurs. Walking listlessly along the picture-postcard drive to Kandy, the ancient Sinhala capital whose history and the Temple of the Tooth Relic make it a must on the tourist itinerary, Hettiarachige Ranasinghe and his pair of porcupines, Chutti and Patty, make a curious sight. In better days Ranasinghe made a spartan living by charging tourists Rs 10 each to be photographed with his prickly pets. Today there are no tourists and no pictures. "How long can I wait? Another month. Then I will perhaps eat up the porcupines and go to Colombo to look for a job."

Desperation. That is what drives the average Sri Lankan to panic stations. In a production-based economy, a steep fall in the value of the currency would not have affected the poorest of the poor to such a degree. Not so in Sri Lanka with its trade-based economy. Much of the country's requirements are imported, from rice to ketchup and from nuts and bolts to handcuffs (Smith &

"You get no second chances. You either kill, or get killed."

PREMADASA UDGAMPOLA, 50
Police DIG at Kandy

Militants wiped out part of his family in July 1988. He now has one mission: to wipe out the militants. He is called Sri Lanka's Dirty Harry.

"Monks have even gone to war for Sinhala pride. We don't back killings but we are for Sinhala glory."

NAPAL SUMANSARA, 21
Monk from Matara

His house has been burnt as his brother is a soldier busy killing JVP activists. Yet he supports Sinhala chauvinism.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Wesson) and each time the rupee falls a notch, people have to pay more. The rising cost of defence purchases is also draining resources—whatever is left. Says Athulathmudali, former defence minister: "Once we took pride in constantly being able to keep our defence expenditure within 1 per cent of the GNP. Today it is running close to four." Says a retired Sri Lankan general: "Defence costs money. In green dollar bills."

GIVEN its peculiar economy and social structure, Sri Lanka's tragedy has many unique facets, the most tragic of them, ironically, stemming from its phenomenal rate of literacy (86 per cent, compared to India's 36 and Pakistan's 21). This resulted in the churning out of a new and literate generation with not enough industry or white collar jobs to keep them occupied. The first protest against this came with the first uprising of the JVP in the early '70s, crushed by Sirimavo Bandaranaike with some Indian help and at an enormous cost of 20,000 lives. After the right-wing UNP came to power, mushrooming free trade zones that employed thousands and Singapore-type economic changes helped put the lid on the socio-economic tinderbox for some time. But they could not contain the pressure forever.

"This generation of frustrated, overqualified, underemployed Sri Lankans is being supplemented by a new one that is overaged and underqualified as well," says a senior university don who eagerly opens his mailbox twice each day to check if the letter from a US university—"the most important thing in my life today"—confirming his year-long fellowship, has arrived. For four years, not one person has graduated, as Sri Lanka's eight universities and 212 high schools have remained mostly shut. Medical colleges have been paralysed for five years. "We have had no new doctors, no new lawyers, no new engineers, no new teachers for at least four years. And the ones we had are going away to safer climes," rues a senior government official. Hopelessly short of doctors for its largely state-funded health care system, Sri Lanka is now employing final-year medical students as doctors.

It is from this vast mass of idle, frustrated and sullen students that the JVP picks its bloodthirsty new converts, the defence forces their trigger-happy troops or the suspects for torture chambers, and the streets their new criminals.

"The problem is not just to survive economically but how to survive without suspicion," says Ranjan Gunasekhara (not his real name), a final-year law student for four years now. "You hang around the street all day doing nothing, and sooner or later the police come for you. And once they give you the treatment, you go to the JVP asking for weapons for revenge," he adds, explaining why the rebel ranks have swelled despite their confused ideology. Gunasekhara has tried to sit for his examinations three times, only to return home without writing out a line. "The vice-chancellor went on TV asking us to come for exams, commandos guarded the institutions. But they don't accompany you from home to college," says Gunasekhara. Adds Minoli, a fellow law student: "You've done this thrice over, you're sick of your notes." Both, like thousands others, have tried getting into Indian universities. But they are overage for most. The others want them to begin from first year onwards. The Sri Lankan campus lexicon now has an addition to flotsam and jetsam: dropsam.

Caught in the same crossfire is the media, particularly the state-owned Sri Lanka Broadcasting Corporation and Rupavahini, the television network. Three top executives of the two organisations have been killed. So has the Government's chief censor in the brief period of press censorship in July. The JVP said it was punishing them for purveying "anti-people" propaganda and for denying the free press its rights. But the free press is far from enthused. In the past three months at least a dozen senior journalists have grabbed job offers abroad, many more are negotiating and those who can't get employment abroad are thronging western embassies looking for scholarships. "Anyone, just anyone who does some political writing wants to get away. We are running for our lives," said one of Sri Lanka's best-known newsmen last week as he went through a series of farewell parties for him.

Many of the national television and broadcasting corporation employees have quit, most refuse to report for work. Result: for more than a fortnight now, most of the key jobs have been manned by soldiers. Some of them even double as television newsreaders fumbling, stuttering, and yet blabbering out pages of propaganda interspersed with scores of nervous sideways glances. A naval commodore is in charge of the television network. No surprise, professionals say, that the newsreaders and anchorpersons seem all at sea.

Despite all the mayhem, Colombo's subterranean jetset has found ways to live with the times, and continue living it up. To get around the night-curfew—sentries have shot too many violators without asking questions for anyone to take chances—parties now begin at nine and end at four in the morning when curfew ends. The casinos are doing more business: players have to stay on till four. Two of the major hotels with casinos are offering free coffee at 4 a.m.

But for much too large a majority of Sri Lankans, the night brings terror and the question: will they wake up alive the next morning? The day brings the drudgery of staying at home because of the strikes, or the option of defying the strikes and risking one's life. One of Premadasa's ministers put it most aptly: "What can I do except count every day as my nation falls apart."

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Sri Lanka

"Many will be thrown to the wolves if India abandons in a hurry."

VARATHARAJA PERUMAL, 40
EPRLF Chief Minister

The Tigers call him a puppet. India views him as a moderate. He will be the LTTE's target once the IPKF quits.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Rajiv on return from Belgrade: playing it down

BHAWAN SINGH

THE BOFORS ISSUE

More Questions Than Answers

FOR Rajiv Gandhi and his government, the Bofors issue has become a recurring nightmare. No sooner had the dust from the CAG report settled, when former army chief, General K. Sundarji, fired a broadside that's still creating shockwaves.

Sundarji's devastating revelations could not have come at a worse time for the Government, when Rajiv was readying to leave for Belgrade. One of his close aides rushed an advance copy of the INDIA TODAY interview to Rajiv, just hours before he emplaned for the Non-Aligned Movement's Conference. At a hurriedly-called conference with key ministers and trusted bureaucrats, it was decided that the Defence Ministry would be entrusted with the task of damage-control.

Rajiv skirted the issue in his pre-departure press conference, but it was clear that Sundarji's statements had exploded like an unexpected bombshell. There was a clear division of opinion within the Government. One view, mainly supported by ruling party politicians, was to take a tough line against Sundarji and resurrect the conspiracy and destabilisation theory. The contrary view, supported by senior bureaucrats, was to downplay the revelations. Rajiv supported the softer line.

By then, however, ruling party politicians like J. Vengal Rao had already launched attacks on Sundarji, even demanding his arrest under the Official Secrets Act. This quickly stopped when it became clear that Rajiv had decided not to fan the embers any further.

But it was clear from the stinging editorials in a majority of the national dailies that Sundarji's statements had raised serious and fresh questions about the Bofors deal and the manner in which the Government had handled the cancellation threat to get the Swedish arms manufacturer to reveal the recipients of the Rs 64-crore pay-off.

Even the more conservative dailies were scathing in their opinion. The Economic Times stated: "The least that the prime minister should do is immediately seek a fresh mandate on this (the cover-up) issue," a stand that was echoed by the normally staid Hindu which opined: "After General Sundarji's revelations—especially of the cover-up initiated at the very top—no leader, party, or government in a democratic system could legitimately hang on to office on the plea that no personal wrongdoing has been proved." The Tribune asked if there were any fig leaves left for the Government to shelter behind. However, The Times of India and The Telegraph raised questions about Sundarji's motives and the timing of his revelations, which the general answers vehemently (see box).

Sundarji Replies

THE telephone never stops ringing in the Krishnaswami Sundarji household in Coonoor in Tamil Nadu. And it's always a press reporter seeking a follow-up interview, or responses from the retired army chief on the Defence Ministry's hollow rebuttal of his revelations on the Bofors gun deal cover-up. The general responds with the Walter Scott couplet about people getting entangled in their own webs of deceit. Poetry apart, Sundarji commented at length on the main points raised by the Government's rejoinder to his interview.

On former defence secretary S.K. Bhatnagar's remark that Sundarji's note on the security implications of cancellation was cryptic and cursory.

If my note was not comprehensive enough, as they are now claiming, they would either have told me orally to enlarge on these aspects or written back and said please make it more comprehensive. No such thing happened. Why send it back to me? I had an office copy. That's not the way any government functions. This is the first time that one of my notes came back. And if amplification was needed, why should I be such a nut to return the same note verbatim?

It was a one-page note in which I had baldly stated my considered opinion. One page does not mean it was ill considered, and 600 pages would not have made it better considered. When a (service) chief gives his advice to a civil servant or a minister, he doesn't load that opinion with background clutter of analysis or with technical jargon which is seldom comprehended. If, on the other hand, I was discussing it with my army commanders then I would have dealt at great length with the nuts and bolts, issues like threat assessment or relative strengths assessment. What is important is the bottom line. Whether they had faith in the man giving the bottom line is more important than 600 pages or 25 appendices. If they have faith they must take his advice. The day they lose faith they must sack him and find somebody else.

If at that time they had told me that my threat assessment was poor or not acceptable, I would have quit, because no self-respecting chief can continue to

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sundarji: sticking to his guns

SHYAM TEKWANI

"Proof of the pudding is in the eating. Where are the names?"

function after his professional judgement has been questioned.

On the Defence Ministry's claim that there were serious tensions on the border with Pakistan and China.

By April 1987 the crisis with Pakistan was all over. The Pakistan delegation had visited India (in early February), and mutual pull-back of troops was in progress. So in my opinion the security scenario was not highly dangerous. I took these into account and felt it (cancellation) was a risk worth-taking. At one time I thought it (refusal to cancel) might be for the legal and other implications. It was only with the passage of time, when I saw their very firm handling of the cover up, that the scales started falling off my eyes and perception started to increase that, dammit, it must have been part of the game.

On why he did not resign at that time.

My answer is simple. My business is security and if in my judgement security was endangered, then a resignation would be de rigueur. If I had said that the contract should not be cancelled because we could not afford to risk an 18-month to two-year delay, and the Government had insisted on cancelling the contract, against my advice, then it would have been incumbent on me to resign because security would have been affected. But in this case, it was the other way round. By not taking my advice to threaten to cancel the contract, the risk was minimised.

On why he decided to speak out now.

The step I have taken, of speaking out, is a major step. I knew there would be dust, fall out and damage to everybody. Only when one is convinced, to the extent one can be convinced without total proof in one's hand, that there is reasonable certainty of skullduggery, or malfeasance, only then would one be correct in taking this major step.

Earlier I had lingering doubts about the integrity of the whole thing (gun deal). But when The Hindu published those papers in June or July of 1988, many of my doubts disappeared. When the Government said we will still get the names, I waited with a faint hope. But during the last session of parliament, it became evident that there was no seriousness about getting the facts, no hope of the names coming out. At this point of time I became more or less convinced that I would have to speak out.

Besides that, a broad brush smear campaign was launched against many of us connected with the selection of the gun system, and innuendos started that many of us were involved in making money or in succumbing to improper pressure from the Government. The CAG report put me in a spot by saying there was inadequate justification for my change of view, hinting at malafide or poor judgement. I was also quite dismayed by the fact that the Opposition was knocking the quality of the gun as an election gimmick. If they use the corruption issue to hit at the Government, it's no skin off my nose, but knocking a good gun, sowing doubts in the minds of the troops about the efficacy of the gun system, is a mean, dishonourable thing to do. It did untold damage and I had to make sure that it stopped. This is the reason why I spoke out when I did.

On the Defence Ministry's claim that it was the prime minister who first suggested the cancellation of the Bofors gun deal.

Maybe he was the first to officially articulate it. But there are no medals for suggesting it first. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. Where are the names? Have we got them?

On the denials by S.K. Bhatnagar and N.N. Vohra.

Bhatnagar and Vohra are not telling the truth. Vohra has tried to be smart, he has covered his backside, theek hai. How long does it take to directly say that he had not told Sundarji this, like Bhatnagar has said. But once you decide to tell a falsehood to save your skin or to advance yourself or whatever, what is to prevent you from coming out with one more falsehood? Why should he have any qualms? It's my word against theirs.

On the charge that he is the first ex-army chief to violate the Official Secrets Act.

When I spoke out, it was not done light-heartedly, but after a great deal of agonising and with a very sad heart. If it is indeed the first time that an ex-chief was forced to talk in this vein, I might add that this was also the first time perhaps that a government has behaved in such a manner to force him to speak out.

On the Defence Ministry contention that his July 13, 1987 note "indicated that cancellation would leave a large void in vital artillery support to field formations...."

My note does not contain any such reference to a large void in artillery support. I did not say so, those are not my words. Maybe it's their conclusion. And when the Defence Ministry says that there were larger security aspects beyond what I had pointed out, it's clear to me what the game is: to obfuscate the issue by producing this tissue of lies. Oh what a tangled web we weave, when first we practise to deceive.

—RAMINDAR SINGH in Coonoor

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Acqua Minerale Bisleri uses the same silver system used by NASA to purify water aboard space shuttles.

NASA scientists selected a silver system to purify drinking water aboard space shuttles after testing 23 different methods. Acqua Minerale Bisleri (AMB) also found silver to be the most effective water-purifying agent. Silver sterilised water inhibits the growth of bacteria through the oligodynamic effect. It is further treated with special anti-microbial processes and packed in disposable bottles. AMB is 100% pure drinking water. It is safer than boiled and filtered water which can get contaminated. In fact AMB is so safe that you can confidently give it not only to everyone at home but also to the sick and the convalescent and even to infants. Carry it with you while travelling too. On earth. Or in space.

RADEUS/PE/AMB/3-89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Defence Ministry's rejoinder, that the chief of army staff's advice was only one input among many others, nonetheless did confirm that:

▶ Sundarji sent letters in June and July 1987, suggesting cancellation of the contract to extract the names of the pay-off recipients and said that it was "an acceptable security risk".

▶ That the July 4 meeting, at which Sundarji claims the prime minister upbraided defence ministry officials for threatening Bofors, did take place.

▶ That Lt-General H. Kaul did inform the then defence secretary, S.K. Bhatnagar, about a Rs 2.5-crore bribe offer made to him by one of the competing companies.

Intriguingly, the Government's seven-page version of events avoids mention of the role played by Arun Singh, then minister of state for defence, who resigned on this issue. There are also other gaps and several unanswered questions:

■ Government: The idea of the possible cancellation of the Bofors contract had emanated from the prime minister himself on June 4, 1987, following receipt of the report of the Swedish national audit bureau confirming the pay-offs.

The evidence shows that starting June 16, the Defence Ministry made several written requests to Bofors demanding details about the commissions, but none of these—despite Bofors' virtual refusal to give the information—even hints at cancellation. The picture gets murkier, for on June 4, the prime minister had held a meeting with opposition leaders on the Bofors issue. BJP leader L.K. Advani has now stated that when the participants suggested that the Government cancel the contract to get at the names, Rajiv's reaction was "sharply negative". His version has official confirmation. Defence Minister K.C. Pant referred to it in Parliament on August 6, 1987, when he reiterated that opposition leaders had been taken "into confidence" on June 4 on the reasons for not cancelling the contract. Contradicting this, the ministry now suggests that the prime minister had not made up his mind because, on that day, June 4, 1987, he ordered a "complete evaluation" of the implications of cancellation. Sundarji also stated in his interview that informal talks on cancellation had started within the ministry as early as May 1987.

■ Government: In deciding against cancellation, the Government could not go by the sole advice of the chief of army staff (COAS) because "the national security is much larger than its military aspect...The views of the COAS, though important, cannot alone determine national security decisions."

No matter how valid this point, this is perhaps the first time that the Government has used this argument. Throughout the Bofors debate, the Government had consistently maintained that because Sundarji was the chief it gave his opinion maximum weightage while selecting the gun. But in cancelling it, his opinion had to be weighed against other factors. The Government does not disclose what the other factors were. Earlier, the advice of the chief was the only factor. Pant averred repeatedly in Parliament: "You have to respect the opinion of whoever is the chief" and "it is the chief's opinion which prevails". Ironically, the Government is now doubting the judgement of the man it had earlier presented as the main arbiter of national security.

> Intriguingly, the Government's seven-page version of events avoids mention of the role played by Arun Singh, who resigned on this issue.

■ Government: Sundarji's note of June 13 was returned to him for re-examination because it lacked "any evaluation of precise security implications, the attendant risks etc....in relation to probable threat scenarios". A month later he again submitted the same note.

Sundarji vehemently denies this. As chief, he says, he had given the army's considered opinion on the impact of cancellation on defence preparedness. If the Government had then questioned his professional judgement, he says he would have resigned. His views had earlier been sought in writing, and if additional details were sought, in writing, he would have been glad to provide them.

■ Government: "It has to be borne in mind that in the first half of 1987 there were serious tensions on our borders with Pakistan. Developments on our border with China were also causing concern."

Until January 1987, there were definite tensions with Pakistan, but by February 4, high-level delegations of the two countries had met and signed an agreement promising to de-escalate and pull back forces to peacetime locations. By end-April 1987, Sundarji says the crisis had wound down and he took the threats from Pakistan and China into consideration before concluding that cancelling the contract would be an acceptable risk.

■ Government: There was no assurance that such a risk (cancellation) would yield names of the pay-off beneficiaries.

There did appear to be a reasonable assurance. Minister of state for defence Shivraj Patil told the Rajya Sabha in mid-August 1987, that "Bofors vice-president Bertil Bredin had been willing to reveal, orally, the names of persons who received the commission, but not in writing as the Government wanted". On August 14, 1987, the prime minister said: "Bofors were willing to tell us something orally but not in writing... What is the use of telling us something orally?" This gives credence to the account that as late as July 3, Bredin visited the Ministry of Defence where N.N. Vohra hinted that top Bofors officials may have to be summoned to Delhi to discuss cancellation and blacklisting. The Government does not deny this meeting, nor does it deny the meeting called by Rajiv the following day at which it was decided not to summon the Bofors officials, but rather to try and get them to appear before the Joint Parliamentary Committee.

■ Government: Bofors was "addressed afresh on 16th July,... to furnish specific replies to the questions already put to them. This refutes the allegation that the prime minister turned down any move proposed by the Defence Ministry officers to coerce Bofors."

The account of the coercion tactics given by Sundarji simply refers to threats to cancel the contract to get at the names. But throughout the Government's correspondence with Bofors that is available, there is absolutely no mention of the cancellation threat. These same letters testify that simply writing letters to Bofors had failed to elicit results because of Bofors' refusal to cooperate. The July 16, 1987 letter, contains no threat of cancellation. "We must once again urge you furnish the entire information, asked for on June 16," the letter concludes. The troubling questions that still remain are: if the idea of cancelling the contract had emanated from no less a person than the prime minister, then why is this option reflected nowhere in the published record, which includes the letters sent by the Ministry of Defence to Bofors? And if the prime minister's cancellation option is a serious one, when was it dropped—on June 4 or July 4? And who made the final decision?

—RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB POLICE

Uniformed Brutality

The shocking torture of two women in Batala has once again made it clear that in Punjab the security forces continue to transgress the law.

POLICE atrocities piled on terrorist massacres have numbed sensitivities and thickened hides in Punjab. But from time to time, the dam of despair bursts and the anger spills out into the streets. Last fortnight, when the Punjab Police showed the ugly side of its face by inflicting torture on two married women—one a mother of four and the other of three—the dam burst once again.

People in all corners of the state gave vent to their frustration by staging dharnas outside police stations. So complete was the condemnation that a usually unyielding administration had to transfer the official held responsible, the SSP Batala Gobind Ram, throwing anti-terrorist activity in the area completely out of gear.

Governor Siddhartha Shankar Ray told INDIA TODAY that he proposed to get a senior woman officer from Delhi to prevent excesses on women: "I have spoken to Buta Singh about sending Kiran Bedi to Punjab." Still, Ray defended Gobind Ram, saying he had done excellent anti-terrorist work at Batala, but added that he did not condone his methods. Said he: "I am having him out of Punjab, like three, four others who have become sadists due to the extraordinary situation."

But even the unique situation in the state does not justify the treatment meted out to the two women, Gurdev Kaur and Gurmeet Kaur, both in their 30s. On August 21, the two women were picked up from their office in an Amritsar finance company, where they worked as clerks, and taken to a closed factory in Batala, now used as a police interrogation centre. According to Gurdev Kaur, Gobind Ram was among those who hit them with a stick, demanding information on the whereabouts of their husbands Kulwant Singh and Mahel Singh, both suspected of terrorist activity. Says she: "When we said we didn't know, we were whipped and made to lie down with four men standing on a wooden plank which was placed across our thighs."

While Gurdev Kaur was released the next evening, Gurmeet Kaur—a mother of three, whose husband has been missing for the last five years—went through the ordeal for another week. Both are now bed-ridden and in excruciating pain. Worse is the psychological stress, the memories, and the constant fear they live in. Says Gurmeet Kaur: "At one stage I thought they were going to skin me alive."

According to Gurdev Kaur, her husband, Kulwant Singh, was an officer in a bank. He was deeply religious but had nothing to do with terrorism. But repeated stints of illegal detention saw him absconding two years ago. "We have not seen him since," she sobbed, adding: "My four children (the youngest is seven years old) can testify to it."

The Jathedar of the Akal Takht, Professor Darshan Singh Ragi—who had spearheaded the campaign for Gobind Ram's removal—declared that the episode would make anyone familiar with Indian culture revolt. Said he: "How does the police expect an Indian woman to sign the death warrant of the father of her children, howsoever bad he might be? Details of the torture send shivers down my spine."

The public outcry over the Batala outrage was fuelled further by the fact that just in May this year, a firm commitment had been given by the administration that women would not be detained in police stations in order to force their male relatives overground. Ray made this promise after two teen aged girls—Surinder Kaur and Narinder Kaur—were harassed (one of them allegedly molested

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Gurmeet Kaur with relatives: brutal outrage

Gurmeet Kaur and Gurdev Kaur were beaten up to extract information about their husbands...

Darshan Singh Ragi on

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Gurdev Kaur: victim of torture

...But so far, the only action taken is that the Batala SSP Gobind Ram has been transferred.

NIRMAL STUDIO

dharna: strong condemnation too) by some policemen in Majitha. This episode had even embarrassed the Indian Government abroad. It was taken up with the Indian Embassy in Washington by a US Congressman, Don Burton—described as an "anti-Indian politician" in official correspondence—who considered it a grave human rights violation. So when the Batala incident came to light, the Inspector General (internal security), R.L. Wadhwa, reiterated that instructions had already been issued that women would not be called to police stations for questioning. "Severe action will be taken against the delinquents," he announced.

BUT it seems unlikely that aside from a transfer any disciplinary action will be taken against the policemen concerned. Particularly as the Director-General of Police, K.P.S. Gill—considered to be favourably disposed towards Gobind Ram—now says that they had definite information that the two women were planning acts of terrorism. Sube Singh, Inspector General (crime), added that Gurmeet Kaur's name figured in three cases, including the bomb blast in Batala's Chakri Bazar some months ago, while another senior officer claimed that the husbands of the two were the "think-tanks" of a well-known terrorist group.

Even before the furore over the Batala outrage could die down, another incident of torture came into public view. Baldev Singh of Shapur village in Amritsar district, and a salesman in a cooperative society, was picked up by the Chowk Mehta police on April 18. He was released following a high court order, then again whisked away by the police. Again, the high court intervened and he was finally produced before a judge on August 25. He told a tale of brutal torture which has left him a virtual skeleton with broken legs. The court ordered his immediate hospitalisation. The police on its part gave no official explanation for his illegal detention, though sources said that it was a case of mistaken identity.

Police highhandedness obviously stems from the simple fact that they can get away with it. Take the Brahmpura incident in December 1986, when it was proved beyond doubt that a CRPF posse had used excessive force while searching a village and even molested a woman. "Three CRPF jawans were picked up for punishment. A lance-naik was demoted two ranks for three years, two increments of a head constable were withheld for two years and the third was dealt with in the orderly room by the commandant. Isn't this a mockery of the rule of law?" asks a senior official. There have, in fact, been about a dozen magisterial inquiries in which police officials have been indicted. All have been swept under the carpet.

While the police get away scot-free, even those proved innocent continue to suffer in Punjab's hellfire. Take the fate of the released Jodhpur detenus. They are precariously placed between the devil and the deep sea. The police still harbour suspicions about them, while the terrorists believe that having been jailed for long, they can be banked upon for support.

The upshot: at least a dozen of the 300 detenus released from Jodhpur Jail after five years of internment have absconded due to police harassment. Just last week, Gurmukh Singh of Sapadhi village in Ludhiana district wrote to the governor that his son, Darshan Singh, released in November last year, had left home due to persistent police pressure.

Another former detainee, Avtar Singh from Sur Singh village in Amritsar district, wrote to Ray last month: "I have not yet got a penny against the promised payment of Rs 3,000. I wish to bring to your notice that I am picked up at random by the police. Last time the police took me and kept me in illegal custody without any case from July 28 to August 7...I seek your help." The Raj Bhawan ordered the police to submit a report on the case within five days. A month has passed since then.

And in all likelihood Avtar Singh will never get a reply as many key officials in Punjab still believe that an eye for an eye is the only way to curb terrorism, regardless of the fact that a few innocents may get blinded in the cross-fire. The governor's adviser, J.F. Ribeiro, says that it was a mistake to have sent Gobind Ram to Batala in the first place. Says he: "I am against brutalisation of the police force."

Unfortunately, Ribeiro has been asked to keep his hands off the police department; only intelligence reports and transfer proposals of police officers are sent up to him. And in the case of Gobind Ram, even his transfer file was not sent to Ribeiro.

This was in all probability done at Gill's insistence. Earlier too, when Gobind Ram was in the dock for beating up village sarpanches in Batala district, Gill had backed him to the hilt: he had reportedly threatened to quit if Gobind Ram was shifted. This time too Gill was apparently in favour of delaying his transfer in order to drive home the administration's invincibility.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gill dismisses charges of brutality and insists that aberrations are limited to a few police stations. He also says that instructions have been issued that no one should be booked under the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act without prior clearance from the Crime Branch at Chandigarh. Following this, the number of cases under the Act has come down from 291 in January to 140 in August. Gill's explanation for innocents also getting hurt at times: since terrorism is in the category of "blind" crime in which witnesses are unwilling to talk, a large number of people have to be questioned. He declares blandly: "By international standards we are running a very humane operation."

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Baldev Singh in hospital: illegal detention

If that is indeed true, then basic human values have been forgotten in Punjab. The police must, of course, get tough with the terrorists, but as an official says: "It must always be a civilised response to an uncivilised act." One of the laws of modern civilisation is that a person is considered innocent till proven guilty. And till they are indeed shown to be guilty, the agony of the two mothers, so brutally beaten at Batala, will continue to be Punjab's shame.

—KANWAR SANDHU

SODHI REPORT

Hitting Hard

IN February this year, Justice S.S. Sodhi of the Punjab and Haryana High Court went on a routine inspection tour of Amritsar Central Jail. It turned out to be a shocking experience. Appalled by the complaints he heard from undertrials there, he sent a copy of his report to Punjab Governor S.S. Ray in April.

Ray reportedly called for immediate action and the report was referred to the Police and Jails Department. It has not been made public, but INDIA TODAY has procured a copy. The contents are highly damaging to the police.

Many of the 780 undertrials in the high security Central Jail, Amritsar, Sodhi reports, complained that before being formally arrested, they were invariably illegally detained by the police for a couple of weeks. During that period, the undertrials were tortured and money extracted from them. Several also alleged that they were falsely implicated.

Undertrials complained that when they were granted bail by court, the police would rearrest them in some new case. Other undertrials, though granted bail, chose not to leave the jail as they could not meet the demands for money made by the police.

Several undertrials, the judge found, were languishing in jail because the police had delayed issuing chalaans against them.

The report also questions the basis of some arrests. Some undertrials charged with raising anti-national slogans, Sodhi observes, were old people who "appeared quite incapable of committing such an offence".

Justice Sodhi: shocking findings

And referring to the 700 cases pending in the Additional Designated Court, Amritsar, Sodhi says: "Delay blurs the distinction between acquittal and conviction, which is most unfortunate."

Of equal concern is the poor conviction rate—eight out of the 364 cases under the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act disposed of by the Additional Designated Court in two years. One reason, Sodhi says, could be that witnesses are afraid. But the poor record also raises questions about the investigations and suspicion about "innocent persons too having been implicated."

The cases registered under the Arms Act and for harbouring terrorists and raising anti-national slogans, the judge notes, are significant. "A stereotyped set pattern of their contents emerges, almost as if there is a prescribed proforma where names etc are filled in. What is more, one has to strain one's credibility to accept the version given in these reports."

Coming as it does from a person held in high esteem in legal circles, Sodhi's report is damning. The police have some serious explaining to do.

Meanwhile, a Supreme Court lawyer, R.K. Garg, and a former Congress(I) state general secretary, Gurbir Singh, have challenged last year's 59th Constitution Amendment Bill which authorises the Union Government to declare an emergency in Punjab in the event of internal disturbances. Garg argued that applying the emergency provisions only to Punjab permanently alienates its people from the rest of the country. And S.S. Grewal, former advocate general of Punjab, said: "If without such draconian laws, the police can unleash such terror, the situation if emergency is declared is hard to comprehend." He was hardly alone in entertaining that fear.

—KANWAR SANDHU

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's hard to arrive fresh after a long flight.

With Air Canada it's hard not to.

Experienced air travellers know that after a long flight, you do not always feel as fresh as a daisy. No matter how comfortable the seats are, or how attentive the service, flying does take it out of you. The secret is to take it easy. And the most helpful airline to do just that is Air Canada. Our entire cabin personnel is Canadian. They aren't just trained to be relaxed, informal and friendly — they're born that way. Which means you won't be fussed over, unless you want to be. Even our meals are specially designed to ease your flight. Vintage wines with your meals, a wide selection of finest spirits — the drinks are on us. Our entertainment? It's second to none — in fact, many of our films are first runs. And music, many channels for your selection. We offer you a choice of 18 newspapers and magazines from all over the world. No matter how far you're going, you'll always feel at home on Air Canada... A breath of fresh air.

A BREATH OF FRESH AIR

Air Canada

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/AC/7643a

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Meet Madhura, a woman entrepreneur." Initially, she endures it. Then gently but firmly she admonishes him. "Please introduce me as an entrepreneur. They can see I am a woman."

(India Today, July 31, 1988)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Read today, quoted tomorrow

India Today on Women's Issues

Piercing. The exploitative shroud. The discriminatory purdah. Punching holes. In monolithic myths.

Giving voice. To a gathering storm. Awakening and emancipating. Discovering itself anew.

Fingers on the pulse of an elemental force. That is sweeping the land. Running governments. And launching businesses. Designing clothes and policing cities.

Chronicling change. Fortnight after fortnight.

Always, looking events straight in the eye.

And telling the story with style, clarity and credibility.

Reaching out to those who know the difference between being informed and being well-informed.

Subscription Offer

A special Speed Delivery system gets you your copy well on time. Safely home-delivered. At Rs 2/- off per copy for a one-year period. Mail a cheque/demand draft for Rs 192 (Rs 197 for a non-Delhi cheque) for 12 months' subscription payable to 'Living Media India Ltd.' and address the envelope to Living Media India Ltd., P.O. Box 29, New Delhi-110 001.

INDIA TODAY

Keeps you ahead

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

As dusk descends on Kundam, a village near Jabalpur in Madhya Pradesh, Sushilabai awaits her husband's return from the fields. Balram, their elder son, is herding the cows home while little Rajni plays in her arms. The infant's joy brings a smile to Sushilabai's face, lighting up memories of the time she had come here as a young bride. When she and her husband had planned their family with care and understanding to bring security and happiness for the future. That was nine years ago, when ITC came to their help...

Sushilabai of Kundam. The thought of marriage held out little joy for her. She feared that her life would be like her mother's: burdened with too many children.

Then, ITC showed her husband the simplest way to plan a small, happy family.

ITC distributes Nirodh contraceptives in the heart of rural India.

Working closely with the Family Planning Association of India in its Kundam Rural Integrated Project, ITC is helping dispel traditional taboos and is popularising maternity and child health care. Utilising its widespread distribution network and considerable marketing experience, ITC has been promoting Nirodh contraceptives since 1968.

In 1989-90 alone, over an area where more than half the country's population lives, ITC will spend above Rs 1 crore on this project: in manpower training programmes, on distribution and on promotion.

Today the country's largest distributor of Nirodh contraceptives, ITC's efforts have been rewarded with the 1988 FICCI Award for Family Planning: an honour that is a symbol of hope for hundreds and thousands of families seeking security and joy in the future.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Where else is ITC working for India?

Agro-industry : ITC's technological expertise, gained from decades of R&D in seed development, is being transferred to produce high-yielding oilseeds. With the manufacture and marketing of edible and non-edible oils and their derivatives, ITC is helping reduce imports.

Cottage-sector Craftsmanship : With looms, raw materials and technical knowhow, the ITC-promoted Triveni Handlooms has revived Shahjahanpur's traditional craft of carpet weaving. These carpets are exported by ITC along with many other products from small-scale and cottage-sector units.

Paper and Board—in the core-sector : The ITC-promoted Bhadrachalam Paperboards is a leader in its field. It has set new standards by combining record productivity with exemplary concern for wood conservation, environment protection and tribal welfare.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

New horizons, new hopes.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The run-up to the 1989 general election is picking up pace, and with this issue INDIA TODAY begins a series of special reports on the unfolding scenario: the people, the issues, the constituencies.

This fortnight's focus: Uttar Pradesh, where V.P. Singh has just launched his campaign. The report compares Amethi, Rajiv's constituency, with cousin Arun Nehru's Rae Bareli and assesses Chief Minister N.D. Tiwari—who's expected to deliver the state to the Congress(I).

Politics of Plenty

AMETHI 1989

AMENITIES abound. The administration is almost in respectful terror of the village voice. Grievances are not muffled in bureaucratic apathy but listened to in the comfort of prime ministerial presence. All trains salute the local railway station in reverence. Electricity flows continuously. This is not an illusion. This utopian land exists in India, in Uttar Pradesh: Amethi.

Rajiv Gandhi's parliamentary constituency has been pampered with privileges. And as the elections draw nearer, the politics of plenty is increasingly on view. Since April 1988, grants or ex gratia payments worth Rs 15 crore have flowed in. And it's not as if Amethi has witnessed any natural calamities in this period.

Spread over 3,300 km, with a population of 13.65 lakh (1984 electorate: 7,40,782), Amethi is, perhaps, the only rural constituency in the country which enjoys facilities rivalling the large towns. Significantly, Amethi languished in its backwardness till 1980 when the Gandhi family adopted it, leading, in the space of the next few years, to a phenomenal transformation:

► In 1980, there were only 330 electrified villages. Today, Rajiv's arc of light covers 1,254 villages, of Amethi's 1,299 revenue villages.

► Drinking water was available in only 28 villages in 1980. Today, the facility is enjoyed by 1,146 villages.

► The number of tubewells has jumped to 400 now from a meagre 26 in 1980.

► Amethi is now connected by 1,150 km of metal roads versus 422 km in 1980.

► Primary health centres have shot up to 36 from 12 in 1980.

► Amethi was a zero industry area till 1980. Today it boasts of 15 big and 1,231 medium and small scale industries with the Jagdishpur industrial area emerging as the fastest developing one in the state.

Amethi's status is imprinted on every plane of socio-economic life. Villagers and

BHAWAN SINGH

Rajiv Gandhi's latest electoral strategy to win Amethi is to reach out directly to the local population, while continuing to shower benefits on them.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

industrialists interviewed confirm that electricity is available round the clock. Ghufran Nazvi, an industrialist, says: "We get power 24 hours, the whole year." This seems remarkable, considering that even Lucknow is burdened with three or four breakdowns every day.

An electronic telephone exchange connects all five assembly segments to the rest of India through a one-way STD facility. Even the villages will soon have the benefit of C-Dot telephones (wireless) linking them to the rest of the world. Some of these are already functional.

All trains—passenger, express, mail or superfast—stop at the Amethi railway station. Bus connections to Lucknow and Sultanpur from Jagdishpur at 30-minute intervals are a cherished convenience.

Amethi has been been the recipient of several other benefits, and there has been a consistent effort to shore up its services. Today there are as many as three degree colleges, 10 intermediate colleges, five industrial training institutes and two polytechnics, including one for girls. An ultra modern hospital in the name of Sanjay Gandhi, equipped with 500 beds, is now ready for inauguration. Besides, 11 medical vans dispense free medicine and medical advice in the villages.

Up-market amenities have been also improved. Two impressive hotels crown the Amethi landscape, and another is under construction. Moreover, beautiful guest-houses—with air-conditioned suites—play host in Amethi, Gauriganj, Musafirkhana, Salon and Tiloi.

IN spite of having been showered with benefits, the Amethi citizen maintains a perpetual stance of dissatisfaction.

Gaon mein bijli milee? (Are you getting electricity in the village?) Haan saheb, bijli to milee, pur uske istemal ka paise dena parta hai. (Yes sir, we have got it, but we have to pay money to use it.) That response sums it up. The mollycoddling of Amethi has even led some of its residents to expect free power supply.

There are other complaints. Says Mohammed Yusuf, 65, in Kamrauli village: "These factories have made life impossible. There is no open space left."

A local journalist explains the strategy of complaints: "If they do not take this stance, they know that they are not going to get more. It is a question of always maintaining pressure because that has always worked." So, Amethi keeps Rajiv on his toes, sending favours and funds through his representatives—Satish Sharma and lately, Sonia and Priyanka.

This year, his representatives have been visiting Amethi once every month. Rajiv himself reserves some minutes during his daily durbar to offer Amethi a special hearing. Every working day, 50-100 visitors from his constituency meet the prime minister, when he is in Delhi.

Rajiv's latest electoral strategy to win the Amethi heart is to reach out directly to touch the local population. Rajiv and Sonia made a three-day visit, beginning March 11, touring Gauriganj, Munshiganj, Amethi and the surrounding areas. On May 5, Priyanka was politically baptised as she visited the constituency with Sonia. During this tour, the Sonia-Priyanka duo covered 30 villages, distributing gifts and picking up applications.

When Priyanka again visited Amethi on July 1 and 2, it became obvious that Rajiv's daughter was being groomed to carry forward the family's political lineage. While leaving a Gauriganj meeting Sonia noticed a slogan which read: Amethi ka dankaa, Bitiya Priyanka (Amethi's clarion call is daughter Priyanka). Local journalist, Jagdish Piyush, who is in charge of coining slogans and painting them on the walls, a project costing Rs 2.5 lakh, was nearby. Sonia asked him: "So you have written this?" At the next meeting at Amethi when she was greeted with similar slogans, Sonia told a local Congress(I) leader

(From left) Rajiv Gandhi at Amethi; Indo-Gulf fertiliser plant at Jagdishpur; a villager uses telephone facility: pampered constituency

PRASHANT PANJIAR

PRASHANT PANJIAR

A modern electronic telephone exchange connects the five assembly segments of Amethi to the rest of India through a one-way STD facility.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

encouragingly: "Ask Piyush to keep on writing slogans."

Priyanka too seemed interested as she went about collecting applications and talking to women and children. She even made an effort to sip tea at the insistence of some local women.

In addition, Rajiv has a special envoy in Amethi in the person of Satish Sharma. His basic assignment: to redress complaints and provide financial help to deserving individuals. During his visit on June 29, no less than 2,000 applications passed from villagers to Sharma to officials as he visited about 20 villages.

Sharma operates discreetly. He visits villages, meeting people, including Congressmen, gauging the mood, efficiently transmitting the signals to Rajiv, but avoids directly addressing them.

Recently, however, he has shown an interest in settling rows amongst local Congress(I) groups. At a workers' meeting, during his Gauriganj visit on May 28, he said: "We have also started looking after our workers' interests like we look after the interests of Amethi."

And assuredly, the Congress(I) workers are being looked after. Position and privilege are handmaidens in the local Congress(I). Of the 16 Congress(I) block pramukhs, as many as 15 are big contractors, and most government contracts have been awarded to the kith and kin of these pramukhs, who have touched prosperity like Amethi itself. The AICC(I) has also set the block pramukhs on the road in brand new jeeps—each costing Rs 1.25 lakh—a privilege extended only to Amethi.

BUT, it has not been smooth sailing all the way. Amethi's special status has also created for it some special problems. The local administration, for one, falls into periodic paralysis over even routine matters such as junior transfers. The transfer of a compounder of Jamo primary health centre is being discussed at the Prime Minister's Office since the local MLA is opposing the move initiated by the block pramukh. The deadlock is two months old, and the exasperated compounder himself wants his transfer today. Earlier, local Congressmen agitated against the subdivisional magistrate of Amethi for two months before his transfer was ordered from the prime minister's house in April this year.

But the primary allegation is that even while showering manna, the local administration is siphoning off developmental funds. Field workers are said to be in unholy alliance with contractors. Ram Murti Shukla, a committed Congressman and presently, block pramukh of Amethi, alleges: "At least 50 per cent funds have been pocketed by these officials and contractors."

Announcing the setting up of Ambedkar University on April 14, Rajiv himself made the point, saying: "Make this university nicely, not like the buildings made in my constituency." At least a dozen buildings, including a few school buildings and food grain godowns in Musafirkhana and Gauriganj had collapsed last year, only six to eight months after they were constructed.

Even so, Amethi is sure to elect anyone who holds out the promise of becoming prime minister. It is common to find even complaining villagers vouching support for Rajiv. An official who was till recently posted in Amethi, commented: "The people of Amethi are now addicted to the prime minister's house and they will not be able to survive without regular doses from there. They will always like to elect from their constituency the country's prime minister—something, for which, the Rae Bareli people have been desperately vying."

And this is precisely the attitude Rajiv wants, as he snuggles his prized voters in the cushioned comfort of prime ministerial attention, hoping to fortify his parliamentary bastion against all electoral threats to come. —DILIP AWASTHI

Modern medical facility (below); Sonia and Priyanka at Amethi: wooing plan

Sonia and Priyanka have been touring the prime minister's constituency distributing gifts and picking up applications.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Fallen from Grace

RAE BARELI 1989

RAE Bareli is to Amethi what Arun Nehru is to Rajiv Gandhi: a poor cousin. While the prime minister's pampered stronghold, Amethi, is given only the best, Rae Bareli, till recently Nehru's constituency, has been facing bad days ever since the Janata Dal leader fell out with his famous cousin in July 1986.

Though the two constituencies lie close to each other—like the two men once were—there is a wide distance between their development levels. One indicator: if Amethi has uninterrupted power supply, Rae Bareli town swelters under power breakdowns at least twice a day. The situation in villages is far worse.

Compare the two assembly segments of Amethi—Tiloi and Salon—which fall in Rae Bareli district, to the five assembly segments of Rae Bareli. Since April 1987, Tiloi and Salon have received special Central and state schemes worth Rs 65 crore; in the same period all that the five assembly segments of Rae Bareli have been provided is Rs 3.25 crore.

Similarly, Rae Bareli's once booming industries are in the red. Says I.P. Mehta, general manager of Modi carpets: "There is no industrial climate here anymore." One indicator of the industrial decline is the fate of the Engineers' Complex set up in 1974 with the aim of inviting young engineers to open units with aid from the Uttar Pradesh Small Industries Corporation and the Bank of Baroda. Twenty engineer-entrepreneurs went in for the scheme. Says V.V. Rastogi, chairman of the complex: "Only one of the 20 units is earning profits. The rest have either closed, or are about to close, or are just tottering."

And Rae Bareli is not used to any shoddy treatment. It is, on the contrary, accustomed to a VIP status thanks to a long association with India's ruling dynasty—the Nehru-Gandhi clan. In 1957, Feroz Gandhi represented Rae Bareli. But the real honeymoon began when Indira Gandhi contested from there in 1967, then again in 1972. For 10 years Rae Bareli proved happy hunting ground for Mrs Gandhi, till she lost it to Raj Narain during the 1977 Janata wave.

In that decade, under Mrs Gandhi, Rae Bareli prospered. Says Prahlad Misra, 38, a local journalist: "Till 1967, Rae Bareli town was as backward as one of the tehsils are now." After 1967, it got a railway station, hospitals, roads, unlimited power and water supply and industries.

Rae Bareli's flirtation with the Janata Party proved brief as in 1980, Mrs Gandhi won both from there and Medak in Andhra Pradesh. She gave up her Rae Bareli seat, leading to a by-election. As Nehru was then close to the Gandhis he was offered the 'safe' seat. And as long as Mrs Gandhi was alive, she ensured a regular flow of largesse to Rae Bareli.

Riding the Rajiv wave in 1984, Nehru again piggy-backed to Rae Bareli. But this time as Rajiv was representing neighbouring Amethi, Rae Bareli began to suffer in comparison. And when differences with Rajiv resulted in Nehru being dropped from the ministry in July 1986 and then expelled from the party in August 1987, development began to slacken.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

AMETHI VS RAE BARELI

Amethi (Lok Sabha Constituency) 1980	Amethi NOW		Rae Bareli (Lok Sabha Constituency) 1980	Rae Bareli NOW
26	400	STATE TUBEWELLS	121	366
28 Villages	1,146 Villages	DRINKING WATER FACILITIES	267 Villages	820 Villages
0	15 (35 are coming up)	LARGE SCALE PROJECTS	25	25 (Seven have closed down)
21	1,231	SMALL SCALE UNITS	199	1,986 (50% sick or about to close)
1,254 (Till Today)		VILLAGES ELECTRIFIED	796 (Till Today)
Rs 323 crore (Since Jan. '88)		INVESTMENT IN SPECIAL SCHEMES	Rs 4 crore (Since Jan. '88)

Arun Nehru in Rae Bareli

When Rajiv began representing Amethi, Rae Bareli began to suffer—more so after Nehru's estrangement in 1987.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

While the Centre may well be discriminating against Rae Bareli, Nehru too was not exactly a model MP himself. Though he represented Rae Bareli for almost nine years—till the en masse resignation of the Opposition in end-July this year—Nehru rarely ventured out among the people. Just about the only matter he took great interest in was the distribution of party tickets. Says Devi Deen, 92: "Who is Arun Nehru? I voted for the Congress because of Mrs Gandhi and Panditji."

Still, the shrewd manipulator that he is—though now one of the leading lights of the Janata Dal—Nehru has been able to drive a wedge in the local Congress(I) unit. There are two camps, one headed by Nehru's supporters including two party MLAs and the other headed by the old-timers who call themselves Indira loyalists.

Nehru will obviously be fishing in the Congress(I)'s troubled waters if he again stands from Rae Bareli. And in all likelihood he will do so with a little help from the Congressmen. Consider the fall-out of Nehru's expulsion on the local party unit. A meeting presided over by DCC(I) President Kamal Nayan Verma, also a local MLA, warned of serious repercussions if he was not taken back. The anti-Nehru group headed by Sadhu Pandey staged a walk-out. Three Congress(I) office-bearers were expelled from the party. Frightened, Verma and his men did an about-turn by calling another meeting at which they expressed full faith in Rajiv Gandhi.

Again, during the zilla parishad and local bodies elections held early this year, there was considerable cross-voting between the two Congress(I) groups. The upshot: most Congress(I)-supported nominees found themselves pitted against rebel candidates. Says K.K. Jiswal, press secretary of the DCC(I): "Once the sitting MLAs are denied tickets, you see how many traitors we have. Verma and some MLAs are still with Nehru."

And Nehru's men are getting help from an unexpected quarter—the Congress(I) high command, whose step-motherly treatment must have alienated many residents of Rae Bareli.

Ironically, this is precisely the reason for the demands for either Rajiv or Sonia Gandhi to contest from Rae Bareli. Says Sadhu Pandey: "We have been telling him (Rajiv) that his ancestral house is vacant now. Why should he live as a tenant in Amethi?" But Rajiv is unlikely to comply, as he will now be looking for dividends from his investments in Amethi. In that case, paralleling the discarded cousin's attacks on Rajiv, Rae Bareli too may hit back during the next polls.

—DILIP AWASTHI in Rae Bareli

NARAYAN DATT TIWARI

Man in the Hot Seat

EVEN partymen taunted him with names like Nothing Doing Tiwari and New Delhi Tiwari. His opponents sloganeered: "Yeh na hai nar, na hai nari, yeh hai Narayan Datt Tiwari." (He is neither a man, nor a woman, he is Narayan Datt Tiwari.) During the Emergency, when he was chief minister of Uttar Pradesh, they called him Sanjay Gandhi's chamcha. He smiled through all of this. And while he was a Central minister before being unceremoniously shunted off to Uttar Pradesh to replace Bir Bahadur Singh as chief minister, Tiwari was depicted by Rajiv Gandhi's palace guard as a dangerous and ambitious aspirant to the prime ministership. A man not to be trusted.

Today he is the object of grudging envy. With the decline or political eclipse of several Congress(I) giants over the last two years, the soft-spoken Tiwari has suddenly emerged as the great white Brahmin hope of the ruling party. It is not an overstatement to suggest that he is today among the party's most sought-after men.

He travels to New Delhi several times a month to participate in the regular strategy sessions aimed at countering opposition onslaughts. Days were when Rajiv would communicate with Tiwari through senior bureaucrats or other politicians. No more. Rajiv now talks to "Tiwariji," one-on-one. During the past two months, the two have met alone at least half a dozen times.

Earlier, AICC(I) office-bearers were in the habit of "summoning" Tiwari over the telephone to the Delhi Durbar for consultations. Now members of the Delhi Durbar go to Lucknow. And whether Tiwari is in Delhi or in Lucknow, there is a huge—and rapidly growing—number of obsequious-looking MPs and legislators waiting for his darshan. In typical Congresspeak, a senior AICC(I) leader intones: "Tiwariji is our most precious asset. And we have been told to be extra respectful to him. He seems to have become indispensable for the party and the prime minister."

The rediscovery of Tiwari by the prime minister and his high command is no doubt related to the forthcoming general elections. With the countdown having begun, the prime minister and his aides busied themselves last fortnight compiling a list of leaders who were not only capable of drawing crowds but also not involved in any controversy. They came up with two: Chief Ministers Tiwari and Satyendra Narayan Sinha of Bihar. Uttar Pradesh assumed all the more significance because the common wisdom is that with its 85 Lok Sabha seats it will ultimately decide who will occupy 5, Race Course Road.

During the 1984 elections, the Congress(I) won 83 of the 85 seats. And as the situation stands today, the Congress(I)'s fate in the state is inextricably linked to the level of Tiwari's involvement and political commitment, and his capacity to turn the tables on the Opposition.

With the eclipse of several Congress(I) giants over the last two years, Tiwari has emerged as the great hope of the ruling party.

Other senior chief ministers like Sharad Pawar of Maharashtra, Janaki Ballabh Patnaik of Orissa and Amarsinh Chaudhary of Gujarat have been involved in controversies of one kind or another. Add to that the fact of Tiwari having assumed the role of the only national Brahmin leader following the eclipse or political decline of the Kamalapati Tripathi, V.C. Shukla and Motilal Vora families, and you have a unique situation in which a single chief minister has become crucial in determining the political fortunes of a party and the prime minister.

This is not only because Tiwari has time and again demonstrated the requisite administrative and political experience, but also because within a faction-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ridden Congress(I), he has made no real enemies. And as a high command official put it: "He is the darling of big industry, acceptable to the minorities, and even the Left." He is also one of the few orators in the ruling party, who is capable of keeping audiences spellbound with his poetic perorations.

But is he capable of delivering the seats to the prime minister? Right now, Uttar Pradesh seems up for grabs, with the ruling party probably enjoying an edge because of its better grassroots organisation and financial advantage over the Opposition. And over the past two months, Tiwari has been active as never before, criss-crossing the state, laying foundation-stones for new projects, addressing public meetings, talking to party leaders and workers and holding long sessions with civil servants clearing administrative bottlenecks.

Still, because of his uniqueness, his position is politically schizophrenic. New Delhi has never trusted powerful Uttar Pradesh chief ministers or potential claimants to the top job at the Centre. So it is an open secret that while the Centre now cheerleads Tiwari, it is also aware that as he becomes more powerful, he also has the increased capacity to harm the Centre should he choose to revolt.

This suspicion is fuelled by the Opposition's whisper campaign that Tiwari's activities are aimed at ensuring his own political future rather than working for the prime minister. Opposition leader V.P. Singh further stoked this fire when he recently urged Tiwari to join the Opposition. A section of the Congress(I) also feels that Tiwari has not forgotten the humiliation of being sent back to Uttar Pradesh much against his wishes. His removal from the Centre was linked to the rumour that Tiwari was emerging as an alternative to the prime minister. And he was saddled with a state cabinet chock-full of Bir Bahadur Singh loyalists. Even worse, another Bir Bahadur protege, Balram Singh Yadav, a former state minister, was imposed as the PCC(I) chief, giving the clear impression that the Centre wanted Tiwari to function as a mere puppet. It was only after Bir Bahadur's death that Tiwari felt he could operate independently.

No longer threatened by any party leader in the state, Tiwari has ardently begun courting Bir Bahadur loyalists to consolidate his position. To begin with, he appointed the son and daughter of Bir Bahadur Singh to posts in the PCC(I). And during the last two months, he has accommodated a dozen prominent leaders of the party, representing various castes and regional groups, as heads of public sector organisations and state cooperatives. Most important, however, is his new rapport with MPs whom he now consults on every important issue in the state.

THE POLITICIAN

Courteous but crafty

BUT then rapport has always been with him a by-word and, along with rapprochement, formed the cornerstones of his political style. The permanent half-smile and folded hands constitute the most enduring image of Narayan Datt Tiwari. His old-world courtesy disarms the most uncompromising of critics. Even Mulayam Singh Yadav, the vocal Janata Dal state chief, acknowledges this aspect of Tiwari: "His courteous way of handling people is disarming. Humility is his special asset," he says.

Tiwari's political ascendancy is precisely because he is a practitioner of the old school of politics, a rarity in the ruling party. He rarely indulges in heated rhetoric or personal attacks on his political opponents; one reason why his enemies both within and outside the party have never been able to take him on directly. His vast experience in government and political seniority form yet another solid bulwark.

Tiwari exudes a special charm when in public. His mellow behaviour and innate courtesy make people feel comfortable when

Chief Minister Narayan Datt Tiwari: a challenging task

BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Steady Rise

IN September 1946, the president of the Allahabad University Students' Union went to Anand Bhawan to invite Indira Gandhi for a function. Being a regular visitor, he was at once led inside where Mrs Gandhi was massaging her baby.

The student leader was Narayan Datt Tiwari, the baby, Rajiv Gandhi. Today, the relationship continues. The chronicle of Narayan Datt Tiwari's rise in politics seems in essence an account of his association with the Nehru-Gandhi family.

Born in Nainital, Tiwari's political life began in 1940 as a high school student. His father wanted him to be an agriculturist but Tiwari had other ideas. In July 1944, aged 19, he left home for Allahabad. All he had in his pocket was Rs 37. But since he was an activist in the freedom struggle, he was offered shelter in an outhouse of Anand Bhawan.

In 1948 he joined the Congress Socialist Party and in 1952, was elected from Nainital, the youngest member of the Assembly. Tiwari quickly concentrated on broadening his horizons. He undertook a tour of Europe in 1959 and later wrote of his experiences in a book The European Miscellany. He lost the election from Nainital in 1962. Then, he left for the US from where he reported regularly for the National Herald.

In 1964, after the Congress Socialist Party split, he finally found his political home—the Congress. In 1969, he was made a cabinet minister in the C.B. Gupta ministry. He quit after the Congress split but within a year rejoined as minister for finance and parliamentary affairs under Charan Singh.

Tiwari quickly gained a reputation as an able administrator. In 1971, under chief minister Kamalapati Tripathi, his portfolios included finance, industry, power, irrigation, labour, sugarcane, excise and parliamentary affairs. When the ministry was reconstituted in 1973, he retained charge of all except power.

Three years later, he was made chief minister of Uttar Pradesh. But shortly after, the Congress was wiped out in the post-Emergency Lok Sabha elections and Tiwari found himself leader of the Opposition in the Vidhan Sabha.

(From top) Tiwari with Indira; with Rajiv; and in jail for breach of prohibitory orders: tireless performer

In 1980, he shifted his political sights to the Centre, having been elected to the Lok Sabha from Nainital. He was made Union planning minister with additional charge of labour. A year later, he was shifted to the Industry Ministry. But it was when the party required his services in Uttar Pradesh for the 1984 general elections, that Tiwari returned for a second stint as chief minister.

A year later, however, he was back in Delhi as Union industry minister. Subsequently he became foreign and then finance minister. In June last year, Tiwari returned to Lucknow, to complete his hat-trick as chief minister.

—DILIP AWASTHI

they approach him with problems. There is no wide chasm between the chief minister and his people. Last fortnight, an old woman from Basti who had come to the durbar at his residence to petition for her old-age pension yelled: "Arey Tiwari, Arey Tiwari," as the chief minister was passing by. Few chief ministers could have established such a rapport with the people and provoked such careless familiarity, but Tiwari's attitude encourages such a response from the public.

His style is to talk to everybody individually. Says state Food Minister Hukam Singh: "The way he talks to you without any hangers-on around gives the impression that he is genuinely interested in giving you a patient hearing."

MAINTAINING the image of the pacific accommodator also occasionally involves the paying of a heavy price. When he took over as chief minister of Uttar Pradesh, the Government was faced with the threat of an indefinite strike by 23 lakh state government employees. Such a threat would have unsettled anyone taking over as chief minister but Tiwari decided not to confront the angry employees head-on. He chose the path of dialogue and conciliation and announced a compromise formula that led to the strike being called off. But in the bargain, the state exchequer had to bear an additional burden of Rs 656 crore.

Of course, the conciliatory approach pays off too. This facet of his character comes into play while dealing with explosive situations. In the case of the Ram Janmabhoomi-Babri Masjid dispute, his attitude has certainly helped defuse a potentially explosive communal crisis. Says Shia leader, Kalbe Sadiq: "Though I cannot say at this stage that he is sincere in his efforts to solve the tangle, I give him credit for being more refined in his approach compared to the previous government."

But his excessively inoffensive mien also fetches him criticism. Tiwari has often been accused of succumbing to pressure in order to avoid confrontation—and to maintain his image as a cool-headed, capable administrator and political peace-maker. For example, he drew heavy flak from partymen when he appointed the politically inexperienced children of Bir Bahadur Singh to plum party posts when several powerful veterans could easily have qualified for those jobs. There are also those, including many in his own party, who feel that Tiwari too often errs on the side of caution. And, in his efforts to be all things to all men, he often compromises his position. In the rough and tumble world of state politics, that could be a serious disadvantage.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Still, Tiwari's soft-spoken approach and his courtly manners can also be dangerously deceptive, as his political opponents will testify. The way in which Tiwari neutralised his main rival in the party, the late Bir Bahadur Singh, is a classic example. The former chief minister was a force to reckon with, especially with his network of supporters spread at the block level in practically every district of eastern Uttar Pradesh. He had also won the support of a large section of ministers, MLAs and grassroots workers.

And with the high command coming down on Bir Bahadur's side, it looked as if Tiwari had lost the battle. His reluctance to return to Lucknow as chief minister was widely interpreted as hesitation in accepting the challenge from Bir Bahadur. But the manner in which Tiwari neutralised his opponents—and emerged more powerful than ever before—is indicative of his vast experience and political savvy.

In the bargain, Tiwari won the uninhibited support of the prime minister. Observers give full marks to Tiwari for patiently but convincingly outwitting the crafty Bir Bahadur and winning the high command's confidence. What's more, he achieved it without criticising the former chief minister even once. Says Hukam Singh: "He is too shrewd a person to be outwitted. He knows how to wriggle out of any such situation."

THE ADMINISTRATOR

Has clear priorities, attends to detail, but surrounds himself with incompetent colleagues

YET shrewdness is not all. There is much more to Tiwari. The chief minister's biggest asset is his image of being a clean administrator. Though he has often been attacked, no charges of corruption have been levelled at him. That he is running Uttar Pradesh for the third time is testimony to the fact that whenever the party has faced a crisis in the state, Tiwari has been the one who has plugged the gap. That speaks volumes for his main political asset—his acceptability among the people. Says Health Minister Gopinath Dixit: "He has always been the most acceptable leader around. Since 1980, whenever there has been a change of leadership, the first name to be discussed has been that of Tiwari."

Tiwari has always maintained a clear distinction between his political activities and compulsions and his administrative responsibilities. Says he: "The development of the state cannot be allowed to suffer because of political considerations. My effort has always been to establish some kind of a correlation between the two so that the party gets political advantage out of the Government's achievements."

Tiwari has been known to have his priorities clearly established. In 1984, when the Congress(I) had brought him to Uttar Pradesh as chief minister, before the general elections, his emphasis was on road-building—over 2,500 km of roads was built.

This time, the priority is rural housing for Harijans and other weaker sections at the village and block level. As against 32,000 houses provided in 1988-89, Tiwari's target is 2.5 lakh houses in the current year. The political logic is that each house will give shelter to an average of five potential voters from the scheduled castes or economically weaker sections.

He has also ordered the compilation of an 'Economic Register' for every village in the state. Says Tiwari: "These registers give you a bird's-eye view of the developmental activities which have taken place and what needs to be done." On an average, five to six hours are earmarked every day in his schedule for meetings either with officials or delegations to discuss administrative problems.

His meetings present almost the appearance of a class-room where officials face a grilling. By now, bureaucrats have learnt that when Tiwari addresses an official as 'Maharaj' or 'Bhai Saheb', it means he is annoyed or not satisfied.

In front of the masses: a friendly approach

BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But Tiwari's obsession with monitoring administrative progress does lead to a lot of delays. One of the major charges against Tiwari is that files take a long time to move because he is fastidious and insists on checking everything himself.

Tiwari's major problem, however, is his ministerial colleagues, largely unchanged since the previous regime. As Mulayam Singh Yadav analyses: "Barring two or three of them, they are incompetent." He has a point. Most of Tiwari's ministers are practically nonentities, some are even liabilities.

It is because of incompetence at the ministerial level that most departmental secretaries are forced to deal with Tiwari directly. In fact, the ministers themselves are responsible for creating a situation where Tiwari is virtually running all the departments single-handedly.

THE STRATEGIST

Conciliation rather than confrontation is his instinctive approach

ANOTHER area the chief minister is expected to almost single-handedly tackle is preparations for the forthcoming elections. The progress he has been making on this front is impressive. Having neutralised all dissidence and obtained a blank cheque from the high command, Tiwari is now in the final phase of his pre-election strategy—increased contact with the people. He meets between 500 and 1,000 people each day at a one-hour durbar at his residence.

Tiwari has also started devoting a lot of time to addressing public meetings. During the past two months, he has addressed a total of 39 public meetings in various districts. And for once, he is also making a deliberate effort to woo politicians. Now he is not always closetted with officials and his door is open to MLAs and other politicians.

His non-abrasive streak marks his entire pre-poll preparations. Unlike his predecessor who loved confrontation with politicians and bureaucrats, Tiwari has chosen the path of conciliation whether with agitating kisan leaders or the Babri Masjid antagonists.

But this does not mean he has forsaken guile. While he is against abusive and negative campaigning, he has readily adopted the Centre's line of encouraging defections from the Janata Dal. It was his cajoling and persuasion that landed opposition Ahir leader Ram Naresh Yadav and former minister Zafar Ali Naqvi in the Congress(I) net. He has identified over 12 more opposition leaders for defection. Nonetheless, while he has no real rivals from his own party in the state, he is pitted against a galaxy of powerful opposition leaders including V.P. Singh, Arun Nehru, Arif Mohammad Khan, Raj Mangal Pandey, Mulayam Singh Yadav and Sanjay Singh.

But here too, his conciliatory approach and graciousness towards even his opponents have ensured that there is very little ammunition for the Opposition to use against him. Says Minister of State for Education Jagdambika Pal: "He has done nothing so far in the state on which the Opposition can capitalise." Adds Agriculture Minister Dr Krishna Vir Singh Kaushal: "In him we have a leader who will never invite hostility from any quarter. What more can we ask for?"

Even so, Tiwari has been doing more than just reaching out to the people and impressing them with rhetoric. One of his immediate and major electoral thrusts is on reducing developmental imbalances between different regions in the state. It includes an ambitious plan to link all districts and important cities with all-season motorable roads. In addition, he has cornered over 30 per cent of the new industrial licences issued by the Central Government during the past few months. Having been a Central minister, his rapport and ability to lobby Central officials for clearing projects have worked to his advantage. For example, when recently there was a problem about the release of loan funds through commercial banks, Tiwari spoke directly to the governor of the Reserve Bank of India and ironed out the situation within a few hours.

He is also actively trying to dispel the miasma surrounding the question of his loyalty. A miasma that has been raised by both the Government's insecurities and the Opposition's clever public utterings. Now whenever his loyalty is questioned, he says: "I am happy with whatever I am being given. Rajiv Gandhi was my leader, is my leader and will continue to be my leader. And he is the only person who deserves the prime ministership of this great country. So there is no question of my thinking in terms of an alternative." And he repeats this at every meeting.

Today Tiwari's is a strange situation: he is important as never before, but the onus he bears is crushing. In every way, Tiwari is in the hot seat. And his dilemma, given the atmosphere in the party, is the dilemma of the long-standing loyalist.

—DILIP AWASTHI and PRABHU CHAWLA

V.P. SINGH

Battle Charge

DO you want units or unity?" roars V.P. Singh, when a worker demands to know why the Janata Dal is not constituting district and city units. A hush descends. Then continues the Opposition point-man in a voice tinged with passion: "Once there are units, the unity is sacrificed. A cyclone does not come in units. It just comes and sweeps away everything."

Even as the Congress(I) was crossing the t's of its poll strategy, its arch enemy V.P. Singh last fortnight picked up the gauntlet, and rung out the battle cry. Along with other top leaders of the Janata Dal, he stormed Uttar Pradesh and spent three days addressing over half a dozen public meetings, holding secret parleys with the party's state leaders, and devising a game-plan to take the wind out of N.D. Tiwari's sails. The battle for Uttar Pradesh is on in right earnest.

Singh's strategy is clear: the prime minister is the target. The Janata Dal leadership has resolved that aggressive campaigning against Rajiv Gandhi is likely to yield better results than any other issue. And pumping further adrenalin into the aggression are the twin weapons of the CAG report and General Sundarji's revelations, which V.P. Singh is wielding with calculated skill. He leaves no doubt as to what aspect of the Rajiv Gandhi Government he is going to attack. Not for him the oft-touted, rather flimsy argument that the people are not concerned with corruption allegations and that it cannot be made the major thrust of a general election campaign.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Flashing the CAG report at each of his three major public meetings and 20-odd wayside meetings, Singh took pains to show people the national emblem imprinted on the cover of the report. He read out portions, and drove home the point repeatedly that Rajiv was responsible for compromising national security. Exclaimed Singh, pointing at the Ashoka Chakra printed on the report: "This is not any foreign radio, this is not the Opposition, this is not V.P. Singh. This report represents an official appointed by the Constitution of India."

Firebrand rhetoric was meantime being buttressed with agitational politics. Having decided to launch a jail bharo campaign (September 11 to 16) all over the state to focus on the Bofors pay-offs, the Janata Dal was busy trying to mobilise over one lakh workers to court arrest. Earlier, opposition MLAs had gheraoed N.D. Tiwari for the same reasons.

It was fairly clear that there was more than one purpose behind V.P. Singh's agitational tactics. They were also deemed to have diversionary value. They were expected to divert public attention from intra-party feuds, and the inconsistencies that tarnish the Janata Dal's approach to sensitive issues like the Babri Masjid which has been simmering for a long time now with neither the Government nor the Opposition able to suggest a solution or take a definite stand.

SINGH's tactics were subtle. Neither he nor any of the Janata Dal leaders directly attacked Chief Minister N.D. Tiwari at public meetings. The idea was to keep the Congress(I) high command on edge, by fostering the impression that Tiwari may be a potential collaborator with the Opposition.

V.P. Singh at a rally in Haidergarh: pulling out the stops

Photographs by R.K. GUPTA

Armed with the CAG report and Sundarji's revelations, V.P. Singh stormed the state. The strategy was clear: the prime minister and not the party was the target.

The Janata Dal's major thrust is going to be aimed at striking a balance of backward and other intermediary castes, including the trading community. In fact, it was only after a consensus was reached in the party on this issue that Singh decided to visit the state last fortnight. The five days which he spent in Uttar Pradesh—his stronghold—constituted his longest stay since the Allahabad by-election, and were reminiscent of the tumultuous meetings he held soon after leaving the Congress(I) two years ago.

Singh began his stump at Allahabad on September 5 in low-key fashion since he is not planning to contest the seat again. He spent his time not meeting the electorate but talking to workers and local leaders. It was in between his public meeting at Haidergarh (Bara Banki) on September 6, Gorakhpur on September 7, and Ghosi (Azamgarh) on September 8, that Singh, travelling by road, addressed scores of small corner meetings. The choice of the venues for the public meetings clearly indicated that Singh is concentrating on eastern Uttar Pradesh, which alongwith western parts of the state is said to be his bastion.

The Janata Dal has divided the state into four zones. Since central Uttar Pradesh is considered an area of influence of the Congress(I), the Dal is planning a special drive in this area. Singh reached Haidergarh, a town 55 km from Lucknow with a population of 11,000, ready to take it by storm. He was accompanied by Haryana Chief Minister Devi Lal, the state Janata Dal President Mulayam Singh Yadav and Secretary-General Sanjay Singh.

The Haidergarh rally was a roaring success. An impressive crowd waited for two hours, braving the heat. Local people were of the view that Singh's meeting was as impressive as the one by Amitabh Bachchan in 1987. Said Babu Ram, 45, a member of the village panchayat of Sakho village: "His (Bachchan's) meeting was also big but there is a lot of josh (enthusiasm) in this one." That the rally could have turned out even bigger was made clear by Sada Shiv Misra of Nindura block who said: "For the Bachchan meeting the preparations had started at least a month in advance. This meeting was announced only a week ago."

The Gorakhpur-Azamgarh leg was even more tumultuously successful. Singh travelled by the 'Kranthi Rath', emerging every now and then from the rooftop of the bus on a hydraulic lift to address the people. At Gorakhpur a 60,000-strong crowd waited patiently for four hours in withering heat. In the crowd were dusty villagers who had trekked miles, carrying children on their shoulders to reach the venue. And Singh, with his well-practised rhetoric, did not disappoint for a moment.

Though Singh continues to display time and again that he has charisma and can pull in the crowds, the party has much to prove still. Above all, that the unity amongst its various factions can stand the test of electoral tugs, pulls and pressures. From next month, he is embarking on a bicycle tour of the state. V.P. Singh may be picking up pace, but it remains to be seen if the Janata Dal bandwagon can stay in tandem.

—DILIP AWASTHI in Allahabad and Haidergarh

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Growing World of MSTC

It has been a long and arduous climb. From our humble beginning 25 years ago to what we are today.
A dynamic organisation with a track record of success that speaks for itself.

Our ever-expanding activities today cover a wide spectrum:

- Acting as canalising agent for import of old ships for scrapping, carbon steel scrap and DRI.
- Providing specialised services for the disposal of domestic scrap arisings.

MSTC is poised to take on new challenges, spurred by an indomitable spirit of service. To fulfil our commitments to our customers and to the nation.

MSTC - Turning Waste into Wealth

एम एस टी सी
MSTC

METAL SCRAP TRADE CORPORATION LIMITED
(A Government of India Enterprise)
Head Office: 225-F, Acharya Jagadish Bose Road, Calcutta 700 020
Tel: 440964/7557/7716 Gram: METSCRAP
Telex: 021-7963/7811/4330 MSTC IN
Fax: 44-0810 (Calcutta)/331-6713 (Delhi)

Regional Offices: Bombay • New Delhi • Bangalore
Sub-Regional Offices: Madras • Hyderabad • Kandla • Vishakhapatnam

मेरा भारत महान

naa MSTC 8949

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A mature relationship with a short childhood...

The Super 32 technology from Norsk Data was absorbed by ECIL in record time. At ECIL we believe in self-sufficiency, customer satisfaction and continued technological growth.

With the Super 32 we accomplished the impossible. ND 500 series had an estimated technology absorption period of 3 years. At ECIL we accomplished the impossible and thoroughly absorbed the technology in just 1½ years flat!

Yes, indeed a short childhood for the collaboration which still continues.

This faster technology absorption has meant that our customers are assured of continued support.

For more than 20 years, ECIL has pioneered products with its own Development and stimulating collaborations. ECIL believes in commitment to the market. It gave you the TDC series, long before the others even ventured into the field! It was ECIL that gave you the first 68000 machine and now offers UNIPOWER-30 the fastest machine in its category!

Today, ECIL offers total solutions and the entire range of computers from PCs to MAINFRAMES.

ECIL, it's a company that Norsk Data is proud to collaborate with. A company you will be proud to associate with.

इकाइएल

Electronics Corporation of India Ltd.,
(A Government of India Enterprise)
Computer Marketing Division, Computer Group
ECIL P.O., IDA, Cherlapally, Hyderabad - 500 762.
Tel : 851858/850237/850131 Tlx: 0425-7010 ECMG IN

Sista's-ECIL-212/89

We don't just sell computers. We provide total solutions.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HARYANA

Miscued Missives

Governor Ray and Devi Lal exchange angry letters

POLITICAL missiles often boomerang. Punjab Governor Sidhartha Shankar Ray was at the receiving end of an offensive he had launched at the Haryana Chief Minister Devi Lal last fortnight. No matter what his intentions were, Ray's action raised the widespread impression that instead of staying above politics, as a governor should, he had begun to play the now familiar role of a Congress(I) politician trying to dislodge an elected opposition government. But unlike the clandestine operations of governors in the past, Ray's manoeuvres were overt.

The drama began on August 30—the day of the Opposition-inspired Bharat bandh which was total in Haryana due to the state Government's support. Surprisingly, Ray joined the Congress(I) in attacking Devi Lal for abetting the bandh. The governor shot off a three-page letter demanding the release of some Punjab vehicles detained in Haryana during the Bharat bandh. The tone was angry, the contents threatening. If the vehicles weren't returned, "you will be acting contrary to the Constitution of India", it warned. The letter was virtually a legal chargesheet. It asked: "Under what law and authority is the Government of Haryana indirectly helping people to prevent vehicles to go to their destinations?"

In a significant coincidence, Ray's letter arrived exactly a day after Union Home Minister Buta Singh had called Devi Lal to warn him: the state Government would be held responsible for any untoward incidents in Haryana. What added to the doubts of a political orchestration by the Congress(I) was the release of Ray's letter to the press—as also the fact that copies of the letter reached President R. Venkataraman and the Haryana governor.

Predictably, Devi Lal saw a design in Ray's letter, which managed to reach his office soon after he had left for the day. The number of vehicles mentioned in the letter was so insignificant that the Janata Dal felt convinced that Ray was, in fact, sowing the seeds for the ultimate displacement of the state Government—and the imposition of President's Rule in Haryana.

In an aggressive counter, the Haryana chief minister accused the governor of dabbling in politics. He wrote: "I fail to understand why have you chosen—as a constitutional head of a state—to refer to a political issue between the ruling party and the Opposition in the country. That is why I wonder, whether there is an extraneous motive in including references in your communication which clearly amount to casting totally unjustified and uncalled for aspersions on the functioning of the state."

Devi Lal made it clear that his government maintained total law and order in the state. He also pointed out that state government offices were kept open on the day of Barat bandh.

But Ray was not to be cowed down so easily. On September 2, he repeated his charges: "When one tries to propose as well as to oppose a bandh he places himself in a ludicrous position.... He (Devi Lal) asks others not to attend offices but he attends his own! One cannot be both Rama and Ravana at the same time!"

The letter was accompanied by photographs showing Janata Dal leaders blocking train and road transport in the state. The Haryana chief minister retorted: "I shall relentlessly continue to fight the Ravanas of yesterday who are posing as the Ramas of today in our body politick."

The Haryana strongman also questioned Ray's moral authority in so interfering: "This is only to be expected when defeated politicians are installed as governors and in particular, in states under President's Rule to enable them to carry out the mandate of the political party at the Centre."

The Punjab governor tried to defend his actions on the plea that he was not only the "constitutional head of the state

PRASHANT PANJIAR

"He (Devi Lal) asks others not to attend offices but he attends his own. One cannot be both Rama and Ravana at the same time."

S.S. RAY
Governor, Punjab

"I shall relentlessly continue to fight the Ravanas of yesterday who are posing as the Ramas of today in our body politic".

DEVI LAL
Chief Minister, Haryana

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

When Indian Coal and Metal mines required long lasting rotary drill bits, only WIDIA could provide world class rock roller bits.

Product development capability. That's the WIDIA strength behind the indigenous development of the revolutionary tungsten carbide rock roller bit — offering longer tool life, reduced downtime and total economy not only in mining operations but also at oil well and water well drilling sites all over the country.

WIDIA tungsten carbide rock roller bits offer a constant penetration rate through any strata. And at least 15% reduction in cost per metre of drilling when compared to conventional bits.

That's just one instance of WIDIA technology at work in coal and ore mines around the country. In addition, WIDIA also offers a wide range of high performance mining tools-milled toothed rock roller bits, coal auger rotary drill bits, DTH button bits, round and flat shanks cutter picks, rope threaded bits...

While R&D sets the pace at WIDIA its product engineering ensures world class quality and precision. That's what results in extraordinary performance from a high-tech product range-both standard and custom built.

Product Innovation. A constant commitment to customer needs. Effective response. Together with the right technology and support services to upgrade productivity. Ensuring the WIDIA advantage at the customers' project sites.

WIDIA

The dynamic innovators in mining tool technology

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A high-growth, high-dividend paying Group engaged in diverse agro-products and petrochemicals now enters the high-priority evershine fertilizer industry.

The Rs. 695 crores prestigious gas-based fertilizer project at Shahjahanpur, U.P. will use already available natural gas from HBJ pipeline and will save foreign exchange by Rs. 250 crores per annum.

That's why we call it 'The Oswal Goldmine'.

Outstanding

In just 7 years—

Turnover up by 2900% - from Rs. 14 crores to Rs. 400 crores
Profits up by 7800% - from Rs. 76 lacs to Rs. 60 crores
Net worth - over Rs. 550 crores by the year end
Family of investors - increased from 11000 to 7,50,000

That's the Oswal Agro Group.

Success

Acquired and turned around Petrochemicals & Alcohol Chemical complexes at Bombay & Calcutta

Highly diversified product range

Agro-products:— Sugar, Rice, Vanaspati, Refined Oil, Toilet Soap, Agro Chemicals, Cattle-feed

Petrochemicals - LDPE (Polythene Plastic), Ethylene, Propylene, Benzene and Acetylene Black.

Alcohol Chemicals - Acetic Acid, Butyl Acetate, Ethyl Acetate and Butanol.

That's the Oswal Agro Group.

"In just 7 years, the Oswal Agro Group has achieved a turnover of Rs. 400 crores.

Since our borrowings are virtually nil, we don't have to pay back interest and loans, which eat away a company's profitability. That's why we can pay such high returns to our investors.

Diversifying from the competitive agro-based industry into petrochemicals, a sunrise industry, we now enter the evershine fertilizer industry."

Abhey Oswal
Chairman

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ARION D227

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Wealth

Net worth - over Rs. 550 crores by the year end.

Overflowing Returns to Shareholders— 50% dividends

Liberal Rights Issues and Bonus Issue.

Low Debt Equity Ratio 0.01 : 1

Earning per share - above Rs. 10/-

That's the Oswal Agro Group.

Ambition

From Agro-products & Petrochemicals — now diversifying into Rs. 695 crores gas-based fertilizer project.

Setting up VAM project,
Massive expansion in petrochemicals.

After implementation of the above projects by 1991, the Group to cross —

Turnover	— Rs. 1200 crores p.a.
Net worth	— Rs. 1100 crores
Profits	— Rs. 300 crores p.a.

That's the Oswal Agro Group.

Leader

In agro-based industry

Largest rice processing plant in the world

Largest furfural plant in Asia

In Petrochemical industry

Only Petrochemical Complex in Private Sector integrating Naptha/Natural Gas and LDPE plant (Polythene plastic)

Only producer of LDPE in the country in the Private Sector

Negligible interest burden

Lowest Debt Equity Ratio amongst Giant Private Sector Companies

That's the Oswal Agro Group.

THE OSWAL GOLDMINE

The Oswal Agro Group

Oswal Agro Mills Ltd.

Oswal Agro Furane Ltd.

BAC Bindal Agro Chem Ltd.

Where success is not on loan.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's time to live with the trim & trendy look

Philips Trim Series of Luminaires. Sleek and smart. Adding style to your interiors.

Slender, Smart, Efficient. That's the Trim Series. With energy saving ballasts, improved lampholders and starters. Ready to install. Easy to connect. Truly, then, it's time to live with the trim, trendy look. It's time to live with the TRIM Series.

AVAILABLE IN TWO SIZES—2 FEET & 4 FEET

When it comes to lighting all you need is PHILIPS.

HTA 3687

Philips Lighting

PHILIPS

PHILIPS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

but at the moment I also happen to be its administrative head and therefore responsible for protecting the interests of the people of Punjab."

Significantly, Ray did not receive open support from Central ministers or even local politicians. AICC(I) sources say the decision to ignore the issue was made after receiving specific advice to do so from the presidential office. But Ray told INDIA TODAY: "This trend of the party in power inciting people to adopt violent postures is calling for anarchy. Perhaps I should not have made my letters public."

From present counts, Devi Lal has won round one. Recently, he wrote to the President demanding that Ray be recalled. The move to involve the President was a clever strategy to pre-empt any action by the Centre against the state Government. What gave Ray's action the air of a political conspiracy, sources in the Haryana Government claim, was that it unfolded almost simultaneously with the discovery of what Devi Lal's supporters claim was a larger plan to topple the Devi Lal Government.

The strategy apparently included a plan to coerce some 45 MLAs to defect from Haryana's ruling party. Only last month, Devi Lal claimed Rs 50 crore had been earmarked to topple his government with the help of two Central ministers. He's also alleged the Congress(I) is plotting to unleash a spate of violence through a youth brigade trained by a former DGP of the Punjab Police.

Sources say that attacking Devi Lal with the charge of constitutional impropriety in having supported the bandh was part of the Congress(I)'s wider strategy to put the Opposition on the defensive. Although Buta Singh asked chief ministers of all opposition-ruled states to ensure law and order on the Bharat bandh day, the Devi Lal Ministry was the most vulnerable due to its internal factionalism. Devi Lal gave additional fodder for Central action with an open call to the state's youth to stop all trains, also promising them monetary rewards in case of mishaps.

The Centre gleefully played up Devi Lal's statements. Doordarshan repeated them half a dozen times for two days. The AICC(I) and the Union Home Ministry generously offered special briefings to select journalists about the "unconstitutional acts of the chief minister". The Congress(I) was ready to have Devi Lal on the ropes. But just then Ray jumped in, perhaps indiscreetly, and the attempt to embarrass Devi Lal wound up in a confused mess.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

GOA

Sex Scandal

Accusation against speaker

LESS than 5 ft in height, charming and schoolgirlish, 19-year-old Sunita Haldankar hardly fits the image of a Mata Hari who can destroy the career of a powerful politician. Yet the young typist from a small town in Goa is at the eye of a raging political storm involving assembly Speaker Dayanand Narvekar in what has come to be known as the Secretariat Molestation Scandal.

Sunita and Narvekar, 39, are both from Mapusa, a town 15 km north of the state capital, Panaji. The son of a tailor, Narvekar's has been a meteoric rise in politics. After a stint as law minister, he has been assembly Speaker for over five years. Within the Congress(I), he is the main challenger of Chief Minister Pratapsinh Rane.

On August 1, Narvekar hired Sunita as a typist after her mother, Yamuna, 40, a hospital attendant, approached him. But on August 8, Sunita fled the Speaker's office (in the Secretariat Annexe) and found herself in the centre of a public drama which promises to become a major election issue.

On August 9, Sunita and her mother met Rane along with Maharashtrawadi Gomantak Party (MGP) leader Ramakant Khalap and complained that Narvekar had molested Sunita the previous evening in the Speaker's Chamber. Ever since, there has been a barrage of charges and countercharges, culminating in a joint, statewide opposition campaign demanding the dismissal and prosecution of Narvekar. Even non-political organisations like the Freedom Fighters' Association, the All-Goa Students' Union and the women's group Bailancho Saad are backing the stir. Said Bailancho Saad leader Albertina Almeida: "We spoke to Sunita and are convinced the incident took place. She was later intimidated to change her story. Other men will be emboldened if the Speaker is let off."

But Narvekar returned from a trip to Delhi and sent legal notices to Khalap and Sunita, threatening to launch a criminal defamation case if they did not retract the charge. "I will not resign with a black mark on my record. But I will cooperate with any police probe," he declared. "If the charge is proved even 0.1 per cent, I will leave the political scene."

HERALAL

AMBAJI KAMAT

Protest rally; and (inset) Narvekar

Khalap, on his part, has urged that he be prosecuted if the charge is false. He is unlikely to relent, especially since the issue has acquired major political dimensions. As political reputations go, the MGP leader is considered straightforward while Narvekar has the image of a playboy. Even if the Speaker wins in court, his party will have to pay dearly for the murky affair.

Rane acknowledged as much when he said: "The Opposition is trying to spoil the Congress(I)'s name. But a party cannot be condemned for any individual's actions." The ball, predictably, is in the party high command's court—it is for Delhi to decide whether or not the curtain should ring down abruptly on Narvekar's political career.

—M. RAHMAN in Goa

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ASSAM

False Hopes

Meet fails to check violence

THE photograph, splashed across the front-pages of national dailies was arresting. Wearing a cap and muffler, and grinning from ear to ear, was the elusive Upendranath Brahma, president of the All-Bodo Students' Union (ABSU-UB), whose agitation for a separate homeland for the tribal Bodos has again unleashed a cycle of bloodshed in Assam. Warmly clasping the boyish Brahma's hand was none other than a smiling Prafulla Kumar Mahanta, chief minister of Assam and the greatest foe of the ABSU(UB) activists. Looking on benignly was Union Minister of State for Welfare Rajendra Kumari Bajpai.

Many promises were made at the first tripartite talks between the ABSU(UB), the state and Central governments on August 28 in New Delhi. Brahma promised to suspend the movement and stop violence, Mahanta agreed to withdraw, step-by-step, the harsh preventive measures invoked in Bodo-dominated areas, and Bajpai announced that a committee would soon be formed to study the ABSU(UB) demands and continue the dialogue. Brahma—who had arrived with a huge 40-member delegation in contrast to Mahanta's four-member team—then shook hands with the chief minister and the two men posed together for photographs.

Brahma with Mahanta: scene of violence

Was this rapprochement at last? Tragically, not. Barely had the ink dried on the joint statement that blood was again being spilled in Assam. Brahma's smiles and promises notwithstanding, the violence seemed carefully timed: the day after the talks a time-bomb went off in a passenger bus near Barpetta town, killing nine people, and blowing to pieces the hopes for peace

WEST BENGAL

Video Vice

OF late it seemed that the Bengali film industry would stir itself out of its comatose state and re-enact its forgotten days of glory.

But it is becoming increasingly evident that the gasping industry is facing yet another challenge, this time from video pirates. And last fortnight, fed up with the insensitivity of the Government to their demands to check video piracy, leading film, theatre and jatra artistes hit the streets under the banner of the Eastern India Motion Pictures Associtaion (EIMPA). For three days Tollygunge studios pulled down their rusty shutters. Said Bikas Chandra, convenor of the video action committee of EIMPA: "There is no way out but to protest, as the industry is dying."

Closed cinema hall; (inset) Chandra

SAIBAL DAS

This was the second time in 10 months, the first one was December 6 last year, that the industry was organising a protest march for state intervention. A few months ago the state Government had lend a helping hand to the industry: all cinema houses in the state were ordered to screen Bengali films irrespective of the collections for at least six months every year. But it hardly helped.

There are more than 2,000 illegal video parlours in the state. The EIMPA has demanded, among other things, the setting up of a separate police cell and special courts to try video pirates who put out cassettes of new films before it can reach theatres.

But piracy can hardly be controlled as experience proves. The fact is Bengali films have not been able to compete with the glitzy Hindi films which pull in the crowds. Tollygunge's real hope lies in capturing its old touch. —FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sintex

THE ONLY RELIABLE AND TIME-TESTED WATER TANKS

As Pioneers, Sintex has given excellent performance for nearly 15 years. Withstanding all the tough and rough Indian conditions. Dotting the Indian scene with lakhs and lakhs of installations-from Kashmir to Kanyakumari and Kutch to Kohima. Proving popular for all the water storage and carriage applications. The proof enough to understand why more and more people count on Sintex. Making them the largest selling plastic water tanks in the world. After all sky is the limit for the real Innovator.

For further Information contact:

SINTER PLAST CONTAINERS

Plastics Division: The Bharat Vijay Mills Ltd.,
KALOL (N. GUJARAT) 382721
Phone: (02764),2228,3144,3145 Gram:"SINTEX"
Telex: 01205-202 SPC IN Fax: (02764) 2436

Sintex WORLD'S NO.1 PLASTIC TANKS

Offices At :- Ahmedabad • Baroda • Bombay • Bhopal • Calcutta • New Delhi • Hyderabad • Jaipur • Lucknow • Madras

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IS YOUR COMPUTER COMPANY REALLY TAKING YOU WHERE YOU WANT TO GO?

Modi Olivetti's range of products will be on demonstration at CSI '90 at the Hotel Ashoka, Jaipur. Between the 20th [illegible]

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RENAISSANCE IN COMMITMENT

To Greek minds motion meant running smoothly and uniformly in circles.

The 'third eye' recognised that movements in the real world are not uniform—speed and direction change constantly.

It was left to Isaac Newton to explain motion in terms of force, work, acceleration and momentum.

To give new meaning to corporate motion, is what the Renaissance is all about.

And the Renaissance is what Modi Olivetti now brings to India.

You'll discover that at Modi Olivetti we're concerned about whether the results of computerisation are taking you forward or just keeping you in the same place.

Because we firmly believe that just computers are not enough to get results. Computerisation means a commitment.

A commitment to understanding precisely what your requirements are—now and in the future.

A commitment to delivering a system that fits your requirements perfectly.

A commitment to assisting your people to use their new systems effectively.

A commitment to giving you service that supports your drive for results.

The kind of commitment that gave the world its first desktop computer—from Olivetti.

So, your organisation can now discover what Barclays Bank, Marks & Spencer and countless other customers in 140 countries have discovered: results from Europe's largest computer company, Olivetti.

All because we know your future is tied to results. And our future is tied to yours.

modi olivetti

ALL YOU WANT US TO BE

MODI OLIVETTI LIMITED

"National sets the trend in audio and video enjoyment...again!"

Mithun Chakraborty

RX-CW55F

TC-AV33XR

NV-MS50E

NV-L18EN

"National is famous for creating new trends in audio and video products. Now they've done it again with an exciting new line-up of TVs, videos and portable stereos that will make you glad you waited to buy National. From Super VHS movie cameras that make video movie making so pretty they nearly rival professional level equipment... to large-screen TVs that incorporate National's Dome Sound System, providing cinema-like listening as well as viewing right in your own home. From "soft" design video cassette recorders that permit NTSC (as well as PAL) playback on PAL-format TVs...to portable stereo double cassette component system that overcome the inherent size disadvantages of conventional portable stereo with the Extra Bass System. Yes, National has done it again. They've set the trend in audio and video enjoyment."

RX-CW55F
Portable Stereo Double Cassette Component System
- "XBS"-Extra Bass System
- AFD (Acoustic Flat Diaphragm) Woofers
- 60 Watt PMPO Output Power
- 4-Band FM/MW/SW1/SW2 Radio
- 5-Band Graphic Equalizer
- Double Auto-Reverse
- Digital Clock/Timer

Panasonic
NV-MS50E S VHS C VHS PAL 625
Compact Super VHS Movie Camera
- Super VHS High Quality Picture
- Hi-Fi Stereo Sound System
- Improved Piezo Auto Focus
- AV-9-Head System with Amorphous Pro Heads
- Compact and Lightweight: Only 1.4 Kg

NEW TREND

TC-AV33XR Art DOME sound system
Type 33 (84 cm) World 17 Multi System Colour TV
- Astonishingly Realistic Dome Sound System
- Built-In 10W x 10W Stereo Amplifier
- 600-Line Horizontal Resolution
- TV/Video Dual Remote Control
- S-Video In Terminal
- Video/Audio In and Out Terminals
- 30-Position Auto Tuning

NV-L18EN VHS PAL
VHS Video Cassette Recorder
- Digital Multi-Screen Functions
- NTSC Playback on PAL TV
- Digital Programme Controller
- Variable Double Super Fine Slow (1/5-1/25)
- 8-Hour Recording and Playback (LP Mode)
- Digital Intro Scan
- "Soft" Design

NEW TREND

A Note About NTSC Playback:
The playback picture will shrink vertically, and black bars will appear both on the top and bottom of the screen. This is not an indication of a malfunction.
And the playback picture may roll up or down, adjust it with the V-HOLD control on the TV.

National

National

• For Information Only

National Authorized Service Centres in India

Bombay: Esquire Service Centre Tel: 234226/230311 4131857/4133470 533506
Associated Electrical Agencies Tel: 4930074/4930075
Indus Air conditioning Pvt. Ltd. (For home appliances only) Tel: 4223729/4223737
Madras: Associated Electrical Agencies Tel: 478559
Esquire Service Centre Tel: 479507

Bangalore: Associated Electrical Agencies Tel: 220275/225577
New Delhi: Positive Commercial Co., Ltd. Tel: 262179/268964
Esquire Service Centre Tel: 697285/611327
Calcutta: Esquire Service Centre Tel: 440840
Trivandrum: Master Electronics Co., Pvt. Ltd. (For audio/video products only) Tel: 64262
Cochin: Master Electronics Co., Pvt. Ltd. (For audio/video products only) Tel: 361788

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IDBI

Investment Deposit Account Scheme

- Companies, Firms, Individuals & HUF, save tax on income assessable under the head 'Profits and Gains from Business or Profession' as covered under Section 32 AB of the Income Tax Act 1961.
- Deposits under the Scheme are deductible up to 20% of taxable income.
- Deposits should be made within 6 months of closure of assessee's accounting year or before filing of tax returns, whichever is earlier.
- Deposits can be made by post.
- Interest @ 10% p.a. will be credited to the assessee's designated bank account on 1st April every year without tax deduction at source and can be freely withdrawn for any use.
- Principal amounts of deposits can be withdrawn after one year for purchase of plant and machinery, computers etc. for the business or profession of the assessee.
- Outstation cheques are accepted and collection charges will be borne by IDBI. Date of deposit will be the date of receipt of cheque by IDBI.
- Demand drafts received by IDBI within 10 days of issue, will get credit from the date of the draft.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK OF INDIA
'IDBI Tower' Cuffe Parade, Colaba, Bombay 400 005.

Sobhagya-B/IDBI/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

generated in Delhi. Simultaneously, Brahma went back on his word in less than 24 hours and announced at a press conference in Delhi that if Bodoland was not created then "Assam will burn once again". Insisting that he had made it clear at the talks that he was willing to settle for nothing less than Bodoland, he declared ominously: "We have boys with us who are trained in using sophisticated arms and devices."

That this was no idle threat became immediately evident: in the week following the talks, in a renewed burst of bloodletting, 33 people lost their lives. The toll mounted to 45 as Bodo militants raided a village near Tamulpur on September 9 killing 12 people.

Mahanta was more true to his word. The outbreak of violence saw him cancelling a 10-day trip to the US and Canada. He then kept his part of the bargain by revoking the Assam Disturbed Areas Act, 1955. Said he: "The Government is also prepared to withdraw other measures including the Armed Forces (Special Powers) Act and Terrorists and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act if ABSU stops the violence."

But that appears unlikely, as with every bout of bloodshed, the Centre's hand becomes more and more visible. Once again it was driven home that the Centre would prefer to let the issue fester when it sent only a minister of state like Bajpai as its representative. Mahanta too is apparently convinced that "outside agencies", and not the ABSU leadership, are manipulating the militants.

While that may be an exaggeration, it is true that the endless bloodletting has tainted the ABSU(UB). The Assamese and non-tribals like Bengalis were always opposed to it. Now, most of the nine plain tribal groups of the state have also turned hostile. Even some Bodos owing allegiance to the faction of ABSU led by Gangadhar Ramchairy and the Plain Tribals Council of Assam have begun working against the ABSU(UB).

A further dangerous twist has been imparted by the All-Assam Students' Union (AASU), which issued a statement after Brahma backtracked in Delhi: "We shall not allow the state to burn again. We shall equip ourselves with sufficient self-defence mechanism to prevent that happening."

And since the AASU is one group which can spill as much blood as the ABSU(UB), Assam seems perilously close to plunging once again into medieval madness. —FARZAND AHMED

GUJARAT

New Customs

IN administration, accountability is effective. So, goes the dictum. The Ahmedabad Customs (Preventive) Collectorate seems to be proving this with its new management information system (MIS) which has brought in a new flavour of efficiency in customs implementation drives. Introduced by Ahmedabad Customs Collector Virendra Singh five months ago, the MIS has impressed with its results: of a target of 140 detentions under COFEPOSA this year, 70 alleged smugglers have already been hauled up. Last year's tally was 37 detentions.

The Centre has so far been fixing targets for only seizures and disposal of goods for a customs centre. But, Singh has taken the initiative, with the help of the MIS to set up targets for 23 areas of work, including detention under COFEPOSA, Prevention of Illicit Trafficking in Narcotics, Drugs and Psychotropic Substances (PITS and NDPS), and stepping up adjudication and prosecution processes. Action plans are drawn up for each division to realise the present targets—based on past performance and perceived risks. Monthly meetings with assistant collectors are used to monitor performance, and to grill sluggish officers.

Says Singh: "The performance of the officers will be judged on the basis of achievements of targets." Officers find the difference mainly in terms of a new initiative and drive. J.R. Mahida, assistant collector, Bhavnagar division, says: "Now, if a particular operator is evading detention, we put in that extra bit of effort to nab him."

Before the MIS was introduced, customs officials concentrated on just three aspects: seizures, disposal of goods and some revenue realisation. Important areas like adjudication and prosecution which are critical to performance in the primary areas were neglected. The MIS has made a determined bid to improve adjudication: officers have been directed to complete investigations in two or three months—and promptly serve show cause notices. The aim: early disposal of cases and quick revenue realisation.

Significantly, the number of seizures by customs personnel in Gujarat—with its smuggling-prone 1,600 km coastline—has shot up. Smuggled goods (mainly gold) worth Rs 26 crore had been seized by May this year, compared to only Rs 13.76 crore in 1988 and Rs 14.92 crore in 1987. Now smugglers in Gujarat are clearly on the run. While Jayantilal Maneklal Soni, allegedly involved in gold seizures worth Rs 1 crore, has been held under COFEPOSA; Haji Ismail, suspected to be involved in gold seizures worth Rs 14 crore, is absconding.

Singh has also spread his net to narcotics and drug smugglers—at a time when narcotics operators are quite active. In six months of the current year, the yield is Rs 39 lakh compared to a haul of Rs 26 lakh for 1988. Besides, 20 major operators have been detained under PITS and NDPS against this year's target of 30.

Drug haul; (inset) Singh

Impressed with the results, B.V. Kumar, member, customs, has recommended the MIS model for customs centres throughout the country, and it is already being welcomed all over for its ability to fix responsibilities and demand results. There are detractors too. Some reckon Singh is running too fast and is bound to stumble soon. That may be so, but it's better than being stationary and getting nowhere. —UDAY MAHURKAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SIEMENS

Bypass the Bypass

Medical Engineering in Siemens comes from the heart. Siemens Bi-plane Cardio-angiography unit can now remove blockages in the heart without surgery by Angioplasty. This procedure has reduced the number of Bypass Operations considerably.
By-passing the Bypass, the patient can be relieved of major surgery.

High technology with a human face. Whether it is control and automation systems or railway signalling equipment, medical electronics, switchgear, switchboards, drives, motors or new dimensions in telecommunications, Siemens focusses technology on human problems, human needs. Its close association with Siemens AG, W. Germany, helps keep Siemens in India in the frontline of international technology. With 120 years of experience in the country, Siemens is committed to India's progress and shares its hopes for the future.

As technology changes the face of the future, Siemens will be one of the foremost companies helping India keep pace with the world.

Siemens Ltd.,
P.O. Box 6597, Bombay 400 018

Siemens. Where international technology meets human needs.

LINTAS SM 160 2720

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul

Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SUCCESS NEVER TASTED SWEETER.

For the discerning businessman in Delhi, who never compromises on taste, may we suggest the Taj Palace Inter·Continental. Four splendid restaurants — European, Chinese, Indian included — give you the best of the world.

TAJ PALACE INTER·CONTINENTAL, NEW DELHI

THE TAJ GROUP OF HOTELS

INTER·CONTINENTAL HOTELS

It's where you go when you've arrived.

Call for reservations: Bombay 2022524, New Delhi 3322256, Calcutta 292513, Madras 474849, Bangalore 258076, Hyderabad 848246, Cochin 6811.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Take the world in your stride.

dinesh

Exclusives ▲ Suitings ▲ Co-ordinates ▲ Safaris

The choice of leading fashion houses, internationally.

Woolmark
PURE NEW WOOL
HI-COMFORT WOOL

Authorised dealers: BOMBAY: Babubhai Jagjivandas • Milltex Emporium • Woolco Textiles • THANE: Nagrik Stores • KALYAN: Deccan Cloth Centre • Roop Sangam • PUNE: Bharat Woollen House • Chandulal Dahyabhai • Jaihind Collections • Mafatlal C. Shah.

(IT/1)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

God's own country

Aquamarine blues tinting sea and sky ✦ Clean, white stretches and stretches of sand ✦ Splash into a foam-tipped wave ... ✦ Slow trickle of wet sand between your toes ✦ Muse on a rock ✦ The waves tickle your ankles ✦ Long tender coconut sips ✦ Feel the sea pound in a conch shell ✦ Close your eyes to the sea-water lullaby ... ✦

Kerala Tourism
Park View
Trivandrum 695 033

kerala

Mudra C DOT 133

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WOMEN'S PERSPECTIVE PLAN

Skirting the Issue

National Perspective Plan makes no headway

IT was a document promising to free Indian women from the clutches of social oppression. But exactly a year after the National Perspective Plan for Women 1988-2000 (NPP) was presented to the prime minister, and 17 months after it was officially released with the attendant hoopla, little has been done to implement it.

Put together by a 14-member core group, constituted in 1987 and headed by Margaret Alva, minister of state for women, youth affairs and sport, the NPP makes 353 far-reaching recommendations. These include: a uniform civil code, property rights to women, reservation of seats for women in elected bodies, banning of sex-determination tests, and making harassment of wives for dowry as a ground for seeking divorce.

The NPP also talks of encouraging industrialisation of rural areas to provide employment options to women, giving credit to women, and setting up a Central maternity benefit fund.

So far, the suggestions have been confined to paper, with little or no attempt to translate them into action. Nandini Azad of the Women's Centre, National Institute of Public Cooperation and Child Development (NIPCCD), and a member of the core group, disagrees. Says she: "By January, 275 recommendations were sent to the ministries. Around 179 have been accepted in principle."

But leading women activists confess to being in the dark regarding the progress of the NPP. Queries a puzzled Veena Mazumdar of the Centre for Women's Development Studies: "Has the NPP been sent to various state governments and the Planning Commission? Has a feasibility report about its implementation been prepared? Is it going to be presented in the Parliament?" In fact, adds Ila Bhatt, MP and founder of the Self-Employed Women's Association: "I haven't heard anything of the plan since it was presented to the prime minister."

It is no surprise then that optimism is at a low ebb. What gives more strength to this view is the feeling that the NPP has bitten off more than it can chew. Says Ranjana Kumari of the Delhi-based Mahila Dakshata Samiti: "A strong back-up machinery, structural support and delivery mechanism is required to fulfil the high-sounding promises."

What is ironical is that the core group comprising government officials has recommended the adoption of a uniform civil code to the Government, a step scuttled earlier by the Government. At the same time, it has failed to consider cultural plurality and religious sensitivity of the country. Says Sushila Kaushik of Delhi University's Women's Studies and Development Centre: "The NPP displays a tendency to latch on to the propagandist bandwagon."

As is to be expected, some are dismissing the NPP as a pre-election stunt. Kumari goes further, saying: "The plan is inherently non-implementable." According to her, the fault lies in the fact that the authors of the plan take a sectoral view of the situation instead of an integrated one.

Bhatt finds another ground for complaint—the steps will inevitably lead to bureaucratisation of the system. Says she: "Officially sponsored agencies like commissioners and women's development corporations, recommended by the NPP, will centralise power."

Echoing the same feeling, Madhu Kishwar, editor of Manushi (a bimonthly dealing with women's rights), says the plan recommends the setting up of cells, directorates and committees without assessing the role of the existing ones. Nor does it undertake an evaluation of the failure of the existing policies and laws on women.

In the meantime, the NIPCCD has begun organising workshops and meetings with professionals to make them familiar with the document. Also initiated is a strong networking among women's organisations.

Clearly, however, an overwhelming sense of cynicism has greeted the NPP. "It is just as well if it is not implemented," says Kishwar. "It enhances the power of the state to interfere in the lives of the people." Shifting from the earlier government view of women as assets of the family to that of state-owned 'resources', the NPP, according to Kishwar, projects motherhood as an inevitable contribution that women must make to the nation.

But the way things are going it will not be surprising if like the 1975 Committee on Status of Women Report, a document on which no action was taken, the NPP becomes yet another testimonial to state apathy.

—SHARMILA CHANDRA

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

The Plan makes 353 recommendations. But a year after it was presented to the prime minister, little has been done to implement it.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The moment one dream comes true, You realise you have another."

Excerpts from the speech of the Chairman, S M Shetty, at the 6th Annual General Meeting of the Company, held on 28th August 1989

SM Dyechem Ltd

SM House, 11 Sahakar Road, Vile Parle (E), Bombay 400 057, India.
Tel: 6362694 (4 Lines). Telex: 011-79380 SMIM IN

Ladies and Gentlemen:

Because of the change in our company's financial year, we are having an annual general meeting today after a gap of some eighteen rather eventful months.

During this time, the efforts made over the years to increase exports and to keep imports in check have begun to pay off.

To a substantial extent, the improvement has been achieved by slowing down the rate of growth of our imports. However, as we become increasingly more industrialised, the need for imports of various kinds will continue to rise.

Clearly, import substitution has a vital role to play. I am pleased to observe that there is an increasing appreciation of this fact at all levels.

One of the major strengths of our company lies in the fact that the majority of our products are import–substitution products. Our company has, by introducing more and more major import–substitution products over the years, been able to help save substantial sums of foreign exchange.

But what we have done so far is only a beginning. We need to greatly increase both the range and the volume of such import substitution products. At the same time, we need to diversify into other fields, in which we can develop products for exports, as well as for the domestic market.

Financial Performance

Our total income during the past eighteen months has increased dramatically by 175% on an annualised basis. The previous year, we had achieved a turnover of Rs 625.38 lakhs, itself a jump of more than 50% over the year before. This financial year, our turnover reached Rs 2579.30 lakhs. Our gross profit shot up by 242% from Rs 63.40 lakhs in 1986–87 to Rs 230.26 lakhs on an annualised basis.

This spurt in our growth continues during the present year. During the first five months of 1989–90, our turnover has been Rs 1210.00 lakhs, an 85% jump over the turnover of Rs 650.00 lakhs during the corresponding period last year.

Net profits after interest and depreciation are estimated to be Rs 115 lakhs, an increase of 130% on the previous period's figure of Rs 50 lakhs.

Dividends

It gives me great pleasure in recommending a dividend of 36% for the eighteen month period. As required by law, this dividend will be subject to deduction of tax.

Substantial Growth in Speciality Chemicals

During the last year, we have made substantial increases in the market shares of our speciality chemicals.

The new product introduced during the year, under collaboration with Allied Colloids of UK, filament sizing chemicals for air and water jet looms, received tremendous response.

We added substantial new capacity for manufacturing pesticide emulsifiers through our plant in Thane. With this, we have diversified into agrochemicals which is a core sector of the Indian economy.

The company's ethoxilated division was successfully commissioned during the year, and the company had a historic day when the plant was formally inaugurated on March 27, 1988, by Shri N D Tiwari, the then Union Minister for Finance and Commerce.

The entire division has been transferred to our new company, SM Zschimmer and Schwarz Chemicals Limited in which our company holds 40% equity.

Foods Division

Our Foods Division has introduced a new range of 100% hygienic and nutritious snack foods, marketed under the brand name "Peppy". These products have been successfully launched in western India a few months ago.

The first products proved so popular that they have been followed by two more flavours, as well as by a new potato–based snack, under the brand name "Piknik". Both brands have now also been launched in northern India. These products will be progressively marketed in other parts of the country.

Our company's turnover will get a tremendous boost in the coming years, with wider distribution of these products and the addition of a further range of products, soon to be introduced by the Foods Division.

New Projects

Our company is diversifying into other petrochemical and consumer products. The company is setting up a project to manufacture Ethylene Oxide and Mono Ethylene Glycols in a backward area near Pune, in Maharashtra.

Both of these are major import substitution products and there is a very major gap between the country's need for them and the capacity to manufacture them.

The raw materials, process know–how, project management services and detail engineering services for this project have already been tied up with world– renowned companies, and the various approvals are at an advanced stage of clearance.

The necessary land allocation and MPCB clearance is complete, and we intend to bring this project to operational status within a record time.

We are working out the means of financing the project, keeping in mind the interests of the public in general, and of our shareholders in particular. On our part, we are looking forward to continued support from you.

Methanol, another petrochemical product, is increasingly being used all over the world along with petrol as an automotive fuel. We hold SIA registration for the manufacture of 3 lakh MT of methanol per annum, and have already signed a Memorandum of Understanding with a company overseas, who will take up 50% of our production on a buy–back guarantee, and negotiations with other overseas parties are under way for the balance quantities.

In view of this, our company proposes to implement a 100% Export Oriented Unit for the manufacture of methanol. The necessary clearances required for this project are also at an advanced stage.

We are also planning to enter another booming consumer product market, i.e. beer, with complete know–how from Danbrew Consult Ltd, a member of the world– famous Carlsberg Group. We have submitted an application for a letter of intent for this project, and our application is presently under process.

With the major expansions of the projects already in hand, and for our new projects, a considerable amount of engineering back–up support will be needed. Our company is actively considering investments to set up or take over engineering companies with established infrastructure.

Once all these projects come into operation, our company will be a diversified, multi–product, multi–division organisation, active in several different areas, and with sizable additions to our gross block, turnover and profits.

All these projects are the result of careful planning and study of our company's strategic options. Even while these projects are being implemented, the strategic planning group at SM Dyechem will be working on others. For we have all seen that, the moment one dream comes true, you realise you have another.

Note: This does not purport to be a record of the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SIDWAL

Manufacturers of Water Coolers and Airconditioning units installed at the American Embassy, Welcom group Hotels, the Oberoi Chain, Meridien, Park Hotels, Grindlays Bank, American Express, Bank of India, Commercial Airlines, various business establishments and residences. Suppliers to Voltas, Blue Star, Central and State Government departments, Indian Railways, Defence Services, CPWD, MES, CRPF, Courts ... making us the second largest supplier to the DGS&D.

Constant Demand For More

SIDWAL has been working behind the scenes. Spreading an efficient network across the country. And manufacturing products that have not only met with approval, but created a continuous demand for more.

Our Product range is wide:

Room air-conditioners. Split system air-conditioners. Packaged type air-conditioners. Drinking water coolers. Air curtains. Fan coil units & Air handling units.

SIDWAL

More Than 1 Reason For SIDWAL

We won't even go into details about our ultra-modern plant at Faridabad. Or its advanced equipment and testing facilities.

We would, however, like to inform you that our entire range of refrigeration products are manufactured with the latest technology from America. And are accompanied with personalised and prompt after sales service.

And the proof of both lies with the scores of thoroughly satisfied customers.

Why don't you get to know us too?

We're SIDWAL. The refrigeration people who can create your summer paradise!

Split Airconditioner

Room Airconditioner

Fan Coil Unit

Drinking Water Cooler

SIDWAL
REFRIGERATION INDUSTRIES
PRIVATE LIMITED

104, Chiranjiv Tower, 43 Nehru Place
New Delhi 110 019.

Phones: 6439808, 6438422;
Telex : 031-62155 SRI IN

ISI marked Room Air Conditioners & Water Coolers are available on DGS & D Rate Contract.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BACKWARD COMMUNITIES

Job Gambit

Suddenly, a recruitment drive

WHEN election clouds hover overhead, governments rain compassion. The Rajiv Gandhi Government is no exception. It has been showering goodies on the backward communities, trying to win them over to its side. And as the elections draw near, the drizzle is turning into a downpour.

During its last session, Parliament passed a bill authorising the Government to set up special courts to try caste offences. In April, Rajiv announced a new university in Lucknow named after Babasaheb Ambedkar, leader of the depressed classes. Last month he installed a portrait of Ambedkar in the Central Hall of Parliament. And during his recent tour of Karnataka, he inaugurated the Siddhartha Engineering College of the Siddhartha Education Society, an institution for the welfare of the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes (SC/ST).

But the most visible—and the most controversial—part of the campaign has been the special drive launched to recruit SC/ST candidates to government offices, public sector undertakings and banks. During the last three months, there has been a plethora of advertisements in newspapers and over Doordarshan announcing the vacancies. And all departments have been instructed to make special efforts to fill nearly 45,000 vacancies by September.

The vacancies represent the backlog that has built up over the years. The official reason cited for the failure to fill the reserved quota is the lack of suitable candidates. The rule so far was that in such cases vacancies were carried forward for three years before dereservation. A new government order now bans dereservation of posts, except in the case of the top level Group A posts which can be dereserved with the sanction of the minister for personnel.

Not surprisingly, the size and frequency of the recruitment advertisements have drawn attention to the Government's motives. Says a senior Bihar Government officer: "For advertising three vacancies, you don't need a quarter-page advertisement."

Counters P. Chidambaram, Union minister of state for personnel, public grievances and pensions: "None of the advertisements is disproportionately large. Whether you advertise five posts or 50, you have to give certain essentials." And an officer in the Department of Personnel argues: "This is meant to be a high visibility campaign."

The timing of the campaign is also drawing flak. Janata Dal leader Ram Vilas Paswan labels the new drive an "election stunt". Says he: "It's an admission by Rajiv Gandhi that the governments of Nehru and Indira Gandhi were a total failure on this front."

Chidambaram doesn't go along with that. And, as for the campaign coming just before the election, he says it's only a coincidence. His explanation: since reservations are carried forward for three years, a meaningful study of the process of backlog creation takes at least three years. Says he: "After completing the study, we submitted a proposal for a special drive as far back as June 1988." Then, he says, the proposal had to go to the Prime Minister's Office, the committee of secretaries, the committee of MPs, and finally to the Cabinet which approved it in April this year.

In any case, it's a happy coincidence for the Congress(I). And coincidentally again, many Congress(I)-ruled states are launching similar campaigns. In Bihar, Chief Minister Satyendra Narayan Sinha has declared his intention to recruit 25,000 SC/ST candidates by the year-end. The target may be a bit ambitious. Bihar has over three million registered unemployed, but only about 4,000 vacancies are created every year. While the Government has not specified what kind of jobs the newcomers would get, an official hinted that most might be employed in temporary projects on daily wages.

In Uttar Pradesh, the Government has ordered 25 per cent reservation in Group C posts and 30 per cent in Group D posts to wipe off the backlog and achieve the norm of 18 per cent. A cabinet subcommittee headed by the chief minister has been appointed to monitor the progress. Also, the Lok Ayukta has been given powers to inquire into cases where reservation rules have been flouted.

The Maharashtra Government has

UPSFCC
Special drive for employment of SC/ST candidates for the reserved posts:—
Applications are invited for the following temporary posts reserved for SC/ST Candidates in UP State Food & Essential Commodities Corporation Ltd.,
Deputy Finance Manager:
Pay Scale: Rs 900—Rs 1770, one Post,
INDIAN INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY MADRAS
SPECIAL DRIVE FOR RECRUITMENT OF SC/ST CANDIDATES
Indian Telephone Industries Limited
SPECIAL RECRUITMENT DRIVE EXCLUSIVELY FOR SCHEDULED CASTE/SCHEDULED TRIBE CANDIDATES

Advertisements for government jobs: high-profile campaign

On election eve, both the Centre and Congress(I) state governments are busy filling posts reserved for the backward communities.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

PRESENTING INDIA'S FIRST ANA-DIGI WATCHES

SO MUCH MORE THAN JUST TIME

HMT introduces 'Ana digi' watches.

India's first. With analog and digital display, pre programmed calendar, stop watch, alarm, hourly chime... wonder how you ever managed without them.

You don't have to. Anymore.

hmt
QUARTZ

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Attention all Honda, Kawasaki and Yamaha owners.

Your accessories are ready. Gentlemen, rev up your engines. The Csango leather accessories collection is here. Leather jackets. Leather gloves. The works. Evil designs to match your mean machines. Because what's over you should be as racy as what's under you. If you're not into burning rubber on the road, Csango still has your kind of leather. Suitcases. Briefcases. Folders. Wallets. Totes. Belts. Bags. So exclusive, you'll find them at only one address in the country. Va va vroom.

BRIEFCASES • BAGS • FOLDERS
TOTES • WALLETS
BELTS • SUITCASES

CSANGO

The art. The craft. The store.

Dhanraj Mahal, Apollo Bunder, Bombay.
Kakani Towers, Nungambakkam, Madras.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Some of our technology is 12,500 miles away from Earth.

And some is at home.

Satellite technology to home electronics. You really can't expect less from NEC. Formerly the Nippon Electric Co. Ltd. As Japan's frontline electronics company, manufacturers today of over 15,000 products. And the undisputed leader. In supercomputers. Semiconductors. Industrial robotics. Putting high technology to work in the manufacture of TVs and VCRs – some of the finest in Japan and in the world.

That's NEC. Electronics in the service of man. And his family.

Models FS-3300 & DX-1000 E

FROM HI-TECH TO HOME TECH.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

NEC

NEC Corporation, Japan

For information pl

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

asked all departments, local bodies and government undertakings to submit backlog figures by the first week of September. For filling the vacancies it has set a tough deadline: October 1.

As a result of the special campaign, opposition-ruled states have been forced to sit up. In Tamil Nadu, the DMK Government has banned dereservation of posts in state government and public sector undertakings. Incidentally, the state has practically no backlog of posts for SC/ST. A senior IAS officer points out: "As many as 40 per cent of those recruited by the state public service commission for lower grades are from the SC/ST block."

But in trying to match the Centre's recruitment drive, the DMK Government has landed itself in a spot of trouble. An anonymous poster, put up in several places in South Arcot—by the Vanniar Sangam, according to police intelligence—attacks the Government for "appeasing Harijans" at the cost of other caste groups.

Still, the fact is that the Central Government's drive will scarcely affect unemployment among the backward classes. On June 30 this year, the country's employment exchanges recorded over 4.5 million SC/ST candidates. And the 45,000 or so posts being filled by the Government is not even 1 per cent of that. And at the same time, as Janata Dal's Paswan points out, the drive will "fuel resentment in other communities".

As it is, several practical difficulties in implementing the drive confront the Government. Officials say suitable candidates do not become available overnight. Also, the relaxation of restrictions regarding the domicile of candidates has led to resentment among local candidates. Another major problem is funds. The cash-strapped Finance Ministry is worried on that count. But Chidambaram dismisses the fears: "There is no additionality of expenditure. The posts will be filled anyway. We have only compressed the process that would have taken years."

This is essentially pre-election rhetoric; the grandiose declamations of a ruling party out to use all the powers of patronage at its disposal to harness votes. And the noises being made may be heard for full three months, and no more.

—ALOK TIWARI
with bureau reports

BOTTOMLINE BY D. BUNKER

Belgrade Bash

THE Non-Aligned Movement is moving at its traditional pace—like a snail with a bad hangover. But the real success of such jamborees is the informal parties that take place behind the scenes, where the heads of state really let their hair down (except Arafat whose state of head is a carefully guarded secret). An insider's account of the diplomatic banter that went on at one of the Belgrade bashes.

Rajiv Gandhi: Hello Ken. Long time no see.

Kenneth Kaunda: There's no need to speak in pidgin English. We're pretty civilised now you know.

Rajiv (flustered): Sorry. How are things in Uganda?

Kaunda: Wouldn't know. Haven't been there for years. I see you've brought your son along.

Rajiv: My son?

Kuanda: The chap holding your hand.

Rajiv: Oh, that's Mani Iyer. He's my right-hand man.

Mani: Sir, I think you should meet Arafat. He's right at hand.

Rajiv: Yessir, I mean Yasser. When are you coming to New Delhi?

Arafat (surprised): My brother, I was there last week. But I'm free next week as well. (Patting his pistol) Have-gun-will-travel as the Americans would say.

Rajiv (hastily moving on): Mani. You and your big mouth. Please be more careful. You never know whom you will bump into at these...Oh, hello your highness. How are things in your lovely kingdom?

King Birendra: Pretty bad, thanks to you. Didn't you hear my speech about Big Brother?

Rajiv: Er, not really. I tuned into the Swahili translation by mistake. Nice seeing you again.

Mani: There's a safe spot. Next to that woman in a sari. Must be one of ours.

Rajiv: Good idea... Oh, hello Begum sahiba. I hope you took serious note of my serious objection to the reference you made to Kashmir?

Nusrat Bhutto (sweetly): No. I tuned into the Yugoslav translation by mistake. I'm not a regular at these NAM conferences, you know.

Rajiv (moving on): Mani, can't you find one safe spot in this place?

Mani: There. Next to that kindly looking priest.

Rajiv: Good evening fath...Ranjan! What a lovely surprise. And how are things on your lovely little island?

Wijeratne: Pretty bad. Thanks to you. When are you pulling your troops out of my country?

Rajiv (hastily): Soon. Very soon. They are all dying to get home anyway.

Mani (steering Rajiv away): Sir, it's a general melee.

Ershad: No. It's General Ershad. Listen Rajiv. What are you doing about those damn flood waters that are causing havoc in my country.

Rajiv (weakly): Oh. I thought that was all water under the bridge. Anyway, we can sort this all out at the next SAARC meeting, can't we?

Ershad: No we can't. Your delegation always blocks any attempt to bring up bilateral matters. NAM is the only place we can waylay you Indians.

Rajiv: And I thought I was coming here to get away from it all.

Mani: Sir, I've found the safest spot.

Rajiv: Where?

Mani: Next to the king of Bhutan.

Cartoon by AIT NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WEST BENGAL

Press Protest

● FOR more than a month, the ruling Left Front Government in West Bengal has boycotted Doordarshan and AIR, protesting against its biased coverage. But on August 30, the day of the Bharat Bandh, their attack against the official media backfired.

CPI(M) workers assaulted TV cameraman Sashanka Biswas but some journalists of The Statesman and local newspapers too were attacked.

Angry journalists took out a procession against the attack. The Congress(I) expectedly made capital of the event and painted Chief Minister Jyoti Basu has an anti-press ogre. But the fact is that both Basu and Information and Culture Minister Buddhadev Bhattacharya had instructed partymen not to harass the press. And after the bandh, Basu said: "Those attacking journalists are enemies of the Left Front."

Bhattacharya: unfairly targetted

There is reason for the state Government's anger. Both Doordarshan and AIR recently refused to accept advertisements for the Bakreshwar Thermal Power Project and appeals for funds. The official media insists it was following guidelines but the state Power Development Corporation has gone to court challenging its refusal. Meanwhile, the CPI(M) passed a resolution in the Assembly asking the Centre to prevent misuse of the official media. That's easier said than done.

GUJARAT

A Reversal of Fortunes

Solanki: losing support

● UNION Minister for Planning Madhavsinh Solanki must be fast realising that politics is like chess. Until recently, he was training his guns on Gujarat Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary. Now, he is at the receiving end.

For with Chaudhary likely to stay on, key Solanki supporters, including Yogendra Makwana, Ahmed Patel, and Narsinh Makwana, have deserted Solanki, preferring to lie low. And rebel MLAs—Jitendra Shah, Digant Oza and Narendra Raval—who guided the "oust-Chaudhary movement" recently met Chaudhary and have since maintained a stoic silence. PCC(I) chief Prabodh Raval has also adopted a neutral stance. Moreover, all attempts by Solanki—who is considered the "Jagannath Mishra of Gujarat"—to convince Rajiv to remove Chaudhary have failed. In Gujarat's urban areas, he is still held responsible for pitting the backward classes against the upper class for political gains. Though he may seem to be losing the game, the wily Solanki can always be trusted to make a surprise move and checkmate his opponents.

ANDHRA PRADESH

Unjust Desserts

● AUGUST 30—the Bharat Bandh day—was the scene of a melee in Andhra Pradesh. It all began when Telugu Desam workers, wanting to gatecrash into the AIR's Cuddapah station, started stoning policemen on duty. The police resorted to a lathicharge and state Agriculture Minister B. Veera Reddy retaliated by abusing and throwing slippers at them. The final straw came when a car belonging to the Bandh supporters hit a policeman, fracturing his right foot.

Furious policemen stormed the Rayalaseema guesthouse in Cuddapah district where Reddy was staying and threatened to shoot him and other Telugu Desam leaders. Just then district SP Tejdeep Pratihast came to the rescue. Snatching a rifle, she threatened to shoot herself if the 60-odd constables did not surrender. Her threat worked. But Reddy, who nursed a grouse against her, demanded the chief minister take action for her "misbehaviour". An inquiry was ordered. A week later, Pratihast had to move to Hyderabad. Her new job: probing atrocities against women.

MADHYA PRADESH

Prison Tales

● IF bandit queen Phoolan Devi has ever lacked for anything, it's certainly not media attention. Several directors have even sought to recreate on celluloid her eventful life and colourful personality. Now, the notorious outlaw of the Chambal ravines, who has been cooling her heels in Gwalior Central Jail for six years, is again in the news. But this time, the media headlines are not of her own making. Phoolan Devi is seriously ill.

However, far from evoking sympathy, her illness has only led to sordid speculation. Some allege that it is the result of her promiscuity. One newspaper went so far as to declare that she had been admitted to a Gwalior hospital for an abortion. Others hinted that she was suffering from AIDS and so was rapidly losing weight.

Phoolan: headlines again

However, a Madhya Pradesh Jail Department spokesman has sought to refute the charges. Said he categorically: "Phoolan neither suffers from AIDS nor did she ever go in for an abortion." Still, many in Madhya Pradesh are reluctant to accept that statement. While they are ready to concede that Phoolan does not suffer from AIDS, they insist that Phoolan Devi has contracted a sexually transmitted disease.

If there is any truth in that, the jail authorities will have to answer one question: how did Phoolan get pregnant or pick up a sexual disease when she was behind bars?

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A Hero Honda just went by.

Isn't it lovely? Clean, fresh and bright. Well, that's a few seconds after a bike zoomed by. Doesn't show, does it? No tell-tale smoke in the air. That's what sets a Hero Honda CD 100 apart, making it the cleanest among 100 cc bikes, with the lowest carbon monoxide emission.

The 4-stroke advantage.

Honda's technical leadership is evident in every aspect of the Hero Honda CD 100's 4-stroke engine. Complete fuel combustion ensures ease of maintenance and the phenomenal 80 km/litre* fuel-efficiency, apart from the clean, pollution-free exhaust. For kilometre after kilometre of trouble-free service.

Our favourite performance figure, though, is the lakhs of happy owners. Who make the Hero Honda CD 100 India's largest-selling bike.

HERO HONDA

You've got a Good thing Going!

*At 40 kmph/130 kg.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AFGHAN MUJAHEDIN

Chasing a Distant Mirage

The future looks grim for the Mujahedin, as using an effective combination of land mines and air power, the Najib Government has forced them on the defensive.

THE holy war may not have been lost, but its second round has been a disaster for the "believers". After driving out the great Soviet Army in what was, for them, the glorious first round that lasted a full decade, the Afghan Mujahedin are now licking their wounds, unable to dislodge the legacy of Najibullah's Government that the Soviets left behind.

With the advance Mujahedin columns no closer to Jalalabad, Kandahar, Kabul and Herat than they were six months ago when the last Soviet column crossed the Termez bridge on Amu Darya and with winter threatening to set in early, the Mujahedin leaders are finally, if reluctantly, acknowledging defeat for the first time in the jehad. "We've tried everything. We just can't make any headway," admitted the leader of a moderate Mujahedin faction. The fundamentalists talk about fighting "till the last drop of our blood", but less and less of victory.

At the "headquarters" of the provisional government of the Islamic Unity of Afghan Mujahedin, the mood is grim. The seven-member armed guard still smartly salutes the "president", Professor Mohammed Mojaddadi, as he drives in and out. But the "president" himself is not so sure of the immediate future. He says, his forehead creased with years of fighting and worry: "It may be a long struggle. Much longer than we had thought. But we will win ultimately, Inshallah."

Indeed, for the Mujahedin to make a turnaround in the military situation before winter snows block the passes, nothing short of divine intervention is necessary. "It was one thing to fight the Soviets as they moved around the roads and mountains. It's more difficult to dislodge fellow Afghans in stockaded fortresses even if they're kafirs," says Mohammed Nazir, 40, a veteran of many battles.

For the record, and to ensure that the supplies of arms and money keep flowing from their backers, the leaders maintain a brave front, promising a shift in battlefield fortunes. But the mood of defeat is reflected in the voices of the very people they claim to be fighting for, the refugees holed up in the many camps that dot Pakistan's North-West Frontier Province.

Nasirbagh on the outskirts of Peshawar is one of the biggest. Although Saudi and western largesse has made it one of the best run refugee camps in the world, it is sprouting new, unauthorised tented extensions every day as fresh refugees pour in. The tents are often no more than a few sheets and rags tied together and their children, with worm-bloated bellies, mill around testifying to their misery. The new settlements are not served by the camp administration. And unlike the older, settled camps, these have a much higher percentage of able-bodied men. The explanation is obvious: the new refugees are disinclined to join the fighting.

So worried have the Mujahedin groups been by this drop in the new refugees' zeal for jehad that the camp administrations have been persuaded to issue ration cards to a new family only after its male members enrol with the Mujahedin. But not many join, and those who do often desert. Admitted a Pakistani official running one of the camps: "Now you basically have people driven by Scuds from Najib's side and rockets from the Mujahedin's and with no stake or heart in fighting." Asks Maula Ajeeb,

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

▲ Khweshki refugee camp
▶ Mine-hit Rahimullah
◀ "President" Mojaddadi

The rebels still talk about fighting "till the last drop of our blood", but less and less of victory.

70: "Who are we fighting for and to what end? If it was indeed a holy war, wouldn't Allah have ensured our victory by now?" Six of his nine grandchildren and both his sons have already been consumed by the jehad. No wonder he hides his only remaining grandson like a treasure.

Nowhere is defeat writ larger than on the faces of the men milling on the compound and lying inside the wards of the massive Kuwaiti Red Crescent hospital on the outskirts of Peshawar. This is not your typical field hospital right behind the battle zone: the operation theatres have the latest equipment, each ward has four Hitachi or Sanyo air-conditioners and the surgeons are well-qualified and fired by religious zeal. Some of the best surgeons from the Middle East are working here and the best medical students come here to learn and assist in the holy war. What they learn, however, is limited. A notice in the hospital compound announces a lecture for young doctors every Thursday on five subjects: wounds, infections and dressings; first-aid of severely wounded; catheters and drains; care of shock and trauma and blood transfusion therapy. "We have no time for the ordinary sick. This place is for the Mujahedin," says a Kuwaiti surgeon, instructing guards to keep out malaria and gastroenteritis victims from the refugee camps.

But one thing the hospital does not provide for is sliding morale. "We can fight bombs, rockets, planes, helicopters. But can we fight them all together? Our ammunition comes by horse, theirs by aircraft. How can we win?" complains Khan Malik, 20. Four months ago, he had lost an eye to a stray piece of shrapnel while attacking a government post in Kunar province. After recovering for two months in the hospital he returned to the jehad and, in a rare coincidence, lost the second eye as well to shrapnel. He says he will still fight but is not so sure of winning: "We can only win if Allah wants us to."

Others blame not communist cunning or imperialist perfidy for their plight, nor even helicopter gunships or Scud missiles, but that puny but deadly object—the anti-personnel mine which the Afghans just call "personnel". Ward after ward of war casualties with blown up legs testifies to how effectively Najib's army has used the mines.

Rahimullah, 25, had risen quickly in the ranks of Hekmatyar's Hezb-e-Islami, becoming a commandant at 25. His first operation at the head of his command was taking the strategic Kama bridge 5 km from Jalalabad. Everything was going as planned as he led his band of barefooted attackers silently through the dark. Then the earth slipped from under his feet, quite literally. The mine blasted both his legs. Now he stares wistfully at the bandaged stumps of what was once a strong pair of legs and reflects: "If a Kalashnikov hits you, you die. A mine cripples you. I hate mines. We all hate them."

"Ninety per cent of our casualties are

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The European Connection.

Short transit times, fast ground handling facilities and excellent onward connections make Lufthansa's Frankfurt the best gateway to Europe and the world.

Lufthansa

LH 5707-1 DEL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

▲ Mujahedin: sagging morale mine victims," says Dr Mohammed Jasem, the kaffiyeh-clad Kuwaiti assistant director of the hospital. Adds Fazli Subhan, his bearded Pakistani assistant: "Mines are Allah's curse on humanity. Why have they been unleashed on his own Mujahedin?"

EXPERTS say the effective use of mines has been the Afghan Government's military masterstroke. Since the army has no real ambitions of extending its zone of control beyond the cities it has heavily mined all approaches to them. Generous Soviet supplies of smaller, lighter and more lethal mines have helped. Millions of these have been scattered from low-flying helicopters around government posts and major towns. They come in the most unexpected shapes: leaves, butterflies, even dolls. Says Esa Mohammed, who lost his right leg to the dreaded "personnel" in Kunduz: "There are so many of them. You could spend the rest of your life clearing them or risk sprinting across and ending up here."

Militarily, Najib's tactics have been extremely effective as is apparent from its success in Jalalabad. The deadly mines have been aided by a combination of long-range Scud missiles fired from Kabul and high-altitude bombing. "Earlier we could deter the communist bombers with our Stingers. Now they're so high you can barely see them," complains Abdul Aziz, just back from the battlefront to spend a week with his family in the sprawling Khweshki refugee camp around 60 km from Peshawar.

For the first time, rebels are wondering if negotiation is not a better alternative to fighting the Afghan Army.

Learning from the example in innovation set by the Indian Air Force in the 1971 war with Pakistan, the Afghan Government has modified its four-engined AN-12 transports for high-altitude bombing. They have fitted the cargo cabin with rails for the bombs which are dropped from altitudes higher than 30,000 ft. The bombing is seldom accurate but each AN-12 carries 10 tonnes of explosives and combined with the Scuds keeps the Mujahedin heads down. Says a western military expert: "Najib knows if combat ever became close the Mujahedin will win against his conscripts. So he has chosen deterrence: expensive but effective."

So effective, in fact, that for the first time in a decade several Mujahedin leaders are wondering if negotiation is not a better alternative to banging their heads against the Afghan Army's defences. But such talk does not please the fundamentalists. The differences have spilled into the Mujahedin's own side of the battlefield with several groups turning their gun-barrels at one another. Last month, Hekmatyar's followers killed over 30 followers of Ahmed Shah Masoud, the legendary commander of Panjshir valley belonging to the Burhanuddin Rabbani group. "Just when Masoud should be rallying his men to hit the convoys bringing in supplies from Russia to stock up Kabul for the winter he is chasing Hekmatyar's bands for revenge," rues a senior US official.

The current predicament has led to introspection among Mujahedin ideologues who now feel it was short-sighted to have gone in for an all-out war against Najib without first sorting out problems among Mujahedin ranks. "It's one thing to talk of an Islamic government, but what kind of Islamic government were we promising? Was there a charter? An agenda? A leader to project? A slogan other than Allho Akbar?" asks a former Kabul University professor. "These are the reasons why you still have Najib in Kabul," says Haji Saeed Doud, the articulate head of the Afghan Mujahedin Research Centre, a US-funded information organisation dealing mainly with the visiting foreign press.

With the Mujahedin themselves so unsure, it is hardly surprising that even their US and Pakistani handlers are harbouring doubts. The divide in the US Embassy in Islamabad between the hard and softliners has often been documented lately by the US press. The Mujahedin's discomfiture is, in fact, helping Benazir Bhutto make a departure from Zia's Afghan policy. "Where are those who were dreaming of saying their namaaz in Tashkent? Can they safely visit even Peshawar now?" asks Salman Taseer, leader of Benazir's party in Punjab. If the conviction in his arguments is any reflection of the mood of Benazir's Government, the Mujahedin could indeed be left with no choice other than to talk. With a stout enemy in front and wavering allies in the rear, military victory now seems a distant mirage.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Peshawar

LH 5/07-1 DEL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

At any given moment of any day, thousands of people are taking off aboard Boeing jetliners. Thousands of others are just landing.

This ebb and flow of passengers and planes goes on around the clock at major airports around the globe. At Heathrow. De Gaulle. Narita. JFK. LAX. And hundreds of others.

It all adds up to nearly two million people flying on Boeing airplanes. Day after day. Every day of the year.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In fact, every 2½ seconds a Boeing jet takes off or lands somewhere on earth.

Boeing. We don't just deliver a lot of airplanes. We deliver a lot of people.

BOEING

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AJAX/OCM/89

Digitized by eGangotri

OCM
SUITINGS
THE PERFECT FABRIC
A Product of VXL India Ltd.
WE EXCEL
Available at Mill's SUMANGAL showrooms
and other leading stores

CC-0. In Public Domain. G

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Another Quiet Day For Voltas At The Stock Exchange.

The Voltas share is, today, a star performer on the stock market.

And with very good reason, too.

Turnover is up. Profits are up. Reserves are up. An unbroken dividend

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

y, a star
.
n, too.
e up.
dividend

record continues. New projects are getting off the ground. And the future looks more bullish than ever before.

All of this is testimony to the soundness of Voltas' master plan for growth. A master plan that has helped insulate the company against the vagaries of business cycles by making it India's most widely diversified company, handling over 800 product lines.

Some 80% of Voltas' 75,000 shar holders have never, ever, sold their holding in the company. And th company has rewarded that faith.

VOLTAS LIMITED The Results Are Showing

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Enterprise/VL/

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Money Muscle

By funnelling scarce capital resources into the private sector, the country's four premier financial institutions—the Industrial Development Bank of India, the Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation of India, the Unit Trust of India and the Life Insurance Corporation—have helped spur industrial growth. But in recent times they've been accused of succumbing to political pressure to unseat company managements and take sides in take-over battles.

ON the stage of Indian business, they've long sat in the wings. But in recent months, they've been moving centre stage and into the harsh glare of the spotlight. And like it or not, the country's premier financial institutions—the Industrial Development Bank of India (IDBI), the Unit Trust of India (UTI), the Life Insurance Corporation of India (LIC), the Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation of India (ICICI)—are finding themselves in the thick of controversy.

Long after the Swraj Paul raid on Escorts and DCM, the role of the institutions is again being debated, thanks to the take-over of Larsen & Toubro (L&T). The institutions held the controlling stake in the professionally-managed company. But the Ambanis acquired a 12 per cent stake and were allowed to take over. Says an institutional source: "Dhirubhai Ambani asked his friends in Delhi to speak to the institutions and the company fell into his lap."

L&T is not the only professionally-managed company the institutions have handed over to big business. Several months ago, they tacitly blessed liquor baron Vijay Mallya's bid for the Madras-based Best & Crompton.

Nor have the institutions been consistent. They supported Manu Chhabria in the Shaw Wallace take-over, and opposed him in Gammon India. They waived Rs 21 crore in interest owed by the once ailing Andhra Pradesh Rayons, a Thapar company (after another Thapar company guaranteed repayment of its liabilities), but have sat tight on a similar request from Punalur Paper Mills. They've even emerged as arbiters in business family disputes (the Modi dispute, for instance).

In defence, the chiefs of the financial institutions say there can never be broad guidelines and that everything is decided on a "case-by-case basis".

Nonetheless, these controversies have drawn attention to the enormous power the financial institutions wield—and lent support to the suspicion that they are often only political tools. Says an institutional source: "We don't have a formal reporting system, but invariably work closely with the Finance Ministry." And it's New Delhi that calls the shots. At least one of the chairmen of these financial agencies is disconcerted by the institutional intervention in family disputes. "Everything has been done at the

Charts by B.K. SHARMA

Photographs by NAMAS BHOJANI

With over Rs 3,000 crore of loan funds at his disposal every year, IDBI chief Nadkarni is courted by the corporate world.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UTI Chairman Manohar Pherwani is the country's stock-market czar. With Rs 11,000 crore in investible funds, his actions determine the market mood.

instance of the Government. It will hurt the institutions," says he.

Most heads of institutions decline to talk on specific cases. But IDBI Chairman Suresh Nadkarni, 55, insists that while there are pressures from New Delhi he doesn't bow to them. "It depends on the chief executive," he says. "If he is willing to be pushed, then the organisation suffers. I refuse to be pushed."

All these institutions were set up in the early '60s, except ICICI (1955). Their goals differed. IDBI and ICICI were meant to channel funds to industry and foster industrial growth. On the other hand, UTI was supposed to invest the savings of unit holders. And LIC is an insurance and investment concern.

The heads of these institutions—Narayanan Vaghul (ICICI), Manohar Jethanand Pherwani (UTI), Narayan Krishnarao Shinkar (LIC) and IDBI's Nadkarni,—form a powerful quartet. There are other institutions too, like the Industrial Finance Corporation of India, headed by the publicity-shy D.N. Davar. But the quartet heads the biggest institutions. Together, they pack more financial power than J.R.D. Tata and all the Birlas put together.

Their power is reflected in the money they disburse. During the last nine months alone, IDBI and ICICI disbursed loans totalling Rs 4,469 crore. That's not very far from the yearly sales of all the Birla companies. And they've made tidy profits too—Rs 178 crore post-tax (IDBI), and Rs 79 crore (ICICI) during the last nine-month financial year (see charts).

The institutions also own substantial chunks of the equity of private concerns. Few know how much, but assessments run to over 50 per cent of the corporate sector's equity. In theory, their heads have the power to make or mar corporate fortunes, and pitch industrialists into or out of the driver's seat in companies.

Chief ministers approach them for loans for their industrial development corporations. Industrialists queue up to meet them. Among those who drop in on Nadkarni, for instance, are K.K. Birla, Aditya Birla, the bosses of several Tata firms and RPG Enterprises Chairman Harsh Goenka. Says Goenka: "I pay Nadkarni a courtesy call every month."

The institutions first attracted controversy in the early '80s with Paul's raid on Escorts and DCM. The financial institutions, which then owned the controlling stake in Escorts, backed Paul's bid for the company. But Escorts Chairman H.P. Nanda went to court and after a messy battle the institutions retreated in 1986. Says Nanda: "The institutions are supposed to be autonomous but in several cases they have followed orders from the top." A retired institution chief confirms the charge: "The decisions are political. Orders come from the Finance Ministry and we implement them."

The institutions' power is derived from the convertibility clause of their loan

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

G.I. JOE

IF G.I. JOE WERE A WISH, YOU'D BE A CHILD AGAIN.

Remember your childhood adventures. The eternal fight between good and evil. On the beaches. In steamy deserts. Treacherous swamps, jungles, mountains.

Now create those moments for your son. While you re-live yours. With G.I. JOE International Heroes.

A highly motivated team of specialists dedicated to liberating the world from COBRA terrorism. Fiercely committed, highly mobile, superbly trained – and backed by the devastating firepower of modern weapons and vehicles.

G.I. JOE. The world's favourite toy army. A range of specialist soldiers and fighting vehicles that have stirred the imagination of boys the world over for 25 years.

G.I. JOE. The quintessence of the modern warrior packed into 3½ inches of feisty life-like soldier. With 21 different parts and 16 possible life-like movements, to strike astonishingly real battle poses. And a pool of fighting vehicles that replicate, in the tiniest detail, actual machines in use with armies world-wide. A tribute to the toymaker's art and the stuff of every boy's dream.

So, bring adventure into your son's life. With G.I. JOE toys, comics, video cassettes. And the fun will never end.

Gung Ho and Zap in a desperate one-on-one battle on the city streets against Major Bludd and the Baroness.

G.I. JOE. Gift your childhood to your son.

FUNSKOOL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/FS/GJ

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

As ICICI chairman, Narayanan Vaghul has proved an innovator. In his brief tenure he has successfully floated a string of new institutions.

agreements, which permits conversion of their loans to companies into equity. After the Escorts case, companies have had second thoughts about institutional loans. DCM Toyota, for instance, chose to issue debentures in 1985. More recently, Calcutta-based businessman B.M. Khaitan split MacNeil & Magor into smaller firms and asked for separate small loans. Reason: the convertibility clause does not apply to loans less than Rs 5 crore.

The clause certainly arouses ire in industry. The institutions maintain it was introduced because businessmen got relatively soft loans, and the equity was a means of compensating the financial agencies. But several businessmen see it differently. Industrialist Y.K. Modi says: "Shareholders put in money without interest. The financial institutions lend money, get interest and get a share of the profits also upon conversion."

Many also argue that once a company becomes profitable, the institutions should sell their shares and invest in new ventures. H.T. Parekh, a former ICICI chairman, says the institutions should take a long-term view of returns and should be prepared to risk funds in new areas of growth. "They have a developmental role to play," he says.

In all fairness, they have played that role. Says Nanda: "The development banks helped people like me who didn't want to go to the commercial banks because they were then controlled by the large business groups."

Today, they're certainly playing a more innovative role too. Some of the credit for that goes to ICICI's Vaghul, 53. In his brief tenure, Vaghul has successfully floated a string of new institutions—the Shipping Credit and Investment Corporation of India to replace a similar defunct body, the Credit Rating and Information Services of India Ltd (CRISIL) for credit rating activities, the Technology Development and Information Corporation of India for venture capital funding. And his report on money and finance has helped liberalise the country's money markets.

IDBI on the other hand hasn't been much of an innovator. It has set up the Small Industrial Development Bank of India to cater to the small sector. But the major source of revenue is still conventional lending operations.

Among the financial institutions, UTI boasts the most spectacular growth, most of it under Pherwani, 56, the undisputed czar of the stock-markets. At 11 a.m. each working day, he and his senior staff decide what shares UTI will buy or sell. Minutes before trading begins at the Bombay Stock Exchange at noon, their decisions are conveyed to some of the 60 stockbrokers with whom the 1200-employee UTI deals.

Those decisions will probably decide which way the markets move. For UTI's investible funds now amount to Rs 10,800 crore, up from Rs 2,200 crore five years ago, at the beginning of Pherwani's tenure. And gross annual

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LIC Chairman Shinkar is trying to improve his organisation's poor image. He has also launched a mutual fund and an overseas venture.

income over the same period has shot up from Rs 142 crore to Rs 1,625 crore.

Pherwani succeeded G.S. Patel in 1984 at a favourable juncture—when UTI's financial position was sound and the stock-markets were about to boom. But he has also set up two international funds—the India Fund registered in London and the India Growth Fund in New York—and launched a new domestic mutual fund, Mastershare.

But though his primary responsibility is to get the best return for his investors, the onus of maintaining stability in the stock-markets also falls on him. Pherwani has successfully walked the tightrope. UTI has consistently outperformed the equity indices. For instance, the net asset value of Mastershare rose 124 per cent between December 1986 and June 1989 while The Economic Times share price index rose only 68 per cent. But now the monopoly UTI has long enjoyed is being eroded. Several banks—Canara and State Bank, among others—have floated mutual funds. And the sweeping tax benefits it enjoys may not last for ever. Reserve Bank Governor R.N. Malhotra hinted as much when he said recently that there should be a level playing field for all.

Right now, it's hardly that. Shinkar, 58, of LIC, for instance, says "his hands are tied". The 75,000-employee organisation has investible funds of Rs 3,000 crore a year. But about 85 per cent of it has to be invested in government-approved programmes with poor yields. Only about Rs 300 crore a year is freely available for investment.

Worse, LIC is viewed as a bureaucratic giant that has failed to respond to market needs. The returns on policies are negligible. And it's been accused of being dilatory in settling claims.

Now there are signs that the giant is stirring. This July, it launched a mutual fund. It also set up an insurance outlet in Bahrain. And the number of outstanding claims as a proportion of total claims has come down from 11 per cent in 1986 to 4.99 per cent. The accent is on service. Says Shinkar: "LIC is a marketing organisation. We approach people for business, not the other way round."

LIC is not the only institution that has come in for flak. Small industrialists complain about the lengthy appraisal procedures of IDBI and ICICI. And UTI is accused of artificially propping up the market. Says one stockbroker: "The market cannot be on a permanent high, some corrections are necessary. But each time the markets go down, his institutions go on a buying spree."

Certainly, the four institution chiefs have a tough job. Succumb to pressure and the institutions are compromised. Disregard it and your job is on the line. One retired institution chief described the dilemma accurately: "A circus acrobat would be perfect for the job. But he would have to be a banker too."

—S.N. VASUKI with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Capture the beauty of a butterfly on your wall

For those who value taste here's your chance to bring back the romance of colour and beauty of course with ECONOMY

ANGOOR® and Cherry

- Lime Colours
- Dry Distemper
- Cement Oxide Colours

Bachhraj COLOURS (P) Ltd.

Regd. Office : Machharhatta, Patna City-800008
Phones: 42389, 42092, 41115

Branch Office: 119, Sector 37, Noida-201301 Phone: 22050

mahima/bcpl/10450/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MARKETING REPLICAS

VINTAGE cars have been sporadically exported for years, but the State Trading Corporation (STC) is now entering the act—in a manner of speaking. STC plans on promoting the export of, not vintage cars, but imitation vintage cars. The public sector company has already identified a small Indore-based firm, Barwani Replicar Motors, to supply imitations of the real thing, and is on the look-out for more suppliers. The move is a fall-out of STC Chairman Bhupinder Singh's recent visit to the US and West Germany where a market exists for vintage car replicas. A car which is more than 45 years old can cost anything in the region of $200,000 (Rs 33 lakh). But an imitation vintage car made of the stripped parts of cars and jeeps is priced at under $30,000 (Rs 5 lakh)—within reach of aficionados who can't afford the real thing. Whether STC's latest export drive gets into high gear remains to be seen.

BACK IN THE RACE

CITIBANK is back in the race to acquire Diner's Club, the market leader in the credit card business. Earlier, it had pulled out when the State Bank of India (SBI) expressed interest in acquiring the credit card company. A few months ago, SBI had made an informal offer to the Aggarwals who run Diner's, but the price fell short of their expectations and the deal failed to materialise. So now Citibank is once again in the reckoning. Apart from Citibank, several other banks are believed to be in the running for Diner's. Still, it's unlikely that a quick sale will take place: it may take up to a year before any deal is struck.

BIG TIME

AFTER coming out in rapid succession with a dazzling range of watches, the Bangalore-based Titan is going very, very upscale—watches priced at an incredible Rs 40,000. In comparison, the most expensive Titan watch today costs just Rs 1,700. Over the next six months, the Tata company will begin its move upmarket by launching watches in the Rs 2,000 to Rs 5,000 watch range. But the most expensive watches will come later. And what will a buyer get for Rs 40,000? The details have still to be worked out, but in all probability it will be a gold watch, studded with gems. The gambit is to sell watches as a life-style item rather than just as an instrument that tells the time. At the other end of the scale, Titan is introducing plastic watches.

HARDLY TAXING

QUITE some time ago, the taxman had served show-cause notices on a lot of companies alleging that they had evaded huge amounts of excise duty. The Tax Department has now started dropping some of these cases. And in other cases it has lowered its stiff demands. In two separate orders, one in April and the other last month, the Government has dropped all charges that Kelvinator of India had evaded Rs 32 crore in taxes. In another development, Fedders Lloyd, which faced additional tax demands of Rs 19 crore, will now have to cough up a far lower amount—Rs 1 crore. The third case involved the Delhi beautician Shahnaz Hussain. In 1987, Hussain had been accused of exporting cosmetics under the garb of ayurvedic medicines and was served with tax notices for Rs 3 lakh. But that demand has now been scaled down to just Rs 5,000. Evidently, all the Tax Department's allegations were unfounded and the tax demands were grossly inflated.

CONSUMER CULTURE

THE Planning Commission has confirmed what some have suspected: consumerism is deep-rooted and not confined to the middle class. Drawing on National Sample Survey data on expenditure by people from the bottom 40 per cent of the population, a Planning Commission report says that incomes have gone up, and that while food is still important, its once pre-eminent position in the hierarchy of priorities is giving way to non-food consumer goods (see chart). Indeed, lower income groups—which the report defines as those earning less than Rs 18,000 a year—accounted for 61 per cent of all the consumer goods bought in 1986. What is more, the popular perception that consumerism is affecting the savings rate may not be true. The study says that household savings as a percentage of total savings in the economy have steadily increased from 68 per cent in the '60s, to 75 per cent in the '80s. If the overall savings rate has remained stagnant, it's because of the drop in the public sector's savings and the near-stagnation in the corporate sector's savings. In other words, people can continue spending on consumer goods without feeling guilty about upsetting the economy.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

SOVIET ADVERTISING

INDIAN companies have flocked to the Soviet Union to set up a host of joint ventures in areas ranging from hotels and soft drinks to engineering items. Now, the Soviets are scouting for an Indian partner who'll set up an advertising agency in the USSR, with the Soviets holding 51 per cent of the equity. The new agency is meant to advertise Soviet products in India, as well as the wares of Indian joint ventures and exporters in the Soviet Union. The proposal is still at a preliminary stage, but at least one leading Indian advertising agency is said to be seriously interested in it.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

THIS IS THE STORY OF A GOVERNMENT CIRCULAR

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THAT SUDDENLY CAME ALIVE IN THIRTEEN DIFFERENT LANGUAGES.

Now you can get your message across in English.

With as much flair and conviction as you can in Hindi, Gujarati, Tamil, Kannada, Telugu, Malayalam, Sanskrit, Marathi, Bengali and Punjabi. And even in Russian and Greek.

Just about anyone, who wants to make a piece of communication forceful, eyecatching and in different languages, can benefit from using the Quantum Desk Top Publisher, and Linguist — a multilingual DTP Software Package from Blue Star.

For presentation power that adds visual impact to all written documents. And is the fastest, most economical alternative to getting jobs done through professional printers.

Business correspondence or sales reports, product catalogues or company newsletters ... the Quantum DTP lets you process text, include graphics, design page formats, vary typefaces, change, shuffle and edit till the very end. Then print out artwork quality material at the speed of up to 8 pages a minute.

The System? The Quantum PC/AT, Hewlett-Packard LaserJet, the largest selling laser printer in the world, and the HP ScanJet. The Hewlett-Packard connection gives you the advantage of an unequalled 50-year-old reputation for quality and reliability.

THE QUANTUM DESK TOP PUBLISHER FROM BLUE STAR.

Supported by Software designed for specific applications.

The Quantum DTP from Blue Star is among India's largest selling DTP Systems. With a client list that includes Reliance Industries, Tata Consultancy Services, Hong Kong Bank, ET&T, C-Dot, Bharat Electronics and Exim Bank.

Add to that Blue Star's own Response Centre Support. Offices in 12 major cities have qualified engineers at your service, within hours of calling in.

Please mail in the coupon to the address for a free brochure of the Quantum DTP. Discover the power of presentation which can transform the ordinary ... into the unforgettable.

Yes, I want to know more about the Quantum DTP. Please send me the brochure. T3

Name: _____

Designation: _____

Company Name & Address: _____

_____

_____ Phone: _____

Ashwini Aggarwal,
Hewlett-Packard Division, Blue Star Limited,
13, Community Centre,
New Friends Colony, New Delhi-110 065. Tel: 6834262

A QUANTUM LEAP IN PRESENTATION POWER.

BLUE STAR

the hi-technology Company

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/BS/74

thought our computing needs were too diverse
and sophisticated for PCL.

Santosh Pande
General Manager, The Triveni Group.

j Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"'Bigger is better', they always say. And for someone working with The Triveni Group that's not hard to believe. With interests ranging from sugar manufacturing, project engineering and power generating equipment to pollution control, oil and gas, we have today an enviable standing in the core sector.

And naturally such a big company with such diverse activities should opt for the biggest computer company, right? Wrong. That's what I discovered when PCL talked their way into our office. And into our hearts.

Not that it was smooth sailing all the way. Initially there were a couple of problems on delivery deadlines. And service. Not surprising considering the range of our requirements. But what really floored us was their approach and their attitude. They were willing to listen. To discuss. To understand our problems. And their service was personalised then as it is now.

And in no time at all, our diverse computing requirements were provided for. From simple data base applications and word processing, to complex project planning, communication, inventory control and material handling systems. Supported by a service team that's probably the quickest on the uptake. Not just at the head office. But at all our branch offices too.

Today I'm happy to say the PCL's range of computer systems are in operation in almost every facet of the company's activities.

And PCL's professional attitude towards the upkeep of these systems has given us no ground for complaint.

PCL may not be the biggest computer company in operation today.

But then, contrary to popular opinion, bigger is not always better!"

PCL

India's fastest growing computer company.

Pertech Computers Ltd.

Corporate Office : E-46/10, Okhla Phase-II, New Delhi-110 020.
Tel : 6837379, 6841860, 6841864, 6846472. Telex : 031-75163 PCL IN

Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BELTING

From Polyester Cord Fan & V-Belts to new generation Steel Cord Belting meeting hi-tech needs and international quality standards

This is Yule !

And So is this !

We have come a long way in Belting Technology. Our products range from YULE SHAKTI, the hi-calibre Polyester Cord Fan & V-Belt to SFR Conveyor Belting.

To meet the modern extractive techniques of greater volume & weight, we now bring you YULECORD – the new generation Steel Cord Conveyor Belting. In technical collaboration with BTR Belting Ltd., U.K.

All this and more makes Yule a multidimensional 125 year old national enterprise. Geared to meet the changing scenario of the Indian Industry.

Many Technologies – One Name

125 YEARS
Y
YULE

ANDREW YULE & CO., LTD.
(A GOVT. OF INDIA ENTERPRISE)
'Yule House'
8, Clive Row, Calcutta - 700 001

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAHINDRA & MAHINDRA

Stepping on the Gas

The automotive giant is on an expansion drive

GATEWAY Building, the three-storeyed headquarters of Mahindra & Mahindra Ltd (M&M), is neatly tucked away from public sight behind the Royal Bombay Yacht Club. Not unlike its physical location, the Rs 992-crore M&M has done little to attract public attention.

Mahindra & Mahindra is moving on to the fast track. Two new vehicles are to be launched in the next two years.

NAMAS BHOJANI

Keshub Mahindra; and pick-up truck

But in a series of deftly orchestrated moves that have taken many by surprise, the once-sleepy automotive giant has now stepped out into the corporate sunlight. Says Chairman Keshub Mahindra, 66: "M&M's objective is to be the leading multi-disciplined engineering and multi-product company in the nation's priority industries." So, M&M is busily planning a foray into pick-up trucks and five-door station wagons. On the anvil too are an upgraded engine for its jeeps and perhaps for the pick-up, and a programme to modernise its tractor and automotive division. The price-tag for all this: between Rs 350 crore and Rs 400 crore, over the next five years. To part finance the expansion, M&M will issue, on a rights basis, convertible debentures and an innovative financing instrument—zero-interest bonds which will later be converted into equity. Total value: Rs 91.78 crore.

These moves top a spate of take-overs and diversifications. This month, M&M closed a deal with the Calcutta-based Guest Keen Williams Ltd (GKW) for its automotive pressing unit at Kanhe near Pune. Price: about Rs 30 crore. Last February, M&M acquired a controlling stake of 26 per cent in the ailing light commercial vehicle (LCV) manufacturer Allwyn Nissan for Rs 5.10 crore.

Last year, M&M also branched out into the oil business by buying an offshore drilling rig for $10.75 million (Rs 17.7 crore). Finally, it has formed a new company, Mahindra British Telecom, in collaboration with British Telecom to provide telecommunication services to Indian industry.

The most exciting development, however, is the plan to introduce two new vehicles. The first, a station wagon built around the chassis of an M&M jeep using dies manufactured by the Japanese Fuji Tools and Dies Co Ltd, is expected to roll off the production lines in the third quarter of 1990. And a 2,500 cc engine pick-up vehicle, in collaboration with Automobile Peugeot of France, is slated to hit the roads in late 1991.

There has also been some talk that M&M is negotiating with more than one US automobile giant on an undisclosed venture. In town recently was a team from Chrysler Corporation. Says M&M Managing Director B.R. Sule: "Till now Chrysler was concentrating on the north American market. They are now looking to go overseas. Our negotiations are at a very preliminary stage." And Mahindra says enigmatically: "We are negotiating with lots of people, for lots of things."

While these moves are in step with M&M's mainline automobile business, its forays into telecommunications and oil are not. Is there any synergy in all this? "There most certainly is," says Mahindra. "Very simply put, the synergy is high technology." But high technology is not the only reason for expanding. Explains Sule: "Having consolidated ourselves in the automotive and tractors market, we wanted to diversify in other non-related areas, so that we would not be subjected to the cyclical pressures of a single industry."

Also, the acquisition route for expansion and diversification makes eminent sense. Argues R.K. "Pit" Pitamber, M&M's flamboyant deputy managing director (operation): "In the case of the GKW acquisition, we got a first rate pressing unit with 11 imported machines plus 120 acres of land."

While the company is racing ahead with expansion and diversification, its mainstay—tractors and jeeps—is coasting along comfortably. M&M accounts for 23 per cent of the tractors market. And in jeeps, which account for 60 per cent of its turnover, M&M has an 85 per cent market share.

Still, M&M is heading for quite some competition. The Tata Engineering and Locomotive Company (TELCO) will be challenging M&M's monopoly in jeeps by launching one in a year or so. Mahindra, however, says he's not worried. "If you have a product which is internationally competitive like ours is, it has to be domestically competitive. I do not mind

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Unremitting commitment to quality and service.

In pursuit of excellence.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Way back in 1974, a small group of people used few wooden tables for work, meetings or a hurried lunch!

Today, 1800 people, backed by sophisticated facilities, single-mindedly pursue excellence. To assure the customer a perfect product, through continuous improvements and innovations.

From a turnover of Rs. 1 million in 1975 to Rs. 260 million in 1988 for automotive instruments. The present market share of 45% in automotive instruments reflects Pricol's clear lead over the 6 others in the field.

Yes. Pricol has come a long, long way since the wooden tables. It is poised for success in the new product lines too.

From Pricol with precision:

- ★ Automotive Instruments
- ★ Electrohic Counters and Controls
- ★ Small Machine Tools
- ★ Wind Measuring Instruments
- ★ Electronic TV Tuners
- ★ UPS and SMPS

pricol

Technology At Your Service

Premier Instruments & Controls Limited

Post Box 6331
1087 B/C, Avanashi Road
Coimbatore 641 037, INDIA

Phone : 0422 - 31521 (4 lines)
Cable : PRICOL
Telex : 0855 - 376 PIL IN
Fax : 0422 - 33028

SASI/PRICOL/1/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

competition at all."

The market for pick-up trucks too could get crowded: the Tatas already have one on the roads, while DCM Toyota proposes to bring out one shortly. "The pick-up is a strange combination of a consumer product and an industrial product," notes DCM Toyota Managing Director Vivek Bharat Ram. "It's hard to gauge what will happen but there should be a reasonable market."

Another area where competitors are breathing hard on M&M's heels is in the 2.5-tonne truck category. First quarter sales for 1989-90 have dropped to 704 units, versus 1,090 for the same period in the previous year. Market analysts attribute this to a poor product with low fuel efficiency and a poor engine. Claims a rival: "M&M's general product line is one of the worst in the country in terms of performance and breakdowns."

However, in the international arena M&M continues to surge ahead. It has exported jeeps to Iran for a few years, and this year, hawked tractors in the US. And buoyed by a successful foray into the Australian jeep market, K.K. Basrur, vice-president (overseas operations), is confident M&M can get to the US soon.

Meanwhile, a question raised within and outside M&M is that of succession. Keshub Mahindra has three daughters but no sons. However, he insists that the company is a professional one and all decisions on succession will be taken on that basis. One possible successor: Anand Mahindra, 34, deputy managing director and president of Mahindra Ugine Steel Co Ltd (MUSCO), a Mahindra group associate company run by Keshub's first cousin Harish.

Speculation about Anand's prospects were fuelled when in late 1988, a merchant bank—on behalf of a client—started buying up M&M shares, sending the share price climbing from Rs 65 to a dizzying Rs 122. At that stage MUSCO picked up a little over a lakh of shares. Says Anand: "It is absurd to link up the two incidents. Our purchase of M&M shares was purely professionally motivated, and to a certain extent a consolidation of the family holding. In any case we do not hold more than 0.5 per cent of the share capital in M&M. It is equally absurd to believe that I will waltz in there one day and simply take over as chairman of the company."

Whichever way the succession question is resolved, M&M certainly is a valuable inheritance. By next year, its sales are poised to cross the Rs 1,000-crore mark. That's a long haul since it was set up 43 years ago as a single product company assembling jeep kits at Mazagon in Bombay. —SHIV TANEJA

BUSINESSPEAK

SURENDRA AMBALAL DAVE

Changing the Stock-Market

HIS favourite movie is the Hollywood box-office hit Wall Street, Oliver Stone's saga of greed and guilt in the stock-markets. That's not at all surprising: Surendra Ambalal Dave, 52, is chairman of the Securities Exchange Board of India (SEBI). An economist, Dave worked for the Reserve Bank of India and the Industrial Development Bank of India—where he was executive director—before moving to SEBI last year. But the stock-market watchdog agency has already run into rough weather. The Finance Ministry has yet to approve its draft legislation, and several of its proposals have invited flak. Unfazed, Dave argued in a conversation with Senior Correspondent S.N. VASUKI recently that investor protection is SEBI's principal responsibility—and that the stock-markets need major reform.

THE securities business today falls under the jurisdiction of four different laws or bodies: the Securities and Contracts Act, the Companies Act, the by-laws of the various stock exchanges and the Finance Ministry's Controller of Capital Issues (CCI). The stock-markets have grown tremendously in size over the last five years, and it's time to introduce comprehensive legislation that will govern the securities business.

The draft legislation that SEBI submitted to the Government brings together for the first time all three segments of the capital markets: those who issue securities (the corporate sector), the investor class and the intermediary group consisting of stockbrokers and merchant bankers.

A question that frequently crops up is: is a new act for the stock-markets really needed? The answer is yes. Look at the lacunae in existing laws. The office of the CCI was established in 1946. There was no licensing for industry at that time, and the CCI's principal objective was to allocate scarce financial resources. We have to examine the utility of the CCI today. The Vadilal Dagli Committee on controls even questioned whether the CCI was really needed.

There are other areas which need restructuring too. A company's prospectus is a vital document. Investors take decisions based on the information published in this document. Today the guidelines for issuing a prospectus fall under the Companies Act. But in the last 40 years not a single company has been pulled up for making false and misleading statements in the prospectus. The disclosure requirements are inadequate. At SEBI we have prepared a draft of a new prospectus.

Similarly, the Securities and Contracts Act is an anachronism. Merchant bankers and sub-brokers have tremendous influence today but are not covered by the Act. Merchant bankers acted recklessly, supporting dubious issues in the past. With more and more mutual funds which use 100 per cent investor money, there should be more accountability.

Then, the safeguards against unfair practices like insider trading are inadequate. The penalties are too small to act as a deterrent. This is because the governing boards of the stock exchanges are loaded heavily in favour of stockbrokers. We need to broadbase membership. Also, the financial institutions and banks must have a system to prevent insider trading. For instance, nominee directors should not be allowed to buy or sell shares of the companies they represent. A code is needed for financial journalists too.

The critical question today is whether the capital markets need drastic surgery or whether we should allow things to evolve naturally. There is some criticism of SEBI too. Why are we asking for so many changes at one time? My own feeling is it's a zero sum game. We can let a few things evolve. But change is necessary. At SEBI we are trying to strike a balance between change and continuity, between stability and dynamism. But we are clear whose interest we represent. After all, there are only 6,000 companies which issue capital but 10 million investors. Their interests have to be fully protected.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

An exclusive start to a new decade

SLIM-LINE DIARY 1990
Code: IT 102
Size: 82 mm × 177 mm
Price: Rs. 65

INDIA TODAY YEAR BOOK 1990
Code: IT 101
Size: 222 mm × 289 mm
Price: Rs. 250

POCKET DIARY 1990
Code: IT 103
Size: 79 mm × 127 mm
Price: Rs. 35

India Today Diaries and Address Book

The India Today Yearbook 1989 established distinctive standards which were widely appreciate by discriminating users, for meticulous attention to production and the quality of information offere This year's edition, the India Today Yearbook 1990 upholds these fine standards and comes with comprehensive range of exclusive pocket diaries and an address book produced with an eye to detail- a hallmark at India Today.

INDIA TODAY YEAR BOOK 1990

Much more than just a diary, this yearbook puts invaluable information on your desk where it belongs.

The information includes a statistical overview of the Indian economy, a political profile of India, a complete travel guide, city guides, International Time, and 16 pages of full colour maps.

The diary section is laid out with busy executives in mind. The easy-to-read, easy-to-write format includes: a week-at-a-glance, hourly slots for appointments, current and forward year planner, ample space for notes, address and phone number section.

Attractively produced with a burgundy red cover, gold leaf embossing, gilt-tipped pages and a handy ribbon marker, the India Today Yearbook 1990 belongs on your table.

DELUXE MINIATURE DIARIES.

To match the diary on your desk, there is now a slimline for your jacket or the briefcase and a pocket diary specially designed to be carr on your person. With these miniatures, you can now carry all the day-to-day information you need with you. Alongwith provision fo space for your appointments, you get 35 pages of invaluable information like India at a glance, Conversion Tables, ISD and STD codes, International Times and a 3-year Calendar 1989-1991.

Make your selection now and send in the order form before 15 October for a special 10% pre-publication discount and free delivery

More from India Today overlea

Personalize these beautiful diaries.

Whether you're ordering for yourself, friends or favoured clients, give these diaries a personal touch. For a nominal sum of Rs. 10, you can have upto 3 initials printed in gold-leaf on the cover of the India Today Yearbook 1990, Slimline diary 1990 and the Pocket diary 1990.

If the order for any of the three sizes individually is 10 copies or more, the facility of gold embossing of three initials on each diary, is free.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Elegance & Quality Forever...

...Address Book from India Today

This year INDIA TODAY brings you an attractive address book which features upto 8 pages to each letter of the alphabet, personal information section, emergency phone numbers, International Times, ISD & STD codes, and a ready reference ABC index.

ADDRESS BOOK
Code: IT 201
Size: 139 mm × 216 mm
Price: Rs. 65

Elegantly bound in real herring bone tweed, this address book will be appreciated for its classic styling and for the amount of space provided for names, addresses and phone numbers.

Place your order before 15th October and avail of a special pre-publication 10% discount.

IF THE ORDER FORM IS MISSING
Just mail your enquiry/order to Living Media India Ltd., P.B. No. 29, New Delhi-110001

Your order should be accompanied by remittance drawn in favour of 'Living Media India Ltd'. (add Rs. 5/- to outstation cheques, i.e., outside Delhi).

Please add Rs. 10/- for each set of upto 3 initials to be printed in gold leaf (facility available only for the diaries).

ORDER FORM—1990

Product Code	Product Details	Regular Price (in Rs.)	Spl Price for Orders Recd. Before Oct. 15, '89 (in Rs.)	Qty Ordered	Total Amount (in Rs.)
IT 101	India Today Yearbook 1990	250	225.00
IT 102	India Today Slimline Diary	65	58.50
IT 103	India Today Pocket Diary	35	31.50
IT 201	Address Book	65	58.50
				Total (in Rs.)
				Gold Embossing of Initials @ Rs. 10 per item
				Total Amount of Order (in Rs.)

Please give maximum of 3 initials per diary ordered, on a separate sheet.

I enclose my crossed cheque/DD for Rs. _____ (add Rs. 5/- for outstation cheques, i.e. outside Delhi) payable to 'Living Media India Ltd.'. Please send the diaries and address books, as listed in the coupon, at the following address:

Name _____

Address _____

_____

_____

_____ Pin _____

Mail your order to:

Living Media India Ltd.
P.B. No. 29,
New Delhi-110001

FREE DELIVERY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

In its warp, in its weft, in its weave...

India. Primordial, deep, faceted. The wellspring of countless creative impulses. Palpably alive, to this very day. Strikingly and most colourfully manifest in the handspun magic of its fabrics. The handlooms of India. Resplendent, intricate, patterned, rustic, sophisticated, earthy, ethereal. In Indian handlooms rests India's very soul.

...India lives.

Handloom House's entire National Design Collections at specially subsidized prices – right through the year.

handloom house

Sarees ○ Dress Materials ○ Readymades ○ Furnishings ○ Carpets ○ Bed, Bath & Table Linen

THE ORIGINAL ONE STOP SHOP

Ahmedabad • Bangalore • Baroda • Bombay • Calcutta • Chandigarh • Coimbatore • Delhi • Ernakulam • Gorakhpur • Hyderabad • Imphal • Jaipur
Madras • Madurai • Patna • Ranchi • Secunderabad • Surat • Vijayawada • Vishakapatnam.

Interact : AIH : 175A

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ONCE AGAIN UPSIDC DOES THE GROUNDWORK FOR INDIAN ENTREPRENEURS

UPSIDC, the premier corporation of the State Government of Uttar Pradesh, has set up 112 Industrial Areas all over the State during the last 26 years.

These areas have attracted large companies like DCM Toyota, Escorts, Indo Gulf Fertilizers, BHEL, BEL, L&T etc.

UPSIDC has also created 16 Industrial Areas in Ghaziabad and Bulandshahr districts and plans to set up a number of large industrial townships there. All of them will have facilities like housing, commercial centre, banks, post office, police station, cinemas, schools, hospitals and shopping arcade etc.

UPSIDC is now starting an Advance Registration Scheme so that entrepreneurs can book land for industrial units.

INDUSTRIAL/INDUSTRIAL HOUSING PLOTS 16—40 KMS. FROM DELHI.

Land is available for immediate allotment in existing industrial areas, apart from the excellently located new industrial areas being developed at Bulandshar and Ghaziabad districts.

Entrepreneurs who register under this scheme will get top priority in allotment of plots in these industrial areas.

For further information, contact :

General Manager, UPSIDC, 117/130, Sarvodayanagar, Kanpur-208 005. (Phone : 218161-65).

Regional Manager, UPSIDC, GDA Building, (Private Bus Stand), Ghaziabad (Phone : 8-711103).

or any of the Banks mentioned below :

Registration Opens 15th Sept '89

upsidc

A U.P. Government Undertaking

Grindlays Bank plc.
Member ANZ Group
New Delhi (10 Sansad Marg), Amritsar (Gandhi Bazar), Bangalore (Mission Road), Bombay (270 D.N. Road), Calcutta (19 N.S. Road) Madras (Rajaji Salai), Kanpur (M.G. Road).

ALLAHABAD BANK
New Delhi (Parliament Street), Agra (Chilint Road), Ahmedabad (Maskati Market), Alwar (Civil Lines), Bareilly ospital Road), Bullandshahr (Main), Baroda (Rajmahal Road), Chandigarh (Sector 17-B) Dehra Dun (Gandhi Bazar), Faridabad (The Mall), Ghaziabad (Navyug Market), Gorakhpur (Main), Indore (Bara Sarafa), Jalandhar (City) Jamshedpur (Bistupur), Jaipur (SMS Highway), Kota (Jhalawar Road), Lucknow (Hazratganj), Ludhiana (Clock Tower), Meerut (Cantt), Moradabad (Civil Lines), Muzaffarnagar (Main), Noida (Sector 12), Patna (Gaya Road) Pune (Laxmi Road), Rohtak (Main), Ranchi (Main), Varanasi (Chowk)

Arms Com/UPSIDC/18/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OIL INDUSTRY

Hitting a Slick

A torrent of controversies

UNTIL recently, oil drilling was monopolised by the state-owned Oil and Natural Gas Commission (ONGC) which used the expertise of multinationals. In the early '80s, however, ONGC decided to build local expertise and invited the Indian private sector in.

The outcome has been a rush into the business—and a torrent of controversies that rage as furiously as an uncapped oil well. Companies are riven into camps, with each accusing the other of manipulating official policy.

Right now, the major private sector players in the industry are the Tatas' Hi-Tech Drilling Services, the Ruias' Essar Shipping, Bombay Offshore Supplies and Services (BOSS), Mahindra & Mahindra, Great Atwood, Aban Lloyd, Jagson International and Jindal Drilling. Waiting in the wings are a host of others. The Government has cleared some 70 joint ventures and collaboration agreements, including those of big groups like the Thapars, the Modis, the Chhabrias and the Ambanis. Not all may get going, given the quick policy changes that have recently plagued the industry.

Drilling is a tough business. Explains Prem Sawhney, managing director of BOSS: "It's capital intensive, and if you have a lot of money to burn, this is the right place." Adds A.P. Abraham, managing director of the Madras-based Aban Lloyd: "You need super management skills to survive." So why have all these firms leaped into the industry?

For one, there's plenty of action. In the seventh plan ONGC spent over Rs 10,000 crore on exploration and drilling, and its kitty is expected to swell to Rs 21,000 crore in the eighth plan, a chunk of which will go to private enterprises. ONGC Chairman S.P. Wahi says: "The private sector will have a major share of ONGC's eighth plan outlay. There is going to be a phenomenal spurt in activity." For another, the gross profits can be up to 7 per cent of the contract. With contract values running to many crores, profits can be respectable enough for those who manage to stay afloat.

Private enterprises are involved in several areas. Some conduct exploratory surveys while others provide support services, such as operating offshore supply vessels. But drilling is the most lucrative area. Here, Indian companies charter rigs to ONGC—jack-up rigs for shallow depths, drillships for deep waters and semi-submersibles for deeper waters.

And it's here that the most violent controversy is raging. Ranged on one side are companies which have bought rigs. On the other are companies which have leased rigs from abroad. ONGC now has 32 offshore rigs in operation, seven of them bought by concerns such as Hi-Tech, Essar, Mahindra & Mahindra, Great Atwood and Aban Lloyd, and another seven taken on lease by Jindal, the Shipping Corporation of India and Jagson. The rest are owned either by ONGC or by foreign companies.

Till early last year, companies which owned rigs used to charge ONGC around Rs 3 lakh a day, versus the Rs 3.5 lakh charged by foreign operators. Then in early '88, the world drillships and rigs market slumped. In March 1988, the Government allowed Indian companies that had leased equipment to quote for ONGC jobs. With world prices low, they quoted far lower rental charges—around Rs 2.7 lakh per day. So rig owners had to fall in line and lower rates, to what they call unprofitable levels.

Expectedly, they have been sounding off. Says Vijay Sheth, head of Great Atwood: "There should be a reward for taking risks. Our capital investment is large and ONGC should offer us protection." In a memorandum to the Government last July, the Confederation of Engineering Industry, the apex association for engineering units, urged that purchased assets be given preference over leased assets. The reasoning: in the '90s, international leasing prices could climb, and the Government should get ready for this by encouraging companies to buy assets now. Explains an official: "Companies that own assets have a greater commitment to the industry."

Hogwash, say companies that lease equipment. Says D.P. Jindal, chairman of Jindal Drilling and Industries Ltd: "There is no difference between the two. The Government should only be concerned about the outgo of foreign exchange." In fact, adds Jagson International Chairman J.P. Gupta, foreign exchange can be saved this way. The lease lobby contends that it offers lower rates and more flexibility by using different types of rigs incorporating the latest technology.

The whole debate could be dismissed as tiresome were it not for official tendering and other procedures. These, it is Amidst a rush into the oil business, charges of hanky panky and government favouritism are flying thick and fast.

Oil rig: sharp divisions

Rig owners: aggrieved

- Hi-Tech Drilling Services
- Essar Shipping
- Mahindra & Mahindra
- Great Atwood
- Aban Lloyd
- Bombay Offshore Supplies and Services

Companies with rigs on lease: facing flak

- Shipping Corporation of India
- Jindal Drilling and Industries
- Jagson International

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

alleged, favour the lease boys. ONGC allows Indian contractors 180 days to deliver the rig after it issues a firm telex order. In offshore tenders, companies have even less time. But Indian companies buying rigs abroad require nearly eight months to get the Government's approval to pay in foreign exchange and mobilise the rig. In contrast, companies that lease rigs abroad need only a customs clearance permit, which requires five months to obtain. So, those who've been buying equipment abroad believe that the decks are stacked against them. The Tata-run Hi-Tech has now decided to try its luck with leasing too.

More serious are charges that godfathers in the Government influence decisions. Since all depend on ONGC, no one is willing to complain in public. But a common grouse is that Jagson, for instance, has walked away with several lucrative orders, thanks to influence—a charge Jagson denies.

The third area of contention is the Government's frequent somersaults on the customs duty on offshore drilling equipment. Until end-December 1988, the duty was zero. Then the Government slapped 30 per cent duty, withdrew it for three months from April to June and reimposed it from July 1. Predictably, this sparked off accusations that this was meant to favour particular companies. Example: On March 29, Jindal got a telex order from ONGC for the deployment of a second rig. On April 1, the duty was cut from 30 per cent to zero and Jindal managed to mobilise a rig from the North Sea to Bombay High. A Jindal spokesman denies any hanky-panky: "It's just that we were quick on the job."

The Government and ONGC have also been charged with favouring some rig owners. In September 1986, Essar and ONGC signed an agreement for the import of three land rigs. Unusually, ONGC assumed Essar's liability to pay 20 per cent customs duty, amounting to Rs 1.42 crore. It also agreed to bear the customs duty on the spares. Until December 31, 1986, the minimum customs duty was 45 per cent. This was reduced to 25 per cent for barely one month. During that time the rigs were imported; so Essar paid only 5 per cent customs duty. Duty was later raised to 45 per cent again.

Asked to comment on the welter of allegations and counter-allegations, ONGC Chairman Wahi said that he was not involved in the nitty-gritty. In the surcharged atmosphere, what's becoming clear is that the brave effort to indigenise has so far struck more dross than black gold. —S.N. VASUKI and PARANJOY GUHA THAKURTA

FINANCE COMMISSION

Unequal Slice

Rumpus over new proposals

ARCANE economic controversies rarely hit the headlines, but this one involves a weighty institution: the Ninth Finance Commission. The issue: whether the commission has made a faux pas in its first report. At stake: the share of poor states in Central resources for the next five years.

Under the Constitution, finance commissions are set up every five years to provide ground rules for the distribution of income tax and excise duty revenues between the Centre and the states, among other things.

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

"The states face financial chaos."
ASIM DASGUPTA
Finance Minister, West Bengal

"The commission's exercise is absurd."
PRADHAN H. PRASAD
Director, A.N. Sinha Institute of Social Sciences

The controversy was triggered off with a report in a mainline daily. It cited a letter Pradhan H. Prasad, director of the A.N. Sinha Institute of Social Sciences in Patna, wrote to Finance Commission Chairman N.K.P. Salve last month questioning the commission's new approach to distributing the Centre's kitty. This approach assumes that a state should be raising a certain amount of tax revenue. Earlier, commissions have looked more at the states' actual revenues and expenditures, rather than what they ought to be raising or spending. So states that met their revenue targets—usually the richer ones which could tax more—wound up subsidising states that fell short of targets.

Prasad, when asked by the Bihar Government to study the report, found serious problems with it:

► It would lead to inflated assessments of the states' tax capacities. Under the new system, Bihar's tax capacity this year would go up by 32 per cent, from Rs 956.50 crore to Rs 1,264.01 crore.

► Since Central grants to states are linked with taxes they raise, poorer states like Orissa and Bihar might be penalised with lower grants.

► The econometric model the commission used was flawed.

Says Prasad: "Never in my life have I seen such an absurd economic exercise as this one." He believes Bihar will lose about Rs 81 crore in Central grants under the new system.

Economists expressed concern. Says C.H. Hanumantha Rao, a former Planning Commission member and member of the seventh and eighth finance commissions: "I sympathise with Prasad's fears about poor states suffering"

In fact, West Bengal Finance Minister Asim Dasgupta ordered a study on the implications of the new approach and discovered that on one count alone, his state's tax capacity had been overpitched to the tune of Rs 250 crore.

But, the commission has some support. In a letter to the daily, some National Institute of Public Finance and Policy economists dismissed Prasad's objections. Adds K.L. Krishna, econometrician at the Delhi School of Economics: "The procedure is statistically valid."

The new system will penalise inefficiency in raising resources and reward efficiency. Planning Commission Member Raja Chelliah—also the Finance Commission's member (finance), concedes that states not collecting enough revenue owing to administrative or political problems could suffer. He insists that poor states will not lose out on a systematic basis. Chelliah adds firmly: "We will not reject the normative approach—we can talk of details."

That's what worries the states. Says West Bengal's Dasgupta: "Unless immediate and significant modifications are made in the commission's methodology, the states face financial chaos." As the debate heats up, what seems clear is that yet another Centre-state confrontation is on the cards.

—SHANTANU DEY with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Industrial establishments

Hotels

Airlines

Railways

Paramilitary forces

Flight caterers

Ordnance factories

Shipyards

Hospitals

Discover why institutions like these buy quality tea, coffee and spices direct from Brooke Bond's Institutional Business Service

Because buying direct from Brooke Bond's Institutional Business Service ensures competitive prices. And more. One reliable source for all your needs of quality tea, coffee and spices. The widest brand choice in the market with the economy of bulk packs. All with the convenience of doorstep delivery, through a distribution network spread across the country.

So, if you are in the process of tendering for your bulk requirements of tea, coffee and spices, and would like to deal directly with one reliable source, just write to:

Brooke Bond India Ltd., Institutional Business Service,
P.B. No. 4280, Bangalore-560 042.
Tel: 84-2520 (10 lines), 84-2615, 84-2625, 84-2635,
08112-2520 (STD-Whitefield, 10 lines)
Telex: 0845-8506/8518 KORA IN

Yes, I'm interested in
☐ Teas ☐ Coffees ☐ Spices

☐ Call me at (tel. no.).....at the earliest
☐ Ask your representative to call on me

Name: _____

Address: _____

_____

_____

_____

IT

OMD 2917

Brooke Bond India Limited | Institutional Business Service

Brooke Bond Products. Packed with care. Packed for consistent quality.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I help build power projects, roads, canals, cities and the very future...

With a market share of 35%, ICI India, previously IEL, is the largest manufacturer of explosives, in India. Along with these explosives, which are used in core sectors, ICI India also manufactures a complete range of accessories to provide total service to every customer.

Apart from introducing cartridged and bulk emulsion explosives in India, the company also manufactures bulk explosives 'on site', at Singrauli.

Today, ICI India looks forward to the future with confidence and a sharp sense of competitiveness.

Behind it are several decades of pioneering work. An ICI Group worldwide turnover of Rs. 32,000 crores, R&D expenditure of Rs. 3 crores per day, and over 33,000 inventions.

ULKA-D-ICI-408 E

Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

■ Agrochemicals ■ Catalysts ■ Explosives ■ Fertilizers ■ Fibres ■ Paints ■ Phar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...I am ICI"

With these strengths, the future is promising. ICI products represent the world's finest technology, original research and expertise tailored to meet customer needs.

Products that, as always, make us proud to say, "I am ICI".

ICI

ICI India Limited

Looking forward to the challenges of the 1990s.

▪ Pharmaceuticals ▪ Rubber Chemicals ▪ Research & Development ▪ Specialty Chemicals

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COMMUNICATION

Home Show

Firms take to video films

AT Glaxo India Ltd, lunch time will never be the same. Last month the Bombay-based pharmaceuticals company installed a colour television set and video cassette player at its head office. The company's 2,000 employees were then invited for a screening during the lunch break. There they saw not the latest Amitabh Bachchan starrer but a 16-minute programme titled Glaxo Video News, a house magazine on video.

Glaxo is not the only company that's been bitten by the video bug. Voltas Ltd has just launched a video magazine called Voltrack. Even the Government and the public sector have got into the act. Department of Telecommunications Secretary Sam Pitroda recently used a video programme to communicate with employees of Mahanagar Telephone Nigam Ltd. The State Bank of India too is planning a video magazine to be distributed to all its branches.

Communicating with employees is the primary goal. Glaxo's monthly news letter will continue and the video magazine adds a personal element. Says a Glaxo spokesperson: "Our staffers even want to take a cassette home to show their families." The Glaxo video has been produced in Hindi, English and Marathi.

The 75-minute Voltas video provides, among other things, a bird's-eye view of the site of the Pepsi project in which Voltas is one of the biggest investors. Voltrack which will be produced quarterly, has an anchorman too: chemicals division staffer Stanley Saldana. Says a Voltas spokesman: "Voltas has factories all over the country. The video magazine will bring us closer."

Both Voltas and Glaxo sought outside help for the video magazines. United Television worked on Glaxo Video News while Enterprise Advertising handled Voltrack. Advertising agencies in Bombay are now being flooded with requests for similar video programmes. Says Mohammad Khan, Managing Director of Enterprise: "We are pretty confident that it will be a growth area. Video after all is today's medium."

Clearly, more and more employees will get to watch a different kind of soap opera at lunch break.

—S.N. VASUKI

EXECUTIVE FOCUS

The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants of India
Wishes to appoint

Requires

SECRETARY
(Scale Rs. 5900 - Rs. 200 - Rs. 7300)
plus perks

&

DIRECTORS
(Scale Rs. 4500 - Rs. 150 - Rs. 5700)
plus perks

SECRETARY based at their headquarters in Calcutta
DIRECTORS based in Delhi and Calcutta transferable to any place in the country.

Applicants should have relevant senior level Administrative/Professional experience and the ability and personality to interact effectively with senior level Officers in Government, industry and professional organisations both in India and overseas.

Applicants should preferably be in the 45-50 years age group having to their credit, a first class post graduate degree or professional qualification and a minimum of 5 years senior level Administrative/Professional experience in Government, Private or other statutory bodies.

A starting minimum salary of around Rs. 7,100 per month in case of Secretary and around Rs. 5,500 per month in the case of Director will be offered plus other perquisites such as leased accomodation/house rent allowance, conveyance reimbursement, medical, provident fund and gratuity etc. compensation will not be a limiting factor for right type of individual.

Please mail your resume within 15 days superscribing the post applied for on the envelope to :

J.K. PURI
PRESIDENT
The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants of India
ICWAI BHAWAN
3, Institutional Area, Lodi Road
New Delhi - 110 003.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Scrips Spurt

A mildly bullish phase

IT looks as if the stock-markets have finally pulled out of the uncertain phase they went through in August. As punters returned to the markets last fortnight, share prices climbed steadily, though not spectacularly. This despite two more bulls on the Ahmedabad Stock Exchange having defaulted on their payments.

The overall mood was mirrored in the share price indices. The Economic Times index first drifted lower from 372.9 on August 18 to 370.9 on August 22 before perking up. By September 6, the index had shot up to 388, gaining over 16 points over the fortnight.

What is more, the revival of buying was not due to financial institutions going on a share-shopping spree. Some of the buying was speculative. But it was also underpinned by expectations of positive news. There are straws in the wind that the labour strife at the Tata Engineering and Locomotive Company may be drawing to a close. Also, rumours persisted that Darbari Seth, chairman of Tata Chemicals, would take over as chairman of the Associated Cement Companies from lawyer Nani Palkhivala. Seth is regarded as the Tata man who rarely goes wrong.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

At the same time, the prices of key scrips such as Century Spinning and Century Enka spurted chiefly because the companies reported better earnings. The prices of tea company shares also rose fairly sharply. The demand for tea in both domestic and foreign markets has gone up, as have prices. Further, shares of many synthetic textile manufacturers did well. As the market for polyester fibre and filament yarn firmed up, prices of hitherto neglected scrips like Baroda Rayon, Indian Organic and Garware Nylon soared.

With the market turning mildly bullish, the mood spilled over into the so-called non-specified shares listed in the cash section of the stock exchanges. Trading in these shares is done on the basis that the shares have to be taken delivery of, and payments cannot be deferred. But amidst a scramble for shares, sellers often did not deliver shares: there was a 60 per cent shortfall in the number of shares delivered.

It is in this context that the present market rally spells hope. The big question is: will the rally persist? What goes against it is the spate of mega issues that is in the offing. Within the next five or six weeks, companies have lined up rights and debenture issues valued at over Rs 3,000 crore. These shares and debentures are being issued at prices that are below today's market prices. Unquestionably, investors will be tempted to liquidate a part of their existing portfolios to buy these attractively priced shares.

Precisely what impact all this will have on the stock-markets remains to be seen. The only thing that seems clear is that one phase of uncertainty just might be followed by another.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1989 HIGH	1989 LOW	CLOSE 21.8.89	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	84.00	61.00	72.00	10.00 +
Associated Cement	345.00	230.00	283.00	42.00 +
Asian Paints	226.25	165.00	210.00	17.50 +
Atlas Copco	53.00	32.00	43.00	9.00 +
Bajaj Auto	450.00	310.00	326.25	3.75 +
Baroda Rayon	732.50	285.00	665.00	115.00* +
Bata India	89.00	60.00	68.00	3.50 +
Bayer	910.00	580.00	740.00	15.00 +
Bharat Forge	202.50	70.00	80.00	3.75* –
Birla Jute	73.75	41.50	56.00	6.00 +
Bombay Dyeing	162.00	104.00	124.00	1.00 +
Britannia Ind.	120.00	89.00	112.00	10.00 +
Brooke Bond	155.00	75.00	84.00	5.00 +
Century Spinning	2160.00	1230.00	2155.00	160.00 +
Chloride India	88.50	72.00	81.50	1.00 +
Colgate Palmolive	371.25	162.50	178.75	128.75 +
Cyanamid	92.00	55.00	84.00	7.00 +
DCM	85.00	31.00	53.00	2.00 –
Dunlop	95.50	70.00	79.50	0.50 +
E.I. Hotels	68.00	50.00	56.00	2.00* –
Escorts	81.00	58.00	81.00	7.00 +
Finolex Cables	430.00	312.50	327.50	10.00 +
Food Specialities	224.00	154.00	163.00	5.00 +
Garware Nylon	54.50	36.00	54.50	9.50 +
G.E. Shipping	46.50	33.75	40.75	0.50 +
G.S.F.C.	177.50	123.75	165.00	7.50 +
Grasim Ind.	137.00	75.00	109.50	1.00 +
Hind. Aluminium	327.50	155.00	267.50	32.50 +
Hind. Ciba	1090.00	600.00	880.00	80.00 +
Hind. Cocoa	135.00	98.75	130.00	15.00 +
Hindustan Lever	101.00	69.50	99.50	5.00 +
Hindustan Motors	52.50	26.75	32.00	0.60* +
ICI India Ltd.	68.00	39.00	56.00	2.50 –
Indian Organic	48.00	23.00	46.50	8.00 +
Indian Rayon	106.00	75.75	82.50	5.50 +

	1989 HIGH	1989 LOW	CLOSE 21.8.89	Change in Fortnight
Indrol	335.00	218.75	263.75	18.75 –
Ingersoll-Rand	423.75	267.50	415.00	10.00 +
ITC	129.00	46.25	63.00	57.50 +
J.K. Synthetics	92.00	66.00	80.00	5.00 +
Kinetic Engineering	395.00	130.00	155.00	18.00 +
Kirloskar Cummins	88.75	54.50	70.00	5.00 +
KSB Pumps	445.00	305.00	380.00	10.00 +
Larsen & Toubro	128.00	81.50	102.00	5.50 –
Lipton	85.00	65.00	74.50	6.50 +
LML Ltd.	28.00	12.50	19.50	2.50 +
Madura Coats	104.00	92.25	96.25	0.75 –
Mahindra & Mahindra	113.50	76.50	91.00	3.50 –
Milk Food	300.00	180.00	205.00	15.00 +
Motor Industries	695.00	560.00	630.00	35.00 +
Mukand Ltd.	140.50	75.00	130.00	3.50 +
National Organic	1080.00	710.00	1060.00	85.00 +
Nirlon	17.00	8.00	11.25	1.75 +
Orkay Silk Mills	29.00	13.50	15.50	0.50 +
Peico Electronics	30.50	16.50	21.25	1.25 +
Pfizer	80.00	58.00	66.00	6.00 +
Ponds	212.50	151.25	170.00	8.75 +
Premier Auto	65.00	40.00	60.00	5.50 +
Raymond	85.00	65.50	81.00	2.25 +
Reliance Industries	158.00	103.00	105.00	1.00 –
Siemens India	95.00	65.00	71.00	1.00 +
Shaw Wallace	103.25	62.00	96.00	9.00* +
Shriram Fibres	94.00	64.00	81.00	nl
SKF Bearings	3020.00	1140.00	1270.00	70.00 +
SPIC	67.00	39.00	53.25	7.75 +
Tata Steel	1580.00	1062.50	1218.75	6.25 +
Telco	1075.00	657.50	1042.50	25.00 +
Vam Organic	178.00	136.00	165.00	15.00 +
Videocon Int.	137.50	55.00	135.00	25.00 +
Voltas	885.00	470.00	850.00	5.00 +
Wimco	32.00	15.00	16.75	0.25 –

*Ex-dividend Ex-bonus Ex-right *Spot delivery

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	TT Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	12.8394	12.6993
Austria	Schilling	1	1.1931	1.1923
Bahrain	Dinar	1	44.3670	44.1820
Bangladesh	Taka	100	52.2992	52.1426
Canada	Dollar	1	14.2789	14.1301
Denmark	Kroner	1	2.1838	2.1612
Egypt	Pound	1	6.1060	6.0500
France	Franc	1	2.5641	2.5000
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	2.1573	2.1355
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	0.930	0.860
Iran	Rial	100	22.5520	22.5000
Italy	Lira	100	1.1840	1.1713
Japan	Yen	100	11.6822	11.3895
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7713	0.7125
Kuwait	Dinar	1	55.8660	55.7018
Malaysia	Dollar	1	6.2335	6.1688
Mauritius	Rupee	1	1.0526	1.0000
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6828	0.6329
Netherlands	Guilder	1	7.5236	7.4450
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7928	0.7460
Singapore	Dollar	1	8.5226	8.4330
Spain	Peseta	1	0.1320	0.1300
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4560	0.4420
Sweden	Kroner	1	2.5163	2.4903
Switzerland	Franc	1	9.8677	9.7633
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.1160	0.1000
Thailand	Baht	100	63.2660	63.1511
UK	Pound	1	26.0044	25.8131
USA	Dollar	1	16.8492	16.6806
UAE	Dirham	1	4.5000	4.4500
USSR	Rouble	1	25.7560	25.7000
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	8.6505	8.4317

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo, Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 7.9.89.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Go Newstracking

Because Seeing Is Believing

Even after you have heard all about it and read all about it — see it all on India's first newsmagazine on video cassette — NEWSTRACK Brought to you by the country's leading newsmagazine — INDIA TODAY. Press the play button and you're on the ringside seat — to people, places, events, issues and ideas all incisively covered like on no other medium ever before. Taking you behind the news and newsmakers for a fresh insight to what's happening.

Subscribe now and have your 90 minute package of NEWSTRACK excitement home delivered to you every month.

(Turn overleaf for details)

INDIA TODAY
Presents

NEWSTRACK

The newsmagazine to watch

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Go Newstracking through September

Wadia-Ambani: Murder conspiracy or frame-up?

Bombay: Pawar's massive landscam.

Cricket: Board stumps players.

Contaminated Glucose: The death drip.

NEWSTRACK'S* Anniversary Issue: The Year's Best.

SPECIAL SUBSCRIPTION OFFERS

FREE INDIA TODAY YEAR BOOK 1990

Rs. 1200/- for an annual subscription to NEWSTRACK i.e. 12 cassettes and a free elegant diary worth Rs. 250/-. This offer is valid upto Dec. 31, 1989. Diaries will be home-delivered at your given address by the year end or early in January 1990.

MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

Rs. 135/- for a single cassette of the current issue — if you're not satisfied return it within 7 days of receipt by Registered Post and you can get your money back.

DISCOUNTED BACK-ISSUES

Rs. 125/- for each back issue of NEWSTRACK. Please give details of which volumes you wish to order.

Please draw your remittance in favour of Living Media India Ltd. by cheque/DD and mail alongwith your name and address to LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD., P.O. BOX 29, NEW DELHI-110 001.
Incase the subscription coupon below has already been used by someone else, please write to us at the address given above enclosing the required amount and details of the issues you want/the month you desire your subscription to commence from.

Cassettes will be home delivered by Courier or Registered Post.

-cut here-

Yes, I want to subscribe to NEWSTRACK. Enclosed is my subscription remittance by cheque/DD No. _____ dated _____ for

- ☐ Rs. 135/- for single copy of the September issue with a MONEY BACK GUARANTEE
- ☐ Rs. 125/- each for the back issues of the month of _____
- ☐ Rs. 1200/- for an annual subscription to NEWSTRACK commencing from the month of _____ and my free INDIA TODAY YEAR BOOK 1990.

Please deliver my cassette to

Name _____

Address _____

Pin Code _____ Tel No. _____

This coupon can also be used for subscription renewal. Please indicate your subscription no. _____

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Vital Services... for Vital Sectors.

Unrestrained performance in flying services. Carried out by a core of hand-picked, qualified pilots, engineers and technicians. And a fleet of 39 sophisticated helicopters... That's what makes us at Pawan Hans fly and reach anywhere, anytime our services are needed.

Support services for the energy sector—ONGC, Oil India, Coal India, Gas Authority of India...

Linking inaccessible areas, providing rescue and relief services for the State Governments of Meghalaya and Mizoram. And the islands of Lakshadweep, Andaman and Nicobar. Where Pawan Hans helicopters provide a reliable link between far-off and scattered isles. Making for better administrative control, casualty evacuation...

Even emergency duties... charter services for business, aerial photography...

Expanding our airmap to bring remote and far-flung regions together... promoting tourism.

With an over-riding sense of commitment to scale greater heights, explore newer vistas of operation. And contribute our mite to the nation's growth and prosperity.

Last year we carried 4,00,000 passengers, 10,00,000 kg of cargo, and saved the nation Rs. 45 crore in foreign exchange.

And we're only three years old.

Advtg. Integrated/PHL/13889

JAWAHARLAL NEHRU CENTENARY 1889 1989

PAWAN HANS LIMITED

(A Government of India Enterprise)

Palika Kendra, Sansad Marg, New Delhi-110 001.

Exploring new frontiers

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Introducing a golden era in coffee...

Savour the exclusive taste of premium 100% pure
instant coffee.
Rich with the real flavour and satisfying aroma of the choicest coffee beans.
Try it and you will agree,
it's the ultimate in coffee luxury!

GOLD CAFÉ

PREMIUM 100% PURE COFFEE

INSTANT COFFEE

The ultimate in coffee luxury

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A poor fortnight for the Indian economy. The industrial production figures show a sharp fall and are a major cause for concern. Industry—both manufacturing and infrastructure—needs an immediate boost or this year's growth rate is going to be very low. Prices too started their remorseless climb once more. And, with stocks and the bullion market stagnant, there were virtually no positive signs for the Indian economy last month.

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of six months' (weekly data) or one-and-a-half years' (monthly data) figures.

Wholesale Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
0.75 p.a.

Prices accelerated again last fortnight. The normal down-turn that takes place at this time of the year has not yet occurred.

Industrial Production Index

1980-81 = 100

Current Trend
5.5% p.a.

The last two months indicate recessionary conditions in industrial production for the first time in three years.

Money Supply

Rs Crore

Current Trend
14.6% p.a.

The supply of money in the economy remained well under control last fortnight and the long-term trend is on target.

Commercial Bank Credit

Rs Crore

Current Trend
23.4% p.a.

Credit conditions remained easy last fortnight—this should continue in order to give a boost to industrial growth.

Manufacturing Index

1980-81 = 100

Current Trend
3.8% p.a.

The sharp drop in manufacturing output registered in the economy last month is a major cause for concern.

Electricity Generation

Million kWh

Current Trend
9.7% p.a.

Infrastructural conditions deteriorated during the last fortnight with a drop in electricity generation.

Share Price Index

1984-85 = 100

Current Trend
7.5% p.a.

The stock-market did show some signs of life—although a full recovery still seems only a distant possibility.

Closing Gold Prices

Rs per 10 gm

Current Trend
6.2% p.a.

The bullion market showed no sign of an upswing. It remained stagnant—as it has been for most of the past year.

WHOLESALE PRICES

Growth of items in the 1st fortnight of August 1989

	% Growth
Ceramic Tiles	7.44
Mining Machinery	6.34
Transformers	5.40
Groundnut Oilcake	4.60
Moong	4.50
Tea	4.45
Hindes Raw	4.44
Iron Ore	4.37
Cotton Seeds	3.64
Fish	3.50
Cashew-nut	3.50
Linseed Oil	3.45
Khandsari	3.17
Cotton Raw	3.06
Whisky	2.64
Mustard Oil	2.61
Barley	2.50
Gingelly Oil	2.45
Tapioca	2.25
Pete Crude & Natural Gas	2.21
Mustard Oilcake	2.09
Cars	1.86
Meat	1.83
Cotton Yarn	1.82
Bajra	1.74
Bananas	1.67
Jute Textile Machinery	1.44
Radio & T.V.	1.39
Caustic Soda	1.34
Cables & Wires	1.33
Aviation Spirit	1.32
Masoor	1.20
Jowar	1.18
Internal Combustion Engines	1.16
Silk Raw	1.09
Sugar	0.98
Art Silk & Artificial Fabrics	0.90
Machine Tools	0.88
Coir Yarn	0.87
Nitrogenous Fertilisers	0.86
Atta	0.86
Tyres	0.83
Plywood	0.81
Tubes	0.80
Tractors	0.80
Zinc	0.76
Milk	0.75

Of the 138 series considered, 87 of them with a total weight of 47.788 had a positive growth and 48 of them with a total weight of 38.202 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1989	1988
Fertilisers
Thousand Tonnes, July	710.9	695.2
Electricity
Mill Kwh, July	19269	17075
Plant Load Factor
Per Cent, July	49.8	49.5
Revenue Earning
Million Tonnes, July	24.93	23.35
Goods Traffic Call
Money Rate Per cent, July	10.63	9.82

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

80% of all human diseases are water-borne

Water-borne Diseases	Caused By	Combatted By Tap Attachments/ Conventional Filters	Combatted By Chemicals & Disinfectants	Combatted By Aquaguard
BACTERIAL DISEASES
Gastro-enteritis	Bacteria	X	✓	✓
Typhoid	Bacteria	X	✓	✓
Cholera	Bacteria	X	✓	✓
Paratyphoid	Bacteria	X	✓	✓
Dysentery	Bacteria	X	✓	✓
Diarrhoea	Bacteria	X	✓	✓
VIRAL DISEASES
Polio	Virus	X	X	✓
Hepatitis	Virus	X	X	✓
Gastro-enteritis	Virus	X	X	✓

Trust Aquaguard for clear, safe drinking water.

Disease-causing viruses in your drinking water are more difficult to destroy than even bacteria, as can be seen from the above chart.

Trust AQUAGUARD to eliminate all known, water-borne, disease-causing bacteria and viruses.

Give your family the confidence of water from AQUAGUARD.

For a free demonstration at your home, contact:

EUREKA FORBES LIMITED
P.O. Box 936, G.P.O., Bombay 400 001.

Interpub/EFL/AG/2 B/89

Aquaguard for clear, safe drinking water.

On-line water filter-cum-purifier

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HMV
presents the Sarod Samrat Ustad Amjad Ali Khan in

Dawn Dreams

Celebrate the glories of dawn with the ragas Jaunpuri and Lalit. This new recording captures again the unique virtuosity of the Sarod maestro. Available on double album—cassettes and LPs.

Other releases of
Ustad Amjad Ali Khan from HMV

LPs & Cassettes :
Raga Shree • Ragas Bihag & Pilu; Dadra • Raga Darbari • Ragas Sahana & Tilak Kamod • Ragas Shuddha Kalyan & Durga • Raga Priyadarshini • Guldasta* • Ustad Amjad Ali Khan & Lalgudi G Jayaraman (violin) in 'South Meets North'.

LPs :
Ragas Durga & Nandkauns • Ragas Sughrai Kanada & Jhinjhoti • Raga Shyam Shree.

Cassettes :
Raga Miyan ki Malhar • Ragas Bihag; Pilu; Kirwani & Bihari • Ragas Desh; Kiranranjani; Bhairavi & Dadra Dhun • Raga Malkauns • Best of Ustad Amjad Ali Khan*

Also available, 'Amjad's Sarod Sings with the Children' (on a double cassette specially priced at Rs.46/- for 2 cassettes).

Get these titles from HMV dealers or order them from:
HMV Music Mail
2, Ripon Street, Calcutta 700 016
by sending a demand draft payable to The Gramophone Co. of India Ltd.
Price (including taxes and packing & postage)
LP, Rs.57 each; cassette, Rs.40 each.

*Double album

Great artiste
Great music

Rediffusion/Cal/GCI/5

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIAN-AMERICANS

The Lobbying Game

The community organises itself politically

IN the whirligig of coalition politics on Capitol Hill, India with depressing regularity comes out a loser. In July, an anti-Indian amendment to the Foreign Aid Bill narrowly missed being passed in the House of Representatives. Were it not for the intervention of Indophile and liberal Democrat, Stephen Solarz, the Herger Bill, as it was called, was likely to have been approved.

Solarz lobbied House members against an amendment which, as he says, would have made $25 million in development assistance to India contingent upon whether some police officers were punished in a rape incident in Punjab.

The vote was a close one: 212 to 204. Wally Herger, a relatively obscure Congressman from Yuba City, California, had enlisted the support of conservative Republicans, ranged against India because of its support of Cuba, its position on Afghanistan and its voting record in the UN. What was unexpected was the groundswell of bipartisan consensus on India's alleged human rights violations in Punjab.

The controversial Herger Bill was itself the work of the indefatigable Indian-American lobbyist, Gormeet Singh Aulak. A former medical researcher at Harvard, Aulak is the president of the Washington-based Council for Khalistan. He found in Herger a ready ally. Herger's congressional district includes Yuba City which has a large number of Sikh constituents, including millionaire farmer Didar Singh.

Last fortnight, the new Indian Ambassador, Karan Singh, made a firm move to counter the impression created about human rights violation in Punjab. He invited Thomas S. Foley, Speaker of the US House of Representatives, to lead a congressional delegation to Punjab. And the Congress(I) MP, M.C. Bhandare, presented a letter to Foley, signed by 58 MPs, protesting against such allegations made during the discussion on the Herger Bill.

But it is becoming increasingly evident that in congressional circles, India, the awakening Asian power, can no longer trade on the goodwill of being the world's largest democracy. Last May, there was little opposition in Congress or the Administration when India, along with Japan and Brazil, was labelled an 'unfair trader'. In February, Herger had been able to mobilise the support of 24 Congressmen to introduce an amendment that threatened to deny India the Most Favoured Nation status unless it improved its human rights record in Punjab, which Amnesty International alleged was poor.

Indian Embassy sources in Washington dismiss these developments as mere irritants, unlikely to affect what was an enduring upswing in Indo-US relations. They confidently recite the long—and impressive—list of agreements for co-operation in science and technology, including collaboration on the Light Combat Aircraft. But clearly, they are uneasy. The embassy is now frantically looking to hire a professional lobbyist to woo Capitol Hill. William Chasey, who had offered the services of his Washington-based lobby firm free of charge for a year, has not been found satisfactory.

Stephen Solarz: backing India

As chairman of the subcommittee on Asia, Solarz's commitment to better relations with India has won him many generous Indian-American admirers.

Part of the efforts to hire a lobbyist are to counter Pakistan's consummate success in working the public policy process of competing interests. General Zia's Pakistan had enlisted the services of Denis Neil & Co to broker a compromise formula in 1987 which would secure congressional support for the $4.2 billion aid package without any fresh constraints on its nuclear programme. Now, Benazir Bhutto has brought in a friend from her Radcliffe days, Mark Segal.

But in a world of intensive lobby politics, where professional lobbyists are necessary, does India have the resources to stay on the inside track? More so in a system where every third lobbyist in Washington is in the pay of a Japanese company. Most observers believe that a cheaper and more effective way is to mobilise the thousands of highly skilled.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

well-paid professional Indian-Americans.

It is a message that Solarz has been seeking to impress upon the Indian-American community here. Addressing a recent fund-raiser in his honour in California, Solarz said: "I think the time has come for the Indo-American community to shape US foreign policy in India." Describing the community as a "vibrant and increasingly vigorous factor in American politics", Solarz told INDIA TODAY: "The community has not yet woken up to its full potential. But when it does it can be counted upon to exercise a political clout far greater than their number would suggest. A disproportionately large number of Indian-Americans are highly educated, relatively well-paid professionals."

Capitol Hill: powerful lobbying

Wally Herger: supporting Sikhs

In February, Herger had mobilised support to introduce an amendment to deny India the Most Favoured Nation status unless it improved its human rights record in Punjab.

The 48-year-old Democrat from Brooklyn, a predominantly white Jewish constituency, Solarz has amply benefited from the political emergence of the Indian-American. As chairman of the subcommittee on Asia, he has been singled out for his steadfast commitment to better relations with democratic India. An exasperated Zia-ul-Haq once called Solarz, "the voice of India". Says Solarz: " He meant it as a criticism. I took it as a compliment."

Such a stance has won him many generous Indian-American admirers—who have contributed handsomely to his election funds—headed by California cardiologist Virendra Bisla. Moreover, it is not at all unusual for Solarz, garbed in a sherwani, to raise thousands of dollars at fund-raising meets organised by Indian-Americans. His appearance at the California fund-raiser on July 22 netted him $16,500.

BUT even without Solarz's exhortations, there are signs that Indian-Americans are starting to organise themselves politically. The most visible example is the Indian American Forum for Political Education (IAFPE). The moving force behind the IAFPE and the wider Asian American grouping, the Asian Voters Coalition is Joy Cherian, currently the highest ranking Indian-American in the Bush Administration. Cherian, 47, an immigrant from Cochin, is the equal employment opportunities commissioner, a sub-cabinet rank equivalent to an assistant secretary of state.

Flanked by what suspiciously looked like a red chillies shrub on one side and a curry leaf plant on the other, Cherian spoke about taking the Indian community first to "Capitol Hill, then the White House and now the Supreme Court". When IAFPE was created in 1983, its members had virtually to drag congressional representatives to attend their annual reception. Today, five years later, the reception held by them boasts of attendance by such figures as Senator Edward Kennedy, Paul E. Arbanes, John Warner and Rudi Boswitz.

Cherian has a vision: an Indian-American community, modelled on the Jewish-American lobby. He told INDIA TODAY: "In the case of Polish-Americans, an American President makes a statement on Solidarity in Michigan. We will have come of age when, similarly, an American President will find it politically opportune to make a policy statement on India before an audience of Indian-Americans."

Yet can the Indian-American community hope to achieve any real political clout when it numbers barely 1 million (according to the 1980 census) or just 0.2 per cent of the population? In at least two states, they are already large enough in numbers to make a difference. Around 17.5 per cent of the population of Indian-Americans are in New York state and 15.4 are in California. Their strength is now such that they are an important electoral consideration. "In a tight election, Asian votes can swing votes in key electoral states like California and New York," says Cherian, former chairman of the Asian Voters Coalition.

But there is another problem, as Gopal Sivaraj Pal of Virginia, a founder-member of the IAFPE, points out—the division of opinion within the Indian-American community. Indeed, a quick survey of the 310 Indian-American organisations shows that it was open to question whether there was any validity in using the term 'Indian-American' as denoting a homogeneous grouping. Divisions within the community were embarrassingly evident at last year's Republican National Convention when Indian-Americans held three different receptions.

Only too aware of this political weakness, Cherian in his farewell presidential address to the IAFPE, admonished the community for behaving like divided Indians on the narrow basis of "back home identities" with hyphenated American status. Moreover, while middle class professionals may have become more unified during their stay here, Amrita Basu in her recent study on Indian immigration, indicates that new immigrants are likely to have stronger regional, linguistic and ethnic identities. "There are fewer professionals. They are from small towns, they like to be self-employed and are, thus, isolated from the pressures to conform to mainstream America," she says.

Moreover, less than 20 per cent of Indian-Americans are registered as voters and the dominant mood of the community remains politically apathetic. For most, a reception thrown by the Indian ambassador is far more of a draw than that by their local Congressman.

There is, however, an undeniable drive amongst the older, first generation immigrants—well-placed professionals between 35 and 45 years, who are keen to participate in the political process. They provide the backbone for the four major umbrella associations that have increasingly come to represent the political interest of the Indian immigrants: the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Does your Secretary keep a respectable distance when taking dictation?

Nobody likes being near a person who smells. Yet so many of us don't even know when we suffer from Body Odour.

A lot of people believe that perspiration causes Body Odour. However, perspiration, by itself, is odourless. It only starts smelling when it is decomposed by the bacteria that are always present on and in the underlayers of the skin.

Regular soaps can only wash off surface dirt and bacteria. But very soon after a bath, bacteria settle down on the skin and multiply. And you're never really free from Body Odour.

THE SNIFF TEST

At the end of the day, raise your arm, and sniff under arm. Smell something? You probably will, unless you are a Cinthol user.

Switch to Cinthol and use it for atleast 7 days. Repeat the sniff test. You'll be surprised. No Body Odour. A sign that Cinthol is working for you.

Unless you use Cinthol. Cinthol is the ONLY general purpose bath soap in India that contains TCC – Tri Chloro Carbanilide. The TCC in Cinthol prevents bacteria from multiplying and perspiration from smelling. Not just immediately after a bath, but a full 24 hours following it.

So all you have to do is take atleast one bath a day with Cinthol. And you can say goodbye to Body Odour for the rest of your life.

MADISON-G-66

Cinthol
Prevents Body Odour.
Builds Body Confidence.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cherian: man with a mission

There is a section of wealthy Indian-American professionals who have been in the US for around 25 years and have both the money and the time to acquire political influence.

Dandona (far left) with Bush

Association of Indians in America, the Federation of Indian Associations, the IAFPE and the National Association of Asian Americans of Indian Descent.

LACKING numerical strength, it is through money power that Indian-Americans can hope to acquire political clout in a system where electoral campaigns require millions of dollars in fund-raising. Congressional elections average up to $ 500,000 and Senate elections three to five times as much. Financial contributions by Indian-Americans to the presidential elections have been held up to demonstrate the community's political mobilisation. Republican Indian-Americans managed to raise $ 100,000, while Ramesh Kapur of Boston, on the Board of Directors of Michael Dukakis' campaign, raised $ 350,000 for Dukakis and $ 300,000 for the Democratic National Committee.

The overall record of fund-raising by Indian-Americans has been a very mixed one. The most glaring examples are the fund-raising dinners for Maryland Senator Paul Sarbanes and California Congressman Mervyn Dymally. At the dinner for Dymally, doctors earning above $ 100,000 a year, embarrassingly contributed a total of just $ 450. At the dinner in honour of Sarbanes only $ 2,500 was raised by the affluent residents of the exclusive Potomac area.

Dr Navin Shah, executive director of the International Association of American Physicians (IAAP), dismisses such members of the community as 'photo opportunists'. Tersely commenting on the IAFPE, he said: "They talk a lot, but make no significant financial contribution and are not serious enough to hire a lobbyist."

IAFPE activist G.S. Pal agrees that Indians are not in the habit of contributing to fund-raisers. "They would much rather give for a temple or an evening of Asha or Lata's songs," he said. Pal was nonetheless able to persuade his fellow Indian-Americans to raise more than $ 100,000 million for the Bush-Quayle election campaign. Therefore, when Pal sought the ear of Congressman Frank Wolf on the Herger Bill linking the Most Favoured Nation status with human rights violations in Punjab, he was not only heard but was successful in persuading Wolf from swelling the ranks of the Bill's sponsors. The Indian Embassy had no doubt included the Congressman in its vigorous letter campaign to project its viewpoint on Punjab. But it was Pal, whom the Congressman heeded.

Nascent Indian-American activism has also taken the form of open appeals to the community through the ethnic press to write to their Congressmen. Petitions are passed around at dinner in the home of wealthy Indians, often in the unobtrusive presence of a senior Indian diplomat. Even the Sunday TV programme for Indians in Greater Washington, Darshan, has been active in mobilising the community to oppose the Herger Bill.

The ease with which it is possible to travel has tempted a few Indian-Americans to pursue political interests in both countries. The high political visibility in the US of Indian-American Kamal Dandona derives from his closeness to the Congress (I). It is his reception in New York that Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi graces. It was also Dandona who mobilised some 300 Indian-Americans from the east coast to demonstrate on Capitol Hill against the proposed sale of Airborne Warning and Control Systems to Pakistan. Also present were Solarz and Dymally.

Community leaders, however, say much also depends on how successful the serving Indian ambassador is in reaching out to the community and mobilising them politically on issues concerning Indian interests. Every six months, over the last two years, the Indian Embassy has encouraged an informal gathering of representatives of various organisations in an effort to build a forum for discussion and eventually political cohesion.

Former ambassador P.K. Kaul's activism on this issue has coincided with the discernible growth in the political involvement of a section of Indian-Americans: wealthy professionals who have been in the country for about 25 to 30 years. It is they who have the time and money to acquire political influence. Eventually, if the hundreds of Congressmen have to be reached, it is the Indian-Americans they will listen to.

—RITA MANCHANDA in Washington

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WE'LL GIVE YOUR SOF
A FLYING START.
Rs.100 CRORES PRIVI

1986. The winds of change.
The Government of India announced the Software Policy. Since then, Exim Bank has helped Indian computer software exporters target over Rs.100 crores of business in highly competitive markets.

The software opportunity — Are you ready for it?
It certainly isn't an effortless business. The world is your market, but it is also your competitor. And in an exacting environment where solutions have a short shelf-life, getting the right solution to the right place at the right time, involves a whole set of elusive variables — with only one constant factor on your side — Exim's financing package.

Exim Bank — The software export catalyst.
When it comes to the key resources — money, knowledge and time — it pays to get into the Exim mode.

Exim Bank offers you swift, single-window access to critical resources. Scan the menu of benefits:

* A total financial package — foreign currency and rupee term loans, plus working capital
* Rebate on Customs Duty for Exim Bank scrutinised proposals
* Clearance for import of computer systems in about 15 days.

Plus the Software Policy benefits:

— Release of 30% of excess export earnings for importing new computer systems, augmenting existing computer systems or acquisition of software companies abroad

— Availability of foreign exchange to meet expenses on marke abroad

— Scope for foreign collaboration/foreign investment

— Cash cor
— Direct tax
— Access to

Can you g
Basically all
• A good tra
• Sound fina
• A compreh tie-up/coll
• you've got
For more in
P.O. Box No

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

R SOFTWARE EXPORTS

RVE IT.

– Cash compensatory support.
– Direct tax benefits
– Access to databases abroad via satellite links.

Can you get into Exim's fast lane?
Basically all that it takes is a well-defined project backed by
- A good track record that proves management capabilities
- Sound financials with resilience to meet contingencies
- A comprehensive export plan backed by marketing tie-up/collaboration.

If you've got it all, do talk to us. Today.
For more information, please contact:
P.O. Box No. 11697, Bombay 400 021.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF INDIA

Access the menu of benefits.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ATHLETICS

Fast Forward

A talented new crop emerges

FOR the past five seasons the field was fallow. There were no signs of a good crop. Now, finally there are signs that some new talent may be sprouting on the Indian track and field.

The unusually busy 1989 athletics season which kicked off last fortnight with the 28th National Open championship in Madras showed the arrival of an ambitious, new breed of hard-working young champions.

Among the most promising is discus-thrower Shakti Singh: "My personal target is to cross the 60-metre barrier," he says. An inspector with the Central Industrial Security Force, Singh at 24 is rather young in an event where champions often mature late. With the first throw of 57.70 metres, the spirited Haryanvi erased Ajmer Singh's five-year-old national record of 56.92 metres.

Singh's improvement is remarkable since his first national appearance was with a mediocre throw of 52.42 metres at the National Games in Trivandrum in 1987. He failed to cross the 50-metre mark all through 1988. But a short stint in the German Democratic Republic (GDR) earlier this year helped hone his skills, refine his technique and finally add more than a remarkable five metres to his previous best throw. And while internationally there may be several throwers capable of hurling the disc to more than 65 metres, anything close to 60 metres would put him in line for a medal at the November Asian Track and Field Championships.

Another 24-year-old sensation is the lanky Bahadur Prasad. He completed a unique treble by bagging golds in the 1,500 metres, 5,000 metres and 10,000 metres—no one has done this in a national meet—in the sweltering heat. He followed it up with another win in the 1,500 metres on the first day of the Trivandrum Masters meet.

For one who finished third in the 10,000 metres in his Nationals debut last year, Prasad has done Harry Wilson, his British coach, proud. His Madras timings were still below the past Indian bests. But his 29.48 minutes for the 10,000 metres at an international competition in Lahore earlier this year is the best by an Indian in the event in the past three years.

Says Prasad, who is a railway ticket examiner at Agra: "If I am allowed to train in England for another six months I will bring back at least one gold from the Beijing Asian Games next year." The claim, though enthusiastic, is a hard one as that will mean clipping nearly two minutes from his own career best. Cautions former middle distance star Sriram Singh: "Prasad must make his choice of one or two events to tune himself well to changing the pace or quickening the rhythm during the race."

An event in which India does well at the Asian level is the shot put. The towering 1.97-metre Shivappa Durgappa Eashan, 27, a railway ticket collector in Bangalore, seems to be a worthy successor to the old Indian tradition. He heaved the iron ball to a career-best distance of 18.28 metres. The best Indian effort is by Iqbal Singh who touched 18.77 metres last year and Na Yongfeng of China has crossed the 19-metre mark. The visiting GDR coach, Jorg Ramalow, helped Eashan achieve better synchronisation and balance. Lamented Eashan: "I could have done even better but for an injured right ankle." He has still to add another half a metre to be among the finalists in a top-of-the-line Asian contest.

Ashwini Nachappa, nick-named India's Flo-Jo due to her flamboyant style and appearance is now concentrating on the 200 metres and timed 24.3 seconds—clipping one tenth of a second off her previous best. She is inching in on Usha's Asian record of 23.44 seconds. Zenia Ayrton who trained at Crystal Palace in England and K. Saramma are the other bright sprint prospects.

And one poised to reach greater heights is the 18-year-old high jumper Angela Lincy. With her career best of 1.73 metres already in the books, the sprightly Lincy is chasing the 1.89 metres mark of Zheng Zheng of China. Says she: "Give me more competition and you will see my best come out."

The new crop of middle-distance runners like Avtar Singh (800 metres) and 18-year old Harjinder Singh (400 metres) have rekindled hopes of a revival of Indian might in these events.

Clearly, the emergence of the new talent is mainly because of better training facilities in the post-Asiad '82 phase. "Coaching and the presence of a trainer is more imperative now than ever before, for better performances," emphasises ace long jumper-turned-coach Suresh Babu. Remarks another former Asian Games medallist, shot putter Bahadur Singh: "Athletes must be exposed to competitions abroad frequently."

The coming months will, in fact, bring in a surfeit of competition. The two permit meets in Delhi and Calcutta after the Masters meet in Trivandrum and then the Asian Track and Field Championship in New Delhi are opportunities for them to knock off microseconds and add the millimetres that separate the champions from the also-rans.

—AMARNATH K. MENON in Madras

Photographs by S.N. KOUSHIK

Shakti Singh

S.D. Eashan

Ashwini Nachappa

The emergence of new talent is mainly because of the better training facilities in the post-'82 Asian Games phase.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EXCLUSIVITY

LIKE YOU'VE NEVER EXPERIENCED BEFORE

VISIT SUMANGAL FOR EXCLUSIVE PURCHASE OF SUITINGS, SAFARI FABRICS, SHIRTINGS, TROUSERINGS, TWEEDS, BLANKETS, DESIGNER MEN'S WEAR AND TAILORING

DIGJAM, OCM and JIYAJEE, long considered amongst the leaders in premium quality suitings, safaris, tweeds and blankets have come together in a fashion shop for men. It stocks the widest range of fabrics and international designer class ready-to-wear garments, each created with a strict eye to lasting quality and enduring style.

DIGJAM

The shop is SUMANGAL

OCM

Exclusivity is the very backbone of good designing. That is why every SUMANGAL fabric or garment reflects a passionate attention to originality and elegance.

The best of DIGJAM, OCM, JIYAJEE fabrics are individually selected to live upto the SUMANGAL name and provide exclusive qualities to its patrons.

JIYAJEE

It is this singular fastidiousness that makes SUMANGAL indispensable for the well-dressed man.

SUMANGAL

DIGJAM • OCM • JIYAJEE

MILLS' PRESTIGIOUS SHOWROOM

At: New Delhi (South Extension and Karol Bagh), Calcutta, Madras, Hyderabad, Bangalore, Vijayawada, Visakhapatnam, Miryalguda, Indore, Kota, Jabalpur, Baroda, Kanpur and Allahabad.

AJAXSL/88

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WOMEN

Heels On Wheels

Across the country, the middle class woman is increasingly on the move. Astride the two-wheeler she is experiencing whiffs of a lifestyle of independence and convenience, a practical kind of liberation.

FOR Savita Balasubramaniam, a typical day winds through 50 km of urban jungle. The 22-year-old programmer at a Bangalore computer firm sets off from the Rajajinagar suburb at 9 a.m. for her work at Basavanagudi, 12 km away. Before returning at 5.30 p.m., she would have travelled another 20 km to meet clients. In the evening, she's off again to a business administration course at an evening college.

Quite obviously, what this woman needs more than rings on her fingers are wings on her heels. She manages very well, actually, with her heels on her wheels. Nothing fancy either. Her 50 cc moped is quite enough to take her places. For Savita is in the vanguard of a fast-growing movement that is taking more and more middle class Indian women into its sweep—the movement towards a pair of wheels. In plain black and white, their lives have taken flight over the tar and the zebra crossing.

Women drivers have been common for years now, particularly in the metropolitan cities. But while it needs a well-heeled woman to be four-wheeled, the two-wheeler has become the middle class woman's key to all the opportunities that mobility brings her. Today, the sight of a woman perched confidently on a moped, zipping around on a scooter, or even manoeuvring a motorcycle, is as common as a Mills and Boon novelette in a girls' library.

Many women say it's a heady feeling, hair flying in the wind, whizzing down the road to any place one wants, with not a care in the world, just the feeling of freedom, the sense of adventure and the intoxication of speed. To the working woman, the two-wheeler brings a more practical kind of liberation. Says Nupur Basu, who is an activist of the Media Forum for Women: "Riding a two-wheeler is a woman's expression of confidence. It makes us feel that we are in charge of our own lives."

It is in second rung cities—Pune, Bangalore, Chandigarh, Baroda—that two-wheelers are most visible, a fair number of them ridden by women. "Mopeds are a dime a dozen in Pune, every house has one," says Malini Wadkar, 32. Adds K. Jairaj, Bangalore's transport commissioner: "Two-wheeling seems a rage in the city," adding that there has been a remarkable increase in the proportion of women riders.

This rage is now building in less likely towns too, piercing the hidebound traditionality of places like Lucknow and Patna. In Bhopal, mopeds have replaced bicycles, and every fourth rider is a woman. At the Nutan Girls' College, there isn't enough parking space since four out of every five teachers and students now sail in on mopeds.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Columnist Nalini Singh was amazed while making a film in Rajasthan recently. Despite the stereotype of the Rajasthani ghunghat (veil) right down to the waist, she says, "even in a little place like Banswara, you have these very purposeful women, gaze fixed firmly ahead, riding along on their mopeds". In Imphal, women on mopeds—whether in modern garb or traditional dress—are everywhere.

Just a decade back, the woman rider was still an oddity. "An amused group of men used to collect around me," remembers Feroza Singh, who moved to

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

MAHESH BHATT

The two wheeler mania has overtaken students and even middle-aged women.

BHAWAN SINGH

Dehra Dun from Pune in 1980, after marrying a local farmer. Pune was already becoming India's moped city, but she says she was one of only two women riders in Dehra Dun then. Savita Chopra, 45, lecturer in public administration at Punjab University, says that in the '70s, she used to be stared at even in Chandigarh, which today has one of the highest ratios of women to men riders in the country.

Even today, comparatively fewer women ride two-wheelers in metropolises like Delhi or Bombay. Reason: the overpowering speed and volume of traffic. "It's just not safe," says Shabnam Sarin of Delhi. "The traffic is simply mad. It's been my life's dream to ride a bike, but I could never venture on to a Delhi road."

IN towns with a less breathless pace, though, the two little wheels revolving in tandem have spelt a big revolution on the road to independence for many women. "You just pick up your scooter and zoom off," says Vandana Kaith, 22, who teaches at the ONGC women's polytechnic in Dehra Dun.

Predictably, moped-mania is most common among students. Every afternoon, a flood of colourfully turned-out girls, riding doubles or even triples on two-wheelers, pour ebulliently out of the gates of schools and colleges. "It's thrilling," effuses Gurpreet Sahi, 19, of Chandigarh. Adds Noorainne Fazal, 19, who enjoys zooming past male riders on Bangalore's broad avenues on her modern 350 cc motorcycle: "Why should the boys have all the fun?" Most men can't resist revving their own vehicles to catch up with her. "I love racing them," she grins.

Parents generally seem to trust their girls with vehicles. Says Jija Harisingh, chief of Bangalore's traffic police: "Women are definitely safer drivers than men. They take much less risks and are generally more disciplined on the roads."

So young girls are increasingly being given vehicles exclusively for their own use. Though just 15, Ritu Narula of the Convent of Jesus and Mary in Dehra Dun has been riding a moped for a year now. And her schoolmate, 17-year-old Rachna Anand, was given a sleek silver scooter for her birthday last March.

Their younger mates are often conveyed to school on their mothers' pillions. In fact, between 7 and 8 in the morning in a lot of small towns, every second two-wheeler features a woman—her pallu tucked neatly into the front of her petticoat—ferrying a starched little uniformed offspring.

That kind of ability can make the crucial difference between helplessness

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

 Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

and gumption for a widow like Saroj Dhiman, 38. Last year, she lost her husband in an accident. Left to care for her seven-year-old son, her life now hinges on her moped—dropping her son to school, shopping, commuting to her polytechnic. Her husband had taught her to handle it just a few days before his death, and she says: "Sometimes, I wonder what I would have done without it."

Monisha Singh, a 35-year-old schoolteacher, and widow of an army officer, endorses that. Her two sons perched neatly on her pillion, she says: "It would really have been impossible to manage without it." Her moped allowed her to keep up with friends. With the children growing up fast, she recently bought herself a scooter.

FOR many women, a pair of wheels are a professional necessity. "Without my bike, I would be sunk," says M.S. Anupama, who travels to the airport several times a week in the course of her work at her father's Bangalore-based computer export firm.

Several other working women in sectors like banking have become eligible for loans for buying two-wheelers, and many are taking advantage of it. Out of the 15 women working at the UCO Bank branch in Sector 17-B of Chandigarh, 10 have two-wheelers. Loan repayment is easy: Rs 70 a month over five to seven years.

A related factor is the virtual breakdown of public transport systems. "I get to my work in 10 minutes on my moped," says Shama Mehra, a Chandigarh hotel employee. "If I depend on local buses, it takes an hour." Adds Kavita Paalya, who runs a small advertising agency in Bangalore: "There are days I have to do upwards of 80 km within the city, visiting clients. If I depend on the state transport, I can kiss my business goodbye." Besides public transport often entails jostling with uncouth crowds.

A moped doesn't cost much more than travelling by public transport either. Harjinder Jawandha, president of Chandigarh's Union Territory Women Employees' Welfare Association, says that despite travelling 30-40 km a day, she spends just a little more than Rs 100 on her vehicle every month. Most women who simply commute to work spend no more than Rs 50.

And if one has riden a bicycle before, it's easy to learn how to ride a moped. Vimala Parthasarathy, 60, picked it up at the age of 45. She even does minor repairs herself and her routine includes dropping her grandson to school. Says she: "If I could learn at the age of 45, surely all young women can do it."

MAHESH BHATT

Noorainne Fazal enjoys zooming past male riders on her 350 cc motorcycle. Most men can't resist revving up their vehicles to catch up with her.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Shama Mehra, a Chandigarh hotel employee, rides a moped to work because it takes her only 10 minutes while a local bus takes an hour.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For Manisha Singh, a scooter means independence and mobility.

BHAWAN SINGH

Already, two-wheeler production in India has grown fivefold from 3.5 lakh vehicles annually just 10 years ago to over 17 lakh now, making India the second largest producer after Japan. Thanks to the new interest among women, manufacturers are gradually turning their attention to designing features especially to suit them.

While the moped still dominates the women's market, a sleek kinetic scooter featuring a switch start in addition to the kick start and automatic gear changes has become the toast of the upmarket bracket of the women's market.

But there has still not been a major advertisement thrust aimed head-on at the women's market, such as the US cigarette ad for Virgina Slims that showed a woman smoking over the blurb: 'You've come a long way, baby'. Partly, say manufacturers and dealers, this is because they are chary of having their vehicles branded as 'a woman's bike'. Men would then shy away from it.

If that's an indicator of chauvinism, a much more obvious one is behaviour on the roads. Almost every young female rider has a tale of harassment. Most commonly, it involves young men deliberately crossing their way. A Maruti car full of boys often attaches itself to a girl on a two-wheeler, somewhat like a raucous outrider, for miles on end. And boys on motorcycles sometimes zig-zag crazily in front of a girl's vehicle. "It's like trying you out, to see if you can manage," says Arunima Verma of Dehra Dun.

Sometimes, this kind of fun can be disastrous. Twenty-six-year-old Seetha Nagaraj was riding her moped down a lonely stretch along Bangalore's Ulsoor lake one afternoon a couple of months ago when a male scooterist swerved into her. Seetha was hit so hard that she toppled over, breaking her shin and kneecap. After three rounds of surgery, she still limps.

Apart from road romeos, there is the obvious danger of sari pallus or dupattas getting caught in the chain of the motor. C. Kaveri, a Bangalore schoolteacher, was placidly riding her moped recently when she suddenly found herself on the ground—her sari had got caught in the chain and the moped had cart-wheeled across the road.

Then there is the problem of repairs. Many women are forced to abandon their vehicles on the road if something goes wrong. Forty-two-year-old Usha Singh has been riding for eight years now, but she looks quite helpless as she rides along with her moped on a cyclerickshaw, carrying it to a mechanic. "Just the day before yesterday, I got it repaired. Now, look at it," she says. Adds Nidhi Bawa, 21, who has been riding mopeds and scooters since she was 11: "The mopeds that are coming these days are not reliable. After two or three years, they do tend to go off."

Chandigarh-based journalist Vijaya K. Pushkarna is also dubious about the freedom mopeds give women to do the kinds of things they couldn't in the past. "It's independence, but with an added burden," she says. "Shopping or taking the children to school was essentially a male role. This has made the men lazier."

Whatever effect it may have had on the men, however, the two-wheeler has certainly given the Indian woman a dash of dynamism. —DAVID DEVADAS and CHIDANAND RAJGHATTA

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Nidhi Bawa, who has been riding two-wheelers since she was 11, says that the mopeds nowadays are unreliable, creating maintenance problems.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MODERN MAGNETISM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Modern
Sulzem
SUITINGS SHIRTINGS SAFARIS

This is the attraction
that is drawn to the confidence that radiates from the man with that irresistible presence that goes with that premium yarn from Modern Woollens Ltd.

It happens every time!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

LINTAS MSL MOD 3 2740

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Even if we put the Kohinoor up for sale, it wouldn't cost you the earth!

The finest collection at the world's most elegant duty free.
Dubai Duty Free.

For The World's Finest. Fly-Buy-Dubai

السوق الحرة - دبي
DUBAI DUTY FREE

PANGULF

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Save time, Save money!

With TAM® Telephone Activity Monitor

Now you can keep phone bills under check, avoid phone misuse and erroneous billing.

The latest technology developed in USA now gives you

* Record of date, time and duration of all outgoing calls and incoming calls.
* Record of number dialled for all outgoing calls, including long distance calls.
* Outgoing call restriction. Built-in key lock shuts out all long distance calls, and another disables the phone for all outgoing calls altogether.
* Records telephone service interruption by date and exact time.
* Date/time perpetually displayed on large LCD screen, and also the number just dialled.
* Battery/mains operation. Low power consumption.
* Large memory storage, upto several hundred calls.
* Easy installation.
* Simple to use.

TAM is fully compatible to Indian line conditions in all kinds of telephone exchanges.

A products of electrosales

Corporation of America, INC 1555 Brunswick Ave, Lawrenceville, New Jersey 08648, USA Tel: (609) 393-7474 Fax: (609) 393-3435

Sample Printout

	Explanation
18005551212#	(#) Tel Number Dialled
10.25.58 S	(S) Call Start Time
10.34.54 E	(E) Call End Time
00.08.56 =	(=) Duration of Call
12.54.40 C	(C) Incoming Call Time
13.01.08 E	(E) Call End Time
00.06.28 =	(=) Duration of Call
20.50.10 M	(M) Malfunction, Tel Line
20:40.50 T	(T) Tel Line Repaired
87.09.23	Record of Sept 23, 1987
8951220...#	(#) Tel Number Dialled
08.50.00 S	(S) Start Time
09.00.10 E	(E) End Time
00.10.10 =	(=) Call Duration

Plenty of space for your notes and markings on 58 mm (2 1/4 inch) wide printer paper available commonly

Worldwide availability :

HONG KONG : Spaceage Products International Tel: 3-661334 and other appliance dealers in Chung King Mansion, Kowloon.

SINGAPORE: Shankar's Emporium (PTE) Ltd., High Street Plaza. Tel: 336-2675. U.S.A Sam & Raj, New York. Tel: (212) 651-6969

UAE/DUBAI : Jumbo Electronics, P.O. Box 3426. Tel: 523555, 521014. Fax: 523910.

Guaranteed & Serviced in India by: Bionics Engineering Company, 26 & 27 Okhla Industrial Area, Phase II, New Delhi 110 020. Tel: 630075, 6841186 Grams "COMPUTIME" In the near future new service centres will be opened in Bombay, Madras, Calcutta and Bangalore.

FOR INFORMATION ONLY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by BERTIL LINTNER

BURMA

The Islamabad Link

Government uses Pakistani arms to fight rebels

FOR several months now, the rumble of mortars, machine-gun fire and artillery has been heard from the Ye Gyaw guerrilla camp in eastern Burma—now renamed Myanma—near the border with Thailand. In one of its most determined offensives, the Burmese Government has unleashed a spate of attacks against the ethnic Karen rebels and dissident students who fled to resistance camps along the border when martial law was imposed last September.

So far, government forces have been unable to break through a terrain littered with mines and booby traps and have resorted to massive artillery barrages. Some shells have landed, unexploded, in the midst of Kawmoorah, the main guerrilla base near Ye Gyaw. They bear the distinct marking, 'POF'—the Pakistan Ordnance Factory. "We found that the forces were using a new type of weapon a few months ago," says Major Soe Soe of the rebel Karen National Union (KNU). "When we intercepted radio messages from the frontline troops to their rear headquarters, they said 'send those Pakistani fruit and we'll try them out'. We were puzzled, but soon discovered what it was all about."

The first confirmed report of Pakistani arms sales to Burma's military regime came in March when intelligence sources detected that a high-powered delegation had paid an unpublicised visit to Islamabad. The team reportedly included the Commander-in-Chief of the Burmese Air Force Major General Tin Tun, his deputy, Colonel Thein Win, Director of Ordnance Colonel Thein Tun and Director of Defence Industries Colonel Htay Tint. The first deal, signed in March-end, included an initial delivery of 150 machine-guns with 50,000 rounds of ammunition and 5,000 120 mm mortar bombs. This is to be followed by more military hardware later this year. The delegates also visited Pakistan's aviation industry complex, leading to speculation whether Islamabad will sell aircraft to Rangoon—now renamed Yangon—or train Burmese pilots.

Pakistani shell (top); and rebel camp: stiff fight

The news was startling. But diplomatic observers doubt whether Pakistan Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto had endorsed the arms sale to Burma. For, ironically, she is often compared with Aung San Suu Kyi, leader of Burma's pro-democracy movement, for daring to challenge the powerful military rulers of their countries. Aung San Suu Kyi, 44, is the daughter of Burma's national hero, Aung San, who was assassinated in July 1947. Observers feel the arms sale reflects the conflict between Bhutto and the ISI (Inter-Services Intelligence) and casts doubt on the strength of her Government. Clearly, she cannot control the powerful elements within Pakistan's top brass who make such deals to raise funds for their own war chest.

Whether pure economic incentives or political considerations are the main reasons for the sale of arms to Burma remains a matter for conjecture. Some

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

One of the most loved teachers at Apple Computer Education.

Yes, like Ali, he's tough.

Yes, he dins concepts into your head.

But he does that because he wants you to come out with flying colours.

He wants you to get that international qualification from

The National Computing Centre (NCC), U.K.

Yes, there will be times when you'll wonder if he's human.

But, at the end of it all, you'll have to admit that it was his forceful and persuasive style of teaching that made it all seem so easy.

Made you fall in love with computers.

Come, fall in love with computers.

Apple
COMPUTER EDUCATION
ACCREDITED TO THE NATIONAL COMPUTING CENTRE (NCC), ESTD. BY THE U.K. GOVT.

BANGALORE: 561069/568161; BARODA: 329828/328235; BOMBAY: Fort: 2861158/298398/256563; Santacruz (W): 6493466; Malad (W): 6885828; NEW DELHI: 616138/616139; HYDERABAD: 235035; MADRAS: 476446/866518; PUNE: 51808

CHAITRA-B A 175 A R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Dissident students' army: under fire observers are inclined to believe that the Pakistani military is trying to establish cordial relations with their ruling counterparts in Rangoon as part of a regional strategy which, predictably, has a distinct anti-India bias. Burma shares a porous, 900-mile border with India's sensitive north-eastern states of Arunachal Pradesh, Nagaland, Manipur and Mizoram. So, improved relations between Islamabad and Rangoon could directly affect India's national security.

Improved relations between Islamabad and the Government in Burma could directly affect India's national security.

India was, in fact, one of the first countries to express its support for the undaunted resolve of the Burmese people to achieve democracy—as early as on September 10 last year. Later, when thousands of dissidents fled the bloody crackdown that followed the seizure of power by the now ruling State Law and Order Restoration Council on September 18, India became the only neighbour to adopt a clear-cut refugee policy. On October 25, India's Minister for External Affairs P.V. Narasimha Rao told a parliamentary panel that instructions had been issued not to turn back genuine refugees seeking shelter. This is in sharp contrast to Thailand's attitude which has been obscure when not contradictory.

In India, one refugee camp was built at Leikhul in Chandel district of Manipur. Two more camps—mainly for students from the ethnic Chin minority, which is closely related to the Mizos—have been established at Champhai and Saiha in Mizoram. Since then, an increasing number of Burmese students have flocked to India.

India's sympathetic attitude has also been reflected in the frankness of AIR's Burmese service, which has overtaken even BBC's Burmese service in popularity. The government-controlled Working People's Daily has over the past six months accused AIR of interfering in Burma's internal affairs. Significantly, AIR's Burmese service is being managed by the son-in-law of former prime minister U Nu who was ousted when the military initially seized power in 1962. U Nu re-emerged as a prominent figure for the pro-democracy movement.

PAKISTAN'S hostile reaction to this movement became apparent in March, shortly before the first Burmese military delegation visited Islamabad. A French resolution, sponsored by Washington and condemning the mass killings of pro-democracy protesters in Burma, was tabled at a meeting of the United Nations Human Rights Commission. Pakistan and China jointly opposed the resolution. Eventually Australia intervened and the commission passed a diluted statement which amounted to a mere slap on the wrist.

Meanwhile, the situation in Burma has only deteriorated further. Thousands of opposition activists have been arrested over the past month. Three-man military tribunals have been set up in Rangoon, Pegu, Mandalay, Sagaing and Magwe divisions and Chin state to try those who violate martial law. Offenders receive one of three sentences: three years' imprisonment with hard labour, life imprisonment or execution.

The draconian measures appear to have cowed the public into submission, at least temporarily, and more young activists have fled to the border areas. New arrivals are reported almost every day at the student camps. Says Tun Aung, 19, a recent arrival at Ye Gyaw: "I'd rather die here than in police custody in Rangoon."

Adds Win Myint, a 23-year-old student from Moulmein: "What can we do in the towns? Only armed struggle remains." He arrived at Ye Gyaw on August 7 after a hazardous trek through the jungles of eastern Burma to find that KNU insurgents, who host the students, are facing shortages of arms and ammunition and that no outside power has so far shown an interest in giving anything but humanitarian aid.

In contrast, the recent acquisition of Pakistani-made arms has increased the Burmese Army's firepower considerably. Hollow explosions echo from the mountain ranges south of Ye Gyaw and heavy gunfire rumbles in the distance. But students and Karen rebels are determined to defend their camps, despite the almost insurmountable odds they are up against. —BERTIL LINTNER in Ye Gyaw

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A typical Apple Computer Education student.

He's strong, like Lee. Because he's doing what is probably the toughest computer course in the country.

He's thorough. Because, at Apple, he is required to be very fluent with the basics.

And because he gets the strenuous training, that goes with courses of the National Computing Centre (NCC), U.K.

He's fast. Because the teaching methods at Apple have conditioned him to think like that. Methods that have made everything seem so easy.

And made him fall in love with computers.

Come, fall in love with computers.

Apple
COMPUTER EDUCATION
ACCREDITED TO THE NATIONAL COMPUTING CENTRE (NCC), ESTD. BY THE U.K. GOVT.

BANGALORE: 561069/568161; BARODA: 329828/328235; BOMBAY: Fort: 2861158/298898/256563; Santacruz (W): 6493466; Malad (W): 6885828; NEW DELHI: 616138/616139; HYDERABAD: 235035; MADRAS: 476446/866518; PUNE: 51808

CHAITRA-B A 175 B R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UMESH KATRE

"I don't know any of the Ambanis"

NAMAS BHOJANI

UMESH Katre, 31, the flashy son of CBI Director Mohan Katre, hit the headlines recently when freelance journalist Maneck Davar scooped documents and a tape-recorded conversation indicating that he was a commission agent for the Ambani's Reliance Industries Ltd.

The story appeared when the CBI was trying to take over the controversial Wadia murder conspiracy case and Mohan Katre was already being branded pro-Ambani. Umesh, according to the report, solicited clients for the sale of LAB*—a Reliance product used in the manufacture of detergents. Davar, posing as a detergents manufacturer, not only negotiated a deal for the purchase of* LAB but also taped Umesh lecturing him on a new detergent, Sasa, promoted by the makers of Lijjat papad. LAB is purchased by this company from Reliance. Umesh, officially a garment exporter, conducted the transaction with Davar from the office—which he often uses—of an old friend, Kamlesh Shah, director of Saras Chemicals. Umesh, who rides around in a late-model Mercedes and puffs on State Express cigarettes, agreed to break his silence and spoke to Senior Correspondent HARINDER BAWEJA. Excerpts:

Q. What is your relationship with the Shahs?

A. Kamlesh and his brothers have been good friends for 15 years. Their father, Bhogilal Shah, has known my dad for 20 years. When I left Mafatlals and started Spice Islands Apparels, Bhogilal offered me use of this office.

Q. Can't you operate from home?

A. All members of that housing society are government officers. They would not have allowed commercial activity on the premises.

Q. You could have rented a one-room place like this?

A. Just can't afford it. Diners Club offers the facility for an independent office, but secretarial staff is theirs. My work needs confidentiality. Besides, banks, RBI, Apparel Exports, Shipping Agency, they're all located here.

Q. You have got good contracts—one from Germany worth Rs 50 lakh?

A. Contracts don't mean profits. It doesn't mean I can buy an office.

Q. How did you acquire an intimate knowledge of the chemicals business?

A. I don't have an intimate knowledge of chemicals. I only know of the product Kamlesh deals with from this office, and through publications of Lijjat. The Lijjat concept was a new idea in marketing. And that's what I discussed with Davar. If I had intimate knowledge, I would have asked him how the hell he planned to make detergents with LAB.

Q. But you conducted the deal?

A. Yes. I gave him a quotation, and later Kamlesh confirmed the prices. I also accepted the draft. I was tying up the details for my Cologne trip when this guy pulls out the letter and asks me to acknowledge it. I put my initials. My fault is I failed to see that it was addressed to me as director of Saras Chemicals.

Q. Which means that Reliance accepts your signature?

A. I only initialled the letter. That's not my signature. In the letter to Reliance I signed for K.B. Shah. Davar came during lunch hour, there wasn't a soul around. I had to type the letter. He fixed a time with Kamlesh, but deliberately came an hour late, after Kamlesh left.

Q. But you called up Thyagarajan, a Reliance official.

A. I did as I've met him several times here. If I were involved, I would have known that Thyagarajan stopped handling LAB sales in December 1988. I got to know this after I called. I acknowledged receipt of the demand draft as it is as good as cash. It's not for me to verify the antecedents of Brilliance Chemicals (the name Davar gave). No company keeps a record of signatures, unless it's going to a bank. Davar asked me what was the minimum quantity he could buy, and I said three tonnes. It could have been one barrel. I did so to get my friend business. I have no financial interest in any of Kamlesh's companies, forget about Saras. My signing as director does not make me the owner of the company.

Q. How do you know the Ambanis?

A. I don't know any of the Ambanis. I have never met any of them personally. All I know is what I read in magazines.

Q. You haven't met them at parties?

A. I don't get invited to parties they go to. I have sometimes seen Dhirubhai as he's the only guy here who drives a Cadillac. As for Reliance officials, I have met them in this office. I can't keep my eyes and ears closed.

Q. Did you suspect Davar?

A. Well, his face looked familiar. If I'm not wrong, he also graduated in '78 and happens to be a class-mate of my friend. I couldn't recall his name, and

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

What an Apple Computer Education student feels like on graduation day.

Victorious, like Borg. Because he has successfully completed what is probably the toughest computer course in the country.

Euphoric. Because he has an international qualification from the National Computing Centre (NCC), U.K. And he knows that he can now command good breaks. And a good price.

And thankful. Because all this was possible thanks to the great teachers and teaching methods of Apple. Which made everything seem so easy.

And made him fall in love with computers.

Come, fall in love with computers.

Apple
COMPUTER EDUCATION
ACCREDITED TO THE NATIONAL COMPUTING CENTRE (NCC), ESTD. BY THE U.K. GOVT.

BANGALORE: Vimal Chambers, 3rd Floor, M.G. Road, Next to Plaza Cinema.Tel: 561069/568161.BARODA:Suraj Plaza No.2, 8th Floor, Sayajigunj. Tel: 329828/328235.BOMBAY: Fort: 11/13, Botawalla Bldg., 1st Floor, Opp.Horniman Circle & Town Hall.Tel:2861158/298398/256563.Santacruz (W) : 'Solitaire', 2nd Floor, S.V. Road, Diagonally Opp. Asha Parekh Hospital, Above Bank of India. Tel: 6493466.Malad (W) : M.K.E.S.– Apple Computer Centre, Nagindas Khandwala College,N.L. High School Compound, Bhadran Nagar, S.V. Road. Tel: 6885828. NEW DELHI: N-13, South Extension, Part 1, Above Zariwala Emporium,Main Ring Road. Tel: 616138/616139.HYDERABAD: Saroja, Fateh Maidan, Next to Shakar Bhavan, Opp. Indoor Stadium. Tel: 235035.MADRAS : Apple House, 64, Cathedral Road, Opp. Maris Hotel, Near Chola Sheraton Hotel. Tel: 476446/866518.PUNE :Anant Chambers, Junglee Maharaj Road, Opp. Modern High School, Shivaji Nagar. Tel:51808.

CHAITRA-B A 175 C R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

didn't ask since he hadn't come on a social visit. As for being recorded, I don't remember him coming with a bag. But on both occasions he was wearing a jacket. He should have straight-away asked me. I have nothing to hide. I don't deny that I signed for Kamlesh. I maintain that till I am working here I will continue to help Kamlesh. I don't care what people say.

Q. You've embarrassed your father.

A. The very fact that I'm sitting here is because I know the Shahs won't approach my father for a favour.

Q. The Opposition is demanding his resignation.

A. The Opposition has been after him ever since V.P. Singh was thrown out of the Cabinet. Does it mean I shouldn't do any business? V.P. Singh says he doesn't ask his son about his business. So why should my father be asked?

Q. But your father may not get his third extension now.

A. There are many rumours. From the beginning my dad has been saying that he isn't interested in extensions. The Express has been writing against him since 1987. Extensions are not based on press reports. The Government has its system of verifying facts. By accepting his report, the Government has shown its confidence in him.

Q. What was your father's reaction to the expose?

A. I spoke to him from Cologne. Initially he was perturbed, but I couldn't comment as I hadn't read the articles. Any father would have reacted similarly. Later he realised it was a damn trap. He advised me not to sign any more letters. But then Kamlesh has signed as director for me; he also attends meetings with my buyers.

Umesh with Shah: fending charges

I have no financial interests in any of Kamlesh's companies. My signing as director does not make me the owner of Saras.

I am paying Kamlesh a monthly lease of Rs 11,000 for the use of the car. In my trade I need the Mercedes.

Q. How could you afford to buy a Mercedes Benz?

A. I don't own the Mercedes. I have a Maruti which I purchased in 1987. The Mercedes I have been using was bought from STC. Kamlesh and I both filled in tenders, and his was higher. I'm paying Kamlesh a monthly lease of Rs 11,000 for the car. In the fashion trade, I need to use the Mercedes.

Q. How much money do you earn from Spice Island?

A. I started only in March. It's too premature to talk of profits. Don't ask for figures. I have two contracts from Germany, one from UK and I am negotiating one in Cologne.

Q. It is alleged that the CBI director protects the Ambanis.

A. The best person to ask this question is my father. This matter is sub judice.

Q. It is believed that your house has been furnished by the Ambanis.

A. Totally untrue. I did ask my father-in-law, who was working for Aramco in Saudi Arabia, to bring me a few items. I have re-paid him over the years. My furniture was brought from Mafatlal Mysore Plywood at a discount because I was an employee.

Q. Are you planning action against Davar?

A. I have written to him, saying he did not verify facts either with me directly or with my father. He's still to get back to us for the demand draft. His money is with Kamlesh. We are putting together the data and will take suitable action.

Umesh with wife: flashy life-style

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT BY GOVERNMENT OF TAMILNADU ON GRANITE MINING LEASES

1. The liberalised policy initiated during the President's Rule in 1988 in respect of granite Mining Leases will be continued, to promote further development of granite-based industry in this State.
2. Grant of quarry leases in poromboke lands will be restricted to existing cutting and polishing units and to those applicants who give a definite and time-bound programme of putting up cutting and polishing units within a period of two years.
3. Letters of Commitment will be issued to the successful tenderers having an Industrial programme either with Letters of Indent issued by the Government of India or Small Scale Industries Registration Certificates issued by the Directorate of Industries. Mining leases will be issued in the name of such units only after the technical officers nominated by the Government inspect and certify the units set up and the machinery erected.
4. In pursuance of the policy of the Government on value addition for the quarried granite besides creating more employment opportunities, permission for quarrying has to be obtained from the Government in respect of "Patta" lands also subject to the conditions laid down by the Government.
5. Granite quarries will henceforth be leased to granite cutting and polishing industries on the basis of sealed tenders where there are more than one application. Where there is only one application, the case will be processed through a committee constituted by the Government.
6. Unit holders/individuals with a definite granite industrial programme will be permitted to take on lease only such extents as are required for full production as per their industrial license.
7. The tender will be only for the right to exploit the reserves in the specified granite quarries. The tender amount will be collected in one lump-sum on the date of opening of the tender. In addition, seigniorage, Local Cess and Local Cess Surcharge will be payable at rates fixed from time to time, on each cubic metre of granite quarried.
8. A tender once confirmed, the Mining Lease will be for a period of 10 years and can be renewed for a further period of ten years only without further tenders, on payment of an amount equal to 150% of the bid amount at the initial tender before the end of the tenth year. The continuance of the mining lease and its renewal will be subject to the unit continuing the granite processing industry as such mining lease grantees will not have the right to export rough blocks of granite.
9. The lessees will be insisted upon to do scientific mining as advised by the officers of the State Department of Geology and Mining for conserving this valuable mineral.
10. The tender for Mining Leases of granite mentioned above will apply only to the areas other than those reserved for TAMIN, a Government of Tamil Nadu undertaking.
11. No decision in respect of areas and cases which are covered under Court Stay will be taken at present.

Issued by Department of Information and Public Relations, Government of Tamil Nadu.

DIPR/MS/89/1620/TAMIN/MCS/346

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

■ Crowds at the temple: Shiva's army

DEOGHAR TEMPLE

The Long March

Lakhs undertake the arduous pilgrimage

FROM afar, it resembles a sea of saffron stretching into the horizon. Up close, it is transformed into a mass of surging humanity, borne aloft on a tidal wave of faith and fervour. They are Shiva's army—men, women, and children, the old and the infirm, the rich and the poor, marching together in an awesome display of religious obeisance.

Each year, in the month of Shravana (July-August), thousands of Shiva worshippers gather together for a long and punishing 102-km trek to Deoghar in Bihar. They come from all over the country—and from neighbouring nations like Nepal and Bhutan—in a collective act of faith that is as remarkable for its intensity as for the back-breaking nature of the pilgrimage. Says Narinder Pal Singh, joint secretary in the Union Ministry of Industries, who was among this year's pilgrims: "This trek is a great leveller".

Plump and prosperous housewives jostle with government officials, politicians rub elbows with paupers and ancient crones hobbling along on canes obstruct little children as they converge at Sultanganj in Bhagalpur district, all dressed in saffron robes.

This is where the holy Ganges takes an abrupt turn towards the north and where the actual pilgrimage begins. A dip in the Ganges is followed by prayers and collection of water from the river in small pitchers. Then begins the arduous trek to Deoghar, where the presiding deity is Shiva, the Hindu god of both destruction and fertility.

Barring a few hours in the night, the stream of saffron never stops moving during the entire month. Officials estimate that this year, an average of 1 lakh pilgrims reached Deoghar every day, many having walked the distance without a single stop.

The distance is daunting enough. But the conditions are even more so. Braving the heat and humidity, pilgrims walk barefoot over rocky hills and through jungles, often wading through rivers and streams swollen with monsoon rains. On their shoulders, each one carries a few litres of water slung from a staff which is adorned with bells and joss sticks. Toilets are non-existent and accommodation inadequate. Most pilgrims rest by the roadside or under canvas shelters provided by the Government. Walking over 30 km a day, the entire distance is usually covered by the pilgrims in around three days. Women and the elderly take longer, while the more energetic attempt to traverse the route virtually non-stop.

The non-stop walkers are called 'Dak Kanwarias'. Policemen log their time of departure and hand over a slip of paper which is produced before the magistrate once they reach the Deoghar temple. There, the time of arrival is logged again and the exhausted devotees given priority in entering the temple.

Hem Chandra Jha, the temple magistrate, says that 15,000 devotees attempted to cover the distance non-stop this year. Less than 4,000 succeeded in doing so. "Those who walk non-stop usually collapse on arrival and have to be revived. For hours they are barely able to stand, let alone walk," says Jha. Even so, the feat, fuelled as it is by fervour, is an incredible one.

As Dr A.K. Pandey, the deputy commissioner at Deoghar, says: "Take the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

■ Saffron-clad pilgrims: absolute devotion

■ Women undertaking the trek: tough journey

■ Pilgrims resting en route: poor facilities veneer of religion off and you can see this as a great sporting event that deserves a place in the Guiness Book of Records." Concurs N.P. Singh, who along with wife Krishna, also an IAS officer, took part in this year's pilgrimage: "Those who hunt for athletic talent in this country should come here and see the amazing feat of these people."

KRISHNA Kumari, in her late twenties and working as a teacher in Muzaffarpur, has already become a part of Deoghar's folklore. She walks from Sultanganj to Deoghar once every week during the month. Each time she walks non-stop and covers the 102 km in around 13 hours. Last year, the district administration at Deoghar took the extraordinary step of honouring her at a public function.

Equally remarkable is eight-year-old Pankaj Kumar, who walked the distance this year in just 16 hours. Pankaj was separated from his parents and tagged along with a group of 'Dak Kanwarias'. His distraught parents reached the Deoghar temple three days later to find him already there.

The motivation, however, is not athletic acclaim but religious fervour. The devotees have absolute faith that Shiva will grant their wishes. Ambika Ram from Aurangabad, was participating for the fourth time. Says he: "The first year I came because I had no job and I prayed for one. The lord heard my prayer and I got a job within a few months." Kameshwar Razak, a washerman, believes that the pilgrimage cured his asthma, just as Ganesh Sah says he escaped unhurt from a bus accident in which many died, simply because he had undertaken the walk.

Many barren couples undertake the punishing journey in the hope of getting a child. If they do indeed have a child, the toddler is taken along on the trek to invoke Shiva's blessings.

Like other temple towns, Deoghar is completely sustained by the pilgrims. Publishers churn out books on the temple and cassettes of bhajans sell like hot cakes. The various stalls in the town have an estimated turnover of around Rs 6 crore during this one month alone while incense and joss sticks worth around a crore of rupees are burnt over the same period.

That, ultimately is what mars such religious gatherings. The sight of such faith and devotion is awe-inspiring. But each year, it gets more and more diluted by the growing commercialisation. At the end of the long march, Shiva's people are greeted with the bhajans—adapted from Hindi pop songs.

—UTTAM SENGUPTA in Deoghar.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Product of Arihant Fabrics Ltd.

Who gives a damn!
Flamboyant.
Daring.
Defying the rules.
And the fabric —
Oswal Premium.
OSWAL®
PREMIUM
SUITINGS
For the rebel in you!

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

With Apcolite, you can paint your home blue. Or blue. Or blue. Or blue. Or blue. Or blue.

Apcolite offers more shades in every colour than any other paint. Over 150 ready-to-paint shades.

26 shades in blue alone. Surf Blue, Pigeon Blue, Manor Blue, Blue Bell, Blue Chip, Sapphire, Starry Night, Holiday Sky, Sky Way, Porcelain Cloud ... and 15 more.

The myriad hues don't stop with the blues. Ask for the unique Apcolite Shade Card. And choose the right shade to suit the decor in each of the rooms. You'll have a lot to choose from.

And all the shades are ready-to-paint. So, there's no need to mix 'n' match colours. The shade in your mind will be the shade on your walls. Anytime you want, too. The shades are readily available.

Go for Apcolite – the only 100% pure acrylic emulsion.

Over 150 shades
readily available at asian paints
COLOUR CORNER Shops.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DOORDARSHAN

Patriotic Plugs

New serials whip up nationalistic fervour

PATRIOTISM is now the zing thing. The pride-in-the-country feeling being whipped up on Doordarshan by a deluge of patriotic ads is being more than matched by TV serials extolling the virtues of India's past and present. Inevitably, the drum-beating is being viewed in the context of the coming elections.

It's all very subtle. Once the idea of "the joyous feeling" (as admen call it) about India is sold, you are that much closer to finding an image to peg that feeling on—be it the Congress(I) or its leaders who're shown as the real inheritors of the freedom struggle's legacy.

"They are playing the epic quality of the freedom struggle to the hilt," says TV producer, Ramesh Sharma. "And the country now equals the Congress."

The political message is subtly subliminal. The ruling party's efforts to wrap itself round the tricolour conveniently allows for the fact that its flag is a clone of the national flag. And the refrain in the Mera Bharat Mahan shots, "Zara haath tum badhao" (Give a hand), can be seen to allude to the Congress(I) symbol.

Says an angry TV producer: "The presumption is that those who don't support the Congress(I) are not patriotic." Adds Sashi Kumar, executive producer of PTI Television: "The worst thing you can do is to advertise citizenship."

But the creators of these films do not see them as propaganda. "We only seek to create a joyous feeling which can momentarily make you feel good about your country," says Suresh Mulick, creative director of OBM who conceived the moving Mile sur mera tumhara and Freedom torch films. For Syeda Imam of Contract, creating the Mera Bharat Mahan series was an effort to "do something about the penumbra of bleakness in the country".

Apart from programmes like India Emerges, which has India-born foreign experts praise the country's endeavours, there are countless films being made on India's great leap forward.

The selling of Bharat is on a war footing with the result that budgets for programming are going haywire. Says a disappointed producer: "My project was not cleared because allocations for tele-films have been shifted to communication plan films—a euphemism for poll propaganda—for Jawahar Rozgar and Panchayti Raj, Nehru and all the agro-pop films." Mandarins of the I&B Ministry have a ready explanation: "We are going through difficult times. Even the army says that morale is low due to the loss of soldiers in Sri Lanka and Siachen."

Behind the blitz of patriotic short films on television is a subliminal political message aimed at helping the ruling party.

The propaganda machine, say some, is now really getting into top gear. Till recently there were two weekly slots for current affairs: Focus and Aaj Kal. Now, current affairs are a staple Doordarshan diet garnished with films extolling communciations, technology missions and industrial progress. The blitzkrieg aimed at the opposition-sponsored bandh is final confirmation that television is now part of the electoral armoury.

But the overall disguise is still patriotism. Bharat has literally hijacked Doordarshan. On Sunday for instance Mera Bharat follows Mahabharat. Then comes Bharat Ek Khoj. There was also Bharat ki Chap. And not long back the Prime Minister's Office ordered that the Mera Bharat Mahan film with the rocket taking off and the remark of the young man feeling good as Time magazine considers India a superpower, should be telecast before Mahabharat.

Patriotism is also going pop. Soon viewers will be able to boogie to songs extolling kin and country. Doordarshan plans to telecast a weekly 40-minute programme on Indian pop music produced by Remo Fernandez, Usha Uthup, Sharon Prabhakar, Gurdas Singh Mann and Louis Banks. The theme songs will be national integration, communal harmony and being and buying Indian.

How have people reacted to Doordarshan's patriotic binge? Interestingly, while the older generation sees it as an election gimmick, the average youth seems to react positively. Says Urvashi Narayan, 20, from Delhi School of Economics: "These ads are reassuring. We need such things."

The question still remains: will an overdose of jingoism on the tube help sell the Government in power or will it backfire? But for the present, the medium has got the message. —MADHU JAIN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Only Hawkins offers free service from 311 service centres all over India.

And a cookbook in the language of your choice. At no extra cost*

For the best quality product, the best quality service. At authorised Hawkins service centres. Genuine spare parts. Factory trained mechanics. Prompt and polite. Parts under guarantee, free. No charge for labour. Ever.

Hawkins cookbooks. Four cuisines, thirteen languages. Recipes tested by the Hawkins Test Kitchen. Superb taste, great variety.

*You can exchange your Hawkins cookbook for another, in the language and cuisine of your choice at a Hawkins service centre. Free.

Hurry – cookbook exchange offer open up to October 31, 1989.

To encourage excellence in consumer service, Hawkins runs service centre contests from time to time. The winners of the 1988 contest are listed in the box alongside. However, all Hawkins service centres strive for excellence and stand ready to serve you in every way.

Quality India Trusts

Hawkins®

Over 1 crore pressure cookers sold

® REGISTERED TRADE MARK 1989 COPYRIGHT RESERVED
BY HAWKINS COOKERS LIMITED, F-101, MAKER TOWERS, BOMBAY 400 005.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Authorised Hawkins Service Centres

Highlighted by Arya Samaj Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Chowk, Lucknow

Prize Winning Service Centres

ASSAM

BISWANATH CHARALI: Uday Shankar Stores
☐ SILCHER: Hospital Road, Ravi Prakash Anand & Co.

BIHAR

PATNA: Muradpur, M/s Steel Corner, Opp. Bankipur Post Office.

KERALA

ALWAYE: Catholic Centre, Wireless Metro

MAHARASHTRA

BOMBAY: Dadar, Dhiraj Sales Corporation, 33, Padhye Wadi, Bhavani Shankar Road • Jacob Circle, Ramanlal Jayantilal & Co. Opp. Church • Malad, Bharat Appliances, 19C, Natraj Market, S.V. Road • Thane, Gokhale Road, Mahavir, Hem Shopping Centre, Naupada

ORISSA

CUTTACK: Mahatab Road, Indian Industries, Near Sangam Cinema

PUNJAB

AMRITSAR: Hall Bazar, M/s Harbans Crockery Store • Pratap Bazar, M/s Puri Battery Store

RAJASTHAN

BHARATPUR: Neem Da gate, Kishori Shyam Brijesh Kumar

TAMIL NADU

MADRAS: Nyniyappa Naicken St., S. Santosha Nadar Sons, No. 88 ☐ MADURAI: Kamarajar Salai, S. Chelliah Nadar & Sons, No. 267

UTTAR PRADESH

KANPUR: Harsh Nagar, M/s M K Agencies, 111/2, 1st floor, Opp. Bank of India

WEST BENGAL

CALCUTTA: Chandni Chowk St., Crockery Centre, 4/B, Chandni Chowk St. ☐ DURGAPUR: Benachity, Jyoti
KHARAGPUR: Gol Bazar, Hindustan Stores, Railway Market
☐ RANAGHAT: Bhangrapara, Chakrabarty Distributors, Kalimoy Ghatak Lane

DELHI

DELHI: Chandani Chowk, Bhagwan Dass Jagannath, 633, Opp. Kucha Narwan • Connaught Place, M/s Jankidas & Company, 23/F, Connaught Place • Gandhi Nagar, M/s Des Raj Ram Prakash, 513/26, Main Road • Kamala Nagar, M/s Crockery Emporium, Shop No. 11-F • Karol Bagh, M/s Vishal Bartan Bhandar, 2568, Ajmal Khan Road • Lajpat Nagar, M/s National Bartan Bhandar, 34, Central Market • Sarojini Nagar, M/s Vandana, 93, Sarojini Nagar Market • Shahdara, M/s Agarwal Bartan Store, 1/6966, Shivaji Park • Tota Ram Bazar, M/s Jain Electronics, 1532, Tri Nagar

ANDHRA PRADESH

GUNTUR: Main Road, Mattupalli Sambamurthy, Arundelpet ☐ HYDERABAD: 4, 5, 118/119, Sultan Bazar, Baliram Khiyaram ☐ JAGTIAL: Ram Bazar, Padmaja Enterprises ☐ KAKINADA: 13.1.62, Suryaraopet, Gupta Emporium ☐ KURNOOL: 40-20 Park Road, Andhra Kitchenwares ☐ NELLORE: China Bazar, Kumar Agency ☐ NIZAMABAD: Municipal Complex, Varsha Enterprises ☐ VIJAYAWADA: Governor Pet, Jyoti Metals, Prakasam Road ☐ VISHAKAPATNAM: Main Road, Bombay Gas Light House

ASSAM

BARPETA: B.B. Road, Dipali Stores ☐ BONGAIGAON: Main Road, Ravi Prakash Anand & Co. ☐ DHUBRI: D.D. Road, G.C. Roy & Sons ☐ DIBRUGARH: H.S. Road, Verma Crockery Stores ☐ DIGBOI: I.O.C. Market, Nath Brothers ☐ GOAL PARA: Chawk Bazar, Bijoy Stores ☐ GOLAGHAT: Kalpana Enterprises ☐ GUWAHATI: Paltan Bazar, Ravi Prakash Anand & Co ☐ JORHAT: Gurdi, Roy & Co ☐ KARIMGANJ: Station Road, Stationery Stores ☐ LUMDING: Kalibari Road, S. Dutta & Sons ☐ NALBARI: N.T. Road, Maruti Electronics ☐ NORTH LAKHIMPUR: N.T. Road, Dutta Brothers NOWGONG: Marwari Patty, S.P. Banerjee & Sons, A.T. Road ☐ SIBSAGAR: Temple Road, Chimanlal Agarwalla ☐ TEZPUR: Main Road, Sajawat ☐ TINSUKIA: G.N. Bardolai Road, Ravi Prakash Anand & Co

BIHAR

BEGUSARAI: Main Road, M/s Deo Brothers ☐ BETTIAH: Lal Bazar, M/s Sagar ☐ BHAGALPUR: D.N. Singh Road, M./s Mela Stores ☐ CHAS: Bye Pass Road, M/s Femina ☐ DEHRI-ON-SONE: Cinema Road, M/s Glassina ☐ DEOGARH: Shyamganj Road, M/s Baidyanath Electric Stores ☐ FORBESGANJ: S.K. Road, M/s Dalmia Distributors ☐ GAYA: G.B. Road, Pappu Trading Company, Gole Pathar ☐ GIRIDIH: Chowk Bazar, M/s Shankar Traders ☐ KATIHAR: Mangal Bazar, Bhowmick Stores ☐ LAHERIASARAI: Baker Ganj, Dayal Crockery House ☐ MOTIHARI: Main Road, Steel House ☐ MUNGER: Town Hall Road, M/s Jalan Traders ☐ MUZAFFARPUR: Moti Jhil, M/s New Stainless Emporium • Saryaganj, Bharat Glass Co ☐ PATNA: Boring Road, M/s H.C. Enterprises, Nepali Kothi • New Market, M/s Crockenico ☐ PURNEA: Bhatta Bazar, M/s Lakhanlal & Co. ☐ RANCHI: Main Road, M/s Udayan ☐ RAXAUL: Bank Road, M/s Pawan Stores ☐ SAMASTIPUR: Magardahi Road, M/s Raja Steel ☐ SASARAM: Nawratan Bazar, M/s Ashoka Stores ☐ SIWAN: Darbar Cinema Compound, M/s Saran Electric Works

GOA

MADGAON: Behind Municipality, T.D. Parodkar & Co, P.O. Box No. 65 ☐ PONDA: Shanta Electric Stores ☐ VASCO DA GAMA: Daurado Bldg, Barkat Ali Traders

GUJARAT

AHMEDABAD: Three Gates, Bombay Novelty Stores, 1839/1, Near Three Gates ☐ RAJKOT: Sangamwar Chowk, Apsara Agencies ☐ SURAT: Bundelwad Bhagal, Shah Thakordas Jivanram, Kururaj ☐ VADODARA: Kansara Bazar, Popatlal Krishanlal Kansara, Mahatma Gandhi Road

HARYANA

AMBALA CANTONMENT: Sodagar Bazar, M/s Jagat Singh & Sons AMBALA CITY: Jain Bazar, M/s Janta Crockery & Gen Stores ☐ JAGADHARI: Railway Road, M/s O.P. Metal Industries

HIMACHAL PRADESH

KULU: Akhara Bazar, M/s Vigsons (General Stores) ☐ MANDI: Gandhi Chowk, M/s Roop Chand Dalip Chand ☐ NAGROTA BHAGWAN: Nichal Bazar, M/s Dharam Paul & Sons ☐ SHIMLA: 3, The Mall, M/s Jankidas & Company ☐ SOLAN: Upper Bazar, M/s Sahni Brothers Departmental Stores

JAMMU & KASHMIR

SRINAGAR: Tenkey Pura, M/s Ahuja Agencies, Opp. D.C. Courts ☐ JAMMU: Raghunath Bazar, M/s Ladhumal Des Raj Jain, New Market

KARNATAKA

BANGALORE: 11, Brigade Road, Pots And Pans, Curzon Complex, • Chickpet, Raja Trading Co., Shop No. 80 D • Jayanagar, Sarathy Metal Mart, 16, 19th Main 3rd Block • Richard Square Adams & Co, Shop No. 19 ☐ BELGAUM: Maruti Galli, Revankar Agencies, Ramprasad Building ☐ CHIKMANGALUR: Ratnagiri Road, Multi Agencies, P.B. No. 8 ☐ HASSAN: Subhash Square, Novelty House ☐ MANGALORE: K.S. Rao Road, Super Suppliers, Gokul Market ☐ MYSORE: Ashoka Road, Sudha Metal Stores ☐ SHIMOGA: Nehru Road, Sadhana Trading Co ☐ UDIPI: Opp. City Bus Stand, Ganesh Traders

KERALA

CALICUT: Muthalakulam, Bright Metals ☐ CANNANORE: Camp Bazar, Stainless Steel Centre ☐ CHALAKUDY: Pellicherry Bldg., Sinni Vessels ☐ ERNAKULAM: Broadway, Anthony Francis & Son ☐ KOTTAYAM: K.K. Road, Kems Agencies, M.D. Commerce Centre ☐ MUVATTUPUZHA: New Bazaar, Mini Stores ☐ PALGHAT: G.B. Road, Steel Palace, 13/108 ☐ PARAKKAL: 567/B1, Main Road, Karma Enterprises ☐ PATHANAMTHITTA: Private Bus Stand, Lekha Traders ☐ TELLICHERRY: Logans Road, Sreenivas Electronic Co ☐ THODUPUZHA: Market Road, J and P Metals ☐ TIRUR: Overbridge Road, Sagar Agencies, XX/544 ☐ TRICHUR: Round South, Kerala Leather Co. ☐ TRIPUNITHURA: East Fort Gate, Maria Steel House ☐ TRIVANDRUM: Chalai Bazaar, S. Ibrahim & Co, Ibrahim Buildings

MADHYA PRADESH

BALAGHAT: Main Road, M/s Metal House ☐ BETUL: Kothi Bazar, M/s Goodwill Stores ☐ BHOPAL: Hamidia Road, M/s Radio Palace ☐ BILASPUR: Sadar Bazar, M/s Vijay Stores ☐ CHHATARPUR: Mahal Road, M/s Agrasen Emporium ☐ CHHINDWARA: Station Road, M/s Mayur, Char Phatak ☐ GWALIOR: Sarafa Bazar, M/s Dhomraj Hazarilal Kosera • Topi Bazar, M/s Pahooram Pesuram Lokwani ☐ INDORE: Pipli Bazar Chauraha, M/s Cooker House, 370, Jawahar Marg ☐ JABALPUR: 18, Ashirwad Market, M/s Ashirwad Steel Emporium • 31, Naya Bazar, M/s Peekay Traders ☐ KHANDWA: 462, Bombay Bazar, M/s Khandwa Plastic Centre, M.G. Road ☐ KORBA: Main Road, M/s Shri Ramgopal Radheyshyam Agarwal ☐ MANDSAUR: Station Road, Janata Radios ☐ MANENDRAGARH: Main Road, M/s Supreme Electricals ☐ NARSINGHPUR: Kandeli, M/s Navin Bartan Bhandar, Gandhi Chowk ☐ REWA: Prakash Chowk, M/s Prakash Agencies ☐ SEONI: Budhwari Bazar, M/s Vishal Steel Centre ☐ SHAHDOL: Main Road, M/s Ashok Traders ☐ SHAJAPUR: 106, New Road, M/s A.G. Takatwala ☐ UJJAIN: Patni Bazar, M/s Mahalaxmi Patra Bhandar, 125, Jawahar Marg

MANIPUR

IMPHAL: 9, Paona Bazar, Pasa Enterprises

MAHARASHTRA

AHMEDNAGAR: 2554, New Cloth Market, Kashinath Trimbak Rasane, M.G. Road ☐ AMRAVATI: S.K. Market, Monica Novelty ☐ AURANGABAD: Supari Hanuman Road, Krishna Corporation ☐ BOMBAY: Andheri, Hemco Steel Centre, Arasa Shopping Centre, 212 S.V. Road • Borivli, Oswal Steel Centre, 18 Goyal Shopping Centre, Lokmanya Tilak Road • Chembur, Natraj Emporium, Natraj Cinema Bldg., Station Road • Fort, Apna Bazar, Noble Chambers, Ghoga Street • Ghatkopar, Deepak Traders, 24, Laxmi Nivas, M.G. Road • Grant Road, Variety General Stores, 295/97 Lamington Road • Lohar Chawl, Asiatic Electric Trading Co., 46-48 Jay Mahal Bldg. • Mahim, Hawkins Cookers Ltd., Udyog Mandir No, 2, 7 C Pitamber Lane • Mulund, Sha Mishrimal M. Kakriya, 2, Ramkripa ☐ CHANDRAPUR: Opp. Netaji Nagar, Gruh Srinagar ☐ DHULIA: Agra Road, Silver Shop ☐ DOMBIVLI: Opp. Nagar Palika, Pankaj Steel And Novelty, Patkar Building ☐ GONDIA: Bazar Chowk, Laxminarayan Bartan Bhandar ☐ ICHALKARANJI: 10/152, Near Venkatrao High Shool, Heramb Trade Group ☐ JALGAON: 21, Fule Market, Varieties ☐ KALYAN: Opp. Chaya Cinema, Ashok Bhandi Bhandar, Murbad Road ☐ KOLHAPUR: Shivaji Road, Shetkari Sahakari Sangh Ltd., Shop No. 1 ☐ MALEGAON: Gyaneshwar Bldg., N. Joshi Pvt. Ltd., Camp Road ☐ NAGPUR: Near Variety Square, M.S. Pande And Sons, Sitabuldi ☐ NASIK: Shalimar Building, Vijay Trading Co., Shivaji Road ☐ PANDHARPUR: Pachimdwar, Ganjewar Traders, 2894, Pushpanjali ☐ PUNE: 635, Raviwar Peth, Jain Metal Corporation • 894, Raviwar Peth, Rajendra And Co., Daruwala Bridge ☐ RATNAGIRI: Near Vithal Mandir, Prakash Vastu Bhandar, Main Road ☐ SANGLI: Main Road, Shree Ameya Steel Centre, Karmarkar Building ☐ SATARA CITY: Moti Chowk, Grahraj Stainless Steel Centre ☐ SHOLAPUR: Navi Peth, Sholapur Stainless Steel House, Shop No. 4, Paras Estate ☐ THANE: Wagle Estate, Hawkins Cookers Ltd., C-21-22, U Road ☐ VASHI NEW BOMBAY: Apna Bazar, Sector 17

MEGHALAYA

SHILLONG: Dhan Kheti, V.K. Ghai & Co., Bawri Mansion

MIZORAM

AIZAWAL: Bara Bazar, B.C. Dey & Sons • Bara Bazar, Eastern Trading Agencies

NAGALAND

MOKOKCHUNG: A.M. ROAD, Hills Enterprises, Nagaland

ORISSA

ANGUL: Medical Road, Agarwalla Enterprisers, Sanjibani Market ☐ ASKA: Near Bus Stand, Asoka Enterprises, Main Road ☐ BALASORE: Cinema Bazar, Fairdeal Corporation ☐ BARGARH: Main Road, Roop Sringar Agencies ☐ BARIPADA: Sebasangha Hall, Aero Voice ☐ BERHAMPUR: One Way Traffic Road, J K Enterprisers • Bhapur Bazar, Silla Gopalam & Sons ☐ BHADRAK: Naya Bazar, Neel Chakra ☐ BHANJANAGAR: Main Road, Gopal Agency ☐ BHAWANIPATNA: Main Road, Maheswari General Store ☐ BHUBANESWAR: Bapuji Nagar, Premier Enterprisers, Choudhury Market ☐ BURLA: Main Road, Burla Electricals ☐ CUTTACK: Tinkonia Bagicha, Shankar General Stores ☐ DHENKANAL: Kanchan Bazar, Beauty House ☐ JAJPUR ROAD: Station Road, Sarala Glass House ☐ JATNI: Railway Market, Popular Store ☐ JEYPORE: M.G. Road, Viswanath Steel Centre ☐ JHARSUGUDA: Main Road, Jharsuguda Metal Stores ☐ KEONJHAR: New Market, Asha Ladies Corner ☐ RAJGANGPUR: Main Road, Pradeep Stores ☐ ROURKELA: Sector-5 Market, Selection Centre ☐ SAMBALPUR: Gole Bazar, Bharat Steel Centre ☐ TALCHER: Hata Tota, Usha Agencies

PUNJAB

BHATINDA: Dhobi Bazar, M/s Bombay Steel & Crockery House, Dr, Radha Krishan Marg ☐ GURDASPUR: Hanuman Chowk, M/s Kidarnath & Sons ☐ HOSHIARPUR: Phagwara Road, M/s Hawkins Cookers Ltd ☐ JALANDHAR: Bazar Sheikhan, M/s Romesh Chander Mitter Paul • G.T. Road, M/s J. Om Prakash & Sons, Opp., Civil Hospital ☐ LUDHIANA: Chaura Bazar, M/s Jainsons ☐ PATIALA: Arya Samaj Road, M/s Malhotra Stores ☐ PHAGWARA: Loha Mandi Road, M/s A.K. Traders

CHANDIGARH

CHANDIGARH: Jagat Singh & Sons, SCO 32, Sector 17-E

RAJASTHAN

AJMER: Kesar Ganj, Goyal Brothers, Station Road ☐ BANSWARA: Azad Chowk, M/s Kansara Shambhulal Manaklal, Sadar Bazar ☐ BHILWARA: 43, Balaji Market, Talesara Electric Store ☐ CHITTORGARH: Meena Nagar, M/s Aap Ki Dookan, Collectory Chauraha ☐ JAIPUR: Nehru Bazar, Ashoka (Departmental Store), Near Mayur Cinema • 372/1, Raja Park, Long Life Departmental Store • Tripolia Bazar, M/s Mahaveer General Store, Shop No. 215 ☐ JODHPUR: Station Road, Saluja Agencies ☐ KOTA: Rampura Bazar, M/s Bafumal & Co., P.B. No. 202 ☐ SIKAR: Variety Stores ☐ UDAIPUR: Near Zeenipat Chowk, M/s Narendra Trading Co., 132, Bhamashah Marg

TAMIL NADU

COIMBATORE: R.S. Puram, Ideal Gift House, No. 8, East Bashyagarulu Road ☐ DINDIGUL: Big Bazaar St., S.M.B. Manickam Nadar, No. 162-163 ☐ ERODE: Madhava Krishna St., Universal Traders, No. 32 ☐ MADRAS: T. Nagar, Sabhari Distributors, No. 17, Ramnathan St. ☐ MADURAI: Amman Sannathi, S.S. Kandasamy Pandian & Sons, No. 3 ☐ SALEM: Vasavi Mahal Building, Lavanya Metal Mart, No. 36, I Agraharam ☐ TRICHY: N.S.B. Road, Sri Manicka Vinayagar Metal Mart, No. 42-A ☐ TUTICORIN: W.G.C. Road, A.G. Durai Agencies, No. 372 ☐ VELLORE: Main Bazaar, Anand Agencies, No. 478 ☐ PONDICHERRY: Jawaharlal Nehru St., Kandan & Company, No. 22

TRIPURA

AGARTALA: Mantribari Road, TECHNO Corporation

UTTAR PRADESH

AGRA: Johri Bazar, Dada Glass & Crockeries ☐ ALIGARH: Mahavirganj, M/s Leela Dhar Babu Lal Kasera ☐ ALLAHABAD: Jain Bhavan Chowk, M/s Gur Prasad Hira Lal • Near Power House, M/s Novelty House, 6-C, Kamla Nehru Road ☐ ANPARA: Apara Bazar, M/s Moti Radio Centre, Mirzapur Dist. ☐ AZAMGARH: Chowk, M/s Jalan Electricals, Azamgarh ☐ BAHRAICH: Chowk, M/s Shyam Lal & Sons, Bahraich ☐ BALIA: Station Malgodown Road, M/s Vijay Gun House, Balia ☐ BAREILLY: Opp. Mission Hospital, M/s Duggals, Civil Lines ☐ DEHRADUN: Paltan Bazar, M/s Sushil & Co., 95 ☐ DEORIA: Motilal Road, M/s Om Stores, Deoria ☐ GONDA: Utraula Road, M/s Paras Steel Emporium, Gonda ☐ GORAKHPUR: Townhall Market, M/s Vijay Agencies, 16-17 ☐ HALDWANI: Bareilly Road, M/s Sardar Crockery House, Haldwani ☐ HAPUR: Railway Road, M/s Crockery Centre, Gandhi Bhavan ☐ JAUNPUR: Court Road, M/s Anand Stores, Jaunpur ☐ JHANSI CITY: Jawahar Chowk, M/s Saran Brothers, Manik Chowk ☐ KANPUR: Amar Market, Gumti No. 5, M/s ISH Electricals, 118/2, Kaushal Puri, opp. Jaihind Cinema • Birhana Road, M/s Supreme Radio & Electric Corpn., Kanpur • Govind Nagar, M/s Universal Sales Corporation, 2/6, Vidyarthi Market ☐ LAKHIMPUR KHERI: Main Bazar, Alok Agencies, Champa Bhawan ☐ LUCKNOW: Aminabad, M/s Ram Saran & Co., Lucknow • Nazirabad, M/s Kanhaiya Lal Prag Das, 7 ☐ MEERUT CANTT: Sadar Bazar, M/s Krishna Crockery House, Meerut Cantt. ☐ MIRZAPUR: Sardar Bhagat Singh Road, M/s Krishna Electrical Agency, Weselley Gunj ☐ MORADABAD: Opp. Kotwali, M/s Crockery Emporium ☐ MUGHALSARAI: M/s Krishna Bandhu, G.T. Road ☐ MUZAFFARNAGAR: Kutchery Road, Goel Agencies ☐ NAUTANWA: P.O. & Rly Station, M/s Laxmi Bisata Bhandar ☐ RISHIKESH: Chetra Road, M/s Moti Ram Rama Kant ☐ ROORKEE: Civil Lines, M/s Moradabad House ☐ SAHARANPUR: Nehru Market, M/s Nihal Chand Harbans Lal, 14 ☐ SULTANPUR: Lala Surajlal Market, M/s S.R. Steel Emporium, Shah Gunj Chowk ☐ UNNAD: Sabaganj, M/s New Harishchandra Gupta, 72/73 ☐ VARANASI: Bans Phatak, M/s Girdhar Das & Sons • C26/10B, Lahurabir, M/s U.P. Glass Stores

WEST BENGAL

ALIPURDUAR: Purenbazar, Banerjee & Co. ☐ ASANSOL: Saha Steel House, B.B. Road, Prabhat Radio & Electricals, G.T. Road ☐ BALURGHAT: Chowringhee, Hemanta Stores ☐ BANKURA: Lal Bazar, Radio Centre, 306, Lal Bazar Crossing ☐ BASIRHAT: Suralipi, New Market ☐ BERHAMPUR: B.B. Sen Road, Aajkal, Shop No. 53 ☐ BOLPUR: Ananda Stores, Sri Niketan Road ☐ BURDWAN: Dholdighi, Hindustan Aluminium, G.T. Road ☐ CALCUTTA: Behala, Rana, 350/1, D.H. Road • Old China Bazar, Satcowrie Dass & Co., 196, Old China Bazar Street • Old China Bazar Street, Amarnath Kundu & Sons, 14/3 • Bagree Market, Sham Brothers, C-23, Bagree Market • Bhawanipur, Amita Stores, 144/A, A.T. Mukherjee Road • Hathibagan, Ashok Trading Corporation, 82/2E, Bidhan Sarani • Elliot Road, Medicos Agencies, Shop No. 92 ☐ CHAKDAH: Netaji Subhas Road, Steel Varities ☐ CHANDANNAGAR: Lakshmiganj Bazar, Western Trading Co., G.T. Road ☐ COOCHBEHAR: N.N. Road, Tolaram Dalimchand ☐ DARJEELING: Chowk Bazar, Hind Stores, Chowk Bazar ☐ DINHATA: Chowrarat, Baidyanath Saha & Bros ☐ DOMJUR: Post Office, Aloghar, Main Road ☐ DURGAPUR: Mamra Bazar, Sansar, Chatterjee Market ☐ HABRA: Jessore Road, Makali Bhandar ☐ HALDIA: Durga Chowk, Pratik ☐ HOWRAH: Shibpur Bazar, Sriguru Basanalaya, 34/2, Shibpur Road. ☐ JALPAIGURI: Dinbazar, Prashadiram Prabhudayal ☐ KALNA: Bhaduripara, Show Sarkar & Co. ☐ KHAGRA: Ghosh & Co., 226, Manindra Road ☐ KRISHNANAGAR: Gowari Sonapatty, Sailen Kumar Dutta & Bros, B.K. Chatterjee Lane ☐ MALDA: N.S. Road, Radiosign, ☐ MIDNAPUR: Barabazar, Ram Narayan Harikisan • Contai Main Road, Sabitri Bhandar ☐ PURULIA: Chawk Bazar, Dutta Brothers ☐ RAMPURHAT: Deshbandhu Road, Dutta Stainless Steel House ☐ RANIGANJ: Bara Bazar, Seth Brothers, M.G. Road ☐ SINGUR: Steelco ☐ SILIGURI: Bidhan Market, Stainless House, A 93 Bidhan Market ☐ SODEPUR: Bidya Sagar Corner, Prayojini, Station Road ☐ SERAMPUR: Near Manasi Cinema, East End Traders, 39, Netaji Subhas Avenue ☐ SURI: S.P. More Market, Tarun Udyog, Stall No. 13 ☐ TARAKESWAR: B.P.R. Gate, Supersonic Radio

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TRAWLING

Plundering the Sea

Curbs on trawling to conserve marine resources

It is the classic confrontation. Tradition versus mechanisation. Small against big, the poor taking on the rich and powerful. For years, it has been simmering below the surface of Kerala's marine-rich coastal waters.

But now, it is taking on the scale of a real-life sea battle as angry fishermen in their catamarans challenge large mechanised trawlers in a desperate bid to stop the plunder of the sea bed—and their dwindling livelihood. Last fortnight, traditional fishermen from Vizhinjam, a fishing village near Trivandrum surrounded three trawlers and set them on fire in mid-sea.

About 1.35 lakh traditional fishermen in the state have been demanding that trawling—mechanised boats which drag trawl nets along the floor of the sea hauling in huge catches—be banned at least from June to August, the breeding season when catch is high.

Two months ago, the fishermen registered a major victory when the state Government banned trawling from July 11 to August 31 accepting the argument of environmentalists and traditional fishermen that the trawl nets not only scooped tonnes of fish from the floor of the sea, but also destroyed fish eggs.

That the fishermen have cause for complaint is undeniable. The Kerala coast which yielded 4.8 lakh tonnes of fish including 85,751 tonnes of prawns in 1973 produced only 3.4 lakh tonnes including 26,000 tonnes of prawns in 1988. When trawling was first introduced in Kerala in the early '50s as part of an Indo-Norwegian project, it was hailed as the supernal process that would flood the state with fish. Trawling indeed helped net huge foreign exchange, and the annual fish export of the state topped Rs 200 crore.

But the damage it can cause has been worrying the Government for sometime. Apart from depleting fish resources, trawling also damages the sea bed where various rare flora and aquatic life thrive. Prawns are found at the bottom so trawlers virtually sweep the floor with their huge nets. Aquatic terrain once destroyed takes very long to recoup. But the influential lobby of rich fishermen who use mechanised boats has been blocking any action against trawling till now. "The realisation has now dawned that the sea cannot be plundered indiscriminately and only conservation measures can save the situation," says social activist V. Vivekanandan who has been organising traditional fishermen. Remembers S. Robert, a fisherman from Vizhinjam: "There were days 10 years ago when we had to cut our nets to let out trapped fish as we could not have carried 5,000 kg of mackerel. Now we are lucky if we get 300 kg."

Trawler operators argue that they are contributing to precious foreign exchange and the ban has resulted in loss of export earning worth over Rs 100 crore. Said Marshall Frank, vice-president of the State Federation of Mechanised Boat Owners: "The ban has nothing to do with environment protection. It is a calculated political move with elections in view. The traditional fishermen who are also using destructive methods of fishing are favoured as they constitute a large vote bank." Few

The confrontation between traditional fishermen and trawlers is fast becoming a political hot potato.

Fishermen stage blockade and (below) trawlers docked by the ban: sea battle

RAMESH MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"My wife told the salesman she wanted a refrigerator that would keep the paneer soft and the kulfi firm.
I just wished I could melt away."

Whatever the reason, make sure it's a Godrej.

MEGA FORCE

The robust and energy-efficient compressor. Along with Coolguard—100% Polyurethane insulation, the international standard—ensures faster cooling and lower power consumption.

Other superior features include:
Spectrum—an exclusive range of colours.
Ultraspace—Ingeniously designed interior for greater storage space.

A widespread dealer network that ensures prompt and dependable service.

Godrej. A name that people have trusted for years. Where every day is spent in updating technology. Today, our modern, automated plant has developed a truly international class refrigerator. Because we want you to have the best.

TRUST Godrej®

HTA 1667

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Essar invites you to share in the promising

- Essar is entering the high priority, high growth area of steel—by setting up India's second largest private sector steel plant.
- This 100% Export Oriented Steel Plant will earn around Rs.2500 crores in foreign exchange in the first five years of operations.
- Coupled with a Tax Holiday and a host of other concessions, this project combines rewarding returns and strong security.
- Essar has demonstrated its ability to put up large projects with the world's largest sponge iron plant which will be commissioned ahead of schedule by early 1990.
- The demand-supply gap for sponge iron in India is estimated at 45 lakh tonnes by 1990 and 65 lakh tonnes by 1994.
- The sponge iron will save over Rs.250 crores in foreign exchange every year.

And now, you can invest in a Fully Convertible Debenture Issue with a built-in promise of sustained growth and high profitability-ESSAR STEEL BONDS.

For more deta
Application F
ESSAR GUJ
Regd. Office:
Nariman Poin
Name:
Address:

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

sing world of steel.

For more details of the Debenture Issue and for Application Forms, please write to:
ESSAR GUJARAT LIMITED
Regd. Office: 13th Floor, Maker Chambers IV, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021.
Name: _____
Address: _____

ESSAR

What the core sector is all about.

STEEL □ ENERGY □ OFFSHORE □ CONSTRUCTION

CLEA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

trawler operators disagree.

Fisheries Minister T.K. Ramakrishnan (CPI-M) however maintains that the ban had nothing to do with electoral considerations and was ordered in view of the rapidly deteriorating marine resources. Chief Minister E.K. Nayanar said that the Government was just implementing the recommendations made by an expert committee.

The simmering tension between traditional fishermen and trawler owners recently erupted into a clash in Shaktikulangara in Quilon district, resulting in the death of two and injury to over 300 in police firing. Apart from such clashes which are bound to continue, the issue of banning trawlers also brought to the fore serious differences of opinion within the Left Front Government. The Irrigation Minister Baby John (RSP), a senior minister who also has a thriving fish-export business is naturally against the ban and reacted strongly against the police action.

The Kerala confrontation, however, is spreading outwards. The dangers posed by trawling are now becoming a national issue. Fishermen all over the country are taking the cue from their counterparts in Kerala and getting organised to fight against trawling. And, judging from the increasingly militant stand on both sides, the sea battle promises to turn into a Waterloo for one or the other.

—RAMESH MENON

PISCICULTURE

Floating Farm

MANKAPUR, a sleepy little town of the backward Gonda district of Uttar Pradesh, is about to stake its claim in pioneering history. It will soon boast of the first floating fish farm in the country. The concept brings fish farming—a big investment business—within the reach of small and marginal farmers.

The enterprise involves growing fish, usually Grass Carp which feed only on hydrilla grass found in plenty, inside specially made cages which are then left floating near the shore of lakes. A 1,000-acre pond or lake can house 3,000 fish cages belonging to different farmers. Each farmer need pay rent for only the small portion where he floats his cages.

The concept is all set to revolutionise fish farming because each cage requires only a room of 250 sq ft at the shore of a lake or pond. The top portion of each cage is above the water while the bottom remains suspended about one metre above the floor of the lake or pond.

Anand Singh, 54, MP, and the erstwhile Raja of Mankapur—who singlehandedly worked for the success of the project—had to overcome many failures and the cynical attitude of the Fisheries Department of the Uttar Pradesh Government before he could prove the viability of the project. The state Government had written off the concept after two earlier experiments by the department did not yield acceptable results when the cages got damaged.

The Raghvendra Rural Development and Research Organisation (RRDRO), set up by Anand Singh, and supported by the Ford Foundation which gave a grant of Rs 5 lakh, set about the task with determination.

R.K. GUPTA

A fish cage being lifted out of water

The concept of using cages to rear fish is all set to revolutionise fish farming

In the second phase launched in January 1986, the cages were reinforced with PVC pipes and nelton (plastic) netting replacing the earlier steel or wooden frames with wire meshing. The size of the cages was also reduced. In the third phase, the RRDRO, helped by technical experts relocated the cages near the shore. They also verified the number and growth of fish.

Besides better growth, lower mortality—of the 1,117 fish in three cages only 21 died as compared to 40 to 60 per cent in pond culture—and easy recovery of the harvest, cage-farming offers the facility to monitor and sell the fish at any given time. The fish which are growing comparatively slowly can be kept in a separate cage where they can get enough food to grow properly. Says Anand Singh who heads the project: "I tried this and the results were very good."

The Mankapur experiment also dispels the initial doubts that cage-farming is a costly affair. According to RRDRO's project report, a cage costs Rs 2,500 and has a life span of five years, which means an affordable investment of Rs 500 per year. The net investment on cage-farming per cage is around Rs 6,000 a year which includes Rs 2,200—the cost of 1,100 fingerlings of the Grass Carp—labour and medicine. Given that 100 fingerlings will die in the course of one year, the net harvest would fetch Rs 15,000—a profit of about Rs 9,000 per cage per year.

With the prospect of high returns on low investment that the floating farm offers, the hopes of local fish farmers are sky-high. Uttar Pradesh sends 63,000 tonnes of its annual 90,000 tonnes production of fish to West Bengal. And with the technology involved being simple, there is every reason for the cage-farm project to remain buoyantly afloat.

—DILIP AWASTHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Monuments to Anarchy

Scores of foundation stones, but no buildings

IN Bihar, they are strewn all over the state. Stark symbols of the narcissism that seizes men and eloquent monuments to political anarchy.

Consider these. In 1972, Mrs Gandhi laid the foundation of a bridge at Chittouni in West Champaran district. Now, 17 years later, work is yet to begin. And to reach the other side, travellers still have to take a detour of 100 km through Nepal.

In 1979 then chief minister Ram Sundar Das laid the foundation-stone of a residential complex at Patna for the Harijan employees of Patna Municipal Corporation. Ten years later the stone remains the only evidence of the envisaged complex; children use it as a makeshift stool and housewives use it to dry clothes.

But even that, perhaps, is insignificant archaeology. Just last year Rajiv Gandhi laid the foundation-stone of a memorial to Maulana Abul Kalam Azad at Ranchi. Scarcely had Rajiv's visit concluded when the marble plaque disappeared. Seemingly, the authorities whisked it away for safe keeping, and in the process forgot there was a memorial to be constructed.

Camouflaged by garbage and weeds, by grazing cattle and scavenging pigs, these commemorative stones dot Bihar's landscape. Patna itself is cluttered with inscribed slabs, once unveiled with fanfare, now weathering sun and rain with not a brick added since the dignitaries departed. Most of these stones were laid without any fund allocation or sanction, and very often the sole purpose was to grab a piece of real estate.

Serpentine Road in Patna is a fit example. Not long ago it presented the bizarre spectacle of half a dozen foundation-stones in a row. The prime government land had been given to various organisations as blatant political patronage. But not one of the organisations has constructed the buildings or memorials for which the stones were laid. Some have put up makeshift sheds. The fact is most of them do not have the resources to build anything and the stones were laid simply to legitimise their right over the plots.

But it is the missing bridge at Chittouni that evokes the most anger. The issue rocked the Bihar Assembly in July, with Janata Dal's Nitish Kumar declaring that though Rajiv had announced a package of Rs 5,000 crore for the state recently, the stone laid by his mother 17 years ago had been ignored. Actually no money was ever allocated. Even annual railway budgets have ignored it.

Though financial stringency is often cited as an excuse, the fact is that the laying of foundation-stones is seldom more than a ploy used by subordinate functionaries to please their political bosses. The residential complex for Harijans is a pointer. Ram Sundar Das be-

Commemorative stones dot the state's landscape, monuments to the hunger of politicians to etch their names on stone. Usually, not a brick is added to the stone slabs.

This foundation-stone of a Harijan residential complex was laid 10 years ago.

The Ranchi bypass foundation laid by Chief Minister Chandra Shekhar Singh five years ago.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Garbage surrounds the slab where a memorial to Daroga Prasad Rai was to be built.

longed to Scheduled Caste, and fawning officials saw merit in getting him to lay a foundation-stone. The Janata government headed by Das fell the same year and that put paid to the project.

THE hunger of the state's politicians to etch their names on stone is virtually insatiable. One former chief minister unable to lay the stone of a community latrine—another politician had already earned the honour—went and presided over its inauguration and obliging minions dutifully unveiled one more slab.

But there are cases that are even more bizarre. The foundation-stone of the bridge on the river Shankh on the Bihar-Madhya Pradesh border was laid by three successive chief ministers in the '70s. Similarly, the foundation-stone of a dam on the river Kamla Balan was first laid by Lal Bahadur Shastri, then a Union minister and an encore was performed by Pandit Binodanand Jha, then chief minister. A community hall at Saharsa got equal attention. It had three stones laid: by Lalit Narayan Mishra, by his younger brother Jagannath Mishra, and by Ramesh Jha, then minister for urban development.

Ram Sewak Sharma, an IAS officer who's now deputy commissioner at Dhanbad, recalls another bizarre episode. "I was serving as district magistrate in Purnea when, after a long tiring day on the road with the chief minister, we were having a late dinner at the house of a ruling party legislator. Suddenly we were told the chief minister would be laying the foundation-stone of a bridge that night. I knew nothing about this and made inquiries, only to be assured by the MLA that all would be organised." So in the dead of the night, in the glow of petromax lamps, with an audience of a few hundred, Bindeshwari Dubey laid the stone. Needless to say, the bridge did not have the Government's sanction and is yet to come up.

These overnight foundation-stones are often laid in the belief that they morally bind the chief minister to get money released. The plan often goes awry due to the high turnover of chief ministers in Bihar: three in four years since March 1985. The one unchanging upshot is: thousands of rupees are spent on the ceremony, often government engineers draw money from contingency funds—usually 3 per cent of the project's cost—and contractors try and wheedle themselves onto the bandwagon.

Soon after Rajiv Gandhi laid the foundation of an Azad memorial, the plaque disappeared.

But not all these stone slabs of egocentrism are ridiculous; some bear a poignant ring. At Patna's sprawling Kankapbagh colony lies a stone slab in an obscure corner. Small puddles of water surround it. To decipher the engraving on it, one has to look closely. It is a foundation-stone laid by the then President, N. Sanjeeva Reddy. It announces the building of a hospital-cum-medical research complex to be named after Jaya Prakash Narayan (JP).

Both JP's and Reddy's names count for little. A sad apology of a hospital functions at the place in a pappack-like structure. At another corner of the state capital the scenario is different. There the Government has spent crores to construct a modern hospital complex. This one is named after Mrs Gandhi. The irony of foundation-stones is like the irony of leaders: those whose legacy is ignored become peripheral and ignored themselves. Bihar is a graveyard of stones without legacy. —UTTAM SENGUPTA

A foundation-stone laid by Sanjeeva Reddy for a JP medical research complex.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A Shocking Surrender

THE apology tendered by the Illustrated Weekly of India was as shocking as the heading of the original report of 1986, which had said: "Shocking! The strange escapades of J.B. Patnaik, Orissa's chief minister."

Some three years later and after many court battles, an out-of-court settlement of the Rs 1-crore libel suit slapped by the chief minister produced the following apology:

"We, Bennett, Coleman and Company Ltd, Pritish Nandy, editor of the Illustrated Weekly and S.N.M. Abdi, special correspondent of the Illustrated Weekly, had published two articles under the captions 'The strange escapades of J.B. Patnaik' and 'Why is J.B. Patnaik being allowed to gag the press' in the issues dated 18-24 May 1986 and 3-9 August 1986 respectively, based on information available to us. Subsequently, we found that the information, on the basis of which these articles were written, was not true and was politically motivated. We regret the damage done to Mr Patnaik's reputation and offer our apologies to him."

Seldom has an apology by a major Indian publication been as demeaning, particularly in acknowledging a political motivation in writing the original report. Every journalist felt diminished by the nature of the apology.

Apart from the hurt caused to journalists' self-esteem, this landmark apology raises portentous issues of press freedom, of the future of investigative journalism in India and of the limits of exposing a public man's private life.

India is a country in transition, and as political developments remind us every day, arbitrariness of government and pure lawlessness have become a recurring feature in parts of the country. If a journalist cannot pursue his avocation without fear of reprisal, in the form of harassing law suits and physical intimidation, he becomes constrained in performing his legitimate functions.

This is so in Orissa, as it is in Bihar. And only recently we witnessed the spectacle of followers of the CPI(M) in the Marxist stronghold of Calcutta venting their spleen on journalists.

Journalists are very much part of the society they live in and must share the travails of their fellow citizens in the peculiar mix of politics and criminality that is the curtain-raiser to elections and will survive them. But the premise of a free press assumes that journalists are accorded certain privileges.

There are journalists who have paid with their lives for their brave reporting, in India as elsewhere in the world. But intimidation by authority often serves to make journalists more timid, with a consequent loss to the ultimate arbiter of a free press, the reader.

By the same token, the power the press possesses in demolishing reputations presupposes that an offending publication must be punished. It was after the dark era of the Emergency that the Indian press really flowered into investigative journalism. Till then, the tendency all too often had been to indulge in armchair reporting.

Inevitably, investigative journalism led to excesses. The desire to make a splash, without spending the time to cross-check a story, led to many one-sided reports. Editors often did not insist that in making exposes, the victim must be given a fair chance to answer the charges before a story gets into print.

Such reports often work against persons who do not have the money or the political clout to fight long and expensive legal battles. The infamous Defamation Bill sought to be enacted by the Rajiv Gandhi Government, and later withdrawn in the face of unanimous opposition from the press, was bad because it would have served to limit the freedom of the press. The proposed Jammu and Kashmir Press Bill is even worse in the restrictions it would impose on journalists and publications.

A code of conduct is a double-edged weapon because it boils down to the question of who would police it. No journalist worth his salt would want to give the Government the authority to decide whether the code has been contravened by a publication. In practice, the code really is the judgement of peers and works more by unwritten but well-understood rules.

The editor of the Illustrated Weekly has received less than enthusiastic support from his peers because the view held by many is that he had transgressed the limits of the permissible for a publication that lays claims to responsibility.

Here we get into a difficult area. The question of morality is often subjective and is determined by the prevailing mores in a given milieu. What is pornographic in India is permissible in the West. Pornography for one society is freedom of expression for another.

It is legitimate for a publication to try to enlarge the limits of freedom. But it must take the rap if it obviously offends against good taste. Above all, it must have a fool-proof dossier before launching a major attack on a leading politician, or a humbler soul. The generally accepted criterion is that a public man's private life becomes public if it impinges upon his public duties.

Nandy and his fellow journalists are sadder and wiser men.

THE ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY OF INDIA
THE FEATURES MAGAZINE SHOCKING!
THE STRANGE ESCAPADES OF J B PATNAIK ORISSA'S CHIEF MINISTER

Weekly's Patnaik issue and (inset) editor Nandy

A publication must have a fool-proof dossier before launching a major attack. A public man's private life becomes public only if it impinges upon his public duties.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Grasim Worsted Suiting

An exquisite
Terene/Wool
Worsted Suiting collection.

GRASIM
GWALIOR SUITING
IN A CLASS OF ITS OWN
A PRODUCT OF GRASIM INDUSTRIES LTD

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When TATA STEEL wanted...

To modernise one of India's largest steel plants...

They needed a process control system with as many as 500 closed loops & 2500 open loops...

With string temperature requiremen ranging fro 1500° C to – 9

Using a wide range of 6500 instruments spanning Pneumatic to sophisticated micro-processor based systems...

In order to double their capacity and save drastically on fuel...

TAYLOR · TOTAL RANGE FOR TA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

24 hours a day for the next 15 years...

To produce the country's finest steel...

...Only Taylor technology could produce the range.

When Tata Steel was modernising one of India's largest steel plants, they not only wanted to double capacity but also wanted to be India's lowest specific energy consuming steel plant. Naturally, their process control requirements were awesome. Hence the use of a wide range of sophisticated process control systems.

That's why they came to Taylor India.

Only Taylor has a comprehensive range of over 4,500 products in Pneumatic Analog, Digital, Electronic & Distributed Control Systems.

Pioneers in the field of process control, Taylor India has over 25 years experience in the Indian industry and an association with Combustion Engineering, USA, a name to reckon with internationally.

Whatever your process control need, Taylor India can help design it, equip it, build it, operate it, service it, upgrade it and maintain it at peak efficiency.

Perhaps, that's why Taylor's clients include Indian Oil, SAIL, Hindustan Lever, Reliance Industries, ONGC, GNFC...and of course TATA STEEL — you name it, Taylor helps control it.

TAL CONTROL.

TAYLOR
INDIA
WE MAKE INDUSTRY HAPPEN

Contact Taylor 21308

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ABU DHABI · AL-FUJAIRAH · AMMAN · ATHENS · BAGHDAD · BAHRAIN · BANGKOK · BOMBAY · CAIRO · COLOMB

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE GREATEST LUXURY WE CAN OFFER IS THE WIDEST CHOICE.

Because we fly to more places in the Middle East than any other airline, we're in the best possible position to make the right connection for you.

With a fast growing network of destinations and a higher flight frequency than ever before, you have more freedom to choose the time and the place you want to travel to with Gulf Air.

طيران الخليج

GULF AIR

GOLDEN FALCON SERVICE

A TRULY CIVILISED WAY TO FLY.

daCunha/GA/4/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SHIRAZ · SHARJAH · SANAA · SALALAH · RIYADH · RAS AL KHAIMAH · PARIS · NAIROBI · MUSCAT · MANILA · LONDON · LARN

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Moving Mail

Letters reveal another Indira

FREEDOM'S DAUGHTER:
Letters Between Indira Gandhi and Jawaharlal Nehru 1922-39
Edited by SONIA GANDHI
Hodder and Stoughton
Price: Rs 650; Pages: 483

"LETTERS are conversation on paper—but more revealing," Sonia Gandhi writes in her introduction to the correspondence between Indira Gandhi and Jawaharlal Nehru. And so they are—especially about her mother-in-law, whose "shyness and sense of privacy made her express herself more freely on paper than in person".

The Indira who emerges from these letters, particularly the spritely and almost cheeky teenager in Europe, is so different from the various portraits which spring from her mostly sycophantic biographies.

> "Everybody is not going to pay attention to us, and we are sure to feel miserable in afterlife if you expect too much attention from others. We become like a beautiful China plate—fragile and delicate and easily cracked."
>
> Nehru to Indira

Reams have been written about the close, at times claustrophobically so, relationship between father and daughter. In this first, slickly produced volume which covers the letters from 1922 to 1939, the terms of endearment are as common as the commas: the letters begin with darling, darlingest when affection is at a peak, and end with "hills" or "mountains of love".

And, occasionally, Nehru calls his daughter "Indu-boy"—a form of address she rather likes as she often signs off thus as a child. Separated as the father and daughter were by prison walls and oceans these appellations are touching indications of how basically lonely Nehru and Indira were.

But the letters also reveal sharp differences between the two. In the beginning there is more than distance which separates father from daughter. Until her mother Kamala Nehru's death in February 1936, there is aloofness in Indira's letters. Often, she does not reply immediately; or, she keeps forgetting to post the letters.

It is a slightly peeved father who complains about the absence in her of the "qualities of a Sherlock Holmes in regard to the non-receipt of my letters..." Even Nehru's letters from jail are fretful and he expresses his deep disappointment at not getting his daughter's letters on time.

On the other hand, her references to "mums" as she refers to her mother are laden with tenderness. "Everybody is astonished that such a young person like Mummie should have a big daughter like me. People think we are sisters. She does really look so young and sweet."

The ice really breaks after her mother's death in Switzerland. Although, as she once told a trusted aide, she did not talk to her father for days after her mother died. Interestingly enough, in the letters soon after the tragic event, she seldom mentions her mother.

Clearly, the one big influence on Indira as a child is Mahatama Gandhi—Nehru seems to be taken for granted in her early years. Gandhi, in fact, strengthens the bond between mother and daughter. Her letters from her school in Pune are full of references to Bapu and his various fasts while in Yervada jail. Her life appears to revolve round him.

Indira with Nehru; and (below) with Kamala Nehru at Anand Bhawan: a special bond

> "Everybody is astonished that such a young person like Mummie should have a big daughter like me. People think we are sisters. She does really look so young and sweet."
>
> Indira to Nehru

> "Yesterday afternoon I went and had my hair cut and partly because my jura became untied about ten times a day and it was a nuisance making it. Besides it did not go at all well with European clothes.
>
> Indira to Nehru

The other giant in her life is Rabindranath Tagore, under whose spell she comes while a student at Santiniketan. "His spirit seemed to roam and hover over one and follow one with a loving deep watchfulness. And this spirit, I feel, has greatly influenced my life and thought..."

Nehru's attachment to his daughter is overwhelming. He writes as if he is father, mother and nanny rolled into one—advising his daughter on boric powder eyewashes, gargles, exercise, diet to giving amazingly detailed instructions on her various curriculums and academic choices. The spirit of George Bernard Shaw obviously hovers over him: letters become the real art of expression, of letting oneself go.

It is clear that he handles his child with kid gloves and recognises her need for attention: "Everybody in the world is not going to pay attention to us, and we are sure to feel miserable in afterlife if you expect too much attention from others. We become like a beautiful China plate—fragile and delicate and easily cracked."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Most poignant, however, are his expressions of longing for his only child, especially when he is caught in the hurly-burly of political life. It is almost as if Nehru were more at peace with himself within the four walls of his prison cell.

In September 1937, Nehru writes from Anand Bhavan: "I sit here in my room and the door connecting it to your room is usually open. And at night, and sometimes in the daytime too, I go to your room and have a look round and say goodnight to it."

The real differences between father and daughter emerge over their perceptions of Europe. Indira's two years at Oxford University serve as a crucible for her political sensibilites which veered towards the Left.

While Nehru has a larger, more romantic and liberal view of Europe and the British, his daughter, who appears to see things more in black and white, has sharper reflexes. For example, when Nehru plans to stay with his old friend the Marquis of Lothian in London, Indira reacts angrily, and unequivocally.

Writes Indira to her father: "Lothian is not just another Conservative...He is a very prominent member of the Cliveden Set...commonly known as 'Hitler's friends in Britain'. He is a thorough Fascist and doesn't make any bones about it...Your staying with him would amount to the same as if you spent a weekend with Hitler himself or with Mussolini...I am afraid I feel very strongly on the point and even if you do go—Lord Lothian will have to excuse me."

Nehru and Indira shared a deep concern for a Spain ravaged by civil war—both are ready to jump into battle on the side of the Republicans. She writes to her father from Bombay about her plans to go to Spain in 1938: "I am surprised that you should grow soft over the idea. I am thick-skinned and hard-headed enough...There was an equal or greater risk in the streets of Allahabad some days ago when I might conceivably have been stabbed during the days of communal trouble." Indira does go to Spain. And her concerns are mainly for the children of war.

Indira with Gandhi: major influence

"Up till now I had thought Bapu a great man, no doubt, but I had somehow never thought him capable of this. So this fast has made a great impression on me and taught me a great lesson. These last seven days have been terrible... now I am perfectly assured that Bapu can do the most imaginary things."

Indira to Nehru

Indira with two friends in Santiniketan

"At Santiniketan we all seem to be having festivals.... The Hindi Samaj (did you know we had one here?) has invited all the big guns in Hindi literature to be present on that date, as at that time they will have a good opportunity to see the place & have a good talk with the Poet."

Indira to Nehru

Delightful about the letters is the language Indira Gandhi uses—from the Enid Blyton prose to little Americanisms—she really lets go. For example when she learns that she will be going to India from Oxford, she writes: "And whoopee! Am I looking forward to it! (Excuse this American language—But I find it so much more expressive when one is feeling like I am.)"

From school in Bex, Switzerland, Indira describes her teacher who puts her to bed as "like the crocodile in Peter Pan. One hears her singing a mile off". Again, from Somervile, while describing her tutors, she describes her Latin tutor "as ancient as a sphinx and terribly deaf. But explains things quite well, inspite of his false teeth". Miss Darbyshire, on the othe hand looks like a "tea-cosy".

Imagination is surprisingly not in short supply. At 15, she writes: "while watching the clouds at night...there was a black, black cloud in the shape of a face. There were two round holes for eyes and one oblongish one for the mouth and the moon was peeping through one of the eye holes. It looked just as if Kali Devi was looking at the world from Heaven."

Among the more interesting revelations is the touch of coquette in the extremely independent young Indira sailing to Germany with her mother for the latter's treatment. She stays on alone at Hotel Adlon, the "most expensive hotel" in town as her father later writes to her in surprise. She has stayed on because she wanted new clothes.

While the earlier letters are petulant—the daughter clearly calls the shots with the father—the later ones are full of feeling and concern for her father. By 1939, she is already a source of comfort to a confused Nehru who is beginning to find politics a bit distasteful.

She writes to her father: "It would not be too bad if I did not keep seeing your face—so sad, with something more than just sadness. Darling, don't be so defeatist—no one can defeat you except yourself. You are so much above all the pettiness that is invading Indian politics. It is distressing to watch it take hold—but you mustn't let it make any difference. These happen the world over. And they always pass."

The roles are almost reversed.

—MADHU JAIN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Two mugs of morning coffee.
Cricket scores.
Cryptic crosswords.
Ten minutes of soulful music.
And twin blade pleasure.

Touch of steel on skin.
Slice of lather in a stroke.
Cool smooth shave.
A Wilman shave.

Shaving Systems
Wilman II
Smooth days begin this way.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra:Blr:Wil 222 89

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When car owners demand more kilometers from their tyres they trust India's No. 1 tyre manufacturer...

You c
After al tyres ha highwa set star match.

And the
by the Contine
Germar
Contine

What m
the trus

T773 f

- New
- Addi tract
- Extra

No. 1 i

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

And you thought Modi Continental only makes India's best truck tyres?

You could hardly help thinking that.

After all Modi Continental's N416 and RL8 truck tyres have led the way on India's challenging highways for the last 14 years – and have set standards others are still trying to match.

And the same proven technology – backed by the world renowned tyre manufacturer, Continental Gummi Werke, West Germany – has gone into making Modi Continental No. 1 in car tyres too.

What makes the T773 and R90 Executive the trusted choice?

T773 for Maruti

- New zig-zag ribs for extra grip
- Additional sipes pitched for better traction
- Extra strong nylon casing for longer life.

R90 Executive for Ambassador and Premier

- Sidewall protector prevents damage
- Extra rubber for extra mileage
- Deeper grooves for extra grip.

Plus! A nationwide network of 40 centres to ensure prompt after sales service.

Modi Continental car tyres. Excellence only India's No. 1 tyre manufacturer can offer.

CAR TYRES

No. 1 in tyres – technology, sales, exports

O&M/039/C

Modi Continental

The tyre that never tires

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NAMAS BHOJANI

Aneeta: picture perfect

◆ What's the magic word? Nehru. Right first time. So Doordarshan has opened its portals to yet another Nehru proposal. But this time it's not Jawaharlal, but wife Kamala who is the subject of interest.

G.P. Sippy is producing a tele-film based on columnist Promilla Kalhan's book, Kamala Nehru, An Intimate Biography, with Aneeta Kanwar playing the lead. Considerable chaos has marked the project, and money squabbles continue.

Hope the film, which shows what a misfit Kamala was in the westernised Nehru household, turns out to be as interesting. For though Kalhan says, "Aneeta Kanwar's perfect. She has that intensity in her face which Kamala had. The strong, inner resilience," one wonders whether the viewers have the same: to imbibe another Nehru serial.

◆ Fight them not only on the land, the sea, and the beaches, but even the silver screen. That seems to be the resolve of the Congress(I). And if they come clad in the robes of religion, unleash some divinity of your own.

So N.T. Rama Rao in his avatar of Vishwamitra is facing competition from another Vishwamitra. Well-known Telugu director Dasari Narayana Rao has been commissioned to make 15 episodes for Doordarshan. And Rao's taking no chances: he's going in for the epic stuff.

From the ornate sets of Mahabharat, he's picked up Rahi Masoom Raza to write the script, and the venerable patriarch Bhishma, alias Mukesh Khanna, to play the lead. Insists Rao: "I am going by Hindu mythology and not political interpretations." In pre-election jostling that sounds like the stuff of myth.

BHAWAN SINGH

Kersee, Lewis: India bound

◆ So what if you can't produce world class athletes, you can always invite some. So our sports administrators seem to have decided. And at least here they aren't settling for second-best.

When Carl Lewis and Jackie Joyner Kersee explode off the starting blocks at the Jawaharlal Nehru Stadium, they will register themselves as the topmost athletes to have ever contested on Indian soil. Lewis and Kersee have apparently confirmed their participation for the Nehru Centenary athletic meet to be held in New Delhi on September 19 and 20.

Organiser Suresh Kalmadi claims he's paying them nothing. Says he: "We'll take them to see the Taj Mahal." That ought to provide some humble moments to the track legend: being face to face with a perfection that is timeless.

M.R. BHARTI

Shamili, Shalini: star sisters

◆ At the ripe age of nine, Shalini can easily hang up her little shoes and retire. To those who would protest, sample her achievements. She's starred in 84 films, and is geared to touch 100 next year. That's not all: the films span a gamut of five languages, all of which she speaks fluently. Add to this the state awards she has won for best child artiste from the Andhra Pradesh and Kerala governments.

But Shalini's okay, it's sister Shamili who needs to draw the line. Barely out of her crib, the two-year-old Shamili is being launched in a Tamil film Rajanadai. Child's play?

◆ What today's lot can't do smoothly, yesterday's can attempt. With Vengsarkar and Co having come a cropper on their American jaunt, it's Ashok Mankad and Ajit Wadekar's chance to show them how one does it.

The duo, backed by an impressive battery, including Ghavri, Solkar, and Bedi, is leaving for a month-long tour of the US and Canada. The tour organised by Cricket Consultancy Service—Mankad's company—is steering clear of the Cricket Control Board's wrath. Says Mankad: "We are going to generate good relations. The tour has the board's sanction."

Wadekar talks cricket: "I'm excited. We aren't that old you know." Well with Mankad, 43, and Wadekar, 48, it's about time they started making such assertions.

Photographs by PRADEEP MANDANI

Wadekar (left) and Mankad

S.N. KAUSHIK

Khanna (left) as Vishwamitra

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

THERE has been unusual cause for celebration at INDIA TODAY this year. In March, the magazine won three awards, including Asian Magazine of the Year, at the Asian World Publishing Congress in Bangkok. Then, last fortnight, Senior Editor PRABHU CHAWLA and Senior Correspondent PANKAJ PACHAURI, won prestigious awards. Chawla, 43, was given the G.K. Reddy Memorial award "in recognition of his proficiency in writing about national and international events". Pachauri, 26, received the first prize in the annual Statesman Award for Rural Reporting.

Prabhu Chawla receiving the award

Pankaj Pachauri

The dual honour is a tribute to the broad spectrum of editorial coverage the magazine has always emphasised. The Statesman award has been won by INDIA TODAY for the second time, and is an indication of the magazine's concern for rural India where the country's majority lives. Pachauri's story—"A Murderous Tradition" (October 31, 1988)—was on the practice of female infanticide in the far-flung villages of Jaisalmer district of Rajasthan.

The G.K. Reddy award won by Chawla is an acknowledgement of the range and depth of INDIA TODAY*'s political reporting. Chawla has since 1978 spearheaded the magazine's political reportage and is considered among the best informed journalists on the political beat with several exclusives to his credit.*

These awards, coupled with those won at Bangkok, mark 1989 out as an exceptional year for the magazine in terms of recognition.

IN FOCUS THIS FORTNIGHT

Crisis on Prices

Rising prices have become the major plank of the Opposition's electoral campaign. Official figures claim inflation is under control, but most Indians find their real incomes eroding faster than before. The sudden increase in sugar prices has added grist to the anti-government campaign.

COVER STORY 26

Throwing the Gauntlet

The public declaration of his assets by V.P. Singh's son, Ajeya, took the Government totally by surprise. And the attempt by George McLean, managing director of the defunct St Kitts bank, to refute Ajeya's statement fuelled speculation that he was being prompted by someone in India.

SPECIAL REPORTS 40

Heading for Collapse

The Vayudoot crash on September 23 is an indication that almost a year after the two crashes that killed 167 people last October 19, the deadly combination of factors that caused those disasters persists. An investigation into the problems, plus an exclusive report on what caused last year's twin crashes.

INVESTIGATION 142

Changing Sexuality

The Indian woman is becoming a multiple choice woman, increasingly demanding equality in marriage, good sex from her husband, not merely lust in fast forward, and even seeking extra-marital relationships. An analysis of the sexual revolution in urban middle class women.

SPECIAL FEATURE 154

CONTENTS

COMMENT 11
CAPITALOOK 14
VOICES 19
INDIANOTES 20
THE FORTNIGHT THAT WAS 22
COVER STORY
Crisis on Prices 26
SPECIAL REPORTS
Ajeya Singh: Throwing the Gauntlet 40
Devi Lal: Rallying Strength 46
Cricket Control Board: On a Sticky Wicket 53
CURRENT EVENTS 58
CRIME
Narcotics: The Empire Strikes Back 92
NEIGHBOURS
Sri Lanka: No Exit in Sight 105
Benazir Bhutto: Struggle for Survival 109
TRADE WINDS 112
BUSINESS 121
INVESTIGATION
Aviation: Heading For Collapse 142
SPECIAL FEATURE
Married Women: Changing Sexuality 154
ENVIRONMENT
Thar Desert: Moving Menacingly 164
RELIGION
Mother Teresa: Hope and Anxiety 168
THE ARTS
Theatre: The Fading Arclights 172
SPORTS
Athletics: Tracking The Stars 174
TRANSPORT
New Delhi Metro: The Great Rail Race 181
SCIENCENOTES 187
BOOKS
Gandhiana Relived 190
Cat on a Cold Tin Roof 195
A US Odyssey 196
EYE-CATCHERS 200

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Men merely dream.
Great men create a future.

Many years ago, Nehru looked deep into the eyes of India. And glimpsed the future.

Indian scientists at the frontiers of research. Technological breakthroughs. Explorations in space. Discoveries in medical science... A nation expanding the limits of scientific endeavour.

His dream sparked off a million others. An entire nation was galvanised into realising his vision. Among them United India Insurance Company.

At United India, we realised that fear of risk has no place in a nation eager and impatient to grow.

We thus began designing cover after innovative cover. For the ambitious space programmes of ISRO. For the undersea exploration efforts of ONGC. For the large computers in our scientific institutions. For all the intricate machinery and instruments in our research organisations.

All this with one conviction. That every risk conquered is a million dreams fulfilled. Dreams that will collectively propel India to a future Jawaharlal Nehru would have been proud of.

UNITED INDIA

UNITED INDIA INSURANCE CO. LTD.
(A subsidiary of the General Insurance Corporation of India)
24, Whites Road, Madras - 600 014.

Building Modern India.

Mudra:M:UI:3639

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Great fabrics.
Great prices.

NIC

NATIONAL TEXTILES

Clothiers to the nation.

Dress materials • Shirtings • Suitings • Sarees • Furnishings • Towels • Bedsheets • Industrial fabrics • Non-woven fabrics

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

UI:3639

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Solidaire adds life. To colour.

Yes, in fact Solidaire adds a new dimension to everything it does.

To give you the extraordinary. Everytime.

With an eye for detail, painstaking efforts for perfection, and years of R&D. And a sheer commitment to excellence.

Which is what earned Solidaire international recognition. In the form of large export orders for colour TVs from leading East European, Middle East and African countries.

As the final touch, Solidaire also believes in adding one more thing to your viewing pleasure: value.

So that you get a value-added, value-based product. Everytime.

Solidaire TV

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XIV NUMBER 19
FOR THE FORTNIGHT OCTOBER 1-15, 1989

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
DEPUTY EDITOR DILIP BOBB
SENIOR EDITOR PRABHU CHAWLA
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR SHEKHAR GUPTA
ASSOCIATE EDITOR RAMINDAR SINGH
ASSISTANT EDITOR P.G. MATHAI

CORRESPONDENTS
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT RAJ CHENGAPPA
NEW DELHI MADHU JAIN
PARANJOY GUHA THAKURTA
SIMRAN BHARGAVA
DAVID DEVADAS
PANKAJ PACHAURI
SURAJEET DAS GUPTA
BHASKAR ROY
AHMEDABAD UDAY MAHURKAR
BANGALORE CHIDANAND RAJGHATTA
BHOPAL N.K. SINGH
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN
SALIL TRIPATHI
S.N. VASUKI
CALCUTTA FARZAND AHMED
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
LUCKNOW DILIP AWASTHI
MADRAS C.S.G PRASAD
PATNA UTTAM SENGUPTA
TRIVANDRUM RAMESH MENON
NEWS COORDINATOR SANDHYA MULCHANDANI

ART EDITOR SHIRLEY JOSHUA

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
CHIEF OF PRODUCTION ANURADHA KAPOOR
LAYOUT ARTISTS PEALI DUTTA GUPTA
PRABAL MANDAL
KAMINI SINGH

ASSISTANT PICTURE EDITOR BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA
PRASHANT PANJIAR
NAMAS BHOJANI
SHYAM TEKWANI

COPY EDITOR TARUN J. TEJPAL

COPY DESK SABA NAQVI BHAUMIK
NANDITA SARDANA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

REGIONAL MANAGERS ADVERTISING

BOMBAY NEENA MONGIA
NEW DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE S.J. NAIDU

• EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD. F-14/15, CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTIONS: LIVINGMEDIA INDIA LIMITED. POST BOX 706, FARIDABAD-121007, HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER, F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE, NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-62634 INTO IN • ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029435. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY • K-9 CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONES: 3325378, 3325576, 3321323 AND 3321273. TELEX: 31-62124 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI • FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188, 479163. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, MADRAS • 74/1 ST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 213037, 212448. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE • 31C EVEREST, 46C CHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445596, 447726. CABLE: LIVINMEDIA, CALCUTTA • COPYRIGHT 1987 LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY AROON PURIE FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONFLICT AND CHAOS

The election of President R. Premadasa had generated some hope that peace would get a chance in Sri Lanka ("Falling Apart", September 30). But he has failed to resolve the ethnic conflict and the country is on the brink of disaster.

New Delhi H.P. SINGH

LETHAL SALVO

Your cover story ("Getting Away", September 15) is more explosive than the gun. Whom is the prime minister defending? What is he afraid of? Why doesn't he catch the culprits?

New Delhi ANIL SATWIK

■ Why did Bofors pay bribes when our government had warned that no middlemen should be involved? Why is the prime minister reluctant to find out the names of the payoff recipients? Why did he, on several occasions, insist no middlemen were involved? The hush-up and drift at the highest level give the impression that something fishy is going on. Bofors returning Rs 64 crore will surely not settle the dust.

Sonepat RAVI SANDHU

READERS' RESPONSE

The readers' response to General Sundarji's interview has been overwhelming. At the time of going to press, 128 letters had been received. More are pouring in—even from such mofussil places as Jagdalpur in Madhya Pradesh, Dhingi in Punjab, and Sikar in Rajasthan. Of those received so far, 99 have applauded the general's disclosures, while the rest, though not questioning his patriotism, have felt he should have spoken out earlier.

■ The revelations by General Sundarji have nailed the lie consistently uttered by Rajiv Gandhi that cancelling the gun contract with Bofors would jeopardise national security.

Coimbatore S.A. SRINIVASA SARMA

■ General Sundarji's lethal salvo, though belated, has further confirmed that the Rajiv Gandhi Government is hell-bent on shielding the recipients of the payoffs. However, not all is lost in the people's crusade against corruption. There are still some upright people who retain moral values despite mounting pressure.

Madras LT-COLONEL (RETD) VIJAYA RAGHAVAN

■ Why did General Sundarji continue in his post after he was asked by the Government to modify his opinion on the cancellation of the Bofors contract?

Belgaum ARCHANA JOGLEKAR

■ The cover story has unveiled an important aspect of the Bofors gun deal. It has now made it clear that Rajiv Gandhi is protecting whoever got the Rs 64-crore paid in commissions by Bofors.

Gurgaon HARMINDER SINGH YADAV

■ It seems the prime minister will not resign even if the recipient of commissions admits to having benefited from the deal.

Chandigarh SHANEEL RANA

■ It is unfortunate that a large section of the electorate is illiterate and does not understand the functioning of the Government. Otherwise, Rajiv Gandhi and the politicians around him would have had no room in Indian politics.

Gorakhpur S.K. SINHA

■ The question is not of the payoffs or who received them. It is that our whole defence system is an open book for foreigners and a closely-guarded secret for us.

Patna ABHAY K. CHOUDHARY

■ General Sundarji overstepped his brief by advising the Government on the action to be taken to extract the names of kickback recipients in the Bofors deal.

Madras D. SABARATHNAM

■ May the number of people like General Sundarji, Lt-General H. Kaul and T.N. Chaturvedi, the comptroller and auditor general of India (CAG), increase. Probably all is not lost for democracy in India.

New Delhi B. DUTTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

■ After General Sundarji's revelations, the JPC report on the Bofors deal has become a strong contender for the Sahitya Akademi Award for fiction.
Amritsar — R.C. KHANNA

■ I have a suggestion for the Opposition. Why not choose the 155-mm gun as a common symbol for a sure-fire victory in the coming general elections?
Secunderabad — B.K. SUDHAKAR REDDY

■ The truth lies with the Congress(I).
Ranchi — AMITABH PRAKASH

■ General Sundarji's forthright interview and the CAG's report on the Bofors gun deal have salvaged our pride as Indians, which had been under savage assault by Rajiv Gandhi and his ilk.
Allahabad — RAJEEV PANT

■ The least the people of this nation can do is quickly boot out Rajiv Gandhi and the Congress(I) from power.
Hyderabad — G. CHANDRASEKHAR YADAV

■ After General Sundarji's revelations, the Congress(I) will certainly meet its Waterloo in the coming elections.
Bhopal — RAKESH AWASTHI

■ One wonders why General Sundarji chose to remain silent for so long after his retirement in April last year. Was there no media available to him earlier or was he scared of the consequences?
Panipat — TARUN KUMAR

■ It seems General Sundarji was inspired by the CAG to speak out.
Bangalore — SHREEDHARA DAMALE

■ I believe in the CAG and General Sundarji and not in Rajivji.
Gaya — ANDALIB AKHTER

■ If General Sundarji was so concerned about national honour, why didn't he follow in the footsteps of Arun Singh?
Pune — D.B.N. MURTHY

■ In his interview, General Sundarji says he thinks commissions are a regular feature of arms deals and they fill the political parties' coffers, but he doesn't know how it is done. This only adds to the existing confusion. It is high time men who have held responsible positions speak out specifically.
Bangalore — A. SUNDAR

CREDIBILITY CRUNCH

The credibility of the CBI has been waning rapidly because of its misuse of authority ("Playing Politics", September 15). It is regrettable that the Congress(I) is bringing a bill in Parliament which will empower the CBI to investigate any case without permission from the state Government. This will hamper the functioning of our democratic system.
Bangalore — VISHWESHWAR BHAT

■ CBI chief Mohan Katre will find it difficult to investigate the Nusli Wadia murder plot impartially considering the revelation of his son's business links with the Ambanis' Reliance Industries.
Kanpur — KUMUD MEHROTRA

PRESERVING TRADITION

The term 'Driglam Namza' ("Between Two Worlds", September 15) does not mean a revival of Bhutanese tradition and culture as mentioned in your article but in fact means traditional etiquettes. And this is not a new concept introduced to make life hard for any Bhutanese. It existed long before modernisation and is as old as Bhutan. Also, the rule that our people wear the traditional Bhutanese dress, kho and kira, has not been opposed by anybody in Bhutan. This rule was made not because of sentimental reasons or any orthodox views, but because we want to maintain our distinct national identity and be recognised by the rest of the world as Bhutanese.
Thimphu — TASHI WANGCHUK
Ministry of Social Services, Bhutan

■ It is nice to know that the inhabitants of the land of hidden treasures are striving to preserve their cultural heritage. This should serve as an example for those who are influenced by western culture, but who fail to recognise the golden culture that lies around them.
New Delhi — JITENDRA N. MISHRA

TAKEN TO TASK

All the 13 students involved in the ragging incident ("Horror Story", September 15) at Government College, Nattakam, have been permanently expelled from the college hostel. Eight have been dismissed from the college and two others have been suspended for a year. Three students who were witnesses to the incident but did nothing to prevent it were also suspended from the college for a month. The punishment is stiff, but it should serve as an example for all institutions in the country.
Kottayam — K.J. ALPHONSE
District Collector and District Magistrate

■ College authorities everywhere should take stern measures to stop students from indulging in ragging. Their tribe should be nipped in the bud.
Hyderabad — S. BHASKER

MURKY CONNECTIONS

It is unfortunate that corporate giants are used for political benefits ("Crime, Money and Politics", August 31). Your analysis shows political backing is more important than professionalism for the growth of any industrial house.
Bangalore — H.G. NAYAK

IDENTITY CRISIS

"American Born Confused Desis" (August 31), served to accentuate the identity crisis faced by the progeny of Indians settled in the US. However, one must acknowledge that the responsibility for it lies with the parents. They have embraced the material affluence of the US with mercenary zeal but their double standards preclude their coming to terms with the concomitant decadence intrinsic to American culture. This hypocritical "dollars-o.k.; dating-out" attitude has given rise to the present generation of US-Indians who are victims of the cross-currents of two vastly dissimilar cultures. And they find themselves confined to a disparate existence not unlike that of the proverbial dhobi ka gadha—na ghar ka, na ghat ka. It is to the credit of these youngsters that many of them have succeeded in transcending social pressures and joining the ranks of the US professional elite. Incidentally, as a concluding anecdote, I would like to point out the latest 'desi' acronym pertaining to perhaps the single largest segment of the ABCDs settled here: the "ABCDEFG—American born-confused desi, emigrated from Gujarat"! Howzat!!
Florida — ARINDAM DE

■ The erosion of family life among Americans is of concern but even Indian families here are not without problems. The protectionism of Indian parents results in a coddled youth. One should accept the fact that being Indo-American is a unique experience that only a small percentage of society can have.
Texas — SUBIR MUKERJEE

■ The glamour of a foreign country attracted many Indians to the US in the '60s. Their offsprings should aspire to develop a balanced cultural influence of both the East and the West.
New Delhi — LALIMA ANEJA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

3.4 cu ft

The average overhead baggage space of other airlines.

On an Air Canada flight, your hand baggage remains as uncrumpled as you.

That's because in our new Executive Class, we've installed cavernous stowage bins (not to mention more storage space for your jackets). They hold up to 4 times more than the usual ones, so there's no longer any need to sit with your hand baggage tucked under your seat, and your knees tucked under your chin.

Mind you, our bigger, better seats go a long way to preventing the latter. The space between the seats is greater, as is the recline. And

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's not just you that arrives uncrumpled from an Air Canada flight.

14.5 cu ft

The overhead baggage space in Air Canada Executive Class.

there's a leg and footrest that stretches to seven different positions. So, if you want to be laid back, you're in the right place.

To help you relax further, there's first class food and wine, including our special Nutri-cuisine of low fat, low salt, low sugar dishes.

And at the touch of a button, the new digital entertainment console in your armrest puts you in tune with up to 7 audio channels, plus films, many of them being first runs.

But, if you want to be left in peace, to snooze or work, we'd be the last to disturb you. You see, we want you to arrive at your destination unruffled and in perfect shape.

Just like your baggage.

EXECUTIVE CLASS. A BREATH OF FRESH AIR.

Air Canada

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/AC/7810

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's the Honda in it that makes it a Hero.

Behind the Hero Honda CD 100 is Honda's worldwide motorcycling leadership. Leadership born of the highest standards of design and engineering excellence.

The 4-stroke advantage.

Honda's technical leadership is evident in every aspect of the Hero Honda CD 100's 4-stroke engine. Complete fuel combustion ensures ease of maintenance, the phenomenal 80 km/litre* fuel-efficiency, apart from the clean, pollution-free exhaust. For kilometre after kilometre of trouble-free service.

Our favourite performance figure, though, is the lakhs of happy owners. Who make the Hero Honda CD 100 India's largest-selling bike.

HERO HONDA

You've got a Good thing Going!

*At 40 kmph/130 kg.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

March of the Gun

WITH every passing day, the nation watches in stupefied horror the bloodthirst overtaking this land. It is a steadily creeping madness. A psychosis of evil now afflicting what until yesteryear were considered to be impregnable and near-idyllic islands of sanity and serenity. Its symbol is the gun. Its victims: Muslims, Hindus, Harijans, Brahmins, women, children. We The People.

Never in the nation's history has it been held to ransom by the power of the gun as it is today. Punjab used to be an aberration. It was "out there" somewhere. About two years ago, as the murder and mayhem grew more sanguinary, the rest of the country, it seems, happily banished Punjab from the forefront of its collective consciousness and dumped it into some deep recess of institutional memory. An aberration in which terrorists firing at innocent bystanders and the police killing "dreaded terrorists" became a natural state of affairs.

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

Punjab's Kalashnikov culture, after all was, well, its own albatross. And that piteously troubled limb of India ceased to figure as an area in need of aggressive and tenacious initiative on the Government's agenda of problem-solving.

And this is the pity of it all. For the creeping Kalashnikovism soon wound its way into Kashmir's placid vale where city streets now ring out with the sound of burstfire, where a few hundred terrorists can paralyse hundreds of thousands with fear. It seems only yesterday that these descriptions were used for Afghanistan and Pakistan's north-west frontier. Today it could be India. The country is passing through one of the more violent periods in its history. But what has begun to compound it is the presence of the gun. The message seems to have gone out from Punjab, from Pakistan, and perhaps even from the LTTE which received its guns and training from the Indian Government, that a few thugs, a small gang of political vigilantes, religious zealots, city lumpens, can hold governments and the citizenry to ransom. They have learnt of the multiplier effect of the gun. Even kisan leader Mahendra Singh Tikait, who can command lakhs of peasants at the drop of a turban to surround cities and go on hunger strike for their demands, is now guarded by heavily armed men. Again, the gun as symbol. And doubly ironic because when a peaceful Gandhian tactic like a hunger strike is still being used successfully by Tikait's movement, wherefore should arise the need for the gun?

All this poses not just the danger of increased violence but also of anarchy. In a democracy, people defend their rights or assert themselves in a political cause or against the continuation of a government, with a show of numbers, either through demonstrations or at the ballot-box. But the gun has destroyed the importance of numbers or the political legitimacy of peaceful protests. Gun-toters do not need a following. They do not need to participate in debate or build constituencies—activities so essential to a democracy. And as guns grow in numbers the belief in the efficacy of democracy and the rule of law is bound to diminish even further.

It is not therefore without reason that criminals are being rapidly inducted into political parties of all shades in Uttar Pradesh, in Bihar, in Rajasthan, in Tamil Nadu. In the intimidation game, where is the need to sway the masses to one side or the other through speeches and party platforms and programmes of development when you've got guns? Who needs the ballot when you've got the bullet?

AND the bullets have started flying. The violence once confined to Punjab and Assam has spread to the unlikeliest of places, to Kota in Rajasthan, to Bodinayakanur in Tamil Nadu, to Sasaram in Bihar. The difference: it is not only spreading to areas which had been relatively free of tension before but also that in each case, religious, caste or political differences were subjected to the brutal arbitration of the gun.

In Kota, the violence stemmed from tensions that exploded when the Anant Chaturdashi religious procession passed through a narrow lane which has a concentration of the area's minority community. Processionists were attacked with acid bulbs and firearms. Sixteen dead. Hundreds injured. Who would have imagined even last year that the army would have to stage a flag march in Kota, of all places, to restore peace. In Tamil Nadu where two castes battled each other as well as the police with guns, 21 lost their lives. In Sasaram, Bihar, Jagjivan Ram's constituency: so far free of the state's gang warfare and communal tensions, last month it saw communal war, six killed, scores injured. In West Bengal: smuggling of dynamite sticks in thousands from coal-mines and the Haldia port by political hoodlums.

And the madness shows no sign of abating. Nor are there quick remedies. The country's stringent gun control laws, while they must be aggressively enforced, can only make a small dent in the proliferation of illegal weapons. The remedy lies with the politicians. They must publicly abjure violence and ensure that no one with a criminal record is ever given a gun licence or admitted into established political parties. And opposition-run states must not shield any political worker from the police if he is found to possess or have used an unlicensed weapon. Bringing an end to the gun culture is not a political agenda, it is a national agenda on which depends the survival of democracy. And if, in today's poisoned India, politicians cannot think beyond their political noses, let them act at least in their own long-term interest summed up by the age-old dictum that if you live by the gun, chances are you'll die by it too.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ONE BIG REASON BEHIND THE RECEN

The ACN Electronic Typewriter.

With the world's largest selling electronic typewriter technology. From Nakajima All, Japan. The world's largest manufacturer of electronic typewriters.

The technology that made Smith Corona, Olympia, Triumph Adler and Sears, international best-sellers. That's why ACN Electronic Typewriters bring you so many distinct advantages.

Ergonomic design. Optimum function efficiency. Right from the concave keyboard set in an easy-to-follow layout for simplicity of operation, to the superior print head that ensures unmatched print quality.

Unique features like the Spell-Check, that turn the electro typewriter int pages each t wide service

SUCC

Make AC
of the world's
of the world's

For a free brochure, write to: AUTO CONTROLS PVT. LTD. (A RANUTROL GROUP COMPANY). CORPORATE OFFICE □ F-85, Okhla Indl. Area, Phase-I, New Delhi-110 020. Tel: 683 6001. NORTH ZONE □ 2
New Delhi House, Barakhamba Road, New Delhi-110 001. Tel: 331 0137, 331 6464. □ 1108 Sector 33C, Chandigarh-160 031. Tel: 67107. □ Haridwar
Raja Park, Jaipur-302 004. Tel: 49 007. □ HIG-22, 1st Floor, Shivaji Nagar, Hoshangabad Road, Bhopal-462 016. Tel: 55 2478. SOUTH ZONE □ Flat No. A-4, 2nd Floor, Parsan Menere, 602, Anna Salai, Madras-60

Tel: 867121. □ Nat
WEST ZONE □ 11

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SUCCESS OF ACN ELECTRONIC TYPEWRITERS.

typewriter into a 'thinking' machine, giving you word-perfect pages each time. A failure rate as low as 0.05%. And a nation-wide service back-up, just in case.

Make ACN Electronic Typewriters your choice. And join 35% of the world's users of electronic typewriters. With the assurance of the world's best technology at your finger-tips.

ACN ELECTRONIC TYPEWRITERS FROM NAKAJIMA ALL, JAPAN.

INTERNATIONALLY, THE BEST.

TECHNOLOGY QUALITY SERVICE
RANUTROL GROUP

Tel: 867121. ☐ Nairoj Complex, 2nd Floor, 9, Residency Road, Richmond Circle, Bangalore-560 025. Tel: 21 2846, 21 4683, 21 5429. EAST ZONE ☐ Flat No. 5-1, Stephen Court, 18A, Park Street, Calcutta- 700 016. Tel: 29 1755. WEST ZONE ☐ 114, 1st Floor, A2 Building, Shah & Nahar Indl. Estate, Lower Parel, Bombay-400 013. Tel: 492 0297, 492 7125. ☐ 1012, Embassy Centre, Nariman Point, Bombay-400 021. Tel: 23 3629, 23 4424.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Enterprise/D/ACL/278

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Old Times Again

● There is almost a sense of deja vu about it. Unerringly, things in the Congress(I) tend to come full circle. The return of 'Dumpy' Akbar Ahmed to the parent fold is yet another step towards restoring the status quo ante in the party.

The ringing in of the old order began with the rehabilitation of R.K. Dhawan and Chenna Reddy. And now the one vital piece of the old structure that was still missing—the Sanjay brigade—has also been but back in place. Besides Dumpy, Sanjay's old cronies Kamal Nath and Ghulam Nabi Azad are also riding the highs. Kamal Nath is these days a regular visitor at the Prime Minister's Office, and Azad has regrown his clipped wings and can be heard making brave pronouncements once again. It's almost like old times.

Of course, it isn't nostalgia that has prompted all the recent moves. They are simply another sign that Rajiv is gearing for a no-holds-barred general elections. For Sanjay's men have the reputation of being streetfighters. In fact, Dumpy has been going around saying that in case the Congress(I) loses, Rajiv will need the street-smart skills of people like him—who've been out in the wilderness for long—to survive. And if it wins, they can still be put to good use. Rajiv will use them as counterpoints to offset the influence of the old guard in the party.

Rural Splendour

● Rajiv Gandhi promised that by the end of next year all rural areas will have telephone exchanges. The Government is certainly living up to its promise. In Chhatarpur-Mehrauli, the rural area on the capital's outskirts. But, kisans don't live in this area any more. Here exist the swanky farmhouses of Delhi's elite—of Rajiv Gandhi, Satish Sharma, Martand Singh, Teji Bachchan and Lt-Governor Romesh Bhandari. This playing ground for some 1,000 VIPs is now equipped with a special electronic telephone exchange, courtesy the Mahanagar Telephone Nigam.

The area was earlier fed by the Hauz Khas exchange which also services Nehru Place, one of Delhi's largest commercial centres. Here, residents have been waiting for over four years for phone connections and are told they may have to wait another four. South Delhi residents quip they will petition Bhandari to declare the Mehrauli VIP complex a commercial area so they can move their businesses there and get priority connections. It's not wealth they're criticising, it's privilege.

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

Youth Power

● The consequences of mobilising youth power can sometimes be unnerving, as Congress(I) politicians discovered last fortnight.

About 100 Youth Congress leaders were invited to Delhi for high-level pep talks and organisational meetings in preparation for the polls. The crowning moment of the confab was a sumptuous breakfast at Rajiv Gandhi's residence, followed by meetings with Congress(I) bigwigs.

The exercise was aimed at getting senior partymen to brief the youth activists on how to fan out in the countryside and which electoral issues to stress. The briefers included AICC(I) General Secretary V.N. Gadgil, Congress(I) MP, N.K.P. Salve and Defence Minister K.C. Pant.

But, the tables were turned. The heavyweights found themselves at the receiving end. A lively lot, the youth brigade converted the opportunity to ask hard questions—in the manner of journalists—of their official briefers. The interlocutors asked probing questions about why prices were out of control and how they should answer the electorate on this issue as well as about the Government's stand on Sri Lanka. Pant faced some of the toughest questioning on defence kickbacks, including recent developments on the Bofors issue. He reportedly heaved a sigh of relief when it was all over.

Advertising Advice

● You know for sure that the ruling party has begun an election campaign in earnest when advertising executives start travelling with the prime minister for whistlestop rallies. Last fortnight, as Rajiv helicoptered through western Uttar Pradesh, the gaggle of bureaucrats which travels with him—among them G. Parthasarathy and Mani Shankar Aiyar—was accompanied by Arun "Bunny" Nanda, chief of the Bombay-based ad agency, Rediffusion.

Nanda, who has created slogans and designed previous poll campaigns, has been flitting between the offices of Rajiv and Satish Sharma. Besides helping in the campaign design, Nanda is also closely involved in the planning of electoral strategy. But the influence of the ad whiz kids riles politicians no end. A senior minister has complained that incorrect assessments by the ad boys and Rajiv's supercrats during the West Bengal and Tamil Nadu polls had produced undue optimism with disastrous results. Other ministers feel that as politicians they have a better view of the situation than do ad men.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LIVE LIFE KINGSIZE

O&M/102

FOUR SQUARE
KINGS

All the taste, all the way

STATUTORY WARNING : CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

215 R PIP • 53 cms Full Square Picture Tube • Picture in Picture • Dynamic On-Screen Display • Action Freezing Facility • 32 Function Remote Control • Digital Technology

CORE 208 E • 51 cms Blackstripe Picture Tube • Auto Contrast & Brightness Control. (Bright or dark, the picture stays sharp) • 12 channels with Hi-Tec features

5151 • 51 cms Large Screen Colour TV • Crystal Clear Picture & Sound • 8 channels with built-in SMPS & many more facilities

CORE 210 R • 51 cms Blackstripe Picture Tube • Hi-Tec Directional Sound System • Remote Control CTV with a host of features • Off-Timer • On -Screen Display & Mute

2087 R • 51 cms Blackstripe Picture Tube • Hi-Tec STEREO styling • Features like-High Sound, On-Screen Display, On/Off Timer & Clock, all in one CTV • Multi System Facility

212 R • 53 cms Corner to Corner Excitement • Full Square Picture Tube • Increased Contrast ratio with Superb Image Depth in picture • Off Timer • On-Screen Display & Remote Control Facilities

BRING

POUSH VC 114 89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

• 32 rp) lities atures off
th in

BRING HOME THE LEADER VIDEOCON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Who says stripes are Parallel ?

The lines that take you through.

Distinguished Affordable
Stylish & Handsome
Of course !

Dash

SHIRTS & TROUSERS The only way to dress

Mfd & Mktd By DWARKA MEN'S WEAR, Lane No. 8, Mohalla Ram Nagar, Gandhi Nagar, Delhi-110031. Tel : 2201782-83, 2213886

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

• The Congress is just like the Ganga. It is pure and can never be dirtied. Sometimes, dead bodies of cows and donkeys also float in the Ganga, like V.P. Singh did for a while. But that does not make the Ganga impure.

■ KALPNATH RAI, minister of state for power, at a press conference

• It was not difficult to stop buses. But we refrained because we knew that we had to return to power in another four months, and we did not want to be saddled with broken buses.

■ V.P. SINGH on the Bharat bandh, addressing a public rally

• I believe everybody in the Janata Dal has a rainbow range, from ultra-violet to infra-red.

■ MANEKA GANDHI in Indian Express

• Terrorism will stop once it is not read about. That way nobody will come to know of a bomb blast...

■ FAROOQ ABDULLAH in The Times of India

• Kashmir is no issue. Kashmir is ours and there is no question about it.

■ RAJIV GANDHI

• My peer group has extended from hundreds of sarpanchs to a dozen chief ministers.

■ MANI SHANKAR AIYAR on Panchayati Raj and Nagarpalika bills, in The Illustrated Weekly of India

• This type of thing only happens when it is illegal business. One reads about this or sees it in the movies. One really doesn't believe it happens in real life.

■ NUSLI WADIA, on the plot to kill him, in Newstrack

• We have constantly worked at this strategy: replace foreign operations in the country and the Government is bound to support you.

■ RAVI KANT RUIA of Essar, in Bombay

• I have always believed that if I am destined to captain India I will. At the same time it would not bother me at all, if I am not made captain.

■ KRISHNAMACHARI SRIKKANTH in Sportstar

• I have never ever planned any happening in my life. And life has been good to me without planning. So why spoil things now by planning.

■ AMITABH BACHCHAN in Sunday

• So what if I look like V.P. Singh? To tell you a joke, people say that in pyjama-kurta, I look like Rajiv Gandhi. My face is a big mystery.

■ ALOK NATH on his role in Boond-Boond in The Sunday Observer

KEEP TRACK of the Computer Revolution

Follow

India's Largest Selling Computer magazine COMPUTERS TODAY is relied upon by the whole computer community for its:

- Coverage of the latest developments in India and abroad, in a lucid style.
- Authentic writing on technology/market trends—What's working well, how?; and what's not, why?
- Hot news of men and machines that matter
- Accent on user experiences—successes and pitfalls

If you are even remotely connected with computers in your business or profession, or just a technology enthusiast, Computers Today is for you. To read and stay up-to-date.

Book your annual subscription today and save 20%. Just mail your cheque/demand draft for Rs. 115 (add Rs. 5 for outstation cheques, i.e. outside Delhi) along with your name and address to:

LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD.,
P.O. Box 29, New Delhi 110 001

From the Publishers of
INDIA TODAY

Computers TODAY

You could turn obsolete without it!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

DIVINE CATCH

■ A regular bidder at the fish market near Coimbatore in Tamil Nadu, Hameed was not too excited about the latest catch. Of late the prices had been a bit steep, and some of the fish smelled stale. But back in his shop, when Hameed started scaling the fish, he got quite a start. One he fervently hoped would tilt the scales of fortune in his favour. On the side of a small aila fish Hameed spied a strange Arabic inscription. He promptly consulted the local maulvi who proclaimed that the Arabic message read: There is no God except Allah.

Though the message was clear, but for Hameed the medium is what matters. The prize fish is now displayed in a place of honour in his shop, and draws large crowds of the faithful who come to inspect the 'holy' fish and buy some of the ordinary ones. It transpires that the fish was caught near Man-galore. So what remains the key question is whether the inscription is the work of an ordinary mortal or of God?

BUS BLUES

■ For the adamant clerk of the Rajasthan State Road Transport Corporation it was a question of increment or bust. But when he started a legal battle against the corporation in the court of the Kota judicial magistrate in 1987 for increments that he felt were his due but were not given to him, little did he realise that he would be faced with an altogether different choice: increment or bus.

That's exactly what happened. The case was decided in his favour and the corporation was ordered to compensate him to the tune of Rs 45,000. As often happens in government offices and public sector undertakings, this corporation too ignored the court order. But the magistrate, it turned out, was made of sterner stuff. He ordered one of the corporation's buses parked in a depot in the town to be impounded and handed over to the clerk as compensation. Now the clerk is literally in the driver's seat, but he would still rather have just his money.

CLEANSED APPEAL

■ Till recently there was nothing extraordinary about the Hanuman temple in Miraj, near Sangli in Maharashtra. But now pilgrims from all over the state are making a beeline for the temple. The reason: the idol shed 200 kg weight and revealed its true simian proportions.

Hanuman had not been affected by the latest fitness fad and was not on a diet. But over the years devotees that had thronged the temple had rubbed layers and layers of an oily yellow paste on the idol, which accounted for its mammoth proportions. When this thick coating of sindoor was removed, the pujari, whose ancestors were also priests at the same temple, recognised the now clean idol as the one which had been installed by Samarth Ramdas, the guru of Chhatrapati Shivaji, 400 years ago. Hanuman and the association with Shivaji combine have given the temple a strong emotive appeal and since then, the pilgrims have not stopped coming.

GOD LUCK

■ What chance do ordinary mortals have if they compete with the gods for a lottery prize? Not many, if the results of a lottery for Indira Vikas Patra buyers in Trivandrum are any indication. The much-coveted prize of a trip to Europe for two and a Maruti car went to Lord Krishna, the presiding deity of the famous Guruvayoor temple. The temple had invested in Indira Vikas Patras bought in the name of the Lord.

But problems arose when the deity actually won the prize. Would he want to travel to Europe cramped in economy class with 350 mortals? And who would he take along on the trip-for-two? Or would the temple pujari stand in for the Lord? The temple administration took the easiest way out. It decided to encash the prize. But will it keep the Maruti car or change it for a van? At least then, the temple would have an Omni-present transport.

THE WATER-LOO

■ The citizens of Bhadrak Municipality in Orissa really had a reason to celebrate recently: the public toilets constructed by the municipality were finally being inaugurated. But amid the euphoria some hard feelings persisted. The chairman of the municipality and his deputy wanted to inaugurate the building. The crafty vice-chairman out-manoeuvred his boss: he arrived well before the scheduled inauguration time, and, cheered on by a vociferous group of supporters, threw the toilets open to the public. A little later the chairman arrived with his men, and not to be outdone, went through the motions of yet another inauguration. He too waxed eloquent about the great service he was doing to his constituents. Political oneupmanship of this sort stinks, but the people of Bhadrak are happy that they now don't have to scoot all over the countryside.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Beautiful ideas for a beautiful home!

Classic workmanship. That tells the story of expertise handed down through generations to inspire you to decorate, furnish, and dress-up at your imaginative and appealing best!

NAA/D/UPEC-89

GANGOTRI

At: New Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta, Bangalore, Hyderabad, Nagpur, Bhopal, Allahabad, Agra, Lucknow & Kanpur.

UPEC

U.P. EXPORT CORPORATION LTD.

(A Govt. of U.P. Undertaking)

B-27, Sarvodaya Nagar, Kanpur-208 005 (India)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The view left us breathless.

I hailed the jewel in the lotus.

Because that's how the fort's dome looked, against the amber-red glow of the sunset sky.

It was a photographer's dream.

And I clicked away.

As the light shifted, the sun broke into a thousand pieces.

Reflected by the monument's windows and brass-covered minarets.

Oriental music wafted in the air.

Monumental folly

Along with the buzz of flies.

Hovering over piles of rotting food.

In which cows and pigs searched for a meal.

Then, a man—obviously a tourist—walked up to throw more fruit-peel on the mound of garbage.

The pigs surged forward...

Help protect the heritage to which you belong

As you travel, you discover.

India's golden heritage, unparalleled anywhere else in the world.

5,000 years of history in countless

पर्यटन विभाग भारत सरकार

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

So did the stench.

forts, monuments and shrines.
And the splendorous diversity of nature.
In myriad hues and colours.
Don't remain silent when someone defaces a monument, shows disrespect to a place of worship or pilgrimage, or in any other way damages or dirties the surroundings.

Persuade him.
Prevent him.
Report him.
Help protect your priceless heritage.
It's the only one you have.

We can & We will
Keep India Beautiful

Department of Tourism Government of India

HTA 6239

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Raising the Stakes

THE symbolism was self-evident in the fortnight that was, a flurry of images that are a tangible testimonial to the times. A sharp and sudden rise in prices of essential commodities; a birthday bash bestowing Devi Lal with a larger-than-life political stature; an air crash that exhumed troubling questions about air safety; and the release of suspected terrorists to save the life of a Punjab policeman's son.

BHAWAN SINGH

The sharp spurt in prices has become a highly sensitive political issue with grave ramifications for the ruling party.

Collectively, they convey a conclusion that is inescapable; the stakes are now appreciably higher than ever before. By itself, the spurt in prices could have been dismissed as an annual occurrence. But with elections barely three months away, it has become a highly sensitive political issue with grave ramifications for the ruling party.

Till now, the one area the Rajiv Gandhi Government could legitimately label a success was the state of the Indian economy. But by inexplicably allowing prices of essential items to get out of hand, it is the Government's management—or mismanagement—of the economy that has now come into serious question. More vital, it has gifted the Opposition parties with the one electoral weapon they badly lacked—a live and literal gut-issue.

Devi Lal's birthday rally has raised the stakes in the Opposition's leadership crisis.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

The gathering of opposition eagles at a New Delhi rally may have been to celebrate Devi Lal's 75th birthday, but the speeches contained a new and emotive edge: the price hike and the government's inability to control it. In the Opposition context, however, Devi Lal's birthday bash contained equally worrying signals. The efforts that went into making the rally a success underlined the fact that Devi Lal was projecting himself as the Opposition strongman. Clearly, the opposition leadership stakes have been raised to a new level.

So, undeniably, has the war of nerves between Punjab's terrorist gangs and the state police. The recent strategy adopted by the terrorists—kidnapping children of police officers—has added a dangerous new dimension to the problem. But no less alarming than the official response: the release of suspected terrorists in exchange for a kidnapped child. The classic response to terrorist threats in a hostage situation is not to give in. By violating that code, the Punjab Police may have set a dangerous precedent. Again, the stakes have been raised to new levels.

NAMAS BHOJANI

The Vayudoot crash near Pune has raised questions about the airline's unbridled expansion.

Similarly, the crash of a Vayudoot aircraft near Pune has raised troubling questions about the state of the country's aviation industry and its commitment to safety procedures. The latest disaster is the third in one year and the second for Vayudoot. This time it was not an ageing Avro that crashed but a brand new Dornier. The cause of the crash is still being speculated on. But by its unharnessed expansion, Vayudoot has clearly raised the odds on air safety to unacceptable levels.

The star-studded extravaganza injected a dose of commercialism into the athletic arena.

BHAWAN SINGH

Even the sporting arena witnessed the raising of stakes to new highs. The star-spangled athletic extravaganza in Delhi injected glamour to the otherwise drab sports scene. But by raising the commercial stakes—Carl Lewis and Co. do not run for anything but big money—the organisers raised uncomfortable questions. Could that money have been better spent on Indian track prospects?

The lessons are evident. Upping the ante is all very well. But raising the stakes for others also means raising it for yourself.

—DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CRISIS ON PRICES

SUDDENLY there is a new battle-cry shaking the political firmament as the nation lurches towards the elections. It isn't the Bofors gun, it isn't HDW submarines, it isn't Westland helicopters, it isn't even the prime minister's "wayward cronies" or their alleged foreign bank accounts. It's prices.

Normally there would be nothing unusual about inflation becoming an issue before an election. The Opposition tried that with some success in 1967, and Indira Gandhi demonstrated the lethal effect of one solitary slogan in 1980: the rise in onion prices. Now the Opposition has sugar. It also has edible oils, pulses, rice, wheat, tea, clothing, garlic, even salt and pepper. "Sugar is the scandal of the decade, it is bigger than Bofors," gloats Janata Dal Campaign Committee Chairman George Fernandes. Echoes an ebullient Ajit Singh, secretary-general of the party, just back from a four-day trip to Devaria and Gorakhpur: "I hammered on the prices issue everywhere. The crowds responded wonderfully."

That the price rise was quickly becoming the spearhead of the opposition thrust was evident last fortnight in the utterances of its stalwarts. A rare sense of purpose was evident at the massive rally in Delhi on Devi Lal's 75th birthday as one speaker after another took the Government apart on the prices issue—leaving Bofors in the shadow. Even V.P. Singh, whose speeches over the past two years have centred on corruption, switched lanes. "Those who spent all their lives in palaces," he said, jerking his thumb at South Block, "would never know how the poor and middle classes survive today."

At recent BJP rallies the slogan that evoked the most response was "Rajiv tere shasan mein, kooda bik gaya rashan mein." (In your reign Rajiv, garbage is sold in ration shops.) The Janata Dal had already announced a movement to raid sugar godowns, sell the stocks at Rs 6.50 a

Illustration by AJIT NINAN & ANIL SHARMA

* % increase in prices between Mar. 1985 and May 1989 as measured by the official Wholesale Price Index (1970-71 = 100)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

kg (compared to the prevailing open market price of Rs 10-11) and disburse the proceeds among farmers. The national council of the CPI observed a protest week from September 27 against "the intolerable and scandalous situation".

The mood was reflected in the Gujarat Assembly too—which was thrown into confusion last fortnight as opposition MLAs marched in carrying placards with slogans against escalating prices. They even brought along balloons and bottles filled with sugar, groundnut oil and salt, with the 1977 prices—when the Janata Party was in power—written on them, and placed them on the Speaker's table.

The Opposition calculates that while people are cynical about corruption, inflation is something they will automatically blame the Government for. And as public resentment rises as steeply as the prices, this seems to be sound logic. Talk of sugar turning bitter or dal getting thinner appeals to the common man buried under the price spiral. Says Lutf Ali, 41, a tailor in Delhi: "I haven't seen with my own eyes who has taken the Bofors kickback so I don't know who to punish for that. But for these criminal prices I will settle the account at the next polls."

Official price indices don't reflect real inflation because of inadequate weightage for food items.

Charts by B.K. SHARMA

Similar signals come from elsewhere in the country. Says Brij Mohan Srivastava, a Congress(I) leader from Bhopal: "It is bound to be the most vital election issue. We must do something or it will cost the party dearly." For Basant Bisht, 28, a saleswoman and wife of a railway officer in Delhi, the polls will be a time to settle scores with those responsible for punching a hole in her purse. "The Government doesn't seem bothered. But I'll have my say in the elections," she declares.

Unfortunately for the people, and the ruling party, while the overall official price index has not risen that sharply (see chart), the increase has pertained to food, specifically to commodities essential to the eating habits of the major ethnic groups. So if Punjabis have seen the cost of rajmah and mah ki dal virtually double in two years, the Gujaratis have watched prices of groundnuts and groundnut oil—an integral part of their diet—go through the roof. The south has been hit hard by the sharp jump in the prices of rice and tuvar dal; in Kerala, the tab for

THE OPPOSITION

"Each time you mention the issue of inflation the crowds respond wonderfully."
AJIT SINGH
Janata Dal Secretary-General

"Sugar is the scandal of the decade. It is bigger than Bofors."
GEORGE FERNANDES
Janata Dal Campaign Committee Chairman

"Now the Government will try anything to reduce prices but it won't fool people."
INDRAJIT GUPTA
MP, Communist Party of India

THE CONGRESS(I)

"To bring down prices is my biggest challenge in 30 years of public life."
SUKH RAM
Minister of State for Food and Civil Supplies

"Inflation will be a major election issue. But what solutions does the Opposition offer?"
N.K.P. SALVE
MP, Congress(I)

"The prices are a problem but we will be able to bring down the graph quickly."
GHULAM NABI AZAD
AICC(I) General Secretary

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SUGAR

A Tale of Bungling

NOTHING highlights the Government's failure in controlling prices more strikingly than the disaster on the sugar front. It has, indeed, become the most visible target of popular resentment. No wonder then that as the price of sugar sky-rocketed, one ministry blamed another, the Government blamed hoarders and speculators, the industry and trade blamed each other, and both blamed the Government. Still, the hamhanded handling of imports and supplies was also responsible. Even ruling party MPs like N.K.P. Salve concede there's been bungling.

What makes this all the more shocking is that with the sugar industry tightly controlled, monitoring supplies is not difficult. The Government not only determines the proportion to be sold at controlled prices through fair price shops, it also determines the amounts released for open market sales.

Till April, exports were being talked about when the country should have imported. There was bitter wrangling within the Government about when to import and how. It acted too late. Result: prices shot up from Rs 6.50 a kg to Rs 9 in two months and then zoomed to Rs 12 per kg in the first week of September.

In January-February, sugar production was estimated at 102 lakh tonnes, leaving a 1 lakh tonne surplus for export. But with gur and khandsari prices reigning high—for reasons which continue to baffle the Government—more cane was diverted to this sector. By April, production estimates had been revised to 87 lakh tonnes—short of the demand of 99 lakh tonnes. In early June, the prime minister assured the industry that he would consider imports of up to 5 lakh tonnes.

The decision to import was, however, delayed by differences between ministries. Says Sukh Ram, minister of state for food and civil supplies: "The Commerce Ministry refused to get involved in sugar imports. Even if it's dirty business, someone had to do it. We did it despite our lack of experience." Counters Commerce Minister Dinesh Singh: "Since the Food and Civil Supplies Ministry couldn't decide when and how much sugar to import, we felt it would be better if they import sugar."

When the Government finally decided to import 2 lakh tonnes of sugar late last month, the price had gone up to between $ 518 (Rs 8,550) and $ 521 (Rs 8,600) a tonne, versus $ 350 (Rs 5,775) in June. Even this is higher than the spot price on the London market—$ 430 (Rs 7,098) excluding freight—because the Government wants deliveries by October 20. If imports had been made three months earlier, the country would have saved nearly Rs 60 crore in hard currency.

Worse, the Government even vacillated on how to go about importing. On August 25, three days after the clearance from the Finance Ministry came, offers for imports of 2 lakh tonnes of sugar were invited from companies registered with the State Trading Corporation. Before the contracts could be finalised, however, Sukh Ram overruled a committee headed by his own ministry's Secretary, B.B. Mahajan, and allowed two non-registered parties to bid.

One of these, Wheel International, offered 2 lakh tonnes at a landed price of $ 460 (Rs 7,593) a tonne against over $ 500 (Rs 8,253) a tonne offered by the others. Accordingly, it was given a letter of intent on September 7. But since its credentials were not known, the Finance Ministry imposed conditions. One was that a bid bond (or a bank guarantee) equal to 3 per cent of the contract value would have to be given. Wheel International was given more than four extensions of deadlines, between September 9 and September 25, for giving the bond. It hasn't yet. (Meanwhile, on September 21, the ministry awarded contracts for 2 lakh tonnes sugar imports to the registered suppliers whose offers had earlier been ignored.)

Wheel International, headed by a 31-year-old "academic" A.N. Gopal, is a proprietorship company that has done no business so far. Is Gopal fronting for people close to the ruling party as the Opposition alleges? "Never," he says. Why hasn't he fulfilled the conditions of the contract? "I'm trying. I'm confident I will be given a contract to import at least 50,000 tonnes of sugar."

Sukh Ram claims he is no longer interested in a non-registered party. "Once bitten, twice shy," he told INDIA TODAY. But Secretary Mahajan differs:

> Sugar exports were considered when the country should have been importing. The decision to import came too late. Prices zoomed.

"If the firm gives us the bid bond, we can still consider awarding it a contract." Such confusion persists.

And what cannot be denied is that every time Ram talked of imports, the local prices of sugar—instead of coming down in anticipation of higher supplies—went up. As an industry source says: "It was like a strip-tease show. The Government would disclose its import plans in bits and pieces and the industry and trade would clap in joy."

Industry and trade sources say the Government released excessive quantities of sugar in the first half of the year. Also, in late-August, it departed from past practice and announced releases for September and October at one go. And though both Dussehra and Diwali fall in October, the release initially announced for the month was the same as for September. "Why did the Government wait till the third week of September to announce higher releases for October?" queries a trader.

Now, the Government has persuaded the industry to sell to traders at

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

How the Government Goofed

Jan-Feb: Industry projects a record 1989-90 sugar output of 100 lakh tonnes and calls for exports.

April: The Government permits the Commerce Ministry to export one lakh tonnes. Ironically, the industry is now talking of a deficit, not a surplus. Production figure is scaled down to 87 lakh tonnes.

June 13: Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi gives the sugar industry an assurance that up to five lakh tonnes would be imported if the need is felt. World sugar prices: around Rs 5,775 a tonne.

August 24: Differences crop up between Commerce Minister Dinesh Singh and Minister of State for Food and Civil Supplies Sukh Ram about who should import sugar. The onus falls on the Food Ministry.

August 25: First offers invited from suppliers registered with the State Trading Corporation.

August 28: Ram overrules an official committee's recommendation to award import contracts to registered suppliers and decides to give non-registered parties a chance to bid.

September 1-7: As officialdom dilly-dallies on awarding contracts, speculators rule the roost. Open market prices of sugar shoot up from Rs 9 a kg to Rs 12.

September 21: The Government awards import contracts for two lakh tonnes to registered suppliers, who'd earlier been ignored. World sugar prices have gone up. But India has to pay even more for quick deliveries: over Rs 8,500 a tonne. Result: The Government ends up paying nearly Rs 60 crore more than it would have if imports had been made in June.

The Government has promised to provide sugar at Rs 9 a kg during the festival season but it is not certain.

Rs 775 a quintal (ex-factory)—roughly Rs 9 a kg retail—from September 23 to November 15. But that's hardly creditworthy. For, the ex-factory price was barely Rs 600 a quintal (about Rs 7 retail) earlier this year.

Amazingly, the Government opposed the plans of the Maharashtra Sahakari Sakhar Karkhana Sangh, an association of sugar cooperatives, to sell sugar to the state Government at Re 1 a kg cheaper than the stipulated price of Rs 7.75 (ex-factory), the sangh's Chairman, Shivajirao Patil, alleged in Bombay.

"Is the Government then serious about ensuring that sugar sells at Rs 9 a kg in the festive season? Has it not encouraged the industry to profiteer?" Sukh Ram was asked at a press conference in New Delhi. Exasperated, he exclaimed: "Your minds are set." He then breathed fire against speculators. Clearly, the Government reacted late—laying it open to charges of deliberately delaying decisions. And the air is thick with allegations of pay-offs. Janata Dal leader George Fernandes claims the industry and trade have been allowed to make "illegitimate" profits exceeding Rs 2,000 crore.

A spokesman for the Indian Sugar Mills Association, on the other hand, insists that this year the industry will earn only "normal" profits. The truth probably lies in between. Industry sources say that at least Rs 40 crore has passed to political parties. The figure does not seem far-fetched—in the first week of September alone, the industry and trade earned an additional Rs 30 crore on account of the rise in prices.

What cannot be denied is that this Government has been kind to the sugar industry. For instance, it has reduced the proportion of sugar to be distributed through fair price shops from 65 per cent in 1984-85 to 55 per cent. And after taking into account incentive schemes, the industry sells on an average only 40 per cent of its output at controlled rates.

Opposition leaders like Madhu Dandavate and Ajit Singh say the Government has decided to further reduce this proportion to 30 per cent. When that happens, the nexus between the sugar industry and the powers-that-be will have grown that much stronger.

—PARANJOY GUHA THAKURTA

tapioca, the nutritious staple of the poor, has doubled to Rs 2 a kg in just one year. And who isn't hit by the rise in sugar and tea prices?

Households across the land are beginning to cut corners to live with the new realities. There is some truth in the government argument that the peak annual inflation in the last five years came in drought-hit 1987. But before middle class households could recover from that phase, this year's inflation hit them.

The spurt in prices over the past few weeks has altered family budgets. Food now is the biggest single item. But clothing, education and transport are not getting cheaper either. It's not as if middle class earners are eating less. It's just that they are cutting down on frills. The island of prosperity is shrinking. Savings are down too.

SAYS S.B. Kapoor, a well-paid consulting engineer: "There's constant grumbling in the household about prices now. Savings have evaporated." Aruna Sharma, a Delhi schoolteacher who supplements her engineer husband's income also has to cut corners. "With sugar, the trick is to make each kilogram last longer," she says. For Sharada Mathur, a well-to-do housewife in Dehra Dun, higher prices mean unpleasant adjustments like not buying fruit, buying only seasonal vegetables, and cheaper oils in place of cholesterol-free sunflower oil. For Jaya Bhandari, a travel agency executive in the capital, it means cutting down on meats and parties. Savings? "You must be joking," she says.

And in Lucknow, Gopal Tandon, 42, a cloth merchant in Nirala Market, reacts angrily to the suggestion that businessmen like him aren't hit by inflation. "I eat the same dal, oil and vegetables. The prices have made balancing the household budget impossible." Warns Kamla Malhotra, general secretary of the Delhi BJP women's wing: "Rising prices are the major reason for domestic fights. Inflation is breaking up homes."

With the reasonably well-to-do having to watch their budgets, the fate of the lower middle classes is obviously far worse. So if Jaya Bhandari has to cut down on parties, Durgaben, whose husband earns Rs 2,500 a month from his small plywood business in Ahmedabad, rues that she cannot even afford ordinary hospitality. "Recently we refused tea to a carpenter who came to do some work in the house," she says with visible anguish. For those still lower down the income ladder the squeeze is murderous. "Life has become impossible for people like me," says Ayaz Ahmed, an unemployed

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SAVE 50% ON THE COST OF YOUR FILM

SAMURAI X4.0
INTEGRATED TECHNOLOGY

SAMURAI
3X ZOOM COMPACT SLR CAMERA

CAMERA
GRAND PRIX '88

The new Yashica Samurai X4.0 and X3.0 with the 'double' film format.
So you get twice as many shots. That's 72 sharp, clear, crisp photographs from a 36 exposure film.

Plus, built-in electronic zoom. 25-75 mm with Samurai X3.0 and 25-100 mm with Samurai X4.0.

Yashica Samurai. The world's first vertically held, fully automatic compact SLR, with built-in auto-flash, single and continuous auto-focus modes and many more state-of-the-art features,

It's got to be

YASHICA

KYOCERA

Buy it in

DUBAI

..for less!

Sole Distributors: Jashanmal National Co. (UAE), P.O. Box 1545, Dubai, UAE,
Tel: 212579, Tlx: 45705 JASHAN EM, Fax: 212651
Abu Dhabi - Tel: 335569, Bahrain - Tel: 251431, Kuwait - Tel: 2412797,
OCA0 In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

YASHICA IS A TRADEMARK OF KYOCERA CORPORATION.

Your YASHICA comes with a GUARAN

Post this coupon to Jashanmal's, P.O. Box 1545, Dubai, U.A.E. and we'll mail you a Yashica Samurai Brochure

Name

Address

INCA-JA

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Lucknow graduate. "Harder than getting a job is managing the train fare to go for an interview or postage expenses to send in applications."

Still, government spokesmen argue that price indices have hardly risen to merit much consternation. They say that the independent Centre for Monitoring the Indian Economy projects that the consumer price index will go up by 9 per cent this financial year, against 6.3 per cent in 1988-89 and 10.1 per cent the year before.

RK GUPTA

Ram Dulari, 40, is the wife of Babu Lal, a factory worker in Ghaziabad earning Rs 1,200 a month.

"Forget good education, now I can't even give sweet tea to my children. Dal and sugar are luxuries we can afford only occasionally."

But for the housewife these are mere statistics. The reality is different: sugar prices doubled from Rs 6.50 a kg in July to Rs 13 in early September to later settle near Rs 11; prices of all the dals have risen substantially; prices of edible oils have shot up by more than 25 per cent within the year; that of milk by nearly 13 per cent; all the non-vegetarian foods—meat, poultry, eggs and fish—cost 20 per cent more in the span of a year.

Little wonder then that the Opposition is going for the kill on the prices issue. Even the Congress(I) finds it hard to defend itself. Party MP and Ninth Finance Commission Chairman N.K.P. Salve sounds facile saying an annual inflation of under 10 per cent is "very good indeed compared to China's 27 per cent, Mexico's 70.5 per cent and Peru's 1,722 per cent". But even he concedes that inflation in India could have been less "had the Government observed greater discipline in fiscal management". Rueing the fact that the Government "goofed up on sugar", he admits: "Inflation is certainly going to be a major election issue. I also admit that the common man is in a bad shape. But what solutions does the Opposition offer?"

Articulate defence, but which ruling party wants to be on the defensive on the eve of elections? Particularly when it has all along been claiming that, whatever else it may be faulted on, its record on the economy is remarkable. So when prices climbed inexorably, they questioned the Government's proudest claim. And immediately, the panic in the Government was palpable.

PARTYMEN had, in fact, been warning the Government for some time now about an imminent price crisis. Scores of Congress(I) MPs had written to the high command, complaining of growing disaffection in their constituencies. Key party general secretaries and chief ministers—including Narayan Datt Tiwari in Uttar Pradesh and Sharad Pawar in Maharashtra—had also suggested that rising prices be tackled on a war-footing. The prime minister got worried and, according to insiders, angry.

His indignation was evident at a meeting of the Cabinet Committee for Political Affairs held last fortnight. This was followed by a meeting of senior secretaries led by the Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister B.G. Deshmukh and Cabinet Secretary T.N. Seshan. As tempers became frayed, accusations flew back and forth. "Do you want the Government to be toppled?" a top bureaucrat indignantly asked officials of the Food and Civil Supplies Ministry.

In the eye of the storm, Sukh Ram, minister of state for food and civil supplies was apologetic: "To bring down prices is the biggest challenge I have faced in 30 years of public life. If my party suffers because of prices it will be my biggest failure."

Within the space of three days, seven high-level meetings were held as a panic stricken government thrashed out a fire-fighting strategy. A high-level crisis management group was set up. The group met in Seshan's office every morning to manage the price line of five commodities: sugar, rice tea, edible oils

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Prices of pulses have doubled in two years due to fall in output and bad planning. Vegetarians have had to ration their protein source.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IDBI Capital Bonds An attractive instrument for exemption from Capital Gains Tax.

- Available at par throughout the year.
- Exemption from Capital Gains tax under Section 54E of the Income Tax Act, 1961.
- Exemption from Wealth tax under Section 5(1) (xvie) of the Wealth Tax Act, 1957
- Income tax benefit under Section 80L.
- Interest at 9% p.a. payable half yearly.
- At the investor's option, interest for the full period of 3 years can be paid in advance on discounted basis.
- No deduction of tax at source.
- Outstation cheques accepted and cost of collection will be borne by IDBI.

For further details contact the nearest IDBI office or write to Manager

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK OF INDIA

IDBI TOWER, Cuffe Parade, Colaba, Bombay 400 005.

Sobhagya-B/IDBI/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Sa... Digitized by eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

and wheat and briefed the prime minister directly. High government officials spoke of "subdued optimism" on the prices front within the "crucial period of the next 60 days". Suddenly, the action on the prices-front hogged prime time on Doordarshan and All India Radio. Broadly, the Government's crisis plan includes the following:

- Import essential commodities and dump them in local markets to bring down prices.
- Cajole (if necessary, arm-twist) industry and trade to offload stocks.
- Aggressively blame hoarders, speculators and smugglers for the price rise, nab some and publicise such raids.

Yet, even as the crisis management machinery worked overtime, many even within the Government asked what had gone wrong so suddenly? That too just when the government experts were painting such a positive picture of the economy. And they were doing so with good reason: the country had just had a second bountiful monsoon in as many years; industrial growth rates were creditable; the corporate mood was obviously buoyant and upbeat.

Vanaspati prices rose as the Government wanted to ensure proper returns to farmers. Now they have gone out of hand.

One possible answer: thanks to mounting budget deficits, too much money had been pumped into the system in recent months. This is how this could have led to inflation. When the Government can't balance its books, it hawks so-called treasury bills to the Reserve Bank of India (RBI). The bank pays for these bills by printing extra currency notes. In theory, the Government is supposed to buy back these bills at some future date. In practice, it hasn't being doing so for several years. So each time the Government runs up a deficit, the RBI is forced to print notes. The upshot: too much money chasing too few goods.

However, not everyone agrees that deficits push up prices. Economists differ on this. Nor are deficits the only cause of inflation. Even so, the RBI is clearly concerned about the mounting budget deficits and inflation. In its latest annual report, the bank observes

Sarla Saxena, 47, wife of an engineer, can no longer manage on her husband's Rs 4,000 salary.

"You have to find a way. I add potatoes to rajmah to increase the quantity and substitute dry peas for kabli chana."

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Sobhagya-B/DBI/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Pioneer in Gear Technology

naw NEW ALLENBERRY

Manufactured for the first time in India in 1959

WORM REDUCTION GEAR BOXES

'HURG' Series.

Introduced

ALLROYD 'H' Series

in 1964 in collaboration with John Holroyd & Co. Ltd. U.K.

Now offers

ALLROYD 'S' Series

WORM REDUCTION GEAR BOXES

with improved technical features and H.P. rating.

Backed by over thirty years of continuous research and development.

NEW ALLENBERRY WORKS
PROP. DEEPAK INDUSTRIES LTD.
62, Hazra Road, Calcutta-700019
Phone: 47-3651 (5 lines)
TELEGRAM: "GEARBOX"
TELEX: 021-3239 NAW IN Branches at— Bombay, Delhi, Madras, Hyderabad and Bangalore.

—Rest assured, they are the latest and the best.

PPS/NWA/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

that the notes it had to print nearly doubled, from Rs48,950 crore to Rs 96,867 crore, over the past four years so that the Government could cover its revenue-expenditure gap. "The large growth in liquidity has to be viewed against a little over 5 per cent growth in real income during the period," says the report.

Experts say all this, combined with inept short-term management of the supplies of essential commodities and seasonal factors such as festival-season hoarding and peaking of demand, combined to create a situation where prices went haywire. "This year's price rise is not entirely unexpected," says C.H. Hanumantha Rao, professor, Institute of Economic Growth and former member of the Planning Commission. "The potential for a high rate of inflation has been there given the rise in deficit financing and money supply, the continued depreciation in the international value of the rupee and the growing import-intensity of the manufacturing sector over the last four or five years," he adds.

Surjit S. Bhalla, executive director of the Delhi-based think-tank, The Policy Group, says it is possible to rationalise the paradox of prices going up even when certain sectors have shown record output levels. He argues that the Government understates deficits and that by international yardsticks, the actual deficit has been 8 to 9 per cent of the gross domestic product (GDP) for the last five years in a row—"the highest ever in recent memory". (The official view is that deficit as a proportion of GDP has been varying between 3 and 4 per cent in this period.) Bhalla says that schemes like the Jawahar Rozgar Yojana also indirectly spur inflation "since money is doled out without creating productive assets".

MAHESH BHATT

Shailaja Nagabhushan, 32, from Bangalore: her Rs 700 grocery bill has grown to Rs 1,000 in 8 weeks.

"Last two months have been a nightmare. The prices of rice, groundnut oil, tuvar dal, have all gone up."

JUST like the Jawahar Rozgar Yojana, in an election year other populist measures are taken that deliver freebies to some sections of the population while extracting a price from the economy. There is an inclination on the Government's part to spend more and tax less. Increasing support prices for agricultural products also have the twin effect of raising prices while, at the same time, releasing more money into the economy.

The most glaring instances of short-term management failures relate to sugar and edible oils. In the case of sugar (see box), the Government dilly-dallied on imports for too long, allowing prices to suddenly flare up in early September.

On oilseeds, the Government argues that some of the price rise was deliberate as it was necessary to give more remunerative prices to farmers. But it certainly did not anticipate the extent of the rise in retail rates. It naively believed that a high output of oilseeds would automatically lead to an increase in the domestic production of oils. This has not exactly happened.

Wheat is a different story as its prices are administratively controlled. While farmers all over the country have been demanding higher and higher procurement prices, economists like Rao are of the view that the rise in wheat prices allowed by the Government is not fully justified. More importantly, the wheat procurement effort last year could have been stepped up, particularly since it was clear that there would be a tendency to hoard stocks after the bad crop of 1987. Rao feels that the Government could have procured an extra 2 million tonnes of wheat. (Official figures show that wheat procurement stood at 6.54 million tonnes in 1988-89 against 7.88 million tonnes in 1987-88.) Also, more wheat could have been imported when world prices were lower than what they

Prices of meat, fish and poultry have risen more than 25 per cent within this year forcing many non-vegetarians to cut down on them.

BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LISTEN TO THIS PICTURE ON MELTRACK

The maestro ♪ Weaving a composer's signature in the air ♪ Breathing life into mere notations on paper ♪ Coaxing wind, string and percussion into harmony... Music ♪ The greatest tonic of our times ♪

And Meltrack ♪ The greatest tribute to the magic of music ♪ A product of authentic Japanese technology ♪ Exacting quality control ♪ Rigorous testing ♪ To bring you your favourite music exactly as you know it ♪ And love it ♪

Meltrack ♪ Born out of a genuine understanding of the power of music ♪ Pure music ♪

MURUGAPPA ELECTRONICS LTD.

MELTRACK
Audio Cassettes
Music. Pure and Clear.

Mudra:M:ME:3746

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai

"The potential for high inflation was there given the rise in deficit financing."
C.H. HANUMANTHA RAO
Economist

"Populist schemes spur inflation as money is doled out without creating productive assets."
SURJIT BHALLA
Economist

are now. "This Government has been conservative as far as imports of essential commodities are concerned but liberal as far as the other imports go," says Rao pointing at the paradox at least partly responsible for the Government's predicament.

The rise in tea prices was also to an extent anticipated though it was perhaps a coincidence that it came at this juncture. Over the decades, the country's exportable surplus of tea has been shrinking. There has been an uneasy balance between the pressures of higher domestic demand for tea and the compulsion to export more. This year, a marginally lower output upset the applecart and domestic prices zoomed. This at a time when an extra effort was made to boost exports.

Yet, while many complain of their very existence being threatened by rising prices, sections of society still seem awash with money. The consumer boom is by no means over. The waiting lists for the Maruti are still long. Sales of colour television sets and computers are booming despite new taxes. The same society that talks so bitterly about inflation eating into its savings, will be lapping up the Rs 4,000-crore plus debenture issues to be offered by the corporate world in a little over a month.

An explanation for this anomaly is offered by Arun Ghosh, well-known economist and former chairman of the Bureau of Industrial Costs and Prices (BICP). He says the most affluent 15 per cent of Indians (numbering around 12 crore) actually gain from inflation. This is because their incomes and profits rise faster than the cost of living. Just below this section, there is another 10 per cent, constituting the upper rungs of the middle class, on whom the effect of inflation is more or less neutral. Then there is the bottom 15 per cent who do not have the money to buy anything anyway. And in the middle lies the group that inflation hits the hardest, 60 per cent of the population or 48 crore people with relatively static incomes.

For this lot, all talk of price indices, foreign exchange reserves, balance of payments, foreign debt is all so much economic jargon. But when the forces of economics combine in such a way that a rickshaw puller has to pay Re 1 for his cup of tea instead of 60 paise within three months; when a labourer has to pay Rs 3 instead of Rs 2 for his meagre thali of food at a roadside dhaba; when an average housewife has to make a decision as drastic as cutting her children's daily quota of milk; or even when an upper middle class household has to have meat four days a week and not daily; then inflation has hit the common man (read: voter in an election year) in the gut. Precisely what the latest round of inflation has done.

Which also explains the desperation of the Government on the price front. In the coming weeks, as crores of households approach Diwali with their purses strained to the extreme limits, the Government will do its damnest to pull down the price graph. For, whoever may be to blame for this runaway inflation, the last thing that Rajiv Gandhi would want is to pay the price for it in the hardest of hard currencies in politics: the ballot paper.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA with PARANJOY GUHA THAKURTA, SHARMILA CHANDRA and bureau reports

Protest against price rise in Chandigarh

SUSHEEL SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Investors Love GRASIM

"My husband, Viru, tells me that
with its joint ventures abroad GRASIM is the world's second largest producer of staple fibre.

He says, investment in GRASIM has appreciated at 310% every year
over the last 30 years.

Now, I understand why he is such an admirer of the Company.
In my heart, I am proud we are investors in GRASIM."

GRASIM

GRASIM INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Birlagram (Nagda) 456 331 M.P.

Rayon Grade Pulp • Caustic Soda • Viscose Fibre • Textiles Machinery • Cement • And now Sponge Iron

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Sobhatya/GR/89

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Mercedes.
Your Chola antiques.
Designer diamonds.
South-of-France holidays.

And now, PROJECTAVISION from Hotline. Because you've seen it all.

The big difference in home entertainment is now here! Hotline's PROJECTAVISION. Its a great new trend the world over. Projection television that produces larger-than-life images on huge screens — upto 10 feet in size. Heightening the thrills, the romance, the pathos. Bringing alive the world of entertainment. So that great stars no longer come six inches tall. They come mega size.

For further information on PROJECTAVISION, Write to The Chief Executive,
Projection Television Division, Fusebase Eltoro Ltd.
16, Community Centre, New Friends Colony, New Delhi-110065.
Ph.: 6842986, 634793, 6846715 Tlx: 031-75198.

HOTLINE
PROJECTAVISION
The height of luxury in home entertainment

Authorised Indenting Agents/Demonstration Centres :

• Cinesonic Electronic Equipment P. Ltd., 127, Bhagat Singh Mkt., NEW DELHI Ph. 344739, 345503. • Data Management Services, 647 Sector 11-B, Chandigarh. Ph. 22747 • Young India Films, 1-F, Lakshmi Bhawan, 609, Mount Road, MADRAS Ph. 475693, 860640, 459641. • Screen Graphics, 8, Rashtrapati Road, SECUNDERABAD Ph. 73565

Anthem/FBEL/504

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Sabhatya/GR/89

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AJEYA SINGH

Calling the Bluff

By returning to India, disclosing his assets, and daring the Government to prosecute him, Ajeya Singh has seized the advantage in the St Kitts controversy which was aimed at sullying the reputation of his father, V.P. Singh.

ON September 11, 2.30 a.m., a slim, bespectacled Rajput in his early 30s, with a receding hairline but still sporting a boyish look, alighted at the capital's Indira Gandhi airport from a Pan Am flight that had originated in New York. Expecting trouble, he was travelling without any check-in baggage. He carried with him only a Samsonite brief-case containing three trousers, four shirts, undergarments, a passport and documents about his wealth abroad.

He sailed easily through immigration, and was the first passenger to clear customs. Once outside, he heaved a sigh of relief. As did his mother, Rani Sita Singh, wife of Vishwanath Pratap Singh, who had been awaiting his arrival. Ajeya Singh's swift and trouble-free entry into Delhi was not the result of any special treatment accorded to him by Indian officialdom. It was, instead, proof that the Government had been taken by total surprise. It was, in effect, embarrassingly trapped in the backfire of a rocket fired in the direction of V.P. Singh in the form of the St Kitts bank account controversy.

The last thing the Government could have expected was that Ajeya would return to India and openly challenge it to prove allegations that he had opened a bank account in The First Trust Corporation Ltd in St Kitts. That was a serious miscalculation. Next came a bigger surprise when, in an unprecedented move, Ajeya publicly declared all the assets and holdings he had accumulated in 14 years of working abroad. It was done in response to an unusual order served on him

INTERVIEW

"They thought I would be a sitting duck"

AJEYA Singh, 33, may be in the eye of a raging controversy, but the strain does not show. Reclining on a cane chair in the courtyard, or sitting in front of a personal computer in his father V.P. Singh's book-lined study at 28, Lodhi Estate, the introverted banker from New York is calm and composed. He gave his side of the story in the course of a three-hour-long interview with Senior Editor PRABHU CHAWLA. Excerpts:

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Q. Why did you suddenly return to India?

A. I have returned to stand by my father. I am here to take the bull by its horns. Let them ask any question. They have not mentioned a single charge so far. It is a question of the family's honour. I have given them the entire information. As an NRI, I am not supposed to—I am governed by the laws of the country I live in. They want to create the impression that I am evading taxes. If there was an iota of truth in that, the FBI would have been investigating. The FBI doesn't have officials who toe the official line. US revenue laws are more stringent. They can send me to jail.

Q. You have been signing your press statements in Hindi. Are you hiding your actual signature?

A. After the St Kitts forgery, I am a little careful about giving out my signature. They have it on my passport and other official documents. It is a deliberate attempt on my part to prove it was forged by people with access to it.

Q. But is the signature on the St Kitts agreement yours?

A. It does resemble my signature. But basic elements have been missed out.

Q. Why did you go underground after the controversy surfaced?

A. I don't mix with anyone. That is the way I live. No one has the right to interfere with my

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

GEORGE MCLEAN

"You are a bunch of liars"

TRANSCRIPT of INDIA TODAY*'s conversation with George McLean:*

India Today: Can I speak to Mr McLean?

McLean (in heavy voice): You are.

India Today: Mr McLean, I believe our London correspondent approached you for an interview just now. I'm given to understand you said no because you were preoccupied....

McLean: No, no. I declined to speak to INDIA TODAY.

India Today: But why, Mr McLean? We are a fair publication. We are also India's biggest newsmagazine. Why are you so firm on saying no to us?

McLean (shouting): Terrific, man. You are India's biggest magazine. Marvellous. Good luck to you. You are a bunch of liars. Go f yourself... (and bangs down the phone)

McLean's interview with Newstime, a Hyderabad daily, clearly show what his 'revelations' amount to. Excerpts:

Newstime: Did one Captain Satish Sharma have an account?

McLean: I can neither confirm nor deny that.

Newstime: Why can't you be a little more specific?

McLean: Because of St Kitts laws.

Newstime: In that case will it be correct for us to say that you have confirmed that Mr Ajeya Singh had an account in your bank?

McLean: No. I've never said he had an account, nor that he didn't have.

by officials of the Enforcement Directorate within 48 hours of his landing in India. The order, besides asking him for extensive personal details, stated that "it is understood that Account No. 29479 with The First Trust Corporation Ltd Basseterre St Cristopher and Navis W 1 was opened by him on 16.9.86 which remained operative till 13.2.1988". If this were true, the order demanded, then he should furnish details of the account.

Ajeya disclosed that his last salary was in the range of $55,000 annually and that he had accumulated assets and bank balances worth over $1,40,000. He also declared he had served seven different employers. Curiously, he had served Companie Financiere Tradition and was posted at Lausanne near Montreux in Switzerland where Ajitabh Bachchan had bought a flat. Ajeya was last employed on a temporary basis with Tradition Berisford, New York, one of the largest commodity traders in the world.

As an NRI, Ajeya was under no obligation to report any of this to the Indian Government. Says he: "I have come on my own and declared all my assets privacy. Am I under any obligation to publicise my address and phone number? Also, I have avoided social meetings for security reasons.

Q. You have been on leave from Citibank.

A. I was one of those who were to be retrenched in the banking sector last year due to the stock-market crash. I represented my case for re-employment, saying my performance as an executive had been excellent. They agreed and I was given leave of absence till they found a suitable post for me.

Q. Why should McLean and others risk their credibility?

A. The forgers seem immature and foolish. In their hurry to cook up something, they delivered half-baked stuff. And the ever-obliging Enforcement Directorate has picked up this gossip for questioning me.

Q. Don't you think it was the officials' duty to investigate the case?

A. There is no dispute on that. But in this case, it is meant to attack my father. They have been after my family for the last 30 months. Since they couldn't find anything against him, they thought I would be a sitting duck. I have come on my own and declared all my assets abroad. Has anyone else done it? Were the NRIs close to the rulers asked to declare their assets? Let the Amitabh Bachchans, the Satish Sharmas, the Lalit Thapars and the Lalit Suris ask their relations abroad to declare their assets and how they have earned them.

Q. But they have been questioned.

A. I would like to know the outcome. I have been informed by my friends that the person directing the investigation against me is the one who put the lid on the cases registered against the Bachchans, the Suris, the Thapars and the Sharmas. Yet another official who has been sent abroad is the one who was deputed to collect certificates saying that no Indians, including Win Chadha, were connected with the Bofors pay-offs. How can you trust a machinery, which instead of prosecuting the real culprits, lays the foundations for their exoneration? So it is clear the foundations for the puppet frame-up have already been laid.

Q. On what basis do you claim that the top leadership is behind this?

A. What else can explain the blatant misuse of the electronic media and the inspired leaks in the friendly media? Suddenly McLean seems more important than even the President of the United States. His views are aired for over 7 to 10 minutes, thrice a day, on Doordarshan and AIR. Neither Bush nor Gorbachev got that much favour. And McLean talks only to those cleared by someone in New Delhi.

Q. You are said to have been organising secret meetings regarding the deals with industrialists abroad.

A. On the contrary, I had to suffer humiliation. I had to keep a low-profile because my father was a high-profile political figure. I never met any industrialist anywhere in India or abroad.

Q. Why did you choose to invest in Reliance Industries?

A. No favour was shown to me by Reliance. I bought the shares in the open market like everybody else. And that explains how much I was in touch with the developments in the Finance Ministry headed by my father. I invested in Reliance at a time when the Finance Ministry was investigating Reliance.

Q. Is it true that you landed the job with Citibank because you were a son of the Indian finance minister?

A. What nonsense. I was a qualified chartered accountant. And I had work experience in the banking sector. If I had to use my father's name for a job, I would have been rolling in money abroad like other relatives of ruling party members. In fact, I have suffered because of my father. I had to reject good postings with numerous multinational corporations. I would not have been unemployed for over nine months in 1983 when my father was the commerce minister.

Q. Are you likely to leave soon?

A. It depends on the Indian Government. Let it satisfy itself. I am here as long as it wants me here.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIRA PURAM PHASE II

A peaceful life in the neighbourhood of the capital

Registration of houses under Self Financing Basis at Ghaziabad, near Delhi.

DETAILS OF HOUSES

S. No.	Type of House	No. of Houses	Plot Area / Plinth Area in sq. mt.	Accommodation	Cost in lacs Rs.	Registration Amount + Rs. 20
1.	HIG (Duplex)	250	133.88 / 180.85	Drawing cum Dining 3 Beds attached with Toilet, Family Lounge, Box, Kitchen, Puja, Verandha, Porch, & Staircase.	8.50	85,020.00
2.	HIG (Single Storeyed)	300	167.23 / 103.06	Drawing cum Dining, 2 Beds attached with Toilet, Family Lounge, Kitchen, Verandha & Staircase.	5.96	59,620.00
3.	HIG (Double-Storeyed)	GF 350 FF 350	167.22 101.00	— do —	GF 4.89 F.F. 4.14	48,920.00 41,420.00
4.	MIG (Triple Storeyed)	GF 500 FF 500 SF 500	158.00 116.17	G.F.:Drawing cum Dining, 2 Beds, attached with Toilet, Kitchen Family Lounge, Box, Verandha & Stair case	GF 4.71	47,120.00
		FF & SF	91.75	Drawing cum Dining, 1 Bedroom attached with Toilet Kitchen, Lounge & Staircase	F.F. 3.24 S.F. 3.30	32,420.00 33,020.00
5.	LIG-I (Triple Storeyed)	GF 750 FF 750 SF 750	86 56.64	GF:One Livingroom, Bed, Bath, Wc, Verandha & & Common Staircase FF & SF.: — do —	GF 2.19 FF 1.78 SF 1.80	21,920.00 17,820.00 18,020.00
6.	LIG-II (Triple Storeyed)	GF 1000 FF 1000 SF 1000	40 22.66	One Room, Kitchen, Bath Wc, Verandha, & Common Staircase.	GF 0.92 FF 0.86 SF 0.81	9,220.00 8,620.00 8,120.00
		FF & SF	24.91

Attractions :-

- At door step of developed area of Delhi City.
- Adjoining Vaishali and Kaushambi Scheme of G.D.A.
- Availability in almost 3 years.
- The land has been acquired and it is in effective possession of G.D.A.

Note :-

300 houses (including all the various categories) are reserved for the applicants who were not sucessful in the draw held on 21.8.89 in Vaishali 'Rachna' Code No. 544. They may get their deposit transfered to this scheme and also indicate their preference of their category of the house.

Registration from 15.9.89 to 16.10.89

Repayment in 3 years

Registration booklet can be had from Vijaya Bank on payment Rs. 25/- (Rs. Twenty Five) only from following branches of:

Vijaya Bank

Ghaziabad: 84, Navyug Market, Extention Counter, G.D.A. Compound. • Sector-3, E-Block 30 A Noida Complex. New Delhi: Vijaya Building, Bara Khamba Road, Connaught Circus, • 31-C, D.D.A. Shopping Complex, Ist floor (Opp. Moolchand Hospital) Defence Colony. • Sangam Theatre building, Sector-9, R.K. Puram. • G-12, Hauz Khas Market, Hauz Khas. • 10203, Jamna House, Padam Singh Road, Karol Bagh. • II, Corner House Main Kutub Road, Ram Nagar. Delhi: 1488-89, Chandni Chowk. • Cantonment branch 52/II, Gopi Nath Bazar. • 4-Khureji Khas, Bhagat Singh Marg, Shahdara. Chandigarh: Jeevan Prakash Building, LIC of India, Sector-17D. Lucknow: 31/49, Mayfair Building, Hazratganj. Kanpur: Heera Sons House, 74/276, Halelsy Road. Allahabad: 21/23, Sumer Chand Jain Market, Khoyamandi Chowk. Ludhiana: Near Clock Tower, G.T. Road Opp. G.P.O. Amritsar: 23, Dharam Singh Market, Golden Temple Road. Meerut: 171, Abulane, Meerut Cant. Faridabad: Plot No. R-4 NH5 NIT.

For further details kindly contact
J.P. Bajpal, Chief Accounts Officer, G.D.A. Ghaziabad.

Anil Kumar Sharma
Secretary

Prabhu Nath Misra
Vice-Chairman

Ghaziabad Development Authority
Vikas-Path, Ghaziabad, U.P.

A beautiful City- our commitment

Registration booklet can also be had by paying Rs. 35/- by M.O. to Vijaya Bank, 84, Navyug Market, Ghaziabad U.P.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

abroad. Has anyone else done it? Would the NRIs close to the rulers asked to declare their assets?" (see interview). But legality and regulations were the least of his concerns. For him it was a political battle. And in going on the offensive by daring the Government to prosecute him, he seemed, at least for the time being, to have gained the edge in what is widely considerd as a massive disinformation campaign aimed at sullying the reputation of V.P. Singh through the financial dealings of his son. And V.P. Singh is seizing the advantage.

CHARGED V.P. Singh: "I have given blanket authority to the Government to probe my accounts or my son's and prosecute us. But no such offer has come from either the prime minister or his friends who've been stashing money abroad." Ajeya, meantime, began pointing out the discrepancies in the documents of The First Trust Corporation. Among the flaws he identified were the gross miscalculation in interest figures, transactions shown to be occurring on holidays, and statements bearing no date (see box).

The alacrity of Ajeya's response, the extent of the disclosure and the discrepancies pointed out, put the Enforcement Directorate in a quandary about how to proceed further. But they didn't have to wait long, as within 12 hours the mysterious George McLean, the obese 180-kg managing director of the now defunct St Kitts bank, surfaced with succour. McLean, who had gone into hibernation for two weeks after "confirming" Ajeya's account number, suddenly popped up like an overweight jack-in-the-box in London's Hilton Hotel.

There he made himself available again to selected Indian correspondents. This time, he spoke not to The Telegraph or The Hindustan Times, but to UNI in person and to The Times of India over the telephone. Both had apparently been tipped off by government sources that McLean was expecting them to contact him and would be willing to talk.

Other journalists too came to know that McLean had resurfaced in London and was talking to the press. But when they attempted to contact him, he brushed them aside. When INDIA TODAY called McLean at his hotel, he rudely refused to talk (see box). This gave rise to immediate speculation that McLean had been advised to speak to only selected publications and journalists. But even though McLean avoided cross-examination by other journalists, his detailed rejoinder to Ajeya's statement was weak and contradictory as established by McLean's own documents, as well as interviews with his former associates.

For example, a closer perusal of the document purporting to show Ajeya's St Kitts account exposed some fundamental inaccuracies in the calculation of interest allegedly paid to him. Seven out of nine entries were so full of mistakes that the entries themselves appeared to be false (see box). Over the 18-month period that the account was supposed to be operative, Ajeya's total interest earnings, according to the "agreement" with the bank, should have totalled $12,88,778.40. But McLean's document showed only $3,31,432.42. McLean's defence of the glaring $9,57,345 gap was lame—"I am a businessman not an accountant"—and raised further doubts about his credibility. He told Newstime that he had "calculated the interest by hand. I may well have made a mistake"—an astonishing statement from the managing director of a bank

THE FIRST TRUST CORPORATION LIMITED
Basseterre, St. Christopher and Nevis, W.I.

Date	Withdrawals	Interest	Deposits	Balance
16, 9,86			2,000,000.00	2,000,000.00
10,10,86			2,000,000.00	4,000,000.00
13,12,86	1,038,575.68	38,575.68	5,000,000.00	8,000,000.00
31,12,86		11,835.72		8,011,835.72

N.B. Daily interest $219.18 per day per $1,000,000.00

I certify the above is a true record of the entries of account #29479

Managing Director

I certify the above is a true record of the entries of account #29479

Director

According to the statement the interest was $219.18 per million per day. The alleged account showed a balance of $2 million between September 16, 1986 and December 13, 1986 (88 days) and another deposit of $2 million between October 10 and December 13 (64 days). On this basis the interest should have been the sum of:

88 × $219.18 × 2 = $38,575.68
and 64 × $219.18 × 2 = $28,055.04
Total = $66,630.72

But the banker credited only $38,575.68

◆

Since seven of the nine interest calculations were wrong in the statement, there was a whopping difference between the interest due and the interest actually credited to the account holder.

Interest due	$12,88,778.40
Interest credited	$3,31,432.42
Shortfall of interest	$9,57,345.98

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

supposedly with millions of dollars in its accounts. As Ajeya retorted: "You mean a person with a $21 million account could not even afford a $5 calculator?"

But a loss in credibility was the least of the problems that were in store for McLean. As the controversy escalated, several newspapers including the New York-based India Abroad, began to investigate his past. A chequered career graph and a media background were revealed. The 58-year-old McLean had in the '50s worked as a reporter for The Toronto Star, and had also dabbled in TV, advertising and public relations.

BUT the investigations resulted in some damning revelations too. A one-time friend of McLean and a director of The First Trust Corporation, Singapore-based Ian G. Pyper, told the weekly: "Frankly I find this whole thing about Indian accounts incredible." Pyper further underlined the dubious nature of the St Kitts bank by revealing that in June 1987, two of the bank's board of directors had been arrested and charged in Canada with smuggling narcotics into that country.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Ajeya and V.P. Singh: ready for battle

Surprisingly, the Congress(I), unlike in the past, responded to the 'revelations' in a low-key amnner, preferring to rely on the media to keep th issue alive. Of course, not entirely successfully as Doordarshan could not resist the temptation of playing up McLean's reply to Ajeya's statement, which it carried twice a day for two days running, five minutes each, on the news. Ajeya's statement, to which McLean was replying, had of course earlier been completely blacked out.

Doordarshan's unusual display of interest in McLean, even as it ignored Ajeya's version, indicated that the controversy was part of the Congress(I) strategy to render corruption a non-issue: ensure that during election time there are so many unverifiable charges flying around that the cognizance given to them becomes minimal. But at the moment Ajeya Singh continues to cock a snook at the Government. He has challenged McLean to come out with whatever he has, relieving him of the clause of confidentiality McLean has been touting for his inability to come out with further disclosures. And as Ajeya keeps taunting them, his antagonists have to keep taking steps to produce more evidence and take action against him. If they don't, the party's and the Government's credibility will have suffered a critical blow. And efforts to gather more dirt on Ajeya Singh are afoot.

Ultimately this episode will be decided in the court of pubic opinion. If the Government produces evidence verifiable by independent agencies—so far it has not—then there will be no escape for V.P. Singh. His clean image, if there is proof of wrongdoing, will deservedly be shattered.

But right now, V.P. Singh is seen as a man who had the courage to call his son home and face the heat openly while the ruling party is being viewed as having sheltered the prime minister's friend, Ajitabh Bachchan, when the purchase of his house in Switzerland came under question on the basis of authentic documentation. And this is an image Rajiv Gandhi cannot afford to project in an election year. —PRABHU CHAWLA

AJEYA SINGH	GEORGE MCLEAN
■ "The statement of accounts is totally fake. Seven of the nine interest entries are wrong. A man who was handling millions of dollars couldn't get even one figure right."	■ "I am a businessman and not an accountant. I calculated the interest by hand and I may well have made a mistake."
■ "The statement was written by a novice. He forgot to put the date on which it was issued to the account holder."	■ "I never put any dates on them because I was not about to establish any audit trail."
■ "The agreement says it was signed at Bassettere but I never visited St Kitts in my life. I have my passport to prove this. I was not a green card holder on the day the account was supposed to have been opened by me."	■ "I think you should know that foreigners who live in the US and have a green card can go out without their passport being stamped. To my knowledge Mr Singh didn't visit St Kitts and Nevis and I can't say if he was there or not. But in nearly all cases, accounts were set up by agents, not by the principals."
■ "In international banking, they have floating interest rates and not fixed ones as has been promised in the agreement."	■ Not available.
■ "A large number of transactions took place on weekends or holidays which is very unusual."	■ "That was because I was around, my family was not with me, and I was glad to do business anytime."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In the footsteps of international fashion... TSF Shoes.

TSF footwear... in genuine leather with 100% Polyurethane (P.U.) sole. Made in India with German technology. In the footsteps of high fashion. Fashion that reigns in West Germany and Sweden, USSR and Denmark... where more and more trend-setters step out in style, TSF style.

TSF footwear... for fast forward people like you. Always a step ahead of the rest. People who value the TSF blend... of hi-tech with high sophistication, elegance with comfort, luxury with longevity.

Yes, take another step forward... in TSF shoes.

•Tough •Soft •Flexible

TSF SHOES

TEJ INTERNATIONAL PVT. LTD.
E-393, Greater Kailash II New Delhi-110 048.
Ph.: 6444614, 6413552
Telex: 031-71300 TEJIN.

TSF — Product of the Tej Group.

AVAILABLE AT LEADING SHOW ROOMS THROUGH OUT INDIA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

The Jat leader addressing the crowds: huge turnout

DEVI LAL

Rallying Strength

The Haryana strongman's 75th birthday celebration was transformed into a massive opposition rally. But the behind-the-scenes bickerings continued as the kisan leader attempted to eclipse the other opposition stalwarts.

AS birthday parties go, this was literally of gargantuan proportions. Over 7 lakh people, a galaxy of political celebrities, huge cut-outs of the birthday boy, 75 pigeons released from captivity and an array of presents.

But it was the venue that was most significant—in the heart of the Indian capital with the imperial facade of North and South Blocks as a backdrop. That, and of course, the man. Devi Lal. The strongman of Haryana revelling in his role as king maker of the Opposition conglomerate—perhaps even the king.

Devi Lal's 75th birthday celebration was transformed into a massive political rally, a show of strength. And, more important, a deliberately exaggerated public display of his political stature and rural muscle.

On the gaily-decorated dais, almost the entire spectrum of the opposition leadership lined up one by one to garland him and present him with gifts. The crowds who had poured in from Uttar Pradesh, Rajasthan, Haryana, Bihar and Punjab, cheered lustily each time the Jat chieftain turned to them and raised his beefy arms in triumph.

And triumph it certainly was. It rivalled in pomp and circumstance any rally that Charan Singh had been able to organise at the height of his power. Devi Lal's greatest moment came when V.P. Singh, the man the Opposition projects as the future prime minister, presented him with a green turban. The king had been anointed. The turban, with its cocky plume, heralded the shift in power. At least for Devi Lal's supporters. For, after all, that was what the rally was all about.

Behind the scenes, Devi Lal's eldest son, Om Prakash Chautala, preened with pride. The brain behind the bash, Chautala heaved a sigh of relief as arm in arm with V.P. Singh, his father waved to the crowds. And on cue, came the loud cries of "Desh ke neta, Devi Lal". The entire stretch from India Gate to South Block reverberated with the frenzied chants.

But the opposition leaders occupying the stage along with Devi Lal, shared neither his joy nor the crowd's frenzy. They were, in fact, against the very idea of a birthday celebration but faced with the Jat leader's bulldozing tactics, had little choice in the matter. And rather than appear on stage as mere guests paying homage to Devi Lal, they deemed it better to convert it into a National Front affair.

The behind-the-scenes manoeuvring that preceded the rally was yet another indication of the rivalries that continue to dog the Opposition. Janata Dal Secretary-General Ajit Singh, Charan Singh's son, strongly argued against holding any celebration at all. He reportedly told V.P. Singh that the rally would do no good to the party's image. To prevent another

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Opposition leaders on the dais: bickerings continue squabble, V.P. Singh came up with the idea of converting the birthday bash into a political event. He suggested that the day be celebrated as sangharsh divas (day of struggle) and assigned Arun Nehru to convince Chautala of this.

The attempt to turn it into a National Front show—instead of an all-Devi Lal affair—saw N.T Rama Rao being made chairman of the Devi Lal Diamond Jubilee Birthday Celebration Committee. Yet, the bickerings continued. Ajit Singh's name was kept out of the panel and added at the last minute, only after his supporters threatened to boycott the function.

Tempers were running high even on the morning of September 25, the day of the rally, when opposition leaders met at the Andhra Pradesh Bhawan in New Delhi to decide the tricky issue of who would present Devi Lal with the birthday book—Abhinandan Granth. It was finally decided that each leader would gift him something. So while Devi Lal occupied centre-stage, N.T. Rama Rao came with a garland, Ramakrishna Hegde and Atal Behari Vajpayee with shawls, Ajit Singh a bouquet, Vijaya Raje Scindia a coconut, Chandra Shekhar a memento and Jagjit Singh Aurora and S.S. Barnala a sword.

The rally was aimed at displaying to the other opposition leaders Devi Lal's awesome mobilisation powers.

Yet, infighting could not be kept off the stage. Arun Nehru, Arif Mohammed Khan and Maneka Gandhi left after putting in brief appearances while other Janata Dal leaders took great care to divert attention from the birthday boy. Ajit Singh and Hegde exited just before Devi Lal's address. The only point on which all agreed: Rajiv Gandhi must go.

The large crowds did serve one purpose—the jamboree became the official launch of the Janata Dal's election campaign. The speeches confirmed this. Devi Lal crudely attacked Rajiv: "Italy ke damaad, tumhare bas ka Hindustan nahin. Jis ne biwi, sala, sali paye hoh videshi, woh kaisa swadeshi." (Italy's son-in-law, Hindustan is not your cup of tea. What kind of Indian is the man who has a foreign wife and relations. The crowds cheered. Vajpayee stressed only a one-to-one contest could ensure the Congress(I)'s defeat. Describing the Rajiv government as a corpse in need of a burial, V.P. Singh spoke of rising prices, unemployment, Bofors. "The rally has proved this government is going and that the Opposition is united," he said.

But what the rally really proved was that the battle lines in the opposition's

Huge cut-outs of Devi Lal: personal triumph

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

leadership struggle are more clearly drawn than before. As far as Devi Lal is concerned, the rally was his personal show of strength as well as his personal bid for the mantle of opposition strongman. Haryana, obviously, is not big enough for his political ambitions. As Madhu Dandavate acknowledged: "He has brought so many people here. The man obviously has his strengths." Crowed Chautala: "It is the biggest ever kisan rally, attended by more people than even Choudhary Charan Singh's rally in December 1978."

Despite the National Front veneer, Devi Lal and his supporters had thrown everything into making the show a major success. Chautala, known for his organisational skills, had requisitioned almost the entire Haryana Government into making it a memorable show. Twenty lakh giant posters of Devi Lal were printed and splashed all over the country. Though a National Front sponsored show, no other opposition leader was visible on any publicity material.

An artfully made video cassette was put together at Delhi's Jain Studios, owned by Dr J.K. Jain, a BJP sympathiser. Projecting the Haryana chief minister as the saviour of the kisans and backward classes, the 50-minute video cassette with the message 'Delhi chalo', was sent to all districts of Haryana, Uttar Pradesh, Rajasthan and Bihar. The highlight of the cassette was a poem titled Italy ke damaad (Italy's son-in-law), an obvious dig at Rajiv Gandhi.

The cassette, interspersed with popular film songs (Sadhna singing Aa ja aaye bahar and Jaya Prada and Rakesh Roshan dancing round trees) proved a source of great entertainment to villagers. While Devi Lal was presented as a national hero, care was taken to downplay other leaders: 30-second clips of Chandra Shekhar, Hegde, V.P. Singh and N.T. Rama Rao were thrown in while Ajit Singh was left out altogether. The obvious aim: project Devi Lal as the main leader in the electorally crucial Hindi belt.

Producing the cassette and screening it must have cost a packet. Each of Dr Jain's video-fitted vans rent at Rs 50,000 a month—all nine vans had been hired by the Haryana Government.

THERE were other expenses: 20 lakh handbills and postcards; special uniforms—green shirts and scarves along with white pyjamas—were tailored for the rural brigade; and six hoardings at crucial sites in Delhi were hired for a month. To top it all was the cost of hiring the 30,000 vehicles—trucks, buses, tractors, motor cycles and cars—used to transport the masses to Boat Club and back. Though Chautala claims people came on their own, one truck driver who drove in from Rajasthan said he was paid Rs 4,500 for the round trip.

The Haryana Government virtually suspended all other work for over a fortnight as ministers and political workers were sent out to mobilise the masses. While the lesser ministers fanned out into the districts, senior ones flew into the state capitals to address press conferences. Deputy Chief Minister Banarsi Dass Gupta flew to Lucknow, Home Minister Sampat Singh to Jaipur, Irrigation and Power Minister Veerinder Singh to Bhopal and Gwalior and Industry Minister K.R. Punia to Calcutta. Chautala addressed press conferences in Bangalore, Bombay, Ahmedabad and Hyderabad, all in the space of 48 hours.

In the capital, a team comprising Devi Lal's former associates huddled together to give shape to the Abhinandan Granth—a 300-page book which eulogises the Jat leader and traces his life from childhood to freedom fighting to becoming a kisan leader.

Rather than appear to be paying homage to Devi Lal, many opposition leaders deemed it better to convert the rally into a National Front affair.

(Clockwise from above) Devi Lal with Rama Rao; Barnala; and V.P. Singh: oneupmanship game

Last fortnight's rally was an extension of the book, perhaps the climax. From remote Sirsa to centre-stage in Delhi. Though Devi Lal has often said that "the next prime minister will be a kisan's son", he nailed speculation on this score by declaring after the rally that he backed V.P. Singh for the top job.

But it was clear a king-maker the kisan's son had become. Devi Lal had established that for the Opposition he was indispensable; that controlling 80-odd seats in the Hindi belt, he could make or mar political fortunes—even that of V.P. Singh. As birthday assertions go that was as powerful as any he could have made. —HARINDER BAWEJA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Love at first sight...

CS–5121 DX

and ever after. Optonica colour TV wins your heart at first sight. And remains your true love ever after with its advanced technological features.

Technology: Brilliant

So many features in one set. On display: programme channels, transmission band, timer setting, balance time. Plus contrast, colour, brightness and volume settings. On screen: Vibrant colour every time.

No other manufacturer has all these features in one set.

Systems: Ultra Automatic

Optimatic Picture Control. Automatic Distortion Clearance through Auto Linearity Control. Automatic switching off after 30, 60, 90 and 120 minute pre-timed intervals. Automatic High Sensitivity Electronic Tuner. Automatic Blue Back at end of transmission.

Dependability: State of the art

25-key remote control of all TV functions. Engineering excellence that delivers high performance, true life vision and great viewing pleasure.

Come fall in love with an Optonica TV and be happy for the rest of your life.

OPTONICA

SHARPLINE

TVs • VCRs

Dependable for the rest of your life.

Manufactured in India by: Kalyani Sharp India Ltd.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra:B:BF:552

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You don't have to be India's wittiest artist to be a Raymond's man.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Padma Shri Mario Miranda's inimitable style is as refreshing and original as his sense of humour. His marvellous brush has given us New York, London, Paris, Home... with a fine understanding of the foibles of the species, and a wit that is his alone.

The man who never fails to make the country chuckle wears a formal navy blue suit in an exclusive polyester/wool blend, "Terool".

You don't have to be India's wittiest artist to be a Raymond's man. For that matter, you don't even have to be a Raymond's man. ... but it helps.

Raymond's

Never say no to life.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NO DETAIL TOO SMALL

At Emirates we believe a large part of our work lies in paying great attention to what might seem small details.

Making sure our delectable food is impeccably presented,

EVEN

and that our flights are at agreeable times.

Precisely trained, our multi-lingual staff are as charming and courteous on the ground, as they are in the air.

Because we care for your

TIME

comfort, our aircraft are ordered with spacious seats and legrests, and sizeable overhead storage bins. Surprising how a little extra space helps shorten a long trip.

Wherever we fly there's always the same understanding service, wide choice of drinks, and colourful international cuisine. So it's easy to unwind and feel completely at home.

FLIES

Even children have the time of their lives on Emirates — with soft toys, books and colouring kits. We never forget they are our time-travellers of the future!

ON

Small details maybe, but they're the reason why such large numbers of people choose to fly Emirates — time and time again.

The International Airline of the United Arab Emirates.
Offices: Bombay: Mittal Chambers, Office No. 3, Ground Floor, 228, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021. Tel: 2871650/2871651 2871652. Delhi: Kanchanjunga Building, 18, Barakhamba Road, New Delhi 110 001 Tel: 3324665/3324803/3324824.

Emirates

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CRICKET CONTROL BOARD

On a Sticky Wicket

Even as it smarts from its embarrassing capitulation on the ban issue, the Board of Control for Cricket in India is faced with fresh confusion. If the recent board meeting at Chandigarh is any indication, Indian cricket's cup of controversy is far from full as yet.

NAMAS BHOJANI

Players and officials: contentious contract

FOR once, the Board of Control for Cricket in India (BCCI), on the backfoot for the past few weeks, got its timing just right. But on the wrong wicket, in the wrong game and to make the wrong point. Last fortnight, the board delegates and officials from all over the country congregated at Chandigarh's Mountview Hotel for their annual general meeting to lick their wounds. And if they had hoped to leave the past behind them, it was not to be so.

For, as they hurled accusations at one another for the humiliating capitulation in their ongoing war with the cricketing superstars, the man who had engineered the collapse was barely a few yards away. E.S. Venkatramaiah, chief justice of India, who persuaded the board to give up the confrontation with the players, was addressing the Punjab and Haryana High Court Bar Association on the lawns of the same hotel. He even walked up to speak to C. Nagaraj, joint secretary of the board and chief of the Karnataka State Cricket Association. A board member, on one of his many breaks from the meeting, said wryly: "Any illusions about a second innings in the battle against the players evaporated quickly."

With the ominous shadow of the judiciary falling over the Chandigarh meeting, it was understandable that despite the bickering and mutual recriminations, regrets and bitterness, the two score men who control the destiny of India's most popular and money-spinning game decided to duck and play for survival. Such was the scare that the courts may still act against the cricket board, that much of the factional politics was forgotten. "The court has questioned the very existence of an organisation that is 59 years old," said National Selection Committee Chairman Raj Singh Dungarpur, adding: "Maybe we haven't changed with the times enough."

That change was imminent became evident as some perfectly-timed signals emanated from Madras, where the superstars had gathered for yet another masala match, an unofficial, unusual, top batsmen versus top fast bowlers match organised by MRF. The stars formed a players' association and assigned two senior cricketers to renegotiate the playing contract with the board. The board too reciprocated as if on cue, setting up a committee to "amicably settle outstanding issues" with the players.

RAJ S. DUNGARPUR

"The last three cricket seasons began on a note of controversy. When the new season begins, we want it to be happy and pleasant."

"The board is solely responsible for the sorry state of affairs. Elections are faulty. Manipulation and lobbying ensure that the same faces stick on."

AJIT WADEKAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Said newly elected Board Vice-President I.S. Bindra: "The old contract was some 30 years old and antiquated. So some changes are called for." Sensing yet another victory, the players upped the ante, refusing to wear the MRF logos for the forthcoming Nehru Cup extravaganza unless they were given a part of the sponsorship bonanza the board was going to reap. The confrontation could be entering a new phase.

That what should have been yet another boring meeting of a sports organisation became one of the more important sporting events of the fortnight was a depressing commentary on the state of Indian cricket. After being forced to eat crow so unceremoniously—withdrawing punitive measures against the six stars who went to the US as also against Mohinder Amarnath for calling the selectors a bunch of jokers—the board now had to salvage its prestige as well as one of the busiest cricket seasons in recent years. "The last three cricket seasons began on a note of controversy," says Dungarpur and added hopefully: "The day after tomorrow, when the new season begins, we want it all to be happy and pleasant."

That may be optimistic despite the fact that both the players and the board seem to be settling back into familiar roles. Most of the superstars are back, preparing for the training camp for Sharjah at New Delhi's railway stadium in the coming fortnight. Kapil is getting into shape and Dilip Vengsarkar is back hitting the ball with the reassuring thud of the willow. He strode on the Matunga Gymkhana ground in Bombay to the gentle applause of about 500 fans. Said Avinash Pai, 28, a fan in the crowd: "Now he is a free man, thank God."

More than God, the players have to thank the judiciary for their resounding come-back. As the Supreme Court reprimanded it for its ways, the board meekly caved in. The court was about to open a Pandora's box, which made the board hastily rescind the ban.

Meanwhile, three Supreme Court judges and the attorney-general unleashed legal bouncers that left the board ducking and swaying. Venkatramaiah raised questions which threatened the existence of the board, including: Can a party to the contract (BCCI) have the sole right to decide a case of violation? And if the board has not been granted any statutory authority, what would prevent players or any other association of persons from forming their own team?

Kapil, Srikkanth and Vengsarkar in Madras: in the clear

WHEN a board lawyer pleaded that it was a private body, Venkatramaiah asked: "The board would be doing harm to itself by claiming (that)." And when the board said it had the authority to administer the game, Justice K.N. Singh remarked: "Who gave you that authority?" Attorney-General K. Parasaran chipped in: "You are given (the) authority by the state to administer properly."

Ultimately, the board was only paying for its own arbitrariness regarding the contentious contract, which was heavily loaded against the players. The contract began with an admonition from the board secretary: "I am to inform you that any deletion, addition or alteration in the agreement will be taken as your refusal to play for India." That certainly queered the pitch. The chief justice asked: "Is this contract fair?" Later, he added testily: "Making it a court proceeding and pushing it into an end may result in the board losing several privileges."

Faced with such a barrage, the board declared the innings closed. The erstwhile disciplinary committee members would not sit in the working committee panel which would re-examine the issue. Hectic lobbying from commentator Balu Alaganan, railways representative Amrit Mathur, board vice-president and former Maharashtra stumper D.C. Agashe and Dungarpur got the ban rescinded within two days. On September 14, the 21-member working committee of the board met again in Bombay, inviting the stars to lunch: it was time to kiss and make up. Kapil Dev and Ranbir Singh sat together savouring bhindi masala and sitaphal ice-cream. Said Kapil to Ranbir: "Ab hum pooja kar sakenge (Now we can pray)," referring to his earlier statement that banning cricketers from playing was like asking priests not to pray. Said Singh: "Please forget the past. We start a new chapter."

In Bombay, as the board stood humiliated, rebellious officials were already sharpening their knives for "katal kee raat" (the night of long knives) even as the Chandigarh meeting was being called. Ultimately, it took a lot of persuasion and pressure from the board elders to prevent the showdown

I.S. BINDRA

"The old playing contract was some 30 years old and truly antiquated. This meant that certain fundamental changes were urgently called for."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Chandigarh board meeting: hectic lobbying and further embarrassment.

The board had much to be embarrassed about. Jockeying for posts escalated to the point where Jagmohan Dalmia—whose brief was to arrive at a compromise in the ban imbroglio with the cricketers in Calcutta late August—instead tried to strike a deal with the cricketers on which brand of balls to use and which logos to wear for the coming season. Dalmia told INDIA TODAY in Chandigarh he was doing no more than carrying out the board's brief, but surely, his reported statement to Kapil Dev, calling Ranbir Singh, whose job he covets, "incompetent and incapable" couldn't have been so. "As a player I can't tolerate anyone saying a thing against my captain. As the board how do you tolerate your own people talking like this about your own secretary?" Kapil taunted the committee and as Ranbir joined issue with Dalmia, the BCCI's stock fell even further.

The crowning embarrassment at Chandigarh was the downcast visage of Prithipal Singh, a delegate from Himachal Pradesh, who nearly walked out of the board meeting and broke down explaining how "I am not being allowed to go as an official with the team to Pakistan just because I am a Sikh". Singh, adorned with a string of pearls, gold chain and medallion round his neck, stormed away in his Mitsubishi Pajero, saying: "I won't take Sharjah in place of Pakistan because all my friends are in Pakistan." In fact, like many Indian teams, the board was now realising that defeat is an orphan. Said former captain Ajit Wadekar: "The board is solely responsible for the sorry state of affairs. The method of electing officials is faulty. There is intense lobbying and alliances and the same faces stay on with sheer manipulation."

The angling for the board positions is understandable as it is the country's richest sports organisation, controlling investments exceeding Rs 3.4 crore. Consequently, even former presidents, instead of retiring gracefully, stay on as treasurers, secretaries, and working committee members. Recently, in order to seek minor clarifications from their Pakistani counterparts, as many as seven officials went to London for the International Cricket Conference (ICC) meet, travelling first-class. Again in July, officials went to London to ask the ICC if anyone had any questions about the Reliance Cup accounts, even after ICC officials said they were not interested in the accounts. Two "honorary" officials of the board were paid Rs 50,000 each for "excellent" work in conducting the tournament. Players legitimately ask: who has earned all this money? Interestingly, the Chandigarh meeting also discussed the board's annual financial report for 1988-89—'strictly confidential and not for publicity'. Even the self-defeating disciplinary exercise of this monsoon has cost the board a hefty Rs 15 lakh, including the cost of travel of 21 working committee members, daily allowances and hotel charges.

> "We don't think that we have won and the board has lost in the present controversy. Ultimately, what matters is that we can now get on with the game once again."

KAPIL DEV

If anything, the showdown with the players on the eve of such a busy season has caused a new rethinking on the structure of the board, its relationship with the players and the management of India's most important sport. But, the hatchet has not been buried. Many in the board are smarting under the humiliation and waiting for the stars to fail in the coming season. "Then they will not even have popular sympathy," predicted an official, somewhat wishfully. Some of the players, on the other hand, were planning to rub the board's nose into the ground yet again on the issue of the MRF logos. Either way, the voices of sanity were in a minority and when Dungarpur said "Indian cricket will not be judged by any balance sheets but by what 11 men achieve between 22 yards", he seemed to be in a hopeless minority as the others prepared for the next innings in the game of cricketing politics.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Chandigarh and SALIL TRIPATHI in Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Does your husband buy you increasing quantities of perfume?

Nobody likes being near a person who smells. Yet so many of us don't even know when we suffer from Body Odour.

A lot of people believe that perspiration causes Body Odour. However, perspiration, by itself, is odourless. It only starts smelling when it is decomposed by the bacteria that are always present on and in the underlayers of the skin.

Regular soaps can only wash off surface dirt and bacteria. But very soon after a bath, bacteria settle down on the skin and multiply. And you're never really free from Body Odour.

THE SNIFF TEST

At the end of the day, raise your arm, and sniff under arm. Smell something? You probably will, unless you are a Cinthol user.

Switch to Cinthol and use it for atleast 7 days. Repeat the sniff test. You'll be surprised. No Body Odour. A sign that Cinthol is working for you.

Unless you use Cinthol. Cinthol is the ONLY general purpose bath soap in India that contains TCC – Tri Chloro Carbanilide. The TCC in Cinthol prevents bacteria from multiplying and perspiration from smelling. Not just immediately after a bath, but a full 24 hours following it.

So all you have to do is take atleast one bath a day with Cinthol. And you can say goodbye to Body Odour for the rest of your life.

MADISON-G-65

Cinthol
Prevents Body Odour.
Builds Body Confidence.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SWADESHI POLYTEX LIMITED

Regd. Office : New Kavi Nagar, Ghaziabad (U.P.)

Excerpts from The Speech by SHRI AJIT SINGH, Chairman, at the 19th Annual General Meeting of the Company

Shri Ajit Singh
Chairman

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

I am happy to welcome you to this 19th Annual General Meeting of your Company.

PERIOD UNDER REVIEW

The audited accounts and the Directors Report for the period ended 31st March, 1989 (i.e. 18 months) has been in your hands for some time now. I will take these as read.

The Company has achieved a number of firsts during this period. For the first time the turnover of the Company has crossed Rs. 100 crores as against 98.26 crores for the corresponding previous period. The sales were the highest at 14028 MT against 13896 MT during the corresponding period last year. Production was also the highest at 15790 MT compared to 14868 MT during the corresponding period last year. The Company is now producing for the first time fine deniers of less than 1 denier for which there is a very good demand. For the first time the Company introduced into the market Super High Tenacity Fibre, Bright Fibre and Coarse Deniers for the non-woven industry. The company entered into the export market for the first time by exporting 210 MT fibre to Italy, Russia and Belgium. The quality of the product has also substantially improved. A grade production is now 90.47% against 86.13% last year. Similarly, fine denier production has gone upto 71% from 62% last year. Waste generation has also come down to 5.45% from 5.76% last year and the entire waste is now being recycled into fibre to get better realisation instead of selling waste at throw-away prices.

Profit before tax at Rs. 700.41 lacs as against 790.00 lacs for the corresponding previous period is considered very satisfactory in view of the very difficult market conditions. This represents a return on equity of 180% before Tax.

The installed capacity of the Plant, after debottlenecking, now stands at 14000 tpa. Your Company has continued to perform much better than a number of other manufacturers of PSF. Capacity utilisation was 80% whereas that of the Industry as a whole was around 45%.

As assured by me at the last AGM, the professional character of your Company has been maintained and the Company has been functioning as an independent Public Limited Company. The connection with NTC has been beneficial to both NTC and SPL. SPL has an assured large market for its fibre in the NTC mills, while NTC with the assistance of SPL has been able to upgrade its product and at the same time increase its production of blended fabrics. NTC came to exercise control over the management of the Company since March 1988. For the 12 months period between April, 1988 and March, 1989 the company earned a net profit of Rs. 528 Lacs as against Rs. 406 Lacs in the corresponding previous 12 months thus showing an improvement of Rs. 122 lacs or 30%. The share value which was Rs. 26/- at the time of NTC coming in was around Rs. 40/- at the end of July, 1989.

DIVIDEND AT 35%

You will be happy to note that the Board of Directors have proposed a final dividend of 20% This together with 15% interim dividend already paid, makes a total of 35% for the period under review.

As mentioned at the last AGM, the PSF Industry has entered a new phase. Installed capacity has reached a level of around 2.50 lac tpa while the demand continues to stagnate at around 85/90,000 tpa. The reduction in excise duty in the year 1988 was expected to stimulate demand. The price reduction, however, was short lived as the prices of raw materials for PSF, both MEG and DMT rose to unprecedented levels, forcing the company to raise prices. This in turn affected demand belieing all hopes of growth.

The Industry had made a number of representations to the Government for reduction in import duties on raw materials and in the excise duty on PSF. Only a marginal relief was allowed. PSF demand, therefore, continues to remain stagnant around 85/90,000 tpa. Under the circumstances the market remains extremely competitive and realisation have been adversely affected. The recent reduction in the prices of DMT, although belated, is a welcome step. This, alongwith the slight softening in the international price of MEG, would help bring the fibre costs down to some extent. A comprehensive review of the taxation and import duties and of Textile Policy in general is called for to enable PSF Industry to achieve the levels of annual growth touched a few years earlier and improve utilisation of installed capacities and financial investments involved.

ECONOMIES

Under the current difficult environment for PSF, the Company has launched a series of schemes to bring about reduction in costs, improvement in efficiencies and product upgradation for value addition. Most of these schemes have already started yielding the desired results.

EXPANSION AND DIVERSIFICATION

Your Company's business at present consists primarily of manufacture and sale of PSF. Your Board recognizes that this dependence upon single product is not conducive to the company's healthy future growth particularly in view of the stagnant PSF market. It has, therefore, reviewed its earlier decision to expand the PSF capacity substantially. This decision was quite timely and saved the Company from falling into dangerous pitfalls in the face of very low utilisation of even the existing Industry capacity. Instead, it has been decided to diversify into manufacture of POY/PFY, which has much better growth rate and capacity utilisation. The project has made considerable progress.

The Company's PSF plant was installed in 1972 and your Board of Directors realises the need for modernising it in order to enable it to stay competitive. The Company has therefore invested about Rs. 5.0 crores in the modernisation of the Plant over the last eighteen months which has yielded the following benefits :

The installed capacity has been raised to 14000 MT from 8131 MT at least cost.

The Raw material consumption and energy efficiencies, have substantially improved, contributing to additional revenues.

Quality of product has been further improved.

The Company is also looking at a number of other options for diversification and will soon take a final decision.

PERFORMANCE DURING THE CURRENT YEAR

There has been general erosion of profitability of PSF Industry consequent on adverse market conditions and creation of excess capacity. We are no longer in the sellers market. The Company is, therefore, bound to be affected as other companies have been, some of them more adversely. However, I would like to assure that due to its inherent strenghts and efficiencies, the Company would continue to flourish and ensure a good return on investment made by its shareholders.

In the first four months of the current year, i.e. from April 1989 to July 1989, your Company has achieved a turnover net of excise of Rs. 1865 lacs compared to Rs. 1599 lacs during the corresponding period last year.

The Company has made a net profit of Rs. 90 lacs during the period despite much more unfavourable market conditions, stiffer competition consequent on the commissioning of three new Plants of JCT, BRPL, IEL expansion and practically stagnant market.

The Company has been making net profit of Rs. 50 to Rs. 60 lacs a month since June and barring unforseen circumstances hopes to close the year ending March 1990 (i.e. 12 months) with a net profit of about Rs. 5.0 crores which will be comparable to the profit for 18 months period last year.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

The most important assets of any industrial enterprises is its employees. We are proud of the quality of the effort put in by all our staff and workers and their deep commitments. It is through this effort that Swadeshi Polytex Limited continues to enjoy market leadership in the consistent quality of its product. The Industrial relations continue to be cordial; the credit for this goes to the loyalty and maturity of our employees. My wholehearted appreciation for this co-operation.

It is my pleasure to express our sincere thanks to the Central Government, the Government of UP, Financial Institutions and Banks for their guidance, co-operation and help. I am also grateful to my colleagues on the Board for their wise counsels in helping us to steer the Company towards better performance and growth My thanks are also due to the Shareholders those who are present here and those, who are unable to do so, for the confidence you have reposed in the Management of the Company

30th August, 1989

Ajit Singh
Chairman

NOTE : This does not purport to be the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.*

jailene® creating tomorrow's fibre today.

MADISON-G-65
PRESSMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

Dangerous Strategy

Terrorists increasingly target policemen's families

ON the battle-scarred terrain of Punjab a new spectre rides ominous. The frontiers of terrorism have taken yet another exceedingly callous step, and now they hover at the domestic doorstep. With the recent killing of the teenaged son of one police officer and the kidnapping of the four-year-old son of another, it has become clear that the rules are being rewritten to bring women and children into the ambit of the war-zone.

PYARE LAL

Last fortnight, 18-year-old Rajan Bains—son of former Batala SSP Gobind Ram who was transferred after being accused of torturing two women (INDIA TODAY, September 30)—was gunned down by terrorists. Three days later, on September 16, terrorists kidnapped little Manish Kumar, the son of Tarn Taran SP (operations) Des Raj. Rajan's death stunned, but it was Manish's fate which kept people on tenterhooks.

Manish, who was picked up from Faridkot while he was going to school, was finally released, but the release itself pointed to an alarming precedent: the use of a hostage for extricating imprisoned accomplices. A practice that can play havoc with the business of law enforcement in the violence-torn state.

The terrorist behind the strategy was the Khalistan Liberation Force (KLF) chief, Gurjant Singh Budhsinghwala. In a note, he declared he had kidnapped the child to make police officials who indulged in fake encounters undergo the agony of losing their children. But that explanation was too facile. The KLF chief had a more immediate objective in mind: the release of his right-hand man, Dhir Singh Dhira, and a few others.

It was a classic hostage crisis. The Punjab police chief, K.P.S. Gill, along with DIG (Ferozepore range) Ajit Singh and Faridkot SSP, S.K. Sharma, rushed to their colleague's aid. And instead of sabre-rattling, responded to the situation with judicious diplomacy. Negotiations were started, a secret deal struck, and the hostages exchanged.

> The well-planned kidnapping of Manish Kumar points to an alarming precedent: the use of a hostage by terrorists to extricate imprisoned accomplices.

For obvious reasons the police does not admit to having given in. Gill claims no "arrested terrorist" was released. The catch here is that Dhir Singh Dhira had been detained illegally. Also released were some others from Faridkot district who had been picked up for questioning. Justifying the giving-in to criminals, an officer said: "The prime consideration was to save the child's life."

The child, in fact, sprung a couple of surprises. Blithely unaware of his possible brush with death, he told of living among two nanis (grandmothers) and four mamas (uncles), who treated him to soft drinks, fed him sweets and narrated heroic tales of the Sikh gurus. On the fifth day, he was dressed in brand new clothes, handed Rs 11 by one of the nanis and taken to Kotkapura, 11 km from Faridkot. There he was sent by rickshaw to the police station nearby, where "his father was waiting".

Manish's experience would suggest that the terrorists of Punjab might not be quite the inhuman monsters they are made out to be. But the well-planned kidnapping and the sudden release was a calculated attempt to win some public sympathy. The terrorist record is stained with the blood of too many children to place any special emphasis on the extraordinary treatment given to Manish.

ANN

Gobind Ram with grieving family (left); and Manish Kumar: innocent victim

In the last few years, several children of police officers have been targeted. In June 1986, DSP Raj Kishen Bedi's son, Ashok, who had just graduated, was killed in Ludhiana. In November the same year, Ravneet Singh, the 19-year-old son of H.S. Kahlon, SP (city), was shot dead in Amritsar. A month later, Arun Kumar, the school-going son of Inspector Brahm Dev was killed in Amritsar. The father died of a heart attack soon after. Gurmeet Singh, the 22-year-old son of Harpal Singh, DSP Baba Bakala, was killed along with his father in February 1987. In the same month Dr Manjit

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ELECTIONS 1989

The greatest event to mark the end of the decade is about to happen. The world's largest democracy goes to the polls.

Do you have all the facts at your fingertips to make a sound judgement on the outcome? Will you be counted among those who predicted correctly?

You could be right!

Prannoy Roy, Ashok Lahiri and David Butler present in INDIA DECIDES, a detailed analysis of how freedom of choice has been practiced since 1952. Its a barometer of electoral trends and the mood of the nation at the time of each election. No political analysis is complete without this unique publication.

- Statistically significant election figures. All important data on elections from 1952 to date.
- Analysis of electoral changes.
- Insights into the correlation between votes cast and seats won.
- Complete bibliography for cross referencing.
- Profusely illustrated with charts, maps and tables rendering electoral trends easy to understand.
- Supported with a set of forecast tables which are easy to use in predicting trends in the next election.
- For the first time, Lok Sabha results of all general elections, constituency results, close contest results, by-election results, and more-all in one volume.

Free Offer

Order immediately, and this 380 page deluxe hardcover edition will be delivered to your doorstep at NO EXTRA COST.

INDIA DECIDES

ANOTHER EXCLUSIVE FROM

INDIA TODAY

Yes! I would like to take advantage of the special POSTAGE FREE benefit. Please rush my copy of 'INDIA DECIDES 1952-1989' at the following address:

Name: Mr./Ms. _____

Address: _____

_____

_____ Pin _____

(Please write in block letters)

I am enclosing a cheque/demand draft No. _____ for Rs. _____ (at the rate of Rs. 350/- per copy), payable to Living Media India Ltd. Kindly add Rs. 5/- to the total amount, for outstation cheques, i.e., cheques drawn outside Delhi.

Mail your order to:
Living Media India Ltd.
P.B. No. 29, New Delhi-110001

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Singh, the newly-married son of IG D.S. Mangat, was killed at Patiala.

Those were reprisal killings, opportunistically seized. But the kidnapping of Manish reveals a dangerous strategy. And cruel though it may seem, the police's giving-in may spark off a horrifying trend. Terrorists may adopt it as standard procedure to obtain releases. Some senior police officers claim to be working on a theory that the kidnapping may have actually been the handiwork of criminals to secure the release of one Manohar Singh of Faridkot district. This theory appears extremely thin for Budhsinghwala is a dreaded terrorist, and he would have issued a denial if the crime was being imputed to him falsely.

The recent events have badly demoralised the force. Many police officials have stopped sending their children to school; all now demand vehicles and armed escorts. The upshot: on September 17, at a meeting in Jalandhar presided over by Gill, it was decided to shift the families of policemen on the terrorists' hit-list to the police lines. The policemen who interrogated and tortured the two women in Batala have also been receiving threats that their wives will be abducted.

In Punjab, a new era of callousness seems to be dawning. One in which the wives and children of policemen will stare into the muzzles of guns.

—KANWAR SANDHU

AISSF MEET

Old Games

HOW many times has the scenario repeated itself in Punjab in the last eight years? A bedecked gurdwara stage, vibrant with militancy amid a sea of expectant villagers. Enter enraged speakers, and the air is rent with litany. After it has died down, rumours of a government hand in the proceedings begin to proliferate.

On September 20, at Gurdwara Ramsar, 1,500 metres from the Golden Temple, Manjit Singh received a typical initiation into panthic politics at an open house session of the All India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF). Younger son of former head of the Damdami Taksal, late Sant Kartar Singh, and brother of Bhindranwale's right hand man Amrik Singh, Manjit was elected president of the AISSF while in jail. Released after five years of detention, like other entrants into panthic politics, he too seemed poised to add to the confusion. This was indicated by the tenor and ambiguity of the function's resolutions.

The resolutions reiterated Bhindranwale's statement that the "foundation of Khalistan will be laid the day the Akal Takht is attacked" and that the federation would fight for the fulfilment of this "goal". Yet, Manjit Singh did not mention Khalistan. But the statement sent by the detained AISSF General Secretary, Harminder Singh Sandhu, was hardline. It appealed to Pakistan to "provide shelter to Sikhs on the pattern of the Afghan Mujahedin". This is surprising as Sandhu had, after Bluestar, offered to cooperate with the Government.

Adding to the confusion was the widespread feeling among Akalis that the Government was tacitly backing the meeting to foment more trouble in order to impose an emergency and postpone elections. Asked Akali Dal(L) lawyer, M.S. Khaira: "Why was so much hullabaloo made when some persons talked of Khalistan in April 1986, and not a word now?" Even Congress(I) leaders admitted that since the Government had prevented the "dharna" of the Akali Dal(T) at Jalandhar on September 18, the AISSF meet too shouldn't have been allowed.

RANA JASPAL SINGH

Rode being confirmed Takht chief

The Government's silence is intriguing. "We are still examining the issue," says DGP K.P.S. Gill. Lending further credence to the feeling of the Government's tacit support is the fact that at the meeting the AISSF confirmed Jasbir Singh Rode as the Akal Takht jathedar, though the SGPC appointee is Professor Ragi. Rode last year had been the subject of a controversy, with IG (Border), Chaman Lal accusing Central agencies of liaising with him. Also, a few months ago, a senior Taksal functionary had admitted to INDIA TODAY that a cabinet minister had met Manjit Singh in jail.

There was dispute about allowing the function to be held. Sources reveal the IG (Intelligence), O.P. Sharma, had written that it "may not be allowed". Governor S.S. Ray was of the same view. However, Gill and Ray later decided to allow it if the venue was shifted from Manji Sahib to Gurdwara Ramsar.

Backing Manjit Singh is likely to prove counter-productive: it will destroy the Government's credibility and give lawlessness a further impetus. For, despite the impressive gathering, Manjit has the suppport of only one of each of the three federation and Panthic Committee groups. "We expected a programme against extortions by terrorists and police excesses in the villages and not political rhetoric," said Harbans Singh, an ex-serviceman of Verka, echoing the villagers' disappointment.

Observers feel the AISSF-Taksal combine now proposes to project itself as a political alternative to the Akalis. Akali leaders agree there is no harm in reintegrating terrorists into legitimate spheres of political activity but the manner in which it is being attempted, they claim, shows that the Government continues to play games in Punjab.

—KANWAR SANDHU

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tennis at seven.
Ten laps in the pool.
Ten minutes with himself.
An orange juice.
And twin blade pleasure.

Touch of steel on skin.
Slice of lather in a stroke.
Cool smooth shave.
A Wilman shave.

Shaving Systems
WilmanII
Smooth days begin this way.

Mudra:Blr:Wil:221:89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ultrx Luxury Towels – in a variety of vibrant colours. Made with superior Japanese technology to give you a towel that's comparable to the finest in the world.

Softer, super-absorbent and with an ultra-rich pile. In 100% pure cotton.

Available as single towels or sets. Also in a special luxury large size.

Ultrx

LUXURY TOWELS

BOMBAY DYEING

ESTABLISHED 187

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAKE MALAYSIA YOUR GATEWAY TO THE ORIENT, USA AND AUSTRALIA

NON-STOP, EVERY SUNDAY TO KUALA LUMPUR

Every Sunday, Malaysia Airlines flies you non-stop to Kuala Lumpur, the heart of fascinating Malaysia. Departing Delhi at 11.15 pm to arrive in Kuala Lumpur the next morning.

Strategically positioned at the crossroads of Asia, Malaysia is a global gateway. From where you can go on to other exciting cities in the Orient, USA and Australia.

And because Malaysia Airlines has a vast network of over 60 destinations across the world, you can have convenient connections from Kuala Lumpur.

All the way, you'll enjoy the genuine warmth and charm that only Malaysians can offer.

malaysia AIRLINES

ENCHANTMENT WHEREVER YOU FLY

Malaysia 1990

AMMAN • AMSTERDAM • BANDAR SERI BEGAWAN • BANGKOK • COLOMBO • DELHI • DENPASAR • DUBAI • FRANKFURT • FUKUOKA • GUANGZHOU (CANTON) • HAT YAI • HONG KONG • HONOLULU • JAKARTA • JEDDAH • KARACHI • LONDON • LOS ANGELES • MADRAS • MANILA • MAURITIUS • MEDAN • MELBOURNE • PARIS • PERTH • PHUKET • SEOUL • SINGAPORE • SYDNEY • TAIPEI • TOKYO • ZURICH & 34 DESTINATIONS WITHIN MALAYSIA.

FOR RESERVATIONS AND MORE INFORMATION, CALL YOUR FAVOURITE TRAVEL AGENT OR MALAYSIA AIRLINES/GENERAL SALES AGENT: STIC TRAVELS PTE. LTD., DELHI TEL: 3326302, 3325786, 3324308, 3321605 OR MALAYSIA AIRLINES, MADRAS TEL: 868625, 868985, 868970, 862802.

AMC-MZC

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

India's No. 1 Sewing Machine with worldwide acceptability

NO ONE ELSE CAN GIVE YOU VERSATILITY LIKE THIS

A versatile range of world-class features makes stitching on Usha sewing machines so convenient, so remarkably simple. Take a look for yourself and find out why it's India's No. 1.

Exclusive Usha features :

- 6 critical components of toughened steel—a unique feature even in the international market, which makes the machine last for years without wear and tear.
- A 3-position fabric selector allows switching to cotton, polyester or nylon, at the turn of a knob. In other sewing machines, this change usually requires adjustment of the feed dog holder.
- Usha's special 'single-press' pressure adjustor regulates the pressure on the cloth instantly. In other machines, a cumbersome screw-type adjustor is provided.
- A built-in light to stitch in the dark also.

- The above features are available in selected models. In addition Usha offers a choice of 5 models available in many attractive, long-lasting colours. No other brand offers such a large choice.

Other attractive Usha features :

An open-type shuttle (in 4 Usha models) enables even beginners to clean and remove the shuttle in less than a minute. A hinged (needle) plate that ensures easy removal and cleaning of the bobbin. And a concealed needle bar (in 5 Usha models) that minimises wear and tear.

A special bobbin winder automatically disconnects, when the right amount of thread has been wound. In other machines, this has to be done manually.

We care for you. That's why we offer features, developed over the years, to more than match the high international standard in the markets of USA, USSR, UK, West Germany, Belgium and many other countries.

USHA

The best zig-zag machine in India for its price.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JAMMU AND KASHMIR

Acrimonious Exit

Minister resigns, indicts government

RATTLED by subversive activity in the valley and the chaos in the administration, the besieged Jammu and Kashmir coalition government has been teetering on its feet. Last fortnight, it suffered another bruising rapier thrust: the resignation of Rajinder Singh Chib, tourism minister and one-time confidant of Chief Minister Farooq Abdullah.

Chib is the second National Conference (NC) leader to part company with Farooq this year—earlier Abdul Rashid Kabli, MP, was expelled from the party for his criticism of the NC leadership. A stunned Farooq did not react to Chib's resignation letter attacking the Government, even as he delayed his expulsion from the party. Two days after Chib's resignation, the NC Jammu unit was restrained from passing a resolution demanding his expulsion. Explained a member: "The party high command felt that precipitating matters at this juncture could invite more resignations."

The resignation was not entirely unexpected. It was known that Chib, a Rajput from the Jammu region and a former air force officer, had been simmering with resentment over various administrative decisions. As recently as on July 9, he had threatened to quit on the issue of transfer of a senior officer in his department. But, following intervention by senior NC and Congress(I) leaders, he had withdrawn his resignation.

This time Chib did not reconsider, nor did he pull his punches. In a shocking indictment of the Government by an insider, he referred to the "anarchical conditions" in the valley, Ladakh and Jammu and to the corruption and "unprecedented chaos in the annals of administration". On the press censorship bill "where the state Government was put to ridicule", Chib revealed that the Cabinet was not taken into confidence.

Attacking the 1986 accord between the NC and the Congress(I), Chib said it had "dipped a well-knit organisation like the NC to the lowest ebb, not only politically but also in matters of administration". Said he: "The ominous accord has encouraged the Centre to handle the levers of the state administration. They count and we are nowhere."

What has, however, raised disturbing questions is his revelation that the law and order situation worsened only after some hardcore extremists were released in July "at the behest of the Centre". Added Chib: "We have it from the public that while hardened criminals and undesirable elements are afforded shelter, innocents are punished."

An embarrassed Farooq Government was stumped into silence and faced with the worry that the resignation would further erode the already weak base of the NC in Jammu. Of the 40 elected NC members in the Assembly, only six are from Jammu. Though Chib is not an elected representative—he was nominated to the Upper House—he was able to invigorate the NC in the R.S. Pura area.

One of Chib's strengths is his sizeable following among ex-servicemen. In fact, his resignation letter criticises the Government for its neglect of ex-servicemen along with displaced persons. It is not surprising then that prominent ex-servicemen have hailed his resignation.

Meanwhile, there is speculation that Chib may join the Janata Dal, thus heralding its emergence as a political force in Jammu. Chib, who is reported to have held meetings with senior Janata Dal leaders, V.P. Singh, Devi Lal and Mufti Mohammed Syed, might be offered the Jammu or Poonch parliamentary seat. Chib told INDIA TODAY he would go by the feelings of his supporters. But on one score he was emphatic: "The Centre must allow one party to function in Jammu and Kashmir."

The influential daily, Kashmir Times, which criticised Chib's move to resign in July has now hailed it as an "Act of Courage". It commented that Chib could emerge as a rallying figure for all those who feel choked with the NC.

For the time being Farooq seems to have staved off more desertions. But with the NC's failure to tackle the mayhem in the state and its increasing dependence on the Centre, the future of the NC as a political entity appears to be in danger. —KANWAR SANDHU in Jammu Chib's resignation signals that the future of Farooq and the ruling NC hangs by a thin thread. It could also herald the political birth of the Janata Dal in Jammu.

Abdullah (left) and Chib: serious signals

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UTTAR PRADESH

Tax Clash

Officials beaten, government reacts

WHEN the 88 income tax officers—drawn from all over Uttar Pradesh—gathered at Meerut on September 14, they thought they were out on another routine raid. At 10.45 a.m. they opened the sealed envelope containing the names and addresses of the two businessmen to be raided—steel and paper mill owner Harish Chhabra and jeweller Chittaranjan Swarup. And shortly after, they split into nine groups and set out for the nine premises to be raided—in Muzaffarnagar and in Bijnore. Expected recoveries: Rs 2 crore.

BHAWAN SINGH

BHAWAN SINGH

Chhabra; (top) demonstrating income tax employees; (inset) injured officials: money power

What the raid yielded was something quite different. At Chhabra's office in Muzaffarnagar, the raiders were met by an abusive Chhabra who bragged about his political connections. He finally signed the warrant agreeing to a search but then went to the gate and signalled to neighbouring shopkeepers.

Soon enough, hordes of them rushed into the office and began beating up the search party. One victim now lies in Meerut Medical College—nursing a broken nose and blood clots in his eyes.

The fate of the other raiding parties was no different. At Anupam Jewellers, Swarup's office, a taxman was "thrown about like a football", in the words of Pankaj Gupta, deputy income tax commissioner, Muzaffarnagar.

The officials who went to Chhabra's factory on Meerut Road were stripped naked and beaten with leather belts and iron rods. They had to borrow pyjamas to travel to Meerut. Other tax officials had to literally run for their lives since the mob had damaged their vehicles.

The fact that each raiding party was accompanied by four armed policemen made no difference. Said a senior income tax commissioner: "None of them even fired in the air." When the trouble began, they simply vanished. The district authorities too provided little help. The seriously injured tax officials—with multiple fractures, broken teeth, burns and bleeding faces—were taken to hospital by their own colleagues. When the news of the attack reached them, income tax officials in Muzaffarnagar went on strike demanding action against the traders.

But the traders too had taken to the streets, shouting slogans against the income tax department. They are certainly powerful. Swarup was once a Congress(I) MLA, and Chhabra is a senior Congress(I) worker having links with local Hindu bodies. He organises Ganesh Rath Yatras and Ram Lilas in the area and was detained for two months under NSA after the communal riots last year. State officials say the two are also close to Minister of State for Home Syed ur Zamal and Food and Civil Supplies Minister Hukam Singh.

Those political links ensured that no arrests were made—for five days after the incident. Says SSP M.S. Bains: "We wanted to defuse tensions first." But the taxmen were not prepared to take things lying down. As the news spread, work was suspended in income tax offices all over the state. Delhi and Calcutta joined in, organising walk-outs and half-day strikes and threatened an all-India strike if their demands were not met.

The demands: handing over of the case to the CBI; immediate arrest of the people responsible for the attack; action against the local SSP and the district magistrate; compensation to the victims; and granting of magisterial powers to income tax staff.

In Delhi, the Indian Revenue Service Association kept up the pressure. And the meetings with Finance Secretary Gopi Arora and Minister of State for Finance Ajit Panja finally yielded results. Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Narayan Datt Tiwari, who was hastily summoned to Delhi, conceded the major demands: arrest of the businessmen and handing over of the case to the CBI, cash compensation to the injured officials—Rs 50,000 for the grievously injured, Rs 25,000 for those with minor injuries and Rs 5,000 for the rest of the search party. Under consideration now are: more powers for tax officials and issue of weapons to the income tax department.

But all is far from settled. Traders in Uttar Pradesh have been threatening a jail bharo stir to protest against arrests. The Vyapar Mandal has vowed never to allow a raid. And Shyam Bihari Mishra, president of the state Udyog Vyapar Mandal, has been exhorting traders to "raid income tax officers' houses".

The state Government, though forced to act against traders in Muzaffarnagar, is unlikely to do anything more for fear of antagonising them. The clout they wield is indispensable in an election year. The result will be a growth of what taxmen call "traders' terrorism". And the ascendance of money and crime over law and order.

—HARINDER BAWEJA in Muzaffarnagar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

An exclusive start to a new decade

SLIM-LINE DIARY 1990
Code: IT 102
Size: 82 mm × 177 mm
Price: Rs. 65

INDIA TODAY YEAR BOOK 1990
Code: IT 101
Size: 222 mm × 289 mm
Price: Rs. 250

POCKET DIARY 1990
Code: IT 103
Size: 79 mm × 127 mm
Price: Rs. 35

India Today Diaries and Address Book

The India Today Yearbook 1989 established distinctive standards which were widely appreciated by discriminating users, for meticulous attention to production and the quality of information offered. This year's edition, the India Today Yearbook 1990 upholds these fine standards and comes with a comprehensive range of exclusive pocket diaries and an address book produced with an eye to detail—a hallmark at India Today.

INDIA TODAY YEAR BOOK 1990

Much more than just a diary, this yearbook puts invaluable information on your desk where it belongs.

The information includes a statistical overview of the Indian economy, a political profile of India, a complete travel guide, city guides, International Time, and 16 pages of full colour maps.

The diary section is laid out with busy executives in mind. The easy-to-read, easy-to-write format includes: a week-at-a-glance, hourly slots for appointments, current and forward year planner, ample space for notes, address and phone number section.

Attractively produced with a burgundy red cover, gold leaf embossing, gilt-tipped pages and a handy ribbon marker, the India Today Yearbook 1990 belongs on your table.

DELUXE MINIATURE DIARIES.

To match the diary on your desk, there is now a slimline for your jacket or the briefcase and a pocket diary specially designed to be carri on your person. With these miniatures, you can now carry all the day-to-day information you need with you. Alongwith provision for space for your appointments, you get 35 pages of invaluable information like India at a glance, Conversion Tables, ISD and STD codes, International Times and a 3-year Calendar 1989-1991.

Make your selection now and send in the order form before 15 October for a special 10% pre-publication discount and free delivery

More from India Today overleaf

Personalize these beautiful diaries.

Whether you're ordering for yourself, friends or favoured clients, give these diaries a personal touch. For a nominal sum of Rs. 10, you can have upto 3 initials printed in gold-leaf on the cover of the India Today Yearbook 1990, Slimline diary 1990 and the Pocket diary 1990.

If the order for any of the three sizes individually is 10 copies or more, the facility of gold embossing of three initials on each diary, is free.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Elegance & Quality Forever...

...Address Book from India Today

This year INDIA TODAY brings you an attractive address book which features upto 8 pages to each letter of the alphabet, personal information section, emergency phone numbers, International Times, ISD & STD codes, and a ready reference ABC index.

ADDRESS BOOK
Code: IT 201
Size: 139 mm × 216 mm
Price: Rs. 65

Elegantly bound in real herring bone tweed, this address book will be appreciated for its classic styling and for the amount of space provided for names, addresses and phone numbers.

Place your order before 15th October and avail of a special pre-publication 10% discount.

IF THE ORDER FORM IS MISSING
Just mail your enquiry/order to Living Media India Ltd., P.B. No. 29, New Delhi-110001

Your order should be accompanied by remittance drawn in favour of 'Living Media India Ltd'. (add Rs. 5/- to outstation cheques, i.e., outside Delhi).

Please add Rs. 10/- for each set of upto 3 initials to be printed in gold leaf (facility available only for the diaries).

ORDER FORM—1990

Product Code	Product Details	Regular Price (in Rs.)	Spl Price for Orders Recd. Before Oct. 15, '89 (in Rs.)	Qty Ordered	Total Amount (in Rs.)
IT 101	India Today Yearbook 1990	250	225.00
IT 102	India Today Slimline Diary	65	58.50
IT 103	India Today Pocket Diary	35	31.50
IT 201	Address Book	65	58.50
				Total (in Rs.)
				Gold Embossing of Initials @ Rs. 10 per item
				Total Amount of Order (in Rs.)

Please give maximum of 3 initials per diary ordered, on a separate sheet.

I enclose my crossed cheque/DD for Rs. _____ (add Rs. 5/- for outstation cheques, i.e. outside Delhi) payable to 'Living Media India Ltd.' Please send the diaries and address books, as listed in the coupon, at the following address:

Name _____

Address _____

_____

_____

_____ Pin _____

Mail your order to:

Living Media India Ltd.
P.B. No. 29,
New Delhi-110001

FREE DELIVERY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

EXCLUSIVITY

LIKE YOU'VE NEVER EXPERIENCED BEFORE

VISIT SUMANGAL FOR EXCLUSIVE PURCHASE OF SUITINGS, SAFARI FABRICS,
SHIRTINGS, TROUSERINGS,
TWEEDS, BLANKETS,
DESIGNER MEN'S WEAR AND TAILORING

DIGJAM, OCM and JIYAJEE, long considered amongst the leaders in premium quality suitings, safaris, tweeds and blankets have come together in a fashion shop for men. It stocks the widest range of fabrics and international designer class ready-to-wear garments, each created with a strict eye to lasting quality and enduring style.

DIGJAM

The shop is SUMANGAL

OCM

Exclusivity is the very backbone of good designing. That is why every SUMANGAL fabric or garment reflects a passionate attention to originality and elegance.

The best of DIGJAM, OCM, JIYAJEE fabrics are individually selected to live upto the SUMANGAL name and provide exclusive qualities to its patrons.

JIYAJEE

It is this singular fastidiousness that makes SUMANGAL indispensable for the well-dressed man.

SUMANGAL

DIGJAM • OCM • JIYAJEE

MILLS' PRESTIGIOUS SHOWROOM

At: New Delhi (South Extension and Karol Bagh), Calcutta, Madras, Hyderabad, Bangalore, Vijayawada, Visakhapatnam, Miryalguda, Indore, Kota, Jabalpur, Baroda, Kanpur and Allahabad.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hawkins
Inframatic Cuisinette

Nothing else cooks so many foods so fast.

Pizzas and Dosas. Grilled Chicken and Sheesh Kababs. Closed Toasted Sandwiches and Marinated Paneer. Waffles and Cakes. Your family had to go to fancy restaurants and Five-Star hotels to eat many of these tasty snacks. Now you can cook all these delicious dishes and more – super fast. With the Hawkins Inframatic Cuisinette.

Save the expense. Be sure of the hygiene. Entertain your family at home. And your friends and neighbours – if they are nice to you!

More than 30,000 Hawkins Inframatic Cuisinettes have been sold. From the makers of Hawkins pressure cookers. Quality India trusts. Hawkins.

Also available – the Hawkins Simmermatic Cuisinette that simmers delicious food slowly, the way granny used to – without the stirring, the smoke and the tears! Maximum price: Rs. 1,500, local taxes extra.

In case of any difficulty write to Hawkins, Dept No. 007, P.O. Box 6481, Bombay 400 016.

HAWKINS INFRAMATIC CUISINETTE
MAXIMUM PRICE RS. 3,000 LOCAL TAXES EXTRA

Super Speed Chart

CAKES	6 MINUTES
CHICKEN	6 MINUTES
PANEER	1 MINUTE
8 CLOSED TOASTED SANDWICHES	5 MINUTES
4 OPEN TOASTED SANDWICHES	8 MINUTES
WAFFLES	4 MINUTES
SHEESH KABABS	8 MINUTES

Hawkins®
INFRAMATIC CUISINETTE®
Makes eating in as exciting as eating out!

® REGISTERED TRADEMARK 1989 COPYRIGHT RESERVED BY HAWKINS COOKERS LIMITED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Hawkins Inframatic Cuisinette available at:

DELHI

DELHI: Cannaught Place, M/s Janki Dass & Co. 23-F • M/s Manohar Dept. Store, 10-A • Fatehpuri, M/s R.D. Stores, 6504 • Kamala Nagar, Crockery Emporium, Shop No.11-F • Karol Bagh, Bengal Potteries & Allied Store, 6/30-31, Ajmal Khan Road • Virmani Appliances, 2537, Ajmal Khan Road, Vishal Bartan Bhandar, 2568, Ajmal Khan Road • Lajpat Nagar, M/s National Bartan Bhandar, 34 Central Market • Sadar Bazar, Khanna Agencies, 68-124, Crockery Market • Sarojini Nagar, M/s Vandana, 93 Main Market • Subzi Mandi, Crockery & Allied Stores, 1535, Chandrawal Road • Trinagar, Jain Electronics, 1532, Tota Ram Bazar

ASSAM

GUWAHATI: Fancy Bazar, M/s R. Champaklal Assam & Co., S.R.C.B. Road • Lakh Tokia, M/s City Centre, • S.S. Road, M/s C.M. Stores, Rly Gate No. 2 • M/s Ravi Prakash Anand & Co. S.S. Road

KARNATAKA

BANGALORE: Brigade Road, General Electricals • Pots and Pans International • Chickpet, Raja Trading Co., 802, Near Balepet Square • Indiranagar, Balaji Electricals, 325, Chinmaya Mission, Hospital Road • 4th Jayanagar, Anupam Electric Co • M.G. Road, Indiana Crockery • Richards Squares, Adams And Co., 19

MAHARASHTRA

BOMBAY: Andheri, Hemco Steel Centre, 212-S.V. Road • Bandra (West), Shazaan, Hill Road • Chembur, Akbarally's, Jaswant Baug, Sion Trombay Road • Natraj Emporium, Nataraj Cinema Building • Dadar, M.C. Jawle Road, Kiran Steel Centre, 6, Laxmi Building • Jacob Circle, Ramanlal Jayantilal and Co., Arthur Road, Opp. Church, Satrasta • Lohar Chawl, Asiatic Electric Trading Co., 46-48, Vittal Sayana Bldg • Sanghvi International, 62 • Malad (West), Bharat Appliances, 34 Natraj Market • Santacruz (West), Akbarally's, Sai Darshan Apartment, S.V. Road • Mahavir Stores, Station Road • S. Bhagat Singh Road, Akbarally's, A-132, Great Western Bldg • Sion Circle, Shri Murugan Steel House, 11/39 Maryland Corner □ PIMPRI: Near Arya Samaj, Rajkumar Enterprises □ PUNE: M.G. Road, Chandan, 217 • Shan Hira, 13 □ NAGPUR: Dharampeth, Bapat's Shop • Pandit Commercial Complex, Gondwana Exports And Trading Co., Modi Lane No.3, Sitabuldi • Residency Road, Frontier Electric Stores, 32 • Sadal, Wox Sales (P) Ltd., 5, Residency Road • Sitabuldi, M.S. Pande & Sons, Main Road, Variety Square • Pandey General Agency, Main Road, Variety Square.

ORISSA

BHUBANESHWAR: Ashok Nagar, T. Krishna Patra, Rajmahal Chawk • Bapuji Nagar, Premier Enterprisers, Choudhuri Market • Reeta, Rajmahal Chawk • Eastern Market Building, Lalchand & Sons • Sahid Nagar, Suruchi □ CUTTACK: Choudhury Bazar, Janata General Stores • Link Road, Royal

TAMIL NADU

MADRAS: Evening Bazar, Formra & Co. 24 N. S. C. Bose Road • M A Etirajulu Naidu, No. 18 • Nyniappa Naicken Street, S Santosha Nadar Son Firm, No. 88 • Purasawalkkam, Raja Metal Stores, No. 264, Purasawalkkam High Road.

UTTAR PRADESH

LUCKNOW: Hazarat Ganj, M/s Domestic Appliances, Opp. Halwaria Market • Hazrat Ganj, M/s Mullicks Emporium • Lalbaugh, M/s Radio & Electric House, Shop No. 13 • Nazirabad, M/s Kanhaiyalal Prag Das, Shop No. 7

WEST BENGAL

CALCUTTA: Bhupen Bose Avenue, Steel Craft Syndicate, 100/2 • Chandni Chawk, Nag And Son, 6, Chandni Chawk Street • Esplanade, Italian Stores Pvt Ltd, 9/2 Chowringhee Road • Gariahatmore, Anandamela, G-9 Gariahat Market • Lenin Sarani (Opp. Chandni Chawk), Navee Electronics And Electricals, C/o Wachel Molla And Sons (P) Ltd, 8, Lenin Sarani • New Market, Bhiswadev And Co, B 70-71 • Ghosh And Ghosh, B-65 • Old China Bazar, Amarnath Kundu And Bros, 14/3, Old China Bazar Street • Satcowrie Dass & Co., 196, Old China Bazar Street • S L Coondoo And Co., 206, Old China Bazar Street • Poddar Court, ABC Traders, 18, Rabindra Sarani, Shop No. 13, Gate No.4 • Rash Behari Avenue, Nepal Sankar And Co., 85 • Sarat Bose Road, Channel Four Electronics Pvt. Ltd., 19C. • Tobin Road, Mullika, 83/2, B. T. Road

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UTTAR PRADESH

Urdu Uproar

Fracas over language's status

CHIEF Minister Narayan Datt Tiwari's recent bestowal of second official language status to Urdu is clearly a political move—to woo Muslims. But it is also one that could boomerang.

Initially, the new status is to be accorded to districts with an Urdu-speaking population between 15 and 20 per cent. Claims Tiwari: "We are fulfilling our party's election manifesto promise. Like Bihar we will have Urdu as the second language."

But the strategy has already come under fire from vociferous protagonists of Hindi. Even a strong lobby in the Cabinet, including Irrigation Minister Lokpathi Tripathi and Education Minister Swaroop Kumari Bakshi, is against it.

A similar bill couldn't be passed by the Vidhan Sabha in 1984 when a minister, Vasudeo Singh, created history by opposing it on the floor of the House. Observers foresee a repeat of that embarrassing situation.

Hindi writers and litterateurs, including Amrit Lal Nagar and Gaura Pant 'Shivani', are solidly opposed to the proposal. Says Nagar: "I honour Urdu, but can't accept it at any cost as the second official language." Adds BJP leader Bhagwati Prasad Shukla: "The step is an insult to Hindi-speaking people."

Nagar and writers Sri Narain Chaturvedi, Kunwar Narain and Sri Lal Shukla refused the Hindi Sansthan awards, boycotting the function. Worse, midway through the function, Governor Mohammed Usman Arif, had to leave after he was heckled by an audience shouting anti-Urdu slogans.

The decision is also against constitutional provisions. The Government's survey, based on the 1981 census, established that the Urdu-speaking population in the state was only 9.74 per cent, while the Constitution says that only a state with a minority population of 30 per cent can be called a bilingual state.

Earlier too, attempts had been made to make a provision for Urdu as the second language through seven ordinances—amending the Uttar Pradesh State Language Act of 1951—promulgated between 1982 and 1984. But the move was stalled when in 1984, the state Hindi Sahitya Sammelan challenged their constitutional validity.

In its judgement of April 6, 1984, the Allahabad High Court barred the Government from promulgating ordinances on the issue. It ordered that under Article 345, Urdu couldn't be the official or the second official language. In 1987, the Supreme Court ratified the judgement.

Now, the new draft bill proposes to insert a clause after Section 2 of the principal act, which reads: "In the interest of Urdu-speaking people, Urdu may be used as the second language in addition to Hindi for such purposes as are specified in the schedule." Interestingly, the word 'official' is missing. But the provisions of the schedule already exist and will lead to no significant change in the status of Urdu. So, the bill is unlikely to please Muslim hardliners. Calling it "an election stunt", M.A. Haleem, national president of the All India Minorities Federation, formed a committee to secure a rightful place for Urdu.

R.K. GUPTA

Shiv Sena agitation: stoking the flames

With the BJP backing the Hindi protagonists, the issue threatens to take a communal turn. BJP state President Kalyan Singh has threatened a "violent and gigantic" agitation, a view echoed by party leader Atal Behari Vajpayee. On September 20, over 250 Shiv Sena men, brandishing spears and trishuls, courted arrest outside the Vidhan Sabha.

While the Janata Dal says it will not oppose the bill, the anti-Urdu lobby is gearing up to challenge the act after it is passed. With the Ram Janmabhoomi issue already tearing apart the state, Tiwari's electoral gambit is in danger of following suit. —DILIP AWASTHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Striving ever harder to satisfy every customer need...

"Ours is a quality-driven company. I believe quality is the only force which has the capacity to energise the entire organisation and focus its efforts towards achieving business results."

Dr. Bhupendra Kumar Modi
Chairman & President

On 27th April, 1989, the Board of Directors of Modi Xerox unanimously elected Dr. Bhupendra Kumar Modi as Chairman. Dr. Modi, who was personally responsible for bringing Xerox to India, has helped to establish Modi Xerox as the undisputed leader in the industry. The following is an excerpt from Dr. Modi's review of the company's performance, delivered at the Annual General Meeting on 26th September 1989.

1988-89 has been a Year of Consolidation. We have matured as a company and been able to maintain a steady profit position. I am pleased to recommend our maiden dividend of 11%.

We have worked with single–minded dedication towards improving business results through better controls, better utilisation of our plant capacity and resources, greater focus on the development of our people and a conscious drive for achieving customer satisfaction and quality in every single area.

One of the major reasons for our success is the fact that we have the best partners in the business. We have benefitted greatly from the technical advancement and experience of Rank Xerox. I would like to thank our collaborators. our customers. our employees and our growing family of shareholders for their continued support.

MAINTAINING A STEADY PROFIT POSITION

Our Net Profit before Tax for 11 months stands at Rs. 5.01 crores – an annualised growth of 8% over last year. The Cash Profit at Rs.9.16 crores for 11 months shows an annualised increase of 6%. Our revenue has increased to Rs. 88.09 crores for the period ending March 1989. At Rs. 96.10 crores annualised, this reflects a growth of 19%.

Return on Net Assets has also improved to over 10% annualised. The interest cost of 5.5% of revenue is a significant improvement over 7.1% last year and has resulted in better profits. There is a reduction in absolute terms as well – from Rs. 5.73 crores to Rs. 4.48 crores. The Debt Equity Ratio has dropped to 1.58 from last year's 2.19. In the long–term, our goal is to increase our RONA to 20%.

CONSOLIDATING OUR MARKET LEADERSHIP

Despite competitive pressure, we have been able to increase our market share to 43.2%. Our year–end sales productivity showed a 20% imcrease over last year.

The number of our machines in field now exceeds 15,000 and our copy volume has crossed the billion mark – an annualised growth of 48% over last year.

This year we also launched the 2510, India's first engineering plan printer and the 1038, a programmable desktop copier with many value-added features.

GOVERNMENT POLICIES: GIVING OUR BUSINESS AN IMPETUS

The new industrial policy of the Government allows sale of parts manufactured as OEM to the extent of 25% of the value of licensed product. We now have an opportunity to sell photoreceptors, sub-assemblies, toner and developer to other companies.

The implementation of the GATT Valuation Rules for Customs purposes is a very welcome step.

Our continued manufacture of toner and developer has made significant contribution in import substitution and helped save considerable foreign exchange. Competition continues to rely only on import of toner and developer, the import volume of which is continuing to grow, leading to higher foreign exchange remittances. The manufacture of toner and developer by other manufacturers is not economically viable on account of lower economies of scale, coupled with low import tariffs and easy access to imports under OGL for stock and sale. The Government needs to look into this aspect.

WINNING CUSTOMER CONFIDENCE AND LOYALTY

The drive for customer satisfaction in every area of our business has won us strong customer loyalty. Today more than 50% of our business comes from existing customers. We are now setting up a computerised Customer Complaint Management system to improve our service even further. A Customer Satisfaction Measurement Survey revealed that Modi Xerox is seen as the No. 1 copier company.

HARNESSING PEOPLE POWER

We spend over Rs. 1 crore on training. Our trainer: employee ratio is one of the highest in India. All our employees are exposed to international training programs developed by Xerox and Rank Xerox. Our training programs are integrated with the principles of Leadership Through Quality – the global Xerox strategy aimed at fully satisfying customer needs.

RESPONDING TO NEW CUSTOMER NEEDS

This year, we set up the Special Business Division to help us explore business opportunities in new market segments. The

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

2510, which was launched by the SBD, has not only enriched our product offering, it has extended our customer base.

In response to market needs, the SBD also launched MX Business Paper, polyester film, tracing paper and telecopier paper for facsimile machines. Our range now includes the entire gamut of EIS throughput material.

In 1988-89, MX 75 acccounted for one-third of the branded copier paper sold in the country.

We now plan to double the SBD turnover from Rs.8.5 crores in 1988-89 to Rs.17 crores in 1989-90.

SETTING EVER-HIGHER STANDARDS OF SERVICE

Preventive Maintenance continues to be an important focal point of our service strategy.

We have increased the productivity of our service engineers through better Time Management and have appointed Commercial Engineers with the dual function of sales and service in 14 locations.

Our distribution system is unrivalled in flexibility and speed. Our network now covers 65 branch-outs, including several in remote areas. We are also improving spares supplies at the branch level and continue to maintain the fastest response times in the industry.

FOCUSSING ON PLANT PRODUCTIVITY

The Rampur Plant is one of just 2 fully-integrated plants in the Xerox world, that manufactures copiers, special materials and parts, under one roof.

This year, our focus has been on improving the returns on our investment in Rampur through better capacity utilisation. We have been able to significantly improve the productivity of the plant without any major capital investment, through innovative management practices and a new layout, with built-in flexibility for error-free process flow.

We have also introduced contemporary concepts like Value Engineering, Just-in-Time Inventories and Statistical Process Control.

We have increased machine production by 17% annualised over last year and have doubled the output of both the toner-developer and photoreceptor units. The capacity utilisation of our toner-developer plant is now 60% going to 100% by the end of the year.

We are examining the possibility of manufacturing frames, fuser rollers and pressure rolls to accelerate indigenisation and help us maintain a better control over both cost and quality. Our R & D department is playing a major role in giving an impetus to our in-house manufacturing plans and our value engineering efforts.

Our special materials team, with the support of Rank Xerox, was able to successfully develop the coating formula for the Japanese 1025 model photoreceptors. Today ours is the only plant outside Japan which manufactures these photoreceptors.

We have invested more than Rs.1 crore towards the safety and health of employees, the safe disposal of effluents and the preservation of the environment.

As part of our Effluent Control and Energy Conservation Management, we have installed a solar energy-based effluent treatment system — the only one of its kind in the entire Xerox world.

DRIVING FOR QUALITY IN INDIGENISATION

We have met our Indigenisation Plan with continued focus on quality and reliability of parts. We are bringing our vendors in line with the global Xerox drive to improve the entire manufacturing process and have full-time personnel for the quality assurance and training of vendors.

Indigenisation in Modi Xerox entails tremendous engineering efforts and investment. For example, we have invested around Rs. 2 crores in moulds and toolings to support the indigenisation efforts of our vendors.

To suit our future plans for Just-In-Time Inventories, we will be developing a team of first-rate, reliable vendors in the vicinity of our plant.

BECOMING AN INTEGRAL PART OF XEROX

This has proved to be a landmark year in which we have emerged as mature partners of our collaborators. In recognition of our engineering capability, Rank Xerox has signed an agreement to source 1025 and 1038 model copiers from us on an ongoing basis for their international markets. The initial order of 3000 machines valued at around Rs.9 crores is the single largest export order placed with us and makes Rank Xerox our biggest customer.

We continue to offer technical consultancy to Xerox Shanghai and Xerox Eygpt. We have also added a new dimension to our exports with a maiden order for consumables from Xerox Shanghai.

Today Modi Xerox is the only export-oriented company in the copier industry. With exports at Rs. 12.19 crores F.O.B. for the period 1st April, 1988 to 31st March, 1989, we have exceeded our obligation for the third year in succession.

PLANNING FOR EXPANSION AND DIVERSIFICATION

The 1990s will see us reaffirm our pledge to our two main priorities – satisfying customer needs and improving business results.

We plan on expanding our product range even further and maintaining a strong presence in both domestic and export markets. We are also exploring the possibilities of diversifying into related areas of office automation.

We have maintained our leadership from the start. And we intend to remain the leaders.

Our aim is to make Modi Xerox the No. 1 Quality Company in India. With the dedication of our team and your continued support, I am sure we can do it.

This does not purport to be a report of the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COMMUNALISM

Flaring up

Damaged vehicles in Kota: tragic events

WITH electoral tension mounting, the tiniest spark can lead to a conflagration. The upshot: even places free of the communal malaise are going up in flames. Even as caste riots rocked the southern state of Tamil Nadu last month, communal violence had engulfed the two western states of Rajasthan and Gujarat.

The brunt was borne by the industrial town of Kota in Rajasthan: 16 dead, hundreds injured and property worth lakhs destroyed. All this in a town that has not witnessed a communal flare-up for over three decades.

The sequence of events was depressingly familiar. On September 15, the Anant Chaturdashi procession was pelted with stones by Muslims who found the slogans being raised objectionable. The processionists hit back; a communal riot flared.

The two dozen-odd policemen accompanying the procession were no match for the rioters. By nightfall, the army had to be called out, indefinite curfew clamped, and shoot-at-sight orders issued. But even as the police picked up 248 people between September 15 and 18 and the army kept staging flag marches, isolated incidents of violence continued. As the violence spread to neighbouring towns in the district, by September 20, Section 144 was clamped on Kota division, prohibiting the gathering of more than four people.

The administration sought refuge in denials and name-calling. Chief Minister S.C. Mathur and Union Minister of State for Home P. Chidambaram held the BJP, the RSS and the Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP) responsible. The BJP and VHP, in turn, squarely placed the onus on the administration's lethargy.

Adding to the confusion were the differing accounts from the administration. According to police intelligence, they had informed the administration 10 days in advance that trouble could erupt on Anant Chaturdashi and recommended that Bajrang Dal and Shiv Sena activists be kept under surveillance.

The chief minister claims the administration had reviewed the situation and deployed about 350 policemen. But even his own partymen do not bear out this version. According to Somnath Sharma, the regional organiser of the party's environment cell, he had warned the district magistrate seven hours before the procession that trouble was imminent. Yet the administration refused to respond, and only two-dozen odd policemen accompanied the procession.

Meantime, neighbouring Gujarat too was hit by the communal virus. Ominously, in Gujarat it was villages that reeled under the violence. Trouble erupted in villages surrounding Kheralu town in Mehsana district when the BJP and VHP managed to give a communal colour to an isolated incident in which some Muslims killed a Hindu due to personal enmity. Immediately, VHP volunteers went on the rampage, looting Muslim homes. The result: Muslims have now fled from about 60 villages surrounding Kheralu.

The communal divide was also cemented in villages in Gujarat's Kheda district. Muslims stoned a Ram Janmabhoomi procession and the Hindus of Nadiad town in the district promptly observed a protest bandh.

No lives have yet been lost in the district, but as the communal cycle reveals, bloodshed is but a stone's throw away.

BIHAR

Up in Arms

A spate of strikes and protests

BIHAR once again resembles a state under siege. First state Government employees struck work on September 12 to press their demand for parity in pay-scales with their counterparts at the Centre. Then junior doctors followed suit with their demands and chemists downed their shutters from September 19 to protest against the high turnover tax on medicines.

Last fortnight, events took a more serious turn with students unleashing an orgy of violence in protest against the induction into the state cabinet of two ministers with allegedly dubious track records.

A beleaguered Chief Minister S.N. Sinha could only exclaim in despair: "As elections draw near, these agitations are inevitable. Today I failed to talk to my chief secretary even once since he was busy negotiating with striking government employees."

It was while these negotiations were on that the students launched their three-day campaign in protest against the induction of certain controversial ministers into the state cabinet in August. The agitation turned violent as

Protesting junior doctors: rising anger

Photographs by KRISHNA MURARI KISHEN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SOME FACES, AS YOU CAN SEE, HAVE CHARACTER.

BORN OF A LINEAGE AS ILLUSTRIOUS AS HMT. TECHNOLOGY, GRACE AND SINCERE AFTER SALE CARE DISTINGUISHING THE FINEST FROM THE REST.

CHARACTER TELLS.

hmt
QUARTZ

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For the first time in India, presenting the Cera BathSuite in International style.

The Golden Rhapsody motif on the Crowne Collection.

CERA DECORATOR COLLECTION SANITARYWARE & TILES

Some Exclusive Motifs.

Cera Decorator Collection is yet one more expression of our endeavour to provide you with innovative ideas in bath decor.

We were the first to introduce Designer BathSuites. A range of colour and design coordinated sanitaryware that is today known across India as the Cera BathSuite collection.

We were the first to experiment with colours and textures to give you the widest choice of shades.

What's more, today we're further expanding our range of tiles to give you greater freedom to mix and match with our motifs and designer sanitaryware.

Yes, at Cera innovation has become a way of life. Because the way you live today makes yesterday's bathroom outdated.

We make dreams come alive — through innovation.

CERA® Ceramic Division
Madhusudan Industries Ltd.
E-15, NDSE — Part II, New Delhi-110 049

O&M/524

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SHIRTS FROM THE FINEST QUALITY LONG STAPLE COTTON

Ambassador Cotton Classics. Shirts made from soft, luxurious cotton. With superior crease resistance. Styled impeccably. Stitched to perfection.

Now you won't buy your shirts anywhere else in the world.

AMBASSADOR COTTON CLASSICS

AVAILABLE IN SELECT BATA STORES AT DELHI, BOMBAY, CALCUTTA, MADRAS, BANGALORE, HYDERABAD, CHANDIGARH, SRINAGAR, JAMMU AND GANGTOK.

JUST WHAT YOU'D EXPECT FROM US

Bata

gotri

WHITE SUMMER JACKET. BLACK BLENDED COTTON
SHIRT FOR CONTRAST. MASK, RED HAIR, SMILE – OPTIONAL

JIYAJEE

The Fabric of Life

SYMBOL OF QUALITY & STYLE

JIYAJEE

JIYAJEE FABRICS

SUITING · SHIRTING · LEISUREWEAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the houses of three ministers of state—Kripanath Pathak, Girish Narain Mishra and Bhola Singh—were attacked by the students who also resorted to stoning of buses.

The police retaliated on September 21, brutally beating up the students. This in turn sparked off another agitation across the state. The ruling party fears this could turn into a rallying point for the splintered opposition groups in the state.

If the strike by junior doctors demanding more employment avenues, more stipends, and a strict stand on mushrooming private medical colleges almost paralysed the functioning of hospitals, the closure of chemists' shops added to the agony of the sick.

The state Government tried to combat the crisis situation by persuading public sector drug companies to open retail outlets for the public. At the same time it accused the Chemists and Druggists Association of initially agreeing to a lowering of additional tax on medicines and then reneging on the deal and demanding an even lower rate.

With so many segments of professionals and students up in arms against the Government, the chief minister's claim that the agitations are just a build-up to the general elections hardly holds water.

What it does mean is that the ruling party is going to have its hands full in the crucial weeks leading up to the elections. For the chief minister and the Congress(I), September has indeed turned out to be a cruel month.

—UTTAM SENGUPTA

BOTTOMLINE by D. BUNKER

Law of St Lucre

THE island of St Lucre is the classic tourist haven. Total privacy. Sin and sand. Its offshore banks lapped by soothing waves of greenbacks. Best of all is the personalised service. Banks stay open on Sundays and holidays where the chairman personally attends to customers who left home without their American Express cards. But last fortnight, the idyll was disturbed by the invasion of sleuths from the Indian Intelligence Bureau investigating charges that a number of Indians had numbered accounts in St Lucre. Here's how their sleuthing went:

IB sleuth (IBS): I'd like to meet the chairman please.

Man in chair: I am the chairman. Pick a number.

IBS: Aha! So you do stay open on Sundays and holidays as we suspected.

Man in chair: Well, you did insist on making an appointment for today. My name is MrClean, chairman of Trust First.

IBS: We are from the Indian Government investigating a very serious matter.

MrClean: I have great regard for the Indian Government. Some of my best clients are Indians. First Trust Indians, that is our motto. That is why all the Indian accounts were handled by me personally. You can bank on me to help you in any way.

IBS: So you confirm that you stay open on weekends?

MrClean: My dear fellow, we only open on weekends. Weekend sales are always the best. More privacy, no snooping staff around who might spill the beans later. Secrecy is the foundation of this business. Mum's the word.

IBS: How about pop? Does a Mr Singh have an account here?

MrClean: Under the laws of St Lucre, I cannot divulge that information. However, since you have come such a long way to meet me, I'd hate to send you back empty-handed. Let me say that I will neither confirm nor deny the existence of any account in the name of Ajaye Singh which has deposits of $ 21 million.

IBS: But we never mentioned his full name.

MrClean: Telepathy my dear fellow. Telepathy is the foundation of this business. The moment you mentioned Mr Singh, I knew exactly which one you were talking about.

IBS: That means he does have an account here?

MrClean: I can't give you that information. But I can give you a hint. There is a certain five-digit number that begins with 2 and ends in 9. I'll give you another hint. The other three numbers add up to 20.

IBS: So, you do have five-digit numbers?

MrClean: I cannot give you that information. Let me put it this way. Normally, we give all our clients six-digit numbers. But if a Mr Singh came in and asked for a five-digit number I would make an exception. I have this special partiality for Singhs.

IBS: Can you show us a sample of a numbered account, say with withdrawals and deposits just so we can see how an offshore bank operates?

MrClean: What a strange coincidence. I have one right here that I keep handy to show any client who asks. Purely random choice of course.

IBS: Of course. What a strange coincidence. This account has deposits of exactly $ 21 million. And it is a five-digit number. And it begins with 2 and ends in 9. And the other three numbers add up to 20.

MrClean: My dear fellow, offshore banking is full of strange coincidences. It's the foundation of our business.

IBS: But these figures don't add up.

MrClean: What do you expect? I handled all the Indian accounts personally and the calculations could have gone wrong. I am a businessman not an accountant.

IBS: One last question. Your previous employees say your bank went bankrupt and is no longer in business?

MrClean: Under the laws of St Lucre, I can neither confirm nor deny that.

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WEST BENGAL

Ensuring a Victory

● COMING on the eve of the general elections, it was a major victory for the Left Front Government in West Bengal, which has been engaged in a battle with the Central Government over the execution of the 840 MW Bakreshwar thermal power project.

Some time ago, the Centre, with typical high-handedness, had blocked the efforts of Chief Minister Jyoti Basu to get Doordarshan to telecast an appeal to raise donations from the public for the Rs 1,000-crore Bakreshwar project. The Centre justified its action on the ground that the appeal went against paragraph nine of the AIR code.

The code stipulates that appeals for funds by individuals cannot be telecast, except for the prime minister's national relief fund at a time of external emergency or if the country is faced with a national calamity.

Since then, the West Bengal Government has been raising funds from the public by making the project an emotional issue—"a symbol of our self-respect".

In addition, the Power Development Corporation had moved the Calcutta High Court, challenging Doordarshan's contention.

And in a significant verdict last fortnight, the Calcutta High Court struck down the controversial AIR code. The court directed the Union of India, AIR and Doordarshan Calcutta not to withhold the broadcast and telecast of such appeals.

The controversial code evoked a sharp reaction from Justice A.M. Bhattacharya of the high court, who described it as "patently unreasonable" and "nakedly discriminatory".

For Basu and his Government the high court verdict is a major political victory. Undoubtedly, it will also have far reaching implications for the Centre-controlled electronic media.

GOA

Forced to Resign

Photographs by AMBAJI KAMAT

Sunita with hunger-strikers; Narvekar

● AFTER weeks of vacillation, last fortnight the Congress(I) leadership in Goa was forced to act. Assembly Speaker D. Narvekar was asked to resign following a protest wave by students against his alleged molestation of a young typist, Sunita Haldankar.

The students' passionate protest encouraged Sunita to speak out in public. Escorted by Maharashtrawadi Gomantak Party leader R. Khalap, she conducted herself like a politician. "Are you with me in my struggle for justice?" she asked students, inviting a resounding "Hoy" (yes). She also offered to join three hunger strikers for Narvekar's removal. But as it happened, Narvekar got the message and resigned a day later.

UTTAR PRADESH

Campus Tug of War

● IF there's one thing students resent it's control. That's why Lucknow University's move to check unwanted admissions by introducing written tests met with stiff resistance. The students were also ordered to vacate hostels as several rooms are under illegal occupation.

Protesting students brought the city to a standstill and staged a dharna outside the vice-chancellor's house. Last fortnight, the chief minister brought the authorities and students to the negotiating table. But with both sides unrelenting, peace seems a distant prospect.

Students grapple with the police: stiff resistance

R.K. GUPTA

BIHAR

Green Card Lure

● FOR those who cannot get the fabled American Green Card, there is still hope. Now there is an Indian 'green card'. The Bihar Health Department has announced that it will issue green cards to couples with two or less children and who have undergone sterilisation after April 1985. The cards are to be a ticket to top priority in education, health and housing.

But like most schemes in Bihar, this one also appears to be doomed. To begin with, the state does not have much of a public health system—in fact, it does not even have a blood bank. And the state housing board is no better. It constructs barely 300 houses in five years.

In any case, the programme has been caught in the predictable tangle of bureaucratic apathy—since the entire process of verifying the size of families and checking the date of operation is tiresomely time-consuming.

As a result, Patna, the only district to have launched the scheme this September, has decided to take on only 10 couples at a time—initially distributing 20 green cards to hopeful couples. However, even health officials are embarrassed about the health services that the green cards are supposed to ensure.

Also, in the field of education, the Government has yet to fix the quota of seats in medical and engineering colleges. Justifies a smug official: "These couples would anyhow require admission for their children only a decade and a half later."

The plan is also locked in a Catch-22 situation. While the target audience it seeks to motivate is the large mass of people in the countryside, these people do not have much use for the technical education and urban housing that are being offered. But despite these loopholes, the green card is still seen as a ticket to opportunity.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In its warp, in its weft, in its weave...

India. Primordial, deep, faceted. The wellspring of countless creative impulses. Palpably alive, to this very day. Strikingly and most colourfully manifest in the handspun magic of its fabrics. The handlooms of India. Resplendent, intricate, patterned, rustic, sophisticated, earthy, ethereal. In Indian handlooms rests India's very soul.

Handloom House's entire National Design Collections at specially subsidized prices – right through the year.

...India lives.

handloom house

Sarees ○ Dress Materials ○ Readymades ○ Furnishings ○ Carpets ○ Bed, Bath & Table Linen

THE ORIGINAL ONE STOP SHOP

Ahmedabad • Bangalore • Baroda • Bombay • Calcutta • Chandigarh • Coimbatore • Delhi • Ernakulam • Gorakhpur • Hyderabad • Imphal • Jaipur Madras • Madurai • Patna • Ranchi • Secunderabad • Surat • Vijayawada • Vishakapatnam.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Interact:AIH:176 A

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hundreds and thousands of sunflowers stretch out into the horizon in Kurnool, near Hyderabad. Standing amidst a crop as high as himself, Raghuram Reddy is inspecting the plants. The sunflower heads are nearly filled with seeds and soon it will be time for the harvest.

This has been a truly wonderful season: Raghuram has discovered that growing sunflowers is easy and profitable. The crop does not depend on the monsoon. Nor does it require large quantities of expensive fertilisers and pesticides. Reassured by the promise of a rich harvest, Raghuram has made up his mind to plant sunflowers on most of his 18-acre land. The hopes of a brighter future for his wife and their two-year old son now soar high. And his thoughts go back to that day, almost two years ago, when ITC came to his help...

Raghuram Reddy of Kurnool. Every time the rains failed, the sight of his barren fields filled his heart with despair.

Until ITC's Agri-businesses Division helped him reap a golden harvest.

ITC's Sundrop is already emerging as a brand leader.

For close to eight decades, ITC's scientific methods of cultivation have benefited the tobacco farmer. As part of a national programme to bridge the gap between supply and demand of oilseeds, ITC is transferring technology to this sector.

The hybrid varieties of sunflower, safflower, cotton, castor and groundnut developed at its Government-recognised research centre are helping farmers increase yields substantially. Continuing this golden chain of activity, ITC is now buying their crop to manufacture edible and non-edible oils. The Company is also supporting the establishment of oil-processing complexes in backward areas—one such unit is already operational and more are being planned.

With ITC's marketing strengths, its Agri-businesses Division has successfully launched Sundrop, the first of several branded oils. In addition, the exports of fruits, vegetables and spices are helping ITC increase its foreign exchange earnings for the country.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Where else is ITC working for India?

Family Health and Welfare: Through its far-flung marketing network, ITC distributes millions of Nirodh contraceptives and promotes the advantages of a small, well-spaced family: an effort acknowledged by the 1988 FICCI Award for Family Planning.

Cottage-sector Craftsmanship: With looms, raw materials and technical knowhow, the ITC-promoted Triveni Handlooms has revived Shahjahanpur's traditional craft of carpet weaving. These carpets are exported by ITC along with many other products from small-scale and cottage-sector units.

Paper and Board—in the core-sector: The ITC-promoted Bhadrachalam Paperboards is a leader in its field. It has set new standards by combining record productivity with exemplary concern for wood conservation, environment protection and tribal welfare.

New horizons, new hopes.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Sarayu Foundation Trust and eGangotri

THE RIGHT
FOR T
FOR T

bajaj group

When you're working within 'zero-error' tolerances improper lighting could mean the difference between success and failure...

TRUST BAJAJ TO DESIGN LIGHTING SYSTEM. THE RIGHT SITUATION. THE RIGHT RESULT.

Bajaj brings you a range of luminaires and lighting systems. Designed by computers to suit virtually every lighting need. Be it for industries, commercial institutions or street lighting.

Each made to our own demanding standards. As well as to the stringent specifications of the Bureau of Indian Standards, Commission Electrotechnique Internationale and of other international organisations.

For our advisory service on lighting and or lighting installation design, write to. General Manager (Lighting), Bajaj Electricals Limited, 51, Mahatma Gandhi Road, Bombay 400 023., or contact our nearest regional branch office.

bajaj

bajaj LUMINAIRES

Spreading Light – scientific

Kolkata Channel and eGangotri

THE

ARDEN WOMAN.
EVER CHANGING
ET NEVER CHANGING.

THE EXCLUSIVE 1989 RANGE OF 'STUDIOLINE' SILK AND PURE CHIFFON SAREES IS AVAILABLE AT MOST GARDEN-VARELI OUTLETS

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"It was the attitude which kept the passengers happy."

This is an authentic passenger statement.

Lufthansa

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUJARAT

Unholy Row

● WHEN Swami Dhansukhnath of Ramdev Pir Temple in Ahmedabad was arrested last fortnight on charges of molesting Vanita, a teenaged devotee of his, it seemed as if justice had finally won the day. But that was only the beginning of a snowballing controversy.

The incident came to light when Vanita made a criminal complaint in the sessions court alleging that the swami had molested her on the temple premises when she went to offer morning prayers. Stunned Hindus of the area took to the streets and Dhansukhnath seeing the public fury, fled Ahmedabad. But last fortnight, following a warrant against him, he presented himself before the police and is now in custody.

NIKHIL BHATT

Dhansukhnath: ungodly act

But matters have not ended here. Die-hard followers of the swami are trying to protect him by alleging that Vanita is a girl of easy virtue and had, in fact, tried to trap him. This has not cut much ice with the incensed Hindus who are determined to see Dhansukhnath punished. They have been holding protest marches in Ahmedabad every alternate day. But Dhansukhnath may after all hold the trump card. He has got connections in high places and his religious functions are attended by prominent people, including the chief minister. Which side the scales of justice finally tilt, thus remains uncertain.

ANDHRA PRADESH

Battle for Supremacy

SNAPS INDIA

Youth Congress(I) workers being re-arrested

● FOR the second time in just five months, the Supreme Court locked horns with G. Narayana Rao, Speaker of the Andhra Pradesh Assembly, last fortnight.

The court directed the suspension of the arrest warrant of Paramaiah, a revenue divisional officer of Medak district. His arrest had been ordered by the Speaker on the recommendation of the Privileges Committee, for belittling the prestige of P. Ramahandra Reddi, a Congress(I) MLA.

The episode came close on the heels of another controversy involving the Speaker. The Supreme Court had accused Narayana Rao of contempt of court for not complying with its April 25 order to release 32 Andhra Pradesh Youth Congress(I) activists, jailed for misbehaviour in the precincts of the state Assembly on March 29.

As the activists had already completed 29 days in jail, the Speaker did not challenge the order at that time. However, when the House resumed its sittings last month, the Speaker ordered the activists to be arrested again for a day to implement the assembly resolution in toto.

Chastising the Supreme Court, Narayana Rao said: "The legislatures are supreme in their own right and not subordinate to the judiciary." A nagging question was back in focus: who is supreme, the judiciary or the legislature?

MADHYA PRADESH

Cultural Charade

● THE latest CAG report, tabled in the Madhya Pradesh Assembly, presents an alarming picture of wasted resources in the Culture Department. Apparently, 80 per cent of its publications—claimed to be pioneering efforts in the field of art and culture—have remained unsold.

An appalling example: half the copies of Purvagraha and Kalavrata, Hindi magazines published by the now defunct Madhya Pradesh Kala Parishad, were unsold between 1982-83 and 1985-86. The loss: Rs 3.67 lakh. Noted the CAG report: "With demand being so low, where was the need for printing so many copies?"

Again, over 2,000 copies of four books on Khajuraho, the Gwalior fort, Orcha and Indian rock paintings had no takers, although many copies had been distributed free to VIPs. The bill for this folly: Rs 7.82 lakh.

KARNATAKA

Hounding Mission

● LAST fortnight, former Karnataka chief minister Ramakrishna Hegde faced an embarrassing probe. The Kuldip Singh Commission, appointed by the Centre, was going into the Revajeetu land deal and the NRI housing scam that took place during Hegde's tenure as chief minister.

While Hegde gained a reprieve when the high court absolved him of any misuse of power in the Revajeetu case, the panel came perilously close to linking Hegde's son-in-law to a Bombay group of dubious land developers in the NRI housing case.

MUSHTAQ AHMED

Kuldip Singh: probing scams

What was remarkable about the hearing was the alacrity with which Justice Singh questioned witnesses himself, often giving details the government counsel was unaware of. The commission has indicated that it will not hesitate to call even Hegde to the stand—a suggestion he has received angrily. Hegde says if he is called to depose before the commission, the prime minister will have to do likewise, since he is the "complainant".

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Ranutrol is now big enough to have a smaller name.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's the law. A company with an average annual turnover of not less than Rs.5 crore, for 3 consecutive years, is no longer a 'private' company. Instead, it is deemed a 'public' company.

So, Ranutrol Private Limited is now Ranutrol Limited.

Thankfully, there's no law as to how big one can grow. The company expects a Rs.15 crore turnover during 1989-90.

And, as a member of the Ranutrol Group, it will be a major contributor to the Group's projected turnover of Rs.100 crore, by 1992.

Ranutrol Limited. A small enough name that's easy to remember, for how big it is.

Ranutrol Limited

TECHNOLOGY QUALITY SERVICE RANUTROL GROUP

Corporate Office □ F-85, Okhla Indl. Area, Phase-I, New Delhi-110 020.
Tel: 683 6001. Telex: 031-65372 ACPL IN. FAX: 011-684 1386.

The Ranutrol Group of Companies □ Ranutrol Limited: Air-conditioning, Refrigeration, Industrial, Heating and Domestic Controls; Aqua Mixers, Shower Systems. □PCL (India) Pvt. Ltd.: Automatic Test Equipment, Component Testers, Bare PCB Testers, Troubleshooting, Measuring Instruments. □ Ranutrol Instrumentation Ltd.: Process Control Instruments, Instrumentation Systems. □ Auto Controls Pvt. Ltd.: Electronic Typewriters, EPABX Systems, Bathroom/Kitchen Fittings and Accessories, Water Filters.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NARCOTICS

The Empire Strikes Back

Agency and drug mafia locked in battle

Gurbux Bhiryani: mafia mastermind

THEY may well be India's answer to Eliot Ness' Untouchables—the police squad that took on Chicago's powerful mafia gangs. A handful of men, who lack even the bare essentials of law enforcement—weapons—have taken on the organised might of India's drug-lords whose turf stretches from run-down motor garages in New Delhi to plush hotel suites in New York City. At stake: a Rs 1,000 crore illegal business in drugs.

Since its inception three years ago, agents of the Narcotics Control Bureau (NCB) have been slowly winning the war. But now, the drug empire is striking back. After being hounded by the only Indian agency exclusively dealing with drug offences, the mafia bosses have, according to narcotics officials, come up with a coordinated strategy masterminded inside the walls of the capital's high security Tihar Jail, to neutralise the Narcotics Bureau. This strategy includes:

► Filing a murder case against four NCB agents, including a deputy director. A metropolitan magistrate issued non-bailable warrants against them. The case has bogged down the agents in a day to day legal battle.

► Raising a joint pool of Rs 80 lakh to hire the best legal advice on the cases filed against them by the NCB. Apparently to bind the staff in fighting legal battles rather than pursuing investigations.

► Obtaining medical certificates on specious pleas to get easy bails from the courts. The NCB with its limited staff cannot contest the authenticity of every certificate which also involves other government departments.

► Continuing drug operations from the court-houses while in police custody in an effort to demoralise the NCB.

The reason for such a coordinated onslaught is pretty obvious. In just three years, the fledgling organisation has been able to bust major drug-running rings which were operating from India. Among the Central agencies involved in the fight against the narcotics smugglers, the understaffed NCB—with only 95 officers—has made a significant impact as compared to larger agencies.

In the number of successful raids conducted and quantity of drugs seized, it is second only to the huge Customs and Excise Department (see charts). Most important, it has arrested the most notorious and powerful drug barons after careful intelligence work. Out of the 20 Indians most wanted by the American Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), 14 have been nabbed by NCB.

And these are the men, lodged in compound number four of Tihar Jail, who have decided to pit their resources and brains against the NCB. Leading them is 6 ft 3 inches tall Gurbux 'Sam' Bhiryani. He was arrested last summer after a search which started from a New York City hotel where the DEA arrested Indian and American couriers with 9 kg of heroin in a parking lot. On the streets, the consignment was worth about Rs 10 crore. Half of this consignment belonged to Jasbir Singh Sandhu alias Jassi, Bhiryani's associate—a gold smuggler from Punjab with strong links in Pakistan where the heroin originated.

> The Narcotics Bureau has made a significant impact in the war against drug running, but now the mafia is regrouping and hitting back.

The New York arrests led to an intricate chain of contacts which finally revealed Bhiryani to be the mastermind. His operatives included specialists in concealing drugs for smuggling and money launderers abroad. He was also on Interpol's wanted list for his operations in Europe. Along with him, the NCB caught many of his associates in what turned out to be an elaborate operation.

Before the Bhiryani case, the bureau had earned plaudits for smashing another major drug ring headed by Delhi-based Yudhishthir Kumar and Joginder Malhotra involved in smuggling heroin from Pakistan to the US, UK and Netherlands.

In one such operation, a consignment

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THIS IS L&T

L&T supplies arc furnaces, rolling mills, and ladel cars to Indian steel plants.

MANUFACTURING EQUIPMENT FOR ALL THE MAJOR STEEL PLANTS, SAVING VITAL FOREIGN EXCHANGE...

INTRODUCING TECHNOLOGY, GREATLY ENHANCING EFFICIENCY IN INDIAN CEMENT PLANTS...

Pre-calcination technology, introduced by L&T – a boon to the cement industry.

From farms to factories... L&T helps to control power with safety and reliability.

MANUFACTURING INDIA'S WIDEST RANGE OF LOW TENSION SWITCHGEAR AND CUSTOM-BUILT SWITCHBOARDS.

L&T TODAY... L&T's steadfast commitment to the core sector has earned the company a tremendous reputation.

For 50 years, this giant has been shaping Indian industry with vital contributions to every sector of the economy. Ranging from construction to steel, paper to food processing, coal to thermal power, railway electrification to atomic energy, dairies to cement... you name it, L&T is there.

TOMORROW... L&T's vision is in turnkey projects in areas of India's priority sectors: oil and gas, steel, petrochemicals, fertilisers, power, defence and medical electronics, telecommunications, aerospace...

And on the international front L&T will explore global opportunities.

Ensuring L&T's continued leadership through a vision that is world class.

L&T VISION

WORLD CLASS

50 YEARS OF TECHNOLOGICAL EXCELLENCE. 37 PRODUCT DIVISIONS TODAY. AND GROWING...

A Reliance Group Company

ISSUE OPENS

RIGHTS: 14th September, 1989. PREFERENTIAL: 30th September, 1989. PUBLIC: 4th October, 1989.

Mudra: B: L&T: 87: 2417

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

of 10 kg of heroin smuggled in from Pakistan was brought to a farmhouse on the outskirts of Delhi. The heroin was to be concealed inside tins of ghee by Malhotra's brother, Surinder. But the NCB busted the racket before the tins could be exported.

Last year, the NCB detained about 120 suspected drug smugglers under the Prevention of Illicit Trafficking in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act (PITNDPS). Eighty of these were lodged in the Tihar Jail, from where the drug mafia launched their counter-attack.

THE classic example of this is the Tandon case. In this case, a Delhi businessman Bhagwan Dass Tandon, had jumped from his second floor office during interrogation in the course of a raid by the NCB. His nephew, Gopal Dass, who was lodged in Tihar Jail with other traffickers for about six months, alleged to the police that his uncle was murdered by NCB men after torture.

The police undertook an investigation of the case and found the complaint to be baseless. But a Delhi metropolitan magistrate, D.R. Jain, found the case fit enough to issue non-bailable warrants against the NCB officials on murder charges.

The bureau has, however, challenged the magistrate's order in the high court on a variety of grounds. The bureau says that the Central Economic Intelligence Bureau officials had given a written undertaking to the police that they were interrogating Tandon and that the questioning was not being done by the NCB men.

Further, they assert that the other two employees of Tandon had never mentioned any torture or murder. Neither had Tandon ever complained of any torture to the doctors at AIIMS where he had been taken.

They also add that in two bail applications, neither Gopal Dass nor Tandon's wife, Pushpa, mentioned murder and torture. Bureau officials also add that they did not need to torture Tandon since they had already recovered heroin from him, which was enough to put him behind bars. They point out that his statement before the magistrate was different from what he had said in court earlier. Lastly, they say that Gopal Dass did not even know the names of NCB men involved. So how could he have named them in the complaint?

The unusually vigorous manner in which cases filed by the bureau are being contested, say senior NCB officials, indicates the existence of a coordinated strategy. For example, it took 13 hearings to commit a case to the sessions court compared to the usual average of a couple of hearings.

Another case took 25 sittings for conviction, despite the fact that the new narcotics legislation is very stringent against violaters. In yet another case, a sessions judge held nine hearings to confirm that the powder recovered from one offender was actually heroin when a simple drug testing kit could have established the same fact within minutes.

Since the promulgation of the PITNDPS Act last year, drug-running in the country has become a high risk offence with a minimum sentence of 10 years. Consequently, the drug mafia have also been innovatively scheming to beat the system—and the NCB. Of late, the bureau has been facing hurdles at every stage of its sleuthing. It has, for instance, complained to the Chief Secretary of Delhi, V.K. Kapur, about dubious medical certificates signed by a kidney specialist of Lok Nayak Jaiprakash Hospital. Apparently, the doctor had issued certificates for heart ailments which was not his department. In addition, they were not ratified by the chief medical officer. But even after a year nothing has come of the NCB complaint.

Another NCB complaint on which the administration has not taken any action is regarding Bhiryani's disappearance from the same hospital. Apparently, he forged a doctor's signature to get admitted to the G.B. Pant Nursing Home. Though he was lodged in Tihar Jail that time, neither the jail authorities nor the police in whose custody he was, had an inkling of his whereabouts for three days. Rues an NCB official: "Other departments still treat drug traffickers like ordinary criminals. They should be reoriented to see drug offences in a different light."

NCB agents believe that the huge profits in the drug trade are being used to buy-off officials in the local administration, hospitals, high security jails and even judiciary. This was demonstrated two years ago when the chief metropolitan magistrate of Delhi, Subhash Wason, was suspended for hobnobbing with drug-runners.

According to estimates of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, global drug-trade has crossed a whopping $3,000 billion a year. With Pakistan and Afghanistan as a major source centre, India has, in the last few years, become a prominent conduit point for drugs being smuggled to the West. The

In just three years the NCB has been able to nab 14 of the 20 Indians most wanted by the US Drug Enforcement Administration.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THIS IS L&T

Cooling Tower at Neyveli Power Station
If the dimensions of an egg were proportionately increased, this cooling tower's shell thickness would be one-third that of an egg.

BUILDING COOLING TOWERS WITH SHELLS THINNER THAN THAT OF AN EGG...

The Baha'i Temple at New Delhi
An architectural masterpiece. A one-of-a-kind engineering feat.

TRANSFORMING A COMPLEX DESIGN INTO AN ARCHITECTURAL MARVEL...

The Abu Dhabi International Airport
Won amidst stiff global bids. Testimony to L&T's world class capabilities.

CONSTRUCTING A MULTI-TERMINAL INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT TO ACCOMMODATE 11 AIRCRAFT SIMULTANEOUSLY.

L&T TODAY... Such amazing feats of construction are merely a part of L&T's gigantic scope of operations.

For 50 years, this giant has been shaping Indian industry with vital contributions to every sector of the economy. Ranging from construction to steel, paper to food processing, coal to thermal power, railway electrification to atomic energy, dairies to cement... you name it, L&T is there.

TOMORROW... L&T's vision is in turnkey projects in areas of India's priority sectors: oil and gas, steel, petrochemicals, fertilisers, power, defence and medical electronics, telecommunications, aerospace...

And on the international front L&T will explore global opportunities.

Ensuring L&T's continued leadership through a vision that is world class.

L&T VISION

WORLD CLASS

50 YEARS OF TECHNOLOGICAL EXCELLENCE

A Reliance Group Company

37 PRODUCT DIVISIONS TODAY AND GROWING...

ISSUE OPENS

RIGHTS: 14th September, 1989. PREFERENTIAL: 30th September, 1989. PUBLIC: 4th October, 1989.

Mudra:B:L&T:88:2417

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SEE BETWEEN THE LINES

Even after you've heard about it all and read about it all – see it all on India's first newsmagazine on video cassette – Newstrack. Press the play button and you're on the ringside seat – to people, places, events, issues – incisively covered like on no other medium ever before.

▶ ONLY ON NEWSTRACK ◀

SPECIAL OFFERS

SINGLE CASSETTE
- Current Issue Rs. 135/- and a money-back guarantee.
- Back Issues Rs. 125/- each.

SUBSCRIPTION
- Annual Rs. 1200/- and a FREE INDIA TODAY YEARBOOK 1990 worth Rs. 250/-.

Offers valid upto December 31, 1989. Year Books will be home delivered at your given address by the year end or early January 1990.

Mail a DD/Cheque favouring Living Media India Limited to P.O. Box No.29, New Delhi – 110 001.

For more details contact
Delhi: 3320689. Bombay : 2027867.
Madras : 479163.
Calcutta : 445398. Bangalore : 210834.

Home delivered by courier or Registered Post

India Today Presents
NEWSTRACK
▶ The newsmagazine to watch ◀

MILESTONES/IT/236

Surinder Malhotra with family; Yudhishthir (top); and Joginder Malhotra (below)

Sources in Tihar Jail say that the rules are shamelessly flouted. Drug undertrials get whatever they want in jail. One was found with a television in his cell, another had curtains for his bathroom.

money that prominent drug smugglers flaunt is clear indication of how big a business it has become for the India-based drug mafia.

According to sources in Tihar, the drug undertrials get whatever they want in jail. Gopal Dass for instance managed to get a letter typed outside, then smuggled in for him to put his signature and then had it mailed—all against the jail manual. Another drug undertrial was found with a television in the cell, while another had bathroom curtains. NCB's complaints with the jail authorities have had no effect.

More shocking is the police-drug mafia collusion especially during court hearings. Last month almost every big drug trafficker facing trial gathered in the Patiala House court for what was virtually a reunion. There was Joginder Malhotra and his brother having lunch with their families on the courtroom lawns. Jassi's relatives were distributing cold drinks to the policemen. Bhiryani was jesting around with his lawyers and roaming around the court compound unfettered. And Yudhishthir Kumar was pacing to and from his lawyer's chamber to the courtroom.

Barring Kumar, all others were in judicial custody and were not supposed to even talk to anyone according to the jail manual. The undertrials need the court's permission to even talk to their lawyers. Commented an official: "They can continue their operations from the security of the prison. We have no control over this." The Delhi Administration has done nothing much to curb this practice which encourages trafficking in narcotics.

No state has formed special courts—which can do away with long-winded legal procedures—to try narcotics cases though the new legislation stresses this point. Going by the experience in Columbia, the drug mafia's first attack is always on the judiciary. And if the Government has to succeed in this war, it has to fight on all fronts at the same time. And now with the only effective sword arm in this battle, the NCB, also under pressure, the fortunes of the drug war could easily swing the other way.

—PANKAJ PACHAURI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CARTIER. THE PANTHÈRE WATCH

A PURE JEWEL. FASHIONED IN 18 CARAT GOLD, THE PANTHÈRE WATCH BY CARTIER IS DISTINGUISHED BY ITS SOFT, BALANCED CONTOURS. THE INTRICATELY LINKED BRACELET HAND ASSEMBLED. ITS CLEVERL CONCEALED CLASP INCORPORA A FOLDING BUCKLE IN THE FINE JEWELLER'S TRADITION. CARTIE SYMBOLIC FELINE IS INTERPRETI WITH GRACE AND AUDACITY. SENSUAL, LITHE, EXTRA-FLAT, THE PANTHÈRE BOASTS A NOBLE PEDIGREE. RESOLUTELY CONTEMPORARY. TIME HELD IN WILLING CAPTIVITY.

® Trade-Mark registered by the Cartier

Cartier

THE ART OF BEING UNIQUE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SERVICE AGENT: MARCKS & CO., 97/103 M. G. ROAD, OPP. UNIVERSITY, FORT, BOMBAY 400023. TEL: 270999

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Nice and warm

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A true friend in need.

Right from the time you write to us or walk in, you become a friend and associate. Which entitles you to all the care and courtesy we can extend. A professional service to deal with all your housing problems. At HDFC you apply for a Home Loan with your head held high.

Having helped house over a quarter of a million families in the last 11 years, HDFC personnel are specially trained to handle every aspect of your housing needs.

But then you won't believe it till you experience it. So why don't you write in or call on us today.

H·D·F·C

HOUSING DEVELOPMENT FINANCE CORPORATION LIMITED

Regd. Office: Ramon House, 169, Backbay Reclamation, Bombay 400 020. Phone: 220282, 220265,220908, 231054, 231146 Telex: HDFC-011-6762 Gram: HOUSCORP
Branches: Ahmedabad • Bangalore • Bhubaneswar • Bombay (Parel) • Calcutta • Chandigarh • Cochin • Coimbatore • Guwahati • Hyderabad • Indore • Jaipur • Lucknow • Madras • Nasik • New Delhi • Pune • Trivandrum • Vadodara • Vashi (New Bombay)

We know the way home.

KING'S CHOICE

EXCLUSIVE SUPERFINE SUITLENGTH

DIGJAM

SUITINGS FOR THE CONNOISSEUR

A Product of VXL India Ltd

WE EXCEL

Available at Mills SUMANGAL showrooms and other leading stores

Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

METLEX
INTRODUCES THE GRANDEUR
OF GRANITE
N CERAMIC TILES.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

METLEX CERAMICS LIMITED.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Scores of ceramic tiles out there and yet, on one, Metlex, can give you the grandeur of granite. The magic of marble. Or the elegan of embossed and screen print designs.

Because only Metlex has the technology perfect enough to be able to. It's got the state-of-the-art monoporosa process from SACMI of Italy.

Which also means you get a perfect-size til every time. Whether it's 200mm × 200mm 200mm × 100mm or 200mm × 300mm. A perfectly finished tile every time. Whether i matte, satin or glossy glazed. And also a perfect range of colours. Whether you war off whites or pearl grays or any shade in-between.

So, don't settle for anything else. Introduc yourself to the grandeur of Metlex. It's quite simply the best.

Metlex

METLEX

CERAMIC WALL AND FLOOR TILES

Quite simply the best.

LIMITED. 3-18 OKHLA INDUSTRIAL AREA, PHASE-I, NEW DELHI – 110 020 PHONES: 6846330-6846331 TELEX: 031-75033 MCL-IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra: D: MCL: 73

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's time to work with the trim & trendy look

Philips Trim Series of Luminaires. Sleek and smart. Adding style to your interiors.

Slender, Smart, Efficient. That's the Trim Series. With energy saving ballasts, improved lampholders and starters. Ready to install. Easy to connect. Truly, then, it's time to work with the trim, trendy look. It's time to work with the TRIM Series.

AVAILABLE IN TWO SIZES—2 FEET & 4 FEET

When it comes to lighting all you need is PHILIPS.

HTA 3688

Philips Lighting

PHILIPS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

SRI LANKA

No Exit in Sight

Differences with India on IPKF pull-out as killings continue

ANOTHER conciliatory chapter was added to Sri Lanka's continuing saga of political turmoil and instability last fortnight as Indian High Commissioner Lakhan Lal Mehrotra and Sri Lankan Foreign Secretary Bernard Tilakratne signed yet another accord. This time it was to lay down the framework for the withdrawal of the IPKF from the north-east.

To this chapter was added one more—the Premadasa Government's offer of a three-day truce to the radical JVP which has held the Sinhala mainland to ransom. But as is Sri Lanka's wont, discord followed quickly. Differences arose with India on the IPKF withdrawal and despite the olive branch to the Sinhala subversives, killings continued.

Just as the Government was trying to use the accord to take the wind out of the sails of the JVP, which thrives on anti-Indian Sinhala chauvinism, problems arose on the interpretation of key clauses of the accord. Indian spokesmen, including Minister of State for External Affairs Natwar Singh, said the withdrawal was linked to devolution of power to the provisional government in the north-east.

Foreign Minister Ranjan Wijeratne questioned this interpretation. As fresh discussions started it became clear that India was keeping its options open. It had no intention of retreating without achieving the gains it had expected to make: bringing the LTTE into the democratic mainstream, securing a north-east linkage and devolution of powers to an autonomous Tamil government.

No withdrawals had begun till a week after the accord was signed and South Block sources indicated the withdrawal was not going to be front-end-loaded, but rear-end-loaded leaving India the option to change its mind till the very end. Sources say the mutual, unwritten understanding is that elements of the IPKF could linger till March '90.

Despite the differences, Premadasa supporters called the accord a feather in his tattered presidential cap and persuaded him to "exploit the positive mood" by offering a three-day truce to the JVP. Significantly, the truce offer was sponsored by the all-party conference convened by Premadasa to end the blood-letting. So, last fortnight two cease-fires came into effect in the island.

But Sri Lanka's headlong rush to self-destruction continues, with killings providing a macabre background score to conciliatory moves. The latest incident of tit for tat violence came from Kandy district, where nearly 150

LTTE militants; (top) IPKF in Jaffna

Photographs by SHYAM TEKWANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IPKF

Valuable War Lessons

THE image is a bit incongruous. Unlike the usual starched soldier standing stiffly to attention, this sentry outside Lt-General Amar Singh Kalkat's headquarters is on the prowl, alert, his finger ever on the trigger. But the trigger is not of the usual Indian Army issue, the 7.62 Ishapore Self Loading Rifle (SLR). The curved magazine, the short barrel, the foldable butt: the ubiquitous Kalashnikov silhouette. The sentry himself, as his red beret and flashes indicate, is a paracommando.

The first IPKF unit to suffer casualties in September 1987, the paracommandos have been the first to learn. "It took just two bash-ups to show the major problem. Our rifle was lousy, too big, packing too much range and too slow a rate of fire for close combat," says an officer.

Subsequently, the commandos started using Kalashnikovs captured from the LTTE. The army has ordered a sizeable number of rifles in the Kalashnikov genre. It has given up its earlier insistence on not giving the Ishapore SLR burst-fire capability. The aim had been to conserve ammunition. But in close quarter battles, the Indian jawan found his one-shot-at-a-time SLR hopelessly inadequate. "Here we need to bring in an effective volume of fire," says Major-General R.N. Bhalla, commanding the 54 Infantry Division at Palaly near Jaffna. So planners have now allowed a burst-fire position on a certain percentage of SLRs. "The rethinking on small arms is the first fallout of the Sri Lankan adventure," says a senior general.

Two years of low-intensity conflict has changed much else. Many lessons have been learnt, many new theories tested, many demolished. The results are already visible. Others are being debated and stored on paper and videotape and punched into the army's vast institutional memorybank. "Sri Lanka will make a long-term difference to our army," says Lt-General Kalkat, the affable, bespectacled soldier who was himself baptised in Chhamb in 1971.

A team of experts from the College of Combat at Mhow has been recreating the major IPKF battles on videofilm. Where actual footage is not available, battles are being simulated either on the ground or on computers. "We are rewriting our infantry combat manuals," says an expert from Mhow.

The Indian Army, despite its three decades of counter-insurgency experience, had many lessons brought home to it. The foremost: that the modern soldier needs to be motivated to fight in a foreign land. Says a general: "Today's jawan is literate, he listens to the BBC and asks questions. You have to tell him what he is doing here, something we did not do earlier on and paid the price." So, soldiers had existentialist doubts or tended to treat the Sri Lanka operations like any other war, liberally using firepower and destroying houses as if they were operating in enemy territory. Says Major-General Ashok Mehta, commander of the 54 Mountain Division based in Batticaloa: "We had to learn to fight in a situation where your adversary need not be your enemy."

The army, incidentally, realised too late that the old convention of shipping home the ashes and not the bodies of jawans from the lower ranks (officers' bodies are sent back) was hopelessly outdated today when jawans and their families are more demanding.

Sri Lanka also underlined the inadequacy of a conventional force in an unusual situation. Two major operations recently undertaken by the 54 Mountain Division deserve mention. To the south and south-west of Batticaloa lie large expanses of impenetrable jungles where the LTTE has several major camps. By snooping electronically on the LTTE's radio communications, broad locations of two camps were identified, Mawila near Verugal river and Topimalai in the thick Kanjikudiaru jungles.

Mawila was assigned to the 1/11 Gurkhas in Operation Kiranti and 4 Bihar was to seek out Topimalai (Operation Angelfire). While the Gurkhas took four days of hard trekking through tropical forest to approach their target, the Biharis had to literally sniff theirs out. After wandering around clueless, an adivasi jawan caught the scent of human excreta and, following it, the raiding party climbed a hillock where the camp was perched. But a company of infantrymen climbing through shrubbery makes a lot of racket. So, by the time the Biharis got there the Tigers had vanished leaving behind maps, wireless

"We have had great battle training. Our boys are no longer afraid of the bullet."

MAJOR-GENERAL R.N. BHALLA

"In Sri Lanka, we had to learn to fight in a situation where your adversary need not be your enemy."

MAJOR-GENERAL ASHOK MEHTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

sets and other equipment, documents and freshly cooked food for over 150 men. The Gurkhas too swooped down on Topimalai only after its occupants had fled.

Both operations are now the subject of intense debate. Each camp was a major LTTE hide-out and, if the army had been reached before the Tigers fled, a large body of rebel manpower would have been trapped. But you can't surprise with a 100-odd infantrymen rummaging through the forest.

Surprise might have been possible if the IPKF had heli-landed commandos. Yet again, the problem is you cannot land troops unless you know the exact location of the camp. Experts say that requires modern—but easily available—infra-red imaging equipment mounted on aircraft if not satellites. At night, human habitations in a damp jungle radiate heat waves that infra-red sensors can pick up.

This is how the US has been picking out cocaine units hidden in the Colombian forests. Experts feel Indian forces need to acquire such equipment—in the post-Sri Lanka phase it could be invaluable in the jungles of the Indian north-east, or even Punjab's Mand swamps covered with elephant grass. The problem, however, does not end with infra-red sensors. "Even when you know the location of the camps you can't land troops since the jungles provide no opening for the helicopters. What do you do? Defoliate?" asks an officer. That left army planners inevitably looking the Agent Orange syndrome in the eye.

Many feel that the most important outcome of the Sri Lanka experience has been that it provided a baptism in fire for an army in which, to use soldiers' lexicon, subalterns had grown into colonels without ever hearing a shot fired in anger. "We've had great training. My boys are no longer afraid of the bullet," says Major-General Bhalla. Whether a thousand dead and 3,000 wounded was an affordable price for that or not is another matter altogether.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Jaffna, Trincomalee and Batticaloa people were massacred in two days. This was in apparent retaliation to a rebel attack killing nine family members of soldiers. Kandy's ruthless police chief Premadasa Udgampola said an anti-JVP group, Eagles of Central Hills, claimed responsibility for the killings. But he added that though he opposed anyone taking the law into his own hands, the "end-result" was "good" as 80 per cent of those killed were JVP sympathisers. A day later, a powerful car-bomb blast in Gampaha left two dead and 25 wounded. Next morning 32 bodies, many with burning tyres still around their necks, were found in the district.

All this took away from the gains Premadasa could have expected from the all-party conference. In any case, the JVP did not attend, and Premadasa detractors likened the conference to a wedding sans the bride. The JVP in turn called for a civil disobedience campaign. It asked people not to pay taxes, buy bus and train tickets and postage stamps "in the national interest". Wijeratne admitted the JVP had burnt seven tea and rubber factories and 88 post offices since the call. He said the JVP was trying to strangle the economy.

Premadasa's hope that his security forces can compel the JVP to the negotiating table, as the IPKF did with the LTTE, may well boomerang. With Sri Lankan forces and pro-government vigilantes killing innocents, more people are driven to the JVP.

Also, a key question is: what will happen in the the north-east after the IPKF withdraws? LTTE sympathisers say the group is changing its ways and may now join the democratic process. Yet there are suspicions. Said North-Eastern Provincial Government Chief Minister Varatharaja Perumal: "The Tigers don't change their spots (sic). They are fascists and won't accept a democratic dispensation." His suspicions arise from the fact that the LTTE has threatened to launch action against the EPRLF from October 1.

For several months EPRLF cadres have been trained and armed by the IPKF, which has used them to get intelligence about the LTTE. Clashes have already broken out between the two groups. The IPKF and other officials concede a showdown between the LTTE and the pro-India groups is inevitable. Says Iqbal, the Jaffna town organiser for the EPRLF: "We have no illusion about what will happen once the IPKF leaves."

EPRLF cadres: armed by IPKF

That is why even while talking of peace, all sides are preparing for the next round. The Tigers are indulging in a kind of tactical thrust-and-parry to gain positional advantage in the post-IPKF phase. And the IPKF is busy arming EPRLF cadres even as the group forcibly brings in scores of Tamil conscripts each day.

Indian intelligence agencies have for some time secretly run a major operation importing arms: mainly Kalashnikovs, rocket-launchers and grenades of Soviet/Chinese origin from Afghanistan to arm pro-Indian Tamil groups. That and the desire for vengeance will ensure that the real battle for supremacy in the Tamil belt will begin only after the last Indian soldier leaves for home.—SHEKHAR GUPTA with P. JAYARAM in Colombo

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUESS WHAT HAPPENS TO PUMAPLY IF YOU BAKE IT FOR ONE HOUR IN AN OVEN AT 200°C ?

NOTHING. ABSOLUTELY NOTHING.

Water boils at 100°C.

Pumaply can take more. Much more.

Because it is 100% Heat Resistant.

Think of what this means for your kitchen cabinets exposed to the continuous heat of ovens, pressure cookers, toasters and everyday frying and cooking.

And, yes ! Pumaply is also Termite Resistant.

No wonder, it is the ideal plywood to use in your homes and offices—wherever long life is of prime importance.

So, the next time you're making furniture, ask for Duro's Pumaply. And be 200% sure of plywood that's virtually indestructible.

DURO PUMAPLY ™

FROM THE MAKERS OF DUROBORD

VIRTUALLY INDESTRUCTIBLE !

Sarda Plywood Industries Ltd. General Sales Office: 1/7, D.B. Gupta Road, New Delhi 110 055

Regional Offices: Bombay, Ph: 343891/332058 • Ahmedabad, Ph: 398534/9035 • Madras, Ph: 31358 • Bangalore, Ph: 215451

BONDING AS PER IS 4990/IS

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BENAZIR BHUTTO

Struggle for Survival

DESPITE nine months in power, Benazir Bhutto's battle for control seems far from over. Twice, in the last two months, there were panic signals as her government seemed on the brink of collapse. The first crisis was her tussle with President Ghulam Ishaq Khan, an old hand in the power game, over the retirement of the Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff Committee, Admiral Iftikhar Ahmed Sirohey. It almost resulted in a dissolution of the Assembly.

The constitutional conflict had hardly subsided when the nine-party opposition Islamic Democratic Alliance (IDA) launched a major assault on her government. The Punjab provincial Government led by Nawaz Sharif, leader of the alliance and protege of the late general Zia-ul-Haq, issued warrants of arrest against Federal Minister for Labour Mukhtiar Awan in a murder case and threatened to throw out all federal employees from the province.

Meanwhile, the combined opposition requisitioned a National Assembly session in the last week of September to move a vote of no confidence against Bhutto at a stage when she appeared most vulnerable because of division within her own ranks. Boasted a prominent IDA member of the National Assembly: "The stage is set for a final assault."

With widespread speculation about an imminent mid-term poll, both the ruling Pakistan People's Party (PPP) and the IDA have begun their battle of rallies. Bhutto addressed two rallies this month in Rawalpindi and Karachi, while the Opposition held a rally in Lahore. Significantly, while Bhutto has adopted a cool posture and refrained from attacking the Opposition, the IDA has launched an aggressive campaign, sometimes falling to a personal level.

With the Nawaz Sharif Government in Punjab intensifying its warfare with the Centre, Bhutto's Government appears to be teetering.

PRASHANT PANJIAR

Nawaz Sharif: fresh assault

The Centre-Punjab warfare further intensified last fortnight when the Punjab Police arrested three officers of the Federal Investigation Agency, sent to probe a tax evasion allegation against a cold drinks factory owned by sons of the late general Abdur Rehman, former ISI chief. Worse, a pamphlet, allegedly published by the information cell of the Punjab Government, accused Bhutto of making Pakistan a client-state of India and asked the army to play its "constitutional role" to protect Pakistan from "slavery".

These provocations led to a retaliation by the Federal Government, which charged the Punjab Government with sedition and warned it of "serious consequences". However, it did not specify what action was being taken against the Nawaz Sharif Government. Many observers believe it might recommend dismissal of the Punjab Government. But it is certain that the President will not allow such an action.

To counter Nawaz Sharif, Bhutto is trying to rally the old guards of the PPP, who were either expelled by her or who left because of differences. It now seems certain that Ghulam Mustafa Khar, a former governor of Punjab during the PPP's first term in power, will be taken back into the party. Khar, who has his own independent political base in the province, might be appointed governor. The PPP is optimistic that Khar, a master of palace intrigues, will be able to break the IDA majority in the Assembly.

Bhutto's problems seem to have been aggravated by rebellion in the Sind PPP. Ten PPP members of the National Assembly from Sind, led by Makhdoom Khaliquzzaman, have asked the National Assembly to allot them separate seats in the House. The members have accused the PPP leadership of backtracking on their commitment for greater provincial autonomy. Some of them have also levelled serious allegations of corruption against Bhutto's husband, Asif Ali Zardari. Although the dissidents have denied that they are quitting the party, observers feel it will weaken the PPP's fragile position in the Assembly.

Hectic behind-the-scene political horse-trading is going on in Islamabad as the National Assembly is in session. The success of the Opposition's no-confidence vote will largely depend on whether they are able to win over the support of smaller groups like the Mohajir Qaumi Movement and the Baluchistan National Alliance. The next few days could well make—or break—Bhutto's Government.

—ZAHID HUSSAIN in Islamabad.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The popular investment offer is here again!

1.5% Bonus Dividend just announced for MISG (6) 1986

Benefit under MISG (13)

12% p.a. paid every month in advance +2% minimum appreciation in capital on maturity + Bonus Dividend in 4th year

Those joining on or before the 15th are eligible for the full month's dividend.

Who all can benefit

☐ All individuals, including minors

☐ Trusts, Registered Societies and Co-operative Societies

Now you can invest in multiples of Rs. 100/-

☐ The face value of Units is Rs. 10/-

☐ The minimum investment is Rs. 1000/- and in multiples of Rs. 100/- thereafter.

☐ There is no upper limit to the investment.

Tax concessions

☐ Exemption for Units (under Section 80L of the Income Tax Act, 1961)—up to Rs. 10,000/-.

☐ For individuals there is no tax deduction at source.

Additional facility

☐ Kindly send your bank draft for the amount of your investment—minus the bank draft commission, to the nearest UTI office. This facility is available in places where UTI has no office.

☐ This is in addition to the existing facility of submitting your application to the designated bank.

Duration of the scheme

☐ This is a 5-year scheme. However, option of full encashment at par is available after 3 years.

Pledging facility

☐ Though transfers are not allowed, it is possible to pledge the Units with the bank for the purpose of obtaining a loan.

Paid in ADVANCE
60 monthly post-dated dividend warrants for all five years sent in advance along with the certificate! The warrants are payable at par in designated banks.

Application forms available at:

All UTI offices, Chief Representatives, Agents, and select Hindustan Petroleum pumps.

All branches of Canara Bank in the Southern Region.

All branches of UCO Bank in the Eastern Region.

All branches of Central Bank in the Northern and Western Regions.

Mail the following coupon to:

Post Bag 11410 Bombay 400 020 Tel 2863767/6201995
Post Bag 60 Calcutta 700 001 Tel 209391/205322
Post Bag 5063 Madras 600 001 Tel 587433/580938
Post Bag 5 New Delhi 110 002 Tel 3318638/3319786

Please send me the FREE MISG (13)'89 brochure

Name: _____

Address: _____

_____

_____ Pin: _____

UNIT TRUST OF INDIA
(A Public Sector Financial Institution)

ADROIT-149/89

Scheme open from Sept. 1 to Oct. 31, 1989

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'... trained manpower counts in the nation more than anything else, more than gold and silver and money.'

Jawaharlal Nehru

At Mahanagar Telephone Nigam intensive training has become a vital part of our lives, helping each of us grow, professionally and as human beings.

- District and Regional Telecom Centres to impart hi-tech training
  To upgrade technical skills in telecom technology.
- Nearly 5000 Telephone Operators/ Supervisors covered through Training Projects
  Developing human resources towards better performance and greater efficiency at International Trunk Exchanges and Special Services (197, 198 and 199).
- 1875 employees at different levels covered by 73 HRD programmes
  Bringing about attitudinal changes through behavioural and motivational training.
- Planning for a skilled labour force
  Existing unskilled segment of labour force will be trained and skills upgraded on an ongoing basis to effectively man the expanding telecom network.
- A professional organisational structure
  Ensuring overall efficiency, for customer satisfaction.
- Productivity linked Incentive Scheme
  Results are already evident in a higher rate of efficiency at Trunk Exchanges and Special Services.
- A new work culture, a new work system
  Age-old procedures have been simplified, and decentralisation has led to improved services.

At MTNL, attitudinal changes and a new work ethos is inspiring the organisation to provide world class telecom services.

महानगर टेलीफोन निगम लिमिटेड
(भारत सरकार का उद्यम)
MAHANAGAR TELEPHONE NIGAM LIMITED
(A GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ENTERPRISE)

We carry Nehru's vision with us.
It makes us stronger.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OVERSEAS FUNDING

IS the Government thinking of allowing the financial institutions to fund corporate acquisitions overseas? The grape-vine suggests so. Certainly several official meetings have been held in this connection. The institutions are not barred from funding acquisitions overseas, but have not so far bought into the equity of foreign companies in any significant manner. If the reports doing the rounds are correct, what seems likely is that public sector concerns such as computer manufacturer CMC will be among the first beneficiaries of the institutional largesse. CMC has been scouting for a software company in the US. Also, other private sector groups such as the JK group, have expressed interest in establishing a manufacturing base in Europe. Such moves are meant to overcome the problems that the dropping of internal trade and other barriers in Europe by 1992 could pose to Indian exporters.

FABRIC TO FINANCE

THE low profile Arvind Mafatlal group—which includes the Rs 450-crore National Organic Chemical Industries Ltd (NOCIL)—is on an expansion drive. In the works is a financial services company, in partnership with one of the financial institutions or banks. The Mafatlals also hope to make a splash in the furnishings and apparel markets, drawing on their association with Tootals Coates of the UK (group company Mafatlal Fine exports upscale fabrics to the UK group). While that is a long way down the road, the financial services company lies could get going next year. The Mafatlals will hold under 25 per cent of the Rs 10-crore equity. To be headed by former Hindustan Lever chairman T. Thomas, the company will carry out merchant banking functions and finance new projects. Mafatlal companies like NOCIL are investing hefty sums in modernisation and in developing small chemical companies as suppliers, and this could provide business to the new enterprise.

HOTEL INFLUX

THE rush by international hotel chains seeking to establish a presence in India (INDIA TODAY, August 15) is assuming gargantuan proportions. Among the foreign chains scouting around for tie-ups is the Hong Kong-based Shangrila, according to Tourism Department sources. The US is represented by the Hilton group, by the Marriot group and by a consortium of non-resident Indians. The Hyatt and Kempinski chains, which already have marketing tie-ups with Indian hotels, are also said to have expressed interest in setting up hotels. The upscale Regent group has even offered to reclaim land from the sea for a hotel in Bombay. Precisely how many of these chains will eventually put up hotels, however, is the big question. Land is scarce in the cities. So will the great hotel hopes land with a thud?

EXPANSION TIME

ICE-cream manufacturer Vadilal Enterprises is venturing into frozen foods and vegetables. After launching ice-creams in Maharashtra, Madhya Pradesh and Rajasthan, the Gandhis who own Vadilal have a Rs 5-crore frozen foods project up their sleeves. Few details are available, but sources say they are looking at the export market and are considering raising funds from the public for the venture. Simultaneously, the Rs 25-crore Vadilal is expanding ice-cream production capacities and adding to its 55-flavour range of ice-creams. For Vadilals, variety is indeed the flavour of life.

GROWING WAGES

PER capita wages in the manufacturing sector seem to be growing faster than ever before. In the first six years of this decade, emoluments grew at an annual compound rate of 13.4 per cent (see chart), from Rs 7,896 to Rs 14,834. The rate in the '70s was 9.4 per cent (Rs 3,207 to Rs 7,896), while in the '60s it was a modest 8.6 per cent (Rs 1,662 to Rs 3,482). In most cases, these growth rates outpaced those of the national income per family unit of three persons. Clearly, factory and mining workers are a privileged lot.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

FRESH FORAYS

PIPELINE and construction group Dodsal is laying a line into the core sector: a fertiliser project is on the cards. It's also cocking an eye at the consumer goods market—specifically, inexpensive crockery and cutlery—and branching out into mass house building, and canal and highway construction. It will build houses all over the country, starting with New Bombay and Bangalore. The upshot: the pipeline division's contribution to total sales will dip from 50 per cent to about 20 per cent, and net sales will climb from Rs 200 crore to Rs 350 crore.

EXIT TALK

SINCE the Ambanis gained control over Larsen & Toubro (L&T), the engineering and construction giant has been in the news. Soon after its Rs 820-crore mega issue was announced, L&T bosses mooted a proposal to extend loans up to Rs 1,000 crore to any other company but had to hurriedly reconsider. Now it seems two senior executives are quitting. The two, dissatisfied with L&T's new style of functioning, are being wooed by their erstwhile employers to return.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The future on your wrist.

Ceramics - not only aerospace engineers but Rado designers have rediscovered it. The result? The new Rado DiaStar Anatom. Slim and slightly convex, it is the most comfortable watch you could wear as it molds itself perfectly to the anatomy of your wrist. It is watersealed and its ceramic bracelet and its crystal are fully scratchproof. Available in ladies' and gentlemen's models.

RADO

Switzerland

Digitized by Arya Samaj Fo... and eGangotri

...dwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For an indigenous insurance company that took off during the heyday of British rule, New India has come a long way.

1919 was a time of suppression of native Indian enterprise by the British rulers. Even branch expansion of Indian insurance companies was restricted. Not more than one Chief Agent could be appointed within a Tariff Jurisdiction.

Taking the lead

Yet, such restrictions could not hold back New India. Leading a protracted agitation for reforms, the company soon broke out of the stranglehold. To reach people within India and abroad. Branches were progressively opened in major cities and towns. And the first international office was set up in London in 1920.

This leadership was consolidated soon after nationalisation in 1973. When New India expanded its activities to also cover rural India. Through much needed welfare-oriented insurance covers for the weaker sections of society.

70 years later

New India is India's leading multinational. Offering on-the-spot services. Globally.

Through an unmatched network of over 1100 offices in 30 countries. Each manned by local experts who understand local needs. From the Japanese in Tokyo and Osaka offices. To Indians in Ahmedabad and Aizawl.

Today, New India has a premium base exceeding Rs.725 crores. A range of over 80 innovative insurance covers. And a clientele representing the widest cross-section of the people.

New India. The giant, 20000-strong insurance company whose success lies on the solid foundation of service.

Service with a special personal touch.

For us, times change. Values endure.

NEW INDIA ASSURANCE

A subsidiary of the General Insurance Corpn. of India.

1919 1989

BORN TO LEAD

A public sector enterprise with the entrepreneurial spirit.

CONTOUR ADS-NIA-162 E/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I give the world the benefits of R&D worth Rs. 3 crores every day...

New possibilities for treating cancer and heart problems; putting the contents of 5000 tonnes of paper on to a reel of optical tape that weighs just 3 kilograms; creating and treating seeds that will grow more food; producing 'smart' materials that might change their shape and even self-repair...

These are some of the benefits of an R&D expenditure of over £ 500 million per annum. ICI worldwide has 33,000 inventions to its credit, with ICI India serving as a window to these breakthroughs.

ICI India has a long tradition of basic research and is in the forefront of the Indian industry, in terms of its research expenditure. Alchemie, the company's independent research centre fosters Indian science and has 52 international patents to its credit.

Today, ICI India, previously IEL, looks forward to the future with confidence and a sharp sense of competitiveness.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

■ Agrochemicals ■ Catalysts ■ Explosives ■ Fertilizers ■ Fibres ■ Paints ■ Pharm

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...I am ICI"

Behind it are several decades of pioneering works and an ICI Group worldwide turnover of Rs. 32,000 crores.

With these strengths, the future is promising, specially in the area of innovative products.

Products that, as always, make us proud to say, "I am ICI".

ICI

ICI India Limited

Looking forward to the challenges of the 1990s.

ICI is a registered trade mark of Imperial Chemical Industries, PLC, UK. Licensed Users : ICI India Limited.

▪ Pharmaceuticals ▪ Rubber Chemicals ▪ Research & Development ▪ Specialty Chemicals

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MODERN MAGNETISM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Modern

Sulzern

SUITINGS SHIRTINGS SAFARIS

This is the attraction
that is drawn to the confidence that radiates from the man with that irresistible presence that goes with that premium yarn from Modern Woollens Ltd.

It happens every time!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Chennai and eGangotri

SONY®

XO-D501

DYNAPOWER

A High Authority on Powerful Sound

Power and precision. Boldness and beauty. The XO-D501 hi-fi component system is the dream of those requiring room-flooding force from their music. It's an ultra-powerful music center composed of superior components and highly sophisticated technology. The remarkable 550W P.M.P.O. is complemented by a vast array of functions, nearly all of which can be comfortably controlled with the wireless Remote Commander. The Dynapower Series – designed to remind you of the way music is meant to sound.

XO-D501

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

THE ECONOMY

Ambling Along

Steady but slow growth this year

THE paradoxes abound. Most businessmen express unflinching confidence in the economy. Companies are furiously logging higher profits, and the stock-market is flourishing.

But the statistics hint at a different picture, and the pundits don't quite know what to make of them. What's clear is that the economy is chugging along—at a slower pace than last year.

Not to worry: 1988-89 was an exceptional year, with the gross domestic product (GDP) growing by almost 10 per cent (past five-year average: 5.4 per cent). On a high statistical base, growth should be lower this year. The National Council of Applied Economic Research, the think tank, predicts the economy will burgeon by 5 per cent plus. Economist B.S. Minhas, a former Planning Commission member, is less optimistic. His forecast: under 5 per cent.

Whatever the forecasts, the preliminary numbers for April and May, reported recently, have upset a lot of calculations. They show production drops in a broad swathe of industries, compared with the position a year ago. Steel output dropped by 9 per cent, phosphatic fertiliser production by 51 per cent, that of sugar by 4.4 per cent. The story was repeated elsewhere: in a third of the engineering industry production slumped between January and March. Significantly, a bit of the bad news spilled over into June. The output of both steel and phosphatic fertiliser continued to drop, compared with the June 1988 levels.

So what's happening? Deepak Nayyar, professor of economics at New Delhi's Jawaharlal Nehru University, argues that import curbs may have squeezed industrial growth. Then, companies are now legally required to end their accounting year in March. A lot of them did so—and preponed production to bolster last year's performance. So output dropped in April. The dip in phosphatic fertiliser production is due to problems in importing phosphoric acid, a raw material. Faced with raw material shortages, several phosphatic plants are lying closed.

Clearly, some of the fears may have been overpitched. Despite trouble spots, the engineering industry is bouncing back. The total production of 17 leading machine tool manufacturers in January-June 1989 is up by 16 per cent, versus production in the same period last year. "The first indicator of long-term investment problems is the machine tools industry," says a Confederation of Engineering Industries spokesman. "I don't see a slow down. There's always a decline in summer when steel plants close for maintenance."

A government economist cautions that it's early to draw conclusions from two months' figures.

NAMAS BHOJANI

The Deputy Governor of the Reserve Bank of India, C. Rangarajan, reckons that the economy will grow by 5 per cent this year, which he says is not bad at all.

YASHBANT NEGI

Former member of the Planning Commission, B.S. Minhas, says that while the Government's management of finances is poor, the economy is not in a bad shape.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Concurs D.T. Lakdawala, former Planning Commission deputy chairman who now heads the Centre for Monitoring Indian Economy, the data centre: "There's no cause for anxiety. It's a passing phenomenon." In Bombay, a financial institution head said loan disbursals were up 33 per cent this year. In Delhi, a Planning Commission official observed: "I'll reserve judgement on industry, but the indicators don't point to a slump. Businessmen are singing a different song."

Indeed they are. Former Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry president Rohit C. Mehta says: "There are problems with select commodities. But the economy is doing well." Backing this, Siemens Managing Director Albert Hosur reports that orders have shot up by 32 per cent in 1989. "I've never seen such optimism in the last 10 years," exclaims Rajen A. Kilachand, Dodsal group head.

Still, there are any number of problems. Prices could get out of hand, partly because government deficits are pushing more money into the economy. Over the last four years, net RBI credit to the Government has grown at an annual compound rate of 19.2 per cent. Responding to price increases, the Government will import rice and sugar. That will chew into the precariously low—enough for under two months' imports—foreign exchange reserves. So the balance of payments could worsen.

Nevertheless, even economists worried by these trends concede that the economy is not doing poorly. Says Minhas: "The management of finances seems to be pretty bad. But the economy is not in a bad shape." That view is shared at the RBI. C. Rangarajan, RBI deputy governor, says that while prices and the balance of payments are problems, GDP should grow by 5 per cent this year: "This is reasonable coming on top of last year's 10 per cent." He adds that foreign exchange reserves usually drop in the first half of the year (as a large number of imports take place) and that money supply is growing slower this year.

The prospects for agriculture—which accounts for a third of the GDP—remain the main worry. The rains have been above normal in about 32 of the 35 meteorological subdivisions, but have been scanty in the granary belt of Haryana, Punjab and Uttar Pradesh. Even so, the mood among economists, in industry and the stock-markets is hardly pessimistic. In an election year, that's good news for the Government.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI with SURAJEET DAS GUPTA and bureau reports

NYLON

Revival Path

Companies notch up profits

IT'S a yarn with a golden past. And a black future. Or so it was believed—until recently. In the '70s, nylon reigned supreme, riding roughshod over "king" cotton and jute. Then along came a cheaper, more versatile yarn—polyester. And nylon firms found the ground being cut from under their feet. Demand stagnated and losses soared.

Today, nylon is on the comeback trail. The two principal segments of the industry—nylon filament yarn (NFY) and nylon tyre cord—have had a new lease of life. With polyester yarn becoming expensive, NFY manufacturers have been able to raise prices. The nylon tyre cord market too grew last year and supply was short. Result: companies are notching up profits and increasing production capacities.

As prices soar, nylon companies are busy increasing production capacities and are raking in profits.

Garware Nylon, which reported a loss in 1987, is making a comeback. Baroda Rayon, 59 per cent of whose sales come from NFY and nylon tyre cord, posted a 250-per cent increase in net profits in 1988-89 (from Rs 4.31 crore to Rs 11.30 crore). The net profits of Century Enka, 40 per cent of whose sales are accounted for by nylon, zoomed from Rs 14 crore to Rs 35 crore during the same period.

Several NFY manufacturers—Baroda Rayon, JK Synthetics, Modipon, Shree Synthetics—are expanding capacities, many to twice the present levels. Production was 35,000 tonnes last year but is expected to touch 37,000 tonnes this year. And a new firm is leaping in: Gujarat Nylons, a 6,000-tonne, Rs 119-crore joint venture promoted by Gujarat State Fertiliser Corporation (GSFC).

The principal reason for the revival: higher prices for NFY. In the 1988 budget, excise duties on NFY were cut considerably. Logically, NFY prices should have fallen. They did, initially, but shot up later. For instance, the price of 15 denier yarn fell from Rs 195 a kg in February 1988 to Rs 175 but is now Rs 210.

Nylon manufacturers are rejoicing. But weavers in Surat (who account for 75 per cent of NFY consumption) accuse nylon spinners of operating as a cartel fixing prices. Replies P.N. Maitra, secretary, Association of Synthetic Fibre Industry: "There's no cartel. Prices are higher as raw material costs have risen."

They have. The landed cost of caprolactum is now Rs 66 and steadily rising. GSFC sells caprolactum at Rs 44. But it is India's sole manufacturer, producing 20,000 tonnes annually, far short of the 100,000-tonne demand. The 50,000-tonne plant of Fertilisers and Chemicals Travancore Ltd, which was to start production in April, has been delayed.

Still, the rush to increase capacities makes it clear that higher prices have more than offset higher costs. Even better, with NFY prices still lower than prices of polyester filament yarn, sari weavers could switch to nylon.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

And as even today 80 per cent of nylon is used in saris, demand could surge.

Nylon tyre cord manufacturers, who comprise the other segment of the nylon industry, are not so sanguine. Right now, they're doing well. But tyre producers constitute 80 per cent of their market. And with many planning to switch to radial tyres, nylon cord consumption could fall sharply. Last year, the market grew by 15 per cent and there was a five-month strike at Shri Ram Fibres, one of the largest manufacturers.

This year will be different. Says Sri Ram Fibres' Arun Bharat Ram: "There's been a 25-per cent increase in capacity. An over-supply situation can't be ruled out." Tyre cord production is expected to reach 30,000 tonnes against 26,000 tonnes last year. Worse, many tyre manufacturers—Modi Rubber, Dunlop, Ceat, Ballarpur Industries—will be starting tyre cord units. Still, all this means the news of nylon's imminent death was greatly exaggerated. —S.N. VASUKI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

dinesh

Exclusives ▲ Suitings ▲ Co-ordinates ▲ Safaris

The choice of leading fashion houses, internationally.

Woolmark
PURE NEW WOOL
HI-COMFORT WOOL

Exclusive showrooms: AHMEDABAD: Apurva & Co. • BARODA: Shaheo Traders • SURAT: Shri Dinesh Textile Traders • AJMER: Vardhman • BEAWAR: G. Navin Textiles • JAIPUR: Sheel Son • JODHPUR: Jhankar Sons.

(IT/8)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by NAMAS BHOJANI

Bombay Stock Exchange: unable to cope

THE STOCK-MARKETS

Changing Times

The stock exchanges are gearing up for dramatic change: a national share bazaar linked by computers, paperless share transactions, a separate market for small companies and the entry of private companies.

FROM 12 noon to 2 p.m. on every working day, it is virtual pandemonium in the ring. In the midst of a deafening cacophony, a sea of men—and the odd woman—jostle one another, raise their hands, and shout to be heard above the din.

Welcome to the world of bulls and bears. It's a world that's increasingly under pressure. As a rising tide of investors—an estimated eight million, at last count—put money into shares and debentures, and companies push bigger share issues, the stock exchanges are finding they can't cope. The paperwork has become horrendous, the systems are creaky. Says Nimesh Kampani, head of JM Financial, the Bombay investment and merchant banking firm: "Changes are overdue on the markets. Otherwise they will collapse."

For all this apocalyptical vision, there's some cause for whoopee. Look at what's in the works:

► Paperless share transactions. Stock holding corporations will record deals through a system of book entries, obviating the need for physically handing over share certificates.

► A national share bazaar, unified by a network of on-line computers. Typically, a broker in Bombay or Calcutta will be able to shop around in, say, Madras or Calcutta for the best price for shares. Brokers now pick up shares only from the local stock exchange.

► An over the counter (OTC) market, meant primarily—though not exclusively—for small companies not listed on the share markets. One outcome: more shares will be quoted.

► Private companies will be members of the stock exchanges. Already, two have been granted membership of the Bombay Stock Exchange (BSE). This promises to usher bigger players into the market.

► More credit rating agencies. Right now, the only one is the 22-month-old Credit Rating Information Services of India Ltd (CRISIL—see box), but the state-owned Industrial Finance Corporation of India is setting up a me-too agency.

► An array of new instruments such as loyalty coupons and warrants attached to new share issues. Companies are now making a din about them (see box).

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

And this isn't all. Both the Bombay and Calcutta stock exchanges are conducting classes for sub-brokers. Then, brokers have been permitted to become members of more than one stock exchange. Also, the fortnightly settlement of business, on the BSE at least, will turn weekly, thus speeding up share deliveries. Confirms M.R. Mayya, executive director of the BSE: "We want to change to a weekly system within a year of automation." And amidst some controversy about its role, the Securities and Exchange Board of India (SEBI), the official policeman for the stock-markets, is waiting for the Government to pass a comprehensive law on its functioning.

WHAT is more, subsidiaries of the banks and the financial institutions have either become or are seeking to become members of the stock exchanges. For instance, subsidiaries of Punjab National Bank and Canara Bank and a leasing concern promoted by the institutions have become members of the Delhi Stock Exchange. Some hope to eventually enter the broking business. "We're training people who'll operate in the ring," says R. Kannan, executive director at Canbank Financial Services.

Many marketmen are confident that all this will dramatically transform the markets. Forecasts Hemendra M. Kothari, chairman of DSP Financial Consultants and BSE vice-president: "In two or three years, trading between brokers will take place on computers. Computers will link stock-markets. Procedures will be simpler and faster, and investors will receive payments more quickly." The result could be a more sophisticated market. BSE President G.B. Desai says simply: "We plan to make the BSE one of the best in the emerging markets, comparable to that in Tokyo or Taiwan."

Certainly, change is in order in a market that's growing by leaps and bounds. The monthly turnover at BSE, for instance, has almost trebled in the past five years, from Rs 494 crore in January 1984 to Rs 1,549 crore last July. Mayya says almost 60,000 deals are done every day on the BSE, roughly the same as on the New York and London stock exchanges—which are open for six hours, versus two hours for BSE. So BSE bears a heavier load. To compound such problems, insider trading and speculation are rampant. Says Roger Cottrell, director of Grindlays Bank's venture, capital division: "There's substantial manipulation in the market."

The Government hopes to bring order into the share bazaar by widespread computerisation and by changing the rules of the game. A few of the latest moves are, in fact, the outcome of the report of an official committee, which was submitted early this year.

Some of the new institutions like the national share market lie in the distant future. But others are round the corner. The BSE's Bank of India Shareholding Corporation—in Bombay and Calcutta, the stock exchanges have joined hands with the banks to promote stock holding companies—will swing into operation in the next three or four months. And N. Vaghul, chairman of the Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation of India (ICICI), one of the institutions behind the OTC market, says the market could get going by November 1.

Certainly, the OTC is one of the more significant developments. It will, ICICI General Manager M.V. Shah points out, help small companies with a capital of under Rs 3 crore—many of them new enterprises—that are now debarred from the stock exchanges; the OTC market will offer them an alternative route to raising cash, and serve as an incubator till they graduate to the main stock-markets.

And it will play by different rules. "Think of it as an experiment," says Vaghul. "We're trying to move away from total regulation to self-regulation." The market won't have a trading ring: deals will be struck initially over the

"If small-value stocks can be sold easily in the over the counter market, trading volume will go up."

S.M. PARANDE
Executive Director, SBI Capital Markets

"In two or three years, trading will take place through computers. Procedures will be faster, and payments quicker."

HEMENDRA M. KOTHARI
Chairman, DSP Financial Consultants

"We plan to make the BSE one of the best in the emerging markets, comparable to that in Tokyo or Taiwan."

G.B. DESAI
President, Bombay Stock Exchange

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

phone and later on computers. And the board of the new company—the OTC Exchange of India—which has just been set up, will be dominated not by brokers but by the institutions.

The procedures for new share issues could be different too. Any company that wants to make a public issue will have to be sponsored by a member of the new exchange. Strikingly, the sponsor will determine the price of a new share issue—with penalties for those who consistently overprice shares: the Finance Ministry will not determine the premium (the Government has already allowed venture capital companies to price equity as they wish). To ensure that investors aren't stuck with shares, the sponsor will have to rope in another broker or "market maker" who will quote daily buying and selling rates. "If small-value stocks can be sold easily in the OTC market, the volume of trading will go up," SBI Capital Markets Executive Director S.M. Parande points out.

Of significance too is the small but growing band of companies seeking entry to the stock exchanges: a financial services company in the National Insulated Cable Corporation group and VCK Stockbroking in Calcutta, and Twentieth Century Finance Corporation in Bombay. Two other Bombay companies have already been admitted: Prabhudas Lilladher, and JSB Securities Pvt Ltd.

Stock exchange members are now individual brokers who operate through partnership concerns, but a few—like the Sheths who run Prabhudas Lilladher—are setting up private companies even though their personal liability will be unlimited. Reason: the new companies will pack more financial power because they can more easily raise money from the public (JSB will be going public soon.) Result:

BSE Executive Director M.R. Mayya lecturing brokers

As part of the move to revamp the stock-markets, both the Bombay and Calcutta stock exchanges are holding classes for sub-brokers.

CRISIL

Highly Rated

"WE rate debt instruments, not companies or shares," says Pradip P. Shah, managing director of the Credit Rating Information Services of India Ltd (CRISIL).

So why is CRISIL the Great New Hope of investors? Answer: over half the public issues that hit the capital markets are not equity, but debt instruments—convertible debentures and fixed deposits.

Promoted by the financial institutions and by Indian and foreign banks 22 months ago, CRISIL has rated 57 instruments floated by 45 companies, including Ashok Leyland and Bajaj Auto. The sum involved: Rs 1,574 crore.

Not all companies concur with the ratings (ranging from a high of AAA to a low of D): 22 declined to accept them. CRISIL official Sanjoy Bhattacharyya says: "Supposedly blue chip companies have chosen not to disclose their ratings." Which ones? Grins Shah: "I can't tell you. It would kill them."

Companies seeking a rating submit audited accounts for the past five years. CRISIL teams then visit plants, dealers, and talk to company functionaries. "A minimum of two teams is assigned to a job so that we're insulated against bias," says Shah. The teams then present their recommendations to a rating committee comprising non-institutional members of CRISIL's board. "Yes, there are differences of opinion. But there's a consensus on all rating decisions," says A.V. Rajwade, CRISIL board member.

Shah: upbeat mood

Ratings don't come cheap: for debentures, they range from Rs 25,000 to Rs 10 lakh. But apparently they pay off. The Madras-based Cholamandalam Investments says fixed deposits have risen from Rs 20 lakh before rating to Rs 70 lakh. "We've been able to save substantially on brokerage and other expenses," says Deputy General Manager M. Anandan.

Logically, companies with good ratings should be able to offer lower interest rates on deposits. None has, as yet. Also, in future, companies that receive poor ratings could approach other rating institutions—the state-owned Industrial Finance Corporation hopes to launch one—for fresh ratings.

Meanwhile, CRISIL will be hawking information on companies, industries and the payment records of dealers and retailers. "We'll have to have 9 to 10 million business entities in our books and an enormous staff. We may even spin off a separate company for the purpose," says Shah. For a new organisation, that's creditworthy.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI in Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Attn: Executives, Businessmen, Professionals, Students

Stop underlining Start highlighting

With, World class, Non-fading, Fluorescent Hi-liter Pens by Luxor

Once and for all, do away with all your messy underlining problems with one master stroke. With fluorescent hi-liter pens by Luxor. In five colours — blue, yellow, pink, green and orange. Highlight right, important facts and figures in memos, documents, business correspondence, text books, even on computer printouts. Pick one, or all five today!

Exciting writing

By Luxor®

Luxor Pen Co.,
229 Okhla Industrial Estate, Phase-III, New Delhi-20,
Phones: 633318, 6835607, 6833372, Tlx: 031-75069 SIGN-IN, Fax: 011-635694, Ph: Bombay: 6730251, Calcutta: 250407

CLARION D 213

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEW ISSUES

Mega Lures

AT the Great Indian Share Bazaar, it's business as never before. In a market chock-a-block with mega issues—worth Rs 2,730 crore, on offer over four weeks—companies are offering investors a bevy of innovative incentives: warrants, loyalty coupons, scholarships to children of investors, bank loans, even a financial instrument called zero-interest bonds.

The warrant, introduced early this year by the Pune-based Deepak Fertilisers, was offered with the Rs 505-crore Essar debenture issue. The holder of an Essar warrant can buy a share within the next four years at a price not exceeding Rs 70 (current price: Rs 87). Ceat Tyres too proposes to issue them.

Another innovation is the loyalty coupon (also offered by Essar). It seeks to reward investors who retain their debentures for three years by paying them Rs 10 per debenture.

Yet another bait is scholarships for children of investors. Besides Essar which is offering 10 annual scholarships for study in India and two for study abroad, these are being offered by Usha Rectifier which has a Rs 444-crore issue.

Finally, Essar—and possibly companies like Larsen & Toubro (L&T)—is teaming up with the banks to provide loans to investors.

Meanwhile, Deepak Fertilisers which does not have a share issue on hand will, starting October 2, insure its investors against accidents.

Rainbow Housing, a Calcutta firm, is following Reliance Petrochemicals' example by offering a safety net—a guarantee that scrips or bonds will be bought back if their price dips below a specified level.

The zero-interest bond will be introduced by Mahindra & Mahindra. Investors in its Rs 91-crore convertible debenture issue can choose to receive 12.5 interest or none at all. At the time of conversion into equity, zero-interest bond holders get the share at a price Rs 10 less than others. The other advantage: they don't have to pay tax on interest.

Behind most of these lures are the competition for the investor's cash—and the desire to ensure investor loyalty. Many punters tend to hawk shares obtained at below the market price. And this can trigger off a selling wave, so depressing prices. Investor loyalty can prevent this.

Brochures: in a crowded market, increasing competition for investors' money

To attract more investors, companies are offering a range of new incentives.

Will these incentives work? Not in themselves, merchant bankers say. Says one: "Investors look at the company's financial performance and the quality of management. Only after that will they be swayed by the fringe benefits."

One thing is certain. As the market gets crowded, innovations like the ones on view this month will become the rule rather the exception.

—S.N. VASUKI

bigger players, with the resources to establish branches and service clients more efficiently. In the long run, predicts Vijay Mehta, head of the Delhi-based Mehta Financial and Consultancy Services: "Small firms will have to merge."

But change won't come easy. Rumblings persist about SEBI, about the institutions and banks becoming stock exchange members, and about the multiplicity of stock holding corporations.

The institutions promoted the Stock Holding Corporation of India Ltd (SHCIL) in August 1988 to deal with inter-institutional share transactions. It's now gearing up to handle deals by the public. Says R. Chandrasekaran, SHCIL managing director: "A stock holding corporation is necessary—but only one. If multiple corporations are created without standardising systems, we're going to have problems." Merger with similar agencies the stock exchanges set up could be one solution. Mayya says: "We've no problem in merging with them later."

More contentious is SEBI's proposed role. The new agency urged sweeping changes in the laws to permit it to regulate the markets. Among other things, it wanted powers to appoint directors to the governing boards of exchanges, sparking off ire among brokers. "We feel this will lead to day-to-day interference," says Desai. As a result, the Government has yet to clear legislation to formally launch SEBI.

Brokers worry about institutional membership of exchanges too, fearing they'll lose business to bank subsidiaries, which have financial muscle and a network of branches to service clients. A member of BSE's governing board says angrily: "Their use of bank offices is not acceptable. They should compete on a fair basis." The BSE formed a committee to sort out the tangle. It recently submitted a report to the Government recommending that the institutions operate outside city limits. "We're not agreeable to that," retorts Kannan of Canbank.

Finally, a national market will call for an expensive computerisation programme. Exactly how expensive is still not clear. ICICI officials intend talking to companies in the US and Singapore, as well as local concerns, on a software and hardware package. The bill could run to well over Rs 100 crore. Where will the cash come from? No one quite knows.

Nonetheless, time is running out and there are just two options left: change or perish. Thankfully, the signals so far herald transformation.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI in Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When You Are Taxed For Being Literate-

Literacy Must Be Harmful To The Nation.

It is "an imposition on knowledge and would virtually amount to a burden imposed on a man for being literate and for being conscious of his duty as a citizen to inform himself about the world around."

That is what the Supreme Court said in 1984 as it reduced a Rs. 850 per tonne duty levied on the import of newsprint by the Government to Rs. 550 per tonne.

Now the Government newsprint mills have hiked newsprint prices by as much as 40 per cent, and the duty on glazed newsprint has been increased by 7-fold.

While some welcome concessions have been granted to small and medium newspapers, the rest who account for more than 80% of newsprint consumption still bear the crippling burden.

The implications spell themselves out : increased cost, increased prices of publications, increased advertising tariffs, mounting financial pressure on the newspaper industry. A pressure that retards growth, curtailing coverage and reach. Doubtless, the burden for being literate is becoming heavier.

Every citizen has the right to 'free' knowledge, information, stimulation and entertainment. The press is their only independent and affordable source. It is the heart of a democracy, the life-blood of political and social intercourse. In a country like India, with its multifarious cultures, religions and languages, it is the press which reflects the diversity. It is the symbol of freedom, the voice of the people, the safety valve for bottled-up emotions. As long as it is neither state-controlled, nor muzzled.

Now the Government has put it under severe financial strain, even as it has unleashed resources to expand the official media.

All this will extract a heavy cost. And it is not the newspaper industry that will suffer the final cut. It is the democratic spirit of the country that will fray; the tenets of our founding fathers that will flounder. That price will be paid by the people.

The Nation's Loss Cannot Be The Government's Gain.

Issued in the interest of the Nation by the Indian Newspaper Society

MILESTONES/INS/342

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RESORTS

Wrong Time

Holiday ventures in the red

GOLDEN beaches. Swaying palms. And a week of lazing under an azure sky. Those were the dreams the Delhi-based Sudha Gupta had two years ago, when she bought a stake in a time-sharing holiday resort in Goa. Today, the dreams have crashed. The proposed resort hasn't got off the ground, the promoters have vanished with the money and Gupta has no way of recovering her cash.

She is not the only one to fall victim to the lure of time-sharing holiday resorts. For the idea of time-sharing was enticingly simple. You acquired a stake in an apartment in the holiday resort. And then for a week or more, you were entitled to a holiday at the resort. Year after year. Forever. The stake could be sold or exchanged. And passed on to your heirs. And at least one of the resorts had plans to tie up with international companies to permit time-sharing in resorts abroad.

Dalmia resort and a brochure

Today, of the dozen or so companies which offered the time-sharing schemes, only four survive. The Ansals—who set up Ansal Resorts and Hotels—have wound up. The Delhi-based M.S. Resorts is planning to close shop. Some, finding their resorts unutilised for most of the year, are converting them into hotels. And small timers like Shikar

APPOINTMENT ADS

New Look

IT'S 7.30 a.m.
A shrill alarm heralds yet another long, tiring day
It's time to get ready for work
Time for the rat race
Rush, Rush, Rush
Can you spare a moment?
Just a few moments to review your career.
Your growth. Your future.

NO, these are not excerpts from Vikram Seth's sequel to The Golden Gate. They are lines from an HCL appointment advertisement. The Delhi-based computer manufacturer is not alone in resorting to zany ads. Around the country, advertising agencies, multinationals, foreign banks, even small family enterprises are putting out attention-grabbing advertisements. DCW Home Products, the Bombay-based manufacturer of salts and detergents, thought up an outlandish one: "Wanted Astronauts". Reason: the company was "aiming for the moon".

Slickly designed and guaranteed to attract attention, the new ads are gradually replacing the staid old "wanted" ads. The reason is simple: talented employees are scarce, and companies are vying to attract them—away from one another. As a Bombay-based recruitment consultant puts it: "You can't hire good talent by just inserting an ad. They have to be seduced into sending in a resume." Says Noshir Desai, managing director of Karishma Advertising, an agency that deals in recruitment ads: "In a competitive market, companies are demanding well-designed appointment ads."

Wanted ads: slickly designed

And getting them. Computer Point, the computer retail chain, came up with one saying saucily: "We don't want you to work for us." It went on to explain in smaller print that it wanted people to work for the company's customers. IDM, the computer firm now part of the HCL group, came up with another that was as arresting: "If you need a job, don't read this ad." Reason: the person it needed was "well established at a successful organisation" and the last thing he was looking for was "a career change".

Says Ravi Gupta, chairman of Trikaya Grey, who designed the HCL advertisement: "There is intense competition in the market-place and a severe shortage of talent. Any appointment ad will get a response. The challenge is in attracting only good talent to respond to your ad."

In corporate circles, that's known as the 10-per cent syndrome. To put it simply, only 10 per cent of the people applying for jobs are really worth looking at. Says Gupta: "The 'ten percenters' are people who're probably happy in their existing jobs. But a well-crafted appointment ad can shake them out of their complacency."

They've certainly shaken the world of appointment advertising.

—S.N. VASUKI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

VCK

VARJIVAN
KAMPANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Created to reveal the bride in you.

Introducing "Jewel Card"... pricelessly yours !

Kapur Bhai Jewellers are introducing an exciting and exclusive Jewel Card scheme. For more details, please fill up and mail this coupon today.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

_____

MARRIED ☐ UNMARRIED ☐

ANNUAL FAMILY INCOME : Rs. _____

KAPUR BHAI

JEWELLERS

PROPRIETOR K.K. EXPORTS

B-45/ 47,CONNAUGHT PLACE,

NEW DELHI-110001 PHONE : 3321478

lly ads/KBJ-8911

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

What did the Thinking Man at Paris say to the Skypak Man?

"Come to think of it, you're the first man-of-action I met... since Rodin."

We'll deliver. Wherever on earth. SKYPAK The worldwide couriers.

Skypak House, Off M. Vassanji Road, Marol, Andheri (E), Bombay 400 059.

Avenues:SC:496:89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Holiday Resorts still haven't enough cash to build a single resort. Says V.K. Mago of M.S. Resorts which had a resort in Mussoorie: "It's a difficult business. None of us understood it at all."

So what went wrong? Says Deepak Shivpuri of Shikar Holiday Resorts: "We are still not a holiday-minded society. People take vacations only in summer or winter. The resorts are unutilised all through the rest of the year, which is unviable."

Equally important, unlike in Europe, there are no clear time-sharing laws. Dalmia Resorts found that clients would not buy units without clear-cut laws—and the company spent more than a year in formulating the legal framework. Says Director B.V.S.A.N. Murthy: "It took international chains as much as 10 years to develop software to provide their customers flexible rather than fixed weeks. Yet in India, everyone was offering these without understanding the implications."

Perhaps most important, the companies pitched their expectations too high. The Bombay-based Ornate Club was able to sell only 1,000 units, whereas it expected to sell 5,000. And Shikar Travels sold a mere hundred units for Rs 5 lakh, just one-fifth of its target.

And all the companies underestimated the problems involved. As R.K. Rao, vice-president of the Madras-based Sterling Resorts, points out: "There is a lead time between taking the money and building the hotel where a lot of things can go wrong. You might not get clearance from the Government, for instance."

So the Dalmias who had plans to set up 32 resorts all over the country have set up only two. Palace Holiday Resorts intended to set up 35 hotels—it has yet to build one.

Predictably most are in the red. M.S. Resorts has suffered a loss of nearly Rs 60 lakh. And Dalmia does not expect to break even in the next two years.

So companies are trying to make the best of a worst situation. Sterling for instance is using half its resort room space as a hotel. And the Dalmias are following suit.

Time-sharers are also having to bear the burden of the resorts' failing fortunes. B.S. Kalra, a retired air force officer in Delhi, who bought a unit from the Dalmias says: "Today they are charging Rs 75 a day per person as service charges. This was not a part of the agreement."

Clearly, time-sharing in holiday resorts is an idea whose time has not yet come.

—SURAJEET DAS GUPTA

BUSINESSPEAK

H.P. NANDA

Japanese Collaborations

Several Indian companies have struck financial and technical collaboration deals with Japanese industrial conglomerates to produce an array of items, from television sets to two-wheelers. However some Indian manufacturers have mixed feelings about their experience with the Japanese. H.P. Nanda, 71, chairman of Escorts Ltd—which has a technical collaboration agreement with Yamaha of Japan for the manufacture of 100 cc motor-cycles—last fortnight told Assistant Editor PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI that the experience of Indian industry with Japan has not been as happy as that with other countries. The Japanese, says Nanda, wish to profit by continuing the supply of components to their joint ventures.

INDIAN industry's experience with Japanese collaborations has not been as happy as that with West German, US and British collaborations. The Japanese are interested in making profits by supplying completely knocked down (CKD) packs. They've not taken the Government-approved phased manufacturing programmes (PMPS) seriously.

In the US, Japanese motor-cycle manufacturers invested heavily in setting up plants, but continue to send CKD packs from Japan. But Indian industry has to stick to PMPS and reduce CKD pack imports from 40 per cent to 5 per cent over five to seven years. This probably is a disappointment to Japanese collaborators. They're also disappointed that their gains are limited to transfer-of-technology fees—usually about $1 million (Rs 1.65 crore) for two wheelers—and the 3 to 4 per cent royalty for seven or eight years from the date of commercial production. Their stake is confined to these. And while European and US collaborators want more than a 40 per cent stake in joint ventures, the Japanese have limited theirs to 15 to 25 per cent, except in Maruti Udyog.

Moreover, the Japanese collaborator is not inclined to accept components other than those made with Japanese know-how. The Indian auto-ancillary industry has developed, and assimilated US and European technology but the Japanese won't accept these components. Instead, they've brought in technology from ancillary suppliers in Japan.

And the imports of technology have been repetitive. Apart from Escorts, which has a technical collaboration with Yamaha, four more companies have collaborations for 100 cc motor-cycles under different brand names. And all two-wheeler manufacturers with Japanese collaborations have imported similar equipment. Most of the capital equipment, including the painting and chrome plating shops, have been brought from Japan at very high costs. Coupled with the yen's appreciation against the rupee, this has made the cost of these projects prohibitive. So, many of them are incurring heavy losses. These losses are being minimised by quicker indigenisation—which is unpalatable to the Japanese collaborator.

The same thing has happened in light commercial vehicles and colour television sets. They're supplying television kits which are assembled here.

The Americans, Germans and British have identified India as a low-cost production base. They've set up joint ventures here to cater to the world market. Somehow, Japanese manufacturers have not followed this pattern. They don't want to share their supremacy of the world automotive market. The exception, again, is Suzuki. It has a large stake in Maruti and is encouraging it to export to East Bloc countries.

So what's the answer? Well, we've got to be more careful. Also, the positive thing is that both sides, the Indians and the Japanese, have matured. Japan has a big trade surplus. Industry and the Government work very closely in Japan. Japanese companies are now being pushed to shift abroad. The Japanese will now make genuine investments here. I believe that Japanese companies will now ask for equity stakes of 40 per cent or more.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Prices See-saw

A mood of uncertainty

SHARE prices have been see-sawing again. As in the first half of September, prices first gradually climbed and then gently slid last fortnight. Over the month, the picture was that of a series of ups and downs (see chart).

That probably mirrored the political and economic uncertainties in the country. Reports that growth in key areas as steel, fertilisers and railway freight had slowed down in April and May may have cast a shadow. Also, investors have reportedly been selling scrips to subscribe to the spate of mega issues. The Reserve Bank of India, though, said in its annual report that the economy would be fairly buoyant this year, despite the possibility of inflation and a worsening balance of payments position.

To be sure, there was some revival of buying early in the fortnight despite the fact that the institutions hadn't done much buying last fortnight. In other words, the ordinary punter sallied forth on the market. As a result, the markets were initially bullish.

The bullish tone, first visible in the shares of synthetic textiles, fertiliser and tea companies, soon covered a range of scrips in the textiles, cement, leasing, shipping and pharmaceutical industries. Over the fortnight, shares of companies such as Baroda Rayon which posted sizeable profits last year shot up.

The glamour scrips were, however, excluded from the price upturn. And the shares of such companies as Larsen & Toubro, Bindal Agro and Essar Gujarat—which are waiting to hawk convertible debentures to the public or are already doing so—stagnated. The scrips of Apollo Tyres and Usha Rectifiers took a beating. Prices of their shares had earlier shot up unusually.

As the fortnight progressed, the bulls yielded ground to the bears. The Economic Times share price index dipped, from 381.2 on September 15 to 380.8 on September 21.

Yet the indices can be slightly misleading. In this case, they do not seem to have taken into account the price increases in the so-called non-specified section of shares. So although prices did see-saw, the fluctuations may not have been as wide in reality.

The big question is: what happens to the stock-markets next? Will they be dogged by more uncertainty? Companies are flourishing, many are making hefty profits. Yet the economic news is still uncertain. Is industrial production on a downslide? Right now, no one really knows. The official figures for more recent months have still to come in. These will certainly influence the mood of the markets.

One reason why an upswing can occur: as the elections approach, the Government will not wish share prices to drop precipitously. That would seem like a blot on its economic performance. So it could ask the institutions to step in and buy shares. But barring this possibility, the outlook seems uncertain.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1989 HIGH	LOW	CLOSE 21.9.89	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	84.00	61.00	74.00	2.00 +
Associated Cement	345.00	230.00	264.00	19.00 +
Asian Paints	226.25	165.00	200.00	10.00 –
Atlas Copco	53.00	32.00	38.50	4.50 –
Bajaj Auto	450.00	305.25	306.25	20.00 –
Baroda Rayon	755.00	285.00	730.00	65.00 +
Bata India	89.00	60.00	65.50	2.50 –
Bayer	910.00	580.00	740.00	nil
Bharat Forge	202.50	70.00	77.50	2.50 –
Birla Jute	73.75	41.50	50.50	5.50 –
Bombay Dyeing	162.00	104.00	126.00	2.00 +
Britannia Ind.	120.00	89.00	110.00	2.00 –*
Brooke Bond	155.00	75.00	86.00	2.00 +
Century Spinning	2240.00	1230.00	2180.00	25.00 +
Chloride India	88.50	72.00	83.00	1.50 +
Colgate Palmolive	371.25	162.50	172.50	6.25 –
Cyanamid	92.00	55.00	78.00	6.00 –*
DCM	85.00	31.00	55.00	2.00 +
Dunlop	95.50	70.00	75.00	4.50 –
E.I. Hotels	68.00	50.00	58.50	2.50 +
Escorts	84.00	58.00	81.50	0.50 +
Finolex Cables	430.00	290.00	300.00	27.50 –
Food Specialities	224.00	154.00	160.00	3.00 –
Garware Nylon	55.50	36.00	49.50	5.00 –
G.E. Shipping	46.50	33.75	40.00	0.75 –
G.S.F.C.	177.50	123.75	165.00	nil
Grasim Ind.	137.00	75.00	105.00	4.50 –
Hind. Aluminium	327.50	155.00	255.00	12.50 –
Hind. Ciba	1090.00	600.00	860.00	20.00 –
Hind. Cocoa	141.25	98.75	135.00	5.00 +
Hindustan Lever	101.50	69.50	99.50	nil
Hindustan Motors	52.50	26.75	31.50	0.50 –
ICI India Ltd.	68.00	39.00	53.00	3.00 –
Indian Organic	49.50	23.00	46.00	0.50 –
Indian Rayon	106.00	75.75	83.50	1.00 +
Indrol	335.00	218.75	242.50	21.25 –
Ingersoll-Rand	423.75	267.50	407.50	7.50 –
ITC	129.00	46.25	69.00	6.0 +
J.K. Synthetics	92.00	66.00	76.00	4.00 –
Kinetic Engineering	395.00	130.00	150.00	5.00 –
Kirloskar Cummins	88.75	54.50	68.00	2.00 –
KSB Pumps	445.00	190.00	195.00	185.00 –
Larsen & Toubro	128.00	81.50	101.50	0.50 –
Lipton	85.00	65.00	77.50	3.00 +
LML Ltd.	28.00	12.50	18.00	1.50 –
Madura Coats	104.00	92.25	100.00	3.75 +
Mahindra & Mahindra	113.50	76.50	93.00	2.00 +
Milk Food	300.00	180.00	222.50	17.50 +
Motor Industries	695.00	560.00	620.00	10.00 –
Mukand Ltd.	140.50	75.00	130.50	0.50 +
National Organic	1180.00	710.00	1080.00	20.00 +
Nirlon	17.00	8.00	11.25	nil
Orkay Silk Mills	29.00	13.50	15.50	nil
Peico Electronics	30.50	16.50	24.00	2.75 +
Pfizer	80.00	58.00	65.00	1.00 –
Ponds	212.50	151.25	166.00	4.00 –
Premier Auto	65.00	40.00	59.00	1.00 –
Raymond	85.00	65.50	76.25	4.75 –
Reliance Industries	158.00	99.50	101.00	4.00 –
Siemens India	95.00	65.00	77.00	6.00 +
Shaw Wallace	103.25	62.00	94.50	1.50 –
Shriram Fibres	94.00	58.00	58.00	23.00 –
SKF Bearings	3020.00	1140.00	1230.00	40.00 –
SPIC	67.00	39.00	47.75	5.50 –
Tata Steel	1580.00	1062.50	1201.25	17.50 –
Telco	1075.00	657.50	1030.00	12.50 –
Vam Organic	178.00	136.00	165.00	nil
Videocon Int.	172.50	55.00	152.50	17.50 –*
Voltas	1000.00	470.00	950.00	100.00 +
Wimco	32.00	15.00	16.25	0.50 –

*Ex-dividend Ex-bonus

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	TT Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	12.9536	12.8131
Austria	Schilling	100	1.2365	1.2232
Bahrain	Dinar	1	44.2916	44.1522
Bangladesh	Taka	100	52.9122	52.8526
Canada	Dollar	1	14.2776	14.1284
Denmark	Kroner	1	2.2370	2.2137
Egypt	Pound	1	6.12	6.09
France	Franc	1	2.6110	2.5445
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	2.1639	2.1418
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	0.0920	0.0900
Iran	Rial	100	22.2126	22.1620
Italy	Lira	100	1.2074	1.1944
Japan	Yen	100	11.33	11.62
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7690	0.7400
Kuwait	Dinar	1	55.0296	54.9110
Malaysia	Dollar	1	6.2667	6.2022
Mauritius	Rupee	1	1.0360	1.0000
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6540	0.6192
Netherlands	Guilder	1	7.7167	7.6357
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7916	0.7780
Singapore	Dollar	1	8.5312
Spain	Peseta	1	0.1350	0.1100
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4396	0.4128
Sweden	Kroner	1	2.5679	2.5413
Switzerland	Franc	1	10.0379	9.9313
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.1150	0.1000
Thailand	Baht	100	62.3980	62.2561
UK	Pound	1	26.6064	26.4131
USA	Dollar	1	16.8919	16.7241
UAE	Dirham	1	4.5000	4.4568
USSR	Rouble	1	25.4528	25.3526
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	8.8261	8.6059

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 22.9.89.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"My wife loves doing things in style.
When she wanted a refrigerator to match the kitchen tiles,
I laughed. But she had her way."

Whatever the reason, make sure it's a Godrej.

SPECTRUM

A never-before range of exclusive colours. Desert sand. Dusky blue. Electric red. Spring green. Cool blue, Classic white, Imperial ivory and Misty grey. All in epoxy powder coated finish that is durable, attractive and long-lasting.

Other superior features include:
Megaforce—the robust, energy-efficient compressor.
Coolguard—100% polyurethane insulation—the international standard.
Ultraspace—Ingeniously designed interior for greater storage space.

A widespread dealer network that ensures prompt and dependable service.

Godrej. A name that people have trusted for years. Where every day is spent in updating technology. Today, our modern, automated plant has developed a truly international class refrigerator. Because we want you to have the best.

TRUST Godrej®

HTA 1666

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Living with a velvet touch

Luxurious living that's as smooth as velvet.
Rooms lined with velvet. Lined with the luxury of Velvet Touch, the unique wall finish that glows with the lustre and delicate sheen of the perfect pearl. In 23 elegant shades plus 6 soft whites with just a hint of colour to give you the perfect finishing touch that your lifestyle demands. The Velvet Touch!

ICI Dulux

Velvet Touch

For those who have everything, something more.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"If it were not for my friends from Australia, I could never have experienced the mysteries of the past."

"Isn't it sad that sometimes it takes someone from miles away to point out to us the beauty that lies just next door? Were it not for my friends John and Susan from Australia, I would have missed out on the magic of Madhya Pradesh completely!

Just to give you a glimpse of what you're missing, I'll let you peep into my memories of that wonderful holiday!

"When John and Susan suggested a holiday in Madhya Pradesh, I was surprised. But I was still more surprised when I discovered all that Madhya Pradesh had to offer. Monuments. Temples. Sanctuaries. Even a hill station! In Madhya Pradesh I have had the most fascinating experience.

Right from day one, new wonders unfolded. Mandu—the 'City of Joy' with its tragic love story of Roopmati and Baz Bahadur.

And Orchha, the well preserved medieval city which made the 20th century seem light years away.

History came alive at Gwalior too, with its massive fort chronicling the rise and fall of dynasties.

At Khajuraho, the mastery of the craftsmen who translated mere stone into beauty and grace left us spellbound.

John and Susan couldn't wait to meet a tiger face to face. They did at Kanha and Bandhavgarh. We also met deer, bison, nilgai and colourful birds.

At Sanchi, one could almost hear the peace... I had great fun explaining the Jataka Tales depicted on the Stupa gates to John and Susan.

And the prehistoric rock paintings at Bhimbetka have been executed by different artists of several different civilisations over several centuries!

The confluence of faith, devotion and prayer at Ujjain, Omkareshwar and Maheshwar overwhelmed us.

Back in Bhopal, we saw the lakes, museums, safari park, and of course, the Bharat Bhavan.

Everywhere we went, lovely log huts, tourist bungalows and prompt transport awaited us—and we didn't even overstep our budget!

But there's lots I haven't seen yet. Pachmarhi—the verdant hill station. Marble Rocks, Amarkantak and Chitrakoot. The exquisite chhatries at Shivpuri. And to think that I might never have discovered Madhya Pradesh but for John and Susan!

Thank you John. Thank you Susan. And most of all, thank you Madhya Pradesh! I'm proud to have met you."

Come to Madhya Pradesh... It's surprising a lot of people like you.

For more information and instant computerised bookings, get in touch with Madhya Pradesh State Tourism Development Corpn. Ltd. NEW DELHI : 204-205, IInd Floor, Hotel Kanishka Shopping Plaza, 19, Ashok Road, New Delhi-110 001. Tel. : 3321187, 3324422 (Ext. 2353). Textel : 011-3327264. BOMBAY : 74, World Trade Centre, Cuffe Parade, Colaba, Bombay-400 005. Tel. : 214860, 219191 (Ext. 299). Textel : 022-217603. CALCUTTA : 'Chitrakoot', Room No 7, 6th Floor, 230A, A.J.C.Bose Road, Calcutta- 700 020. Tel. : 448543. Textel : 033-448543. BHOPAL : 'Gangotri', T.T. Nagar, Bhopal-462 003. Tel. : 66383, 66342, 64388. Telex : 0705-275 TOUR-IN. Textel : 0755-61629.

MILESTONES/MPT/153aR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Inflation dominates the news on the economic front this fortnight. Despite two successive good monsoons, prices continue to rise sharply and the Government's economic management has a lot of explanation to do. There was one positive sign—the drop in imports which comes as a relief after a period of relentless upward spiralling. But that good news went hand in hand with a big disappointment—the stagnation in export earnings.

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of six months' (weekly data) or one-and-a-half years' (monthly data) figures.

Wholesale prices shot up during the last fortnight. The annualised rate of increase worked out to 17 per cent.

Consumer prices remained stable in July—but since then the prices of both sugar and edible oil have spurted.

The supply of money in the economy increased sharply over the last fortnight—an ominous portent for inflation.

Commercial credit conditions remained easy during the last fortnight causing no constraint to industrial growth.

Imports dropped sharply by 14 per cent last month but at the same time exports too fell, though only by 2 per cent.

The devaluation of the rupee against the dollar continues and should aid the growth of exports in the next year.

Conditions in the stock-market remained lethargic with only a few positive signs of life during the last fortnight.

Once again the price of gold dropped—continuing the trend of a year of stagnation in the bullion market.

WHOLESALE PRICES

Growth of items in the 2nd fortnight of August 1989

	% Growth
Sewing Machine	6.67
Gram	6.58
Rape & Mustard Seeds	6.14
Onions	5.46
Linseed Oil	5.19
Mustard Oilcake	5.07
Linseed	4.91
Mining Machinery	4.86
Ghee	4.86
Solvent Extracted Oil	4.77
Fish	4.72
Groundnut Oil	4.62
Urad	4.45
Art Silk & Artificial Fabrics	4.32
Atta	4.12
Barley	4.06
Gur	3.87
Cotton Seeds	3.71
Masoor	3.42
Mustard Oil	3.22
Gingelly Oil	2.83
Sugar	2.81
Silk-Raw	2.80
Cotton Yarn	2.66
Dairy Products	1.98
Eggs	1.97
Cashew-Nut	1.89
Cotton Raw	1.82
Diesel Engines	1.78
Cycles	1.49
Copper & Alloys	1.31
Cars	1.24
Bajra	1.15
Groundnut Seeds	1.12
Ball Bearing	1.12
Boilers	1.11
Wheat	1.00
Milk	0.95
Caustic Soda	0.91
Internal Combustion Engines	0.91
Tea	0.90
Hides Raw	0.87
Caxbles & Wires	0.84
Ragi	0.80
Khandsari	0.72
Cotton Cloth	0.63
Butter	0.61

Of the 137 series considered, 56 of them with a total weight of 43.921 had a positive growth and 11 of them with a total weight of 5.298 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1989	1988
Coal
Thousand Tonnes, August	13390	12890
Saleable Steel
Thousand Tonnes, August	747.4	737.5
Cement
Thousand Tonnes, August	3283	3386
Petroleum Crude
Thousand Tonnes, August	2828	2650
Petroleum Refinery Products
Thousand Tonnes, August	4177	3749

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AVIATION

Heading for a Crisis

A year after domestic aviation's darkest hour, the situation remains grim

The September 23 Vayudoot crash debris

DENSE thunderclouds had gathered over Pune airport when Vayudoot Flight Number PF-624 with 11 people aboard took off at 7.20 p.m. on September 23. Fifteen minutes later, Captain I.A. Khan, the flight's commander, radioed Bombay control tower and said: "Cruising at level 95 (9,500 ft). Arrival at Hyderabad at 2100 hours." That was the last contact.

It is still not clear what happened to Flight PF-624. What is known is that 20 minutes later the Dornier aircraft nose-dived steeply and plunged into the shallow backwaters of Ujani Dam, 135 km from Pune, killing all 11 people aboard.

Last week's fatal crash was only the most recent manifestation of the problems that continue to plague domestic air travel. Almost a year after Indian civil aviation's darkest hour that saw two crashes in Ahmedabad and Guwahati leave 167 people dead on October 19, the country's civil aviation agencies are again heading dangerously towards a collapse.

> The recent Vayudoot crash comes after a series of near-misses which indicate that the factors responsible for last year's crashes continue unchanged.

Just three weeks earlier, Indian Airlines Flight IC403 with 240 passengers on board came perilously close to what could have been another major air disaster when a National Airports Authority (NAA) aircraft slid past just a wingspan away. For Indian Airlines, it was the fourth such "near miss" in three months.

► In Guwahati, on January 11 this year, an Indian Airlines Boeing 737 flight taking off for Calcutta rammed into a bull on the runway damaging the aircraft.

► On August 28, while landing at Bombay, pilots manning an Avro flight discovered a serious malfunction in the aerodrome's glide slope, an instrument that guides the aircraft's angle of descent while landing. It was beaming a faulty signal that would have made them land on nearby slums instead of the runway.

► On August 21, just after take-off from Silchar airport, Flight IC238 started banking uncontrollably to the left. After an emergency landing, engineers found that one of the slats, that control aircraft stability, was broken. After repairs, they cleared the aircraft. Three days later, the problem recurred and the aircraft had to make an unscheduled landing.

► To cap the dismal record, Indian Airlines' new fly-by-wire Airbus A320 flew into serious problems. On August 10, when Flight IC806 was coming in to land

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

at Delhi, a bird collided against the cockpit triggering off totally unrelated snags. Pilots found that both their vital cockpit display panels had been knocked off and that the aircraft's left engine had flamed out. They managed to bring the aircraft down safely. Now the Civil Aviation Department threatens to ground all the eight A320s unless major design modifications are made.

The "incidents" have set alarm bells ringing in aviation circles. As Captain B.K. Bhasin, member, National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB), the country's new watchdog body, points out: "Major air disasters never have a single cause. It is usually a failure of several aviation agencies that leads to a crash. And incidents, however minor, are indications of the dangerous trends."

The two courts of inquiry investigating last year's crashes revealed a tale of chilling lapses. Of inexperienced pilots ignoring safety procedures. Of raw control tower officials wrongly directing air traffic. Of careless meteorological officers ignoring crucial weather trends. Of shocking delays in commissioning vital aids at airports. As a member of the Ahmedabad crash inquiry said: "We were confronted with evidence of a system rotten to the core" (see following story).

Almost a year after the crash, the core continues to be rotten. It is not as if the various agencies have been inactive. The Directorate-General of Civil Aviation (DGCA) has shaken off years of neglect and tried to rectify the shortage of manpower. The NAA is making a determined bid to upgrade airport facilities. Indian Airlines has filled up its long vacant post of director of air safety and beefed up surveillance of pilots and engineers. And the NTSB has been occasionally baring its teeth. As Sen says: "We have done a lot in the past year but it is still an uphill task."

Despite these measures, the years of apathy and anarchy that characterised civil aviation are now coming home with ferocious intensity. The problem of inexperienced pilots manning flights, one of the causes of the two crashes, has only escalated. That's because Indian Airlines had earlier neglected to recruit pilots regularly. And with 27 senior pilots resigning recently there is a crippling shortage of trained cockpit crew.

Apart from forcing the airline to overwork its pilots, the shortage has led to further problems. With the airline desperately upgrading co-pilots to take command in Boeing 737s, the average age and experience levels of captains have been dropping dramatically. Just five years ago, the average age of commanders was 35 and each had put in over 8,000 hours of flying, 2,000 of these on the same aircraft. Today, the new batches being recruited as captains are around 25 to 28 years of age and have barely 1,000 hours of flying 737s under their belts.

ALL this can only accentuate problems. The inquiry into the Ahmedabad crash had showed up the lack of co-ordination between the two pilots. That, aviation experts point out, is because of inadequate training of pilots. An expert committee appointed by the Aviation Ministry to go into the problem has found several serious lacunae in the training programme. Among them was lack of training in cockpit team-work and management. As NTSB's Bhasin, who chaired the committee, says: "Team work in the cockpit is missing."

In aircraft maintenance as well, serious problems have cropped up. The shortage of engineers has seen the maintenance of fleets put under tremendous strain. As Indian Airlines Managing Director R. Prasad candidly admits: "We are only now getting down to cleaning up the mess left behind for us."

In navigational aids, the situation continues to be as grim. Though domestic airlines possess highly sophisticated aircraft, navigational landing aids are obsolete. Almost 90 per cent of landings in the country are done without using instrument landing systems despite the fact that jet aircraft require advanced ground aids to make safe landings.

The NAA's record on maintenance is dismal. The court of inquiry had severely reprimanded it for not making the instrument landing systems at Ahmedabad airport functional though these had been installed in 1986. A year after the crash, the instrument is still not operational because, officials claim, some of the parts have been found defective.

In Lucknow, the airport's landing system though installed in 1986 is yet to be made operational. Reason: the localiser, a crucial instrument in the system, has repeatedly developed snags which airport authorities are unable to set right. In Bombay, the problem is theft of bulbs. And most NAA officials admit that the landing equipment is rarely checked for accuracy at scheduled intervals.

However, many of NAA's problems, as its Chairman Air Marshal C.K.S. Raje points out, are due to "a shortage of

Alarming Facts

Shortage of trained pilots:
Indian Airlines failed to recruit pilots regularly. With 27 senior pilots resigning recently, there is a crippling shortage of crew.

Inexperienced pilots manning flights:
Five years ago, the average age of commanders was 35 years, each with over 8,000 hours of flying time under his belt. Today, the average age of captains is between 25 and 28 and these have barely 1,000 hours of flying 737s.

Lack of advanced landing aids at airports:
Almost 90 per cent of landings in the country are done without instrument landing systems. Jet aircraft need these to make safe landings.

Inadequate training programme for cockpit crew:
An expert committee of the Aviation Ministry reported serious lacunae in the training programme for cockpit crew. Among them, lack of training in cockpit team-work and management.

Lack of radar facilities:
In most airports, controllers still mark charts manually to direct traffic. Barely 20 per cent of Indian airspace is under radar surveillance.

Money and manpower shortage in National Airports Authority:
Overall manpower shortage at NAA is running at a high 30 per cent. Its annual budget of Rs 76 crore is barely enough for maintenance, let alone upgrading airport landing facilities.

Control towers are heavily shortstaffed:
The Bombay airport control tower has a sanctioned strength of 17. Only nine have been appointed.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

manpower and funds". Although it has 86 airports under its control, it is saddled with some of the most uneconomical routes. In the past two years alone, it has opened 42 new airports, 37 of these for Vayudoot. It needs to add 3,000 new hands to man them. It has added 700. Overall manpower shortage is now running at a high 30 per cent. NAA's annual budget of less than Rs 76 crore is barely sufficient to carry out maintenance, leave alone upgrade airport landing facilities.

There has been no improvement in air traffic control too, one of the causes of last year's Vayudoot crash at Guwahati. While the world over, air traffic control has moved to computers and radars, in India facilities remain primitive. In most airports, controllers continue to manually mark out charts to direct traffic. And barely 20 per cent of Indian airspace is under radar surveillance.

Besides, most control towers are heavily shortstaffed. The Bombay tower, for instance, has a sanctioned strength of 17 per shift. But only nine people have been appointed. Advanced training courses are unheard of. Worse, there are only four instructors, who double as examiners. Result: proficiency checks are shoddy and professional errors rarely corrected. As D.D. Sardana, secretary-general, Air Traffic Controllers Guild, warns: "The situation is so desperate that we expect a mid-air collision any day now."

Though the DGCA has been vested with several crucial tasks—licensing of pilots and engineers and certifying aircraft for air-worthiness—it faces a tremendous manpower shortage and lack of qualified hands. In fact, when the two crashes occurred, 20 per cent of the DGCA's sanctioned staff had not been hired. Worse, it had no regular pilots on its rolls and used pilots from the airlines to perform the crucial tasks of licensing and carrying out proficiency checks. The DGCA now intends to set up an independent flight inspection directorate and plans to have 15 examiner pilots on its rolls.

All this calls for, as Prakash Narain, the safety board chairman, puts it, "a battle to be fought on a number of fronts". Says he: "There needs to be greater discipline in working, intensified surveillance, better licensing and training and tougher safety measures." But with domestic airlines under severe stress, airport navigational aids remaining obsolete and regulations still lax, domestic air travel seems to be again heading for a major breakdown. Warns an aviation expert: "Indian civil aviation may soon see a darker hour."

—RAJ CHENGAPPA with bureau reports

OCTOBER '88 CRASHES

Shocking Truths

A deadly tale of irregularities and frightening lapses

THE deep roar of twin jet engines is frequently interrupted by staccato bursts of voices. Suddenly there is a loud thud followed by a piercing scream. Then silence.

For the four-member court of inquiry in Delhi headed by Justice A.K. Mathur, investigating the Indian Airlines crash at Ahmedabad airport last year, that series of sounds was crucial evidence. It was part of the audio-cassette recording of the cockpit conversation between Flight IC 113's commander O.M. Dalaya and co-pilot Deepak Nagpal as they headed for disaster that foggy October morning. As one member said later: "For us it was the moment of truth."

In Calcutta, the three-member court of inquiry headed by Justice U.C. Banerjee probing the crash of Vayudoot Flight 704 in Guwahati the same day was experiencing similar moments of truth. And as the two courts sifted through reams of evidence and cross-examined scores of officials, they were independently getting a stunning picture of what had caused the

IC 113'S COCKPIT CONVERSATION

"He will put us in a fix."
NAGPAL, co-pilot

"You mean kill us?"
DALAYA, flight commander

6.34 a.m.

Nagpal: I told Captain Vaidya about your son's remark. He laughed a lot.

Dalaya: Which one?

Nagpal: Saying Daddy, quickly celebrate your birthday, otherwise you may not have any hair left on your head.

6.36 a.m.

Nagpal to Tower: Ahmedabad India 113, approaching 150 (15,000 feet).

Tower: Further descent to transition 55 (descend to 5,500 feet).

6.38 a.m.

Nagpal: Boss, Jodhpur se paintings khareed kar laaya hoon. Bahut sasti. (I bought paintings from Jodhpur. Very cheap.)

Dalaya: Agar aap frame karo tabhi dikhti hai show barabar. (Only if you frame them will they look good.)

6.39 a.m.

Dalaya: Rate of descent kam kar le apna. (Reduce the rate of descent.)

Nagpal: 10,000 feet. O.K., reducing it.

Dalaya: Waise, I am not well aur zyada lagta hai. (I am not well and it seems quite bad.)

Nagpal: Oh, yeah.

Dalaya: Raat ko I was sweating and suddenly got cold. Neend aa rahee thee, jaa rahee thee. Hota hai na? Theek hai, badh gaya to kuch kar loonga. (At night I slept fitfully. It happens, doesn't it? If it increases, I'll do something about it.)

(Although the court of inquiry did not take cognizance of this conversation, the National Transportation Safety Board pointed that it indicated Dalaya was "physically unwell".)

6.42 a.m.

Tower: Copy India, Special Ahmedabad 0110, Calm, 2,000 metre haze, one octa 1,800, 22, 21, 1010

6.35 a.m.
(1,700 ft)

No sig. (The special weather report taken at 6.40 a.m. indicating visibility is 2,000 metre, winds calm, haze, clouds at 1,800 feet. No change for the next two hours)

Nagpal: Roger.

Nagpal to Dalaya: Boss, ye kuch karvayega. (He will put us in a fix.)

Dalaya: Marvayega yane ki? (You mean kill us?)

Nagpal: Marvayega nahin, matlab kuch karvayega. (Not kill. I mean make us do something.)

Dalaya: What?

Nagpal: Ek octa cloud bhi de diya bande ne. (Our friend gave us cloud cover in only one region.)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Ahmedabad crash: chain of errors two crashes—in the darkest hour in Indian civil aviation history—that had left 167 people dead on October 19, 1988.

The mistakes, the court of inquiry into the Ahmedabad crash found, were beginning to mount even before Flight IC 113 took off from Bombay at 6.05 a.m. Thirty minutes before take-off, Flight Despatch Officer A.K. Banerjee handed a typewritten sheet to Dalaya and Nagpal in the airport's briefing room. Called 'notam' or 'notice to airmen', the bulletin contained crisp briefs about the condition of landing aids in several airports. It stated that the Ahmedabad airport's approach lights and several vital navigational landing aids were non-functional. But from their cockpit conversations, Dalaya and Nagpal appear not to have read the notam. That

RAMESH DAVE

Dalaya: Yahan to 2 km hain na. Aaram se, aaram se ho jayega. (Visibility is 2 km. We can do it easily.)

(The court found that the actual weather was deteriorating and the faulty meteorology report lulled the pilots into a sense of complacency.)

6.43 a.m.

Dalaya: Cabin crew to your landing stations. Will be landing in another five minutes.

Then tells Nagpal: Neeche nazar aa jaye to bata dena. (If you see the ground let me know.)

Air Hostess: Captain, temperature?

Dalaya to Nagpal: Kya hai? (What is it?)

Nagpal: 22 (degrees Celsius)

6.45 a.m.

Nagpal: Solid bad, sir.

Dalaya: Bada hi bekaar weather hai. (It's really bad weather.)

(This conversation indicated clearly that the weather had deteriorated and visibility was dropping.)

6.47 a.m.

Nagpal: I can see the runway.

Dalaya: Khair, abhi tum runway baad me dekhna. (You can see the runway later.)

6.50 a.m.

Dalaya: Approach mode. Turning inbound boliye. (Meaning: the aircraft has made its procedure turn and is now aligning itself with the runway.)

Nagpal to Tower: Ahmedabad India 113, turning inbound, will call you runway in sight sir.

Tower: Roger.

(The Safety Board felt that Dalaya had mistakenly chosen the 'approach mode' for landing—a procedure used only if the airport instrument landing systems are working. The notam had indicated that these were not operational and Dalaya may have been relying on faulty signals.)

6.51 a.m.

Nagpal: Wahan neeche dekho. (Look down there.)

Dalaya: Huts hain. Landing check list. Gear down karke phir jayengay. (Let's do the landing check list and then go.)

6.52 a.m.

Nagpal: 1,000 feet above aerodrome elevation.

Dalaya: Checked.

Dalaya: Kya dikh raha hai? Saaf dikh raha hai? (What do you see? Is it clear?)

Nagpal: Nazar aa raha hai sir. (I can see something.)

(The court found that after 1,000 feet no altitude checks were done—a violation of standard operating procedure.)

6.52.45 a.m.

Nagpal: Approach aa rahee hai, sir, 30 40 de. (I can see the approach, sir, let down the 30-40, the landing flaps.)

Dalaya: 30-40. (Sound of lever movement.)

(The court felt the pilots had violated another procedure—putting down their landing flaps fully without first sighting the runway.)

6.52.54 a.m.

Dalaya: Look out karo.

Nagpal: Mere side aayee hain. (It has come on my side.)

(The court ruled that both pilots were looking out and had failed to check their altimeter. The safety board felt that while Nagpal was looking out, Dalaya was glued to the flight director instrument and lost track of the altitude.)

6.53 a.m.

Sound of impact and scream.

Diagrams by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar turned out to be their first error.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

At 26, Nagpal was among the new recruits who went directly to jets, skipping the usual flying on turbo-props such as Avros and Fokkers. Just five months before the crash, he was cleared to fly as co-pilot on a Boeing 737 and had logged barely 179 hours of flying. Dalaya, 37, though an experienced flyer, was comparatively new as commander of a Boeing 737, having passed his examination on his second attempt in September 1987. Ideally, the court pointed out, Nagpal should have been flying with a more senior commander. The combination of two pilots, both inexperienced, was to prove deadly.

The court of inquiry investigating the Guwahati crash was coming up with disturbing facts too. Co-pilot Raghava Reddy, 29, had been inducted a year ago to fly Fokkers. Captain B.S. Bhogal had been promoted as commander two months before the crash. As the court found, Bhogal, 46, a former Indian Air Force transport pilot, seemed unaware of several key landing procedures—a major cause of the crash.

As the court probed deeper, it uncovered a series of irregularities. Bhogal had been checked and passed by M.P. Singh, a Vayudoot examiner. That, the court pointed out, was "highly unsatisfac-

GUWAHATI CRASH

Fatal Lapses

IN the Guwahati crash, a deadly combination of factors had built up. Since Vayudoot's Fokkers are not equipped with cockpit voice recorders (a lack the court disapproved of) the recorded conversation between Guwahati air traffic control and the aircraft became crucial in determining the cause of the crash.

At 8.42 a.m., Captain B.S. Bhogal called the tower and said they had locked on to the VOR, an instrument that tells them they are right above the runway. He also requested permission to carry out his procedure turn that would align him with the runway. "Roger," said air traffic control.

Bhogal did not know that he was speaking not to Vineet Gulati, the air traffic controller but to his assistant, Mohandasan. It was here that the court stumbled on a dangerous practice that was reportedly being followed in most control towers. Mohandasan's job was to prepare bills, maintain records and "assist" in handling air traffic. He was neither authorised to direct air traffic nor competent to do so. Still, he independently directed 704's flight path. Probing further, the court found that not only was Gulati not present in the tower but Mohandasan had given mistaken commands. That factor proved to be one of the causes of the crash.

Wreckage: series of irregularities

Even if tower commands were confusing, that was not sufficient reason for the crash. But Bhogal and Co-pilot Raghava Reddy too were making terrible mistakes. As a replay of the flight data recorder (the black box) indicated, Bhogal had actually turned much before he had spotted the VOR—his first error. He then inexplicably veered some 15 miles off course, right over the hills of Guwahati.

Even then, the court of inquiry observed, he could have got out of trouble had he not violated elementary descent precautions. At Guwahati airport, pilots are to begin their descent from 4,000 feet only when they spot navigational aids like the glide path, which indicates the aircraft's angle of descent to the runway.

At 8.47 a.m. Bhogal radioed the tower that they were not getting the glide path. A minute later, the tower asked: "704, confirm you are getting glide path." Bhogal replied: "Aah, negative, sir. 704 negative. We have completed procedure turn and turning inbound now." Meaning he had completed the loop that should have brought the aircraft on line with the runway.

It was here that fatal mistakes were made. Instead of requesting him to "state your intention" Mohandasan radioed: "Report outer marker inbound"—a command which indirectly meant he was cleared for descent. Even so, the pilots should not have descended since they had not locked onto the glide path. But they dropped to a dangerous 1,760 feet. Through the cloud cover they probably never saw the hill which they rammed into, killing all 34 people on board.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The new dimension in investment

The new Vision

With our continuous growth and broadening of our service base, we at VARJIVAN C. KAMPANI have opted for a change. A change to serve your needs with a professional approach.

The new Corporate identity

Started way back in 1958 as a small stock broking firm, today, we have gained a new dimension. As a separate corporate entity by transition from a partnership.

The new Know-how

In this fast moving world of investment business, we have a computerised data bank. To constantly update you with the latest financial information and to identify investment opportunities for you.

VCK - Your investment counsellor

VCK SHARE & STOCK BROKING SERVICES PVT. LTD.
(Member - Calcutta Stock Exchange)
16 India Exchange Place 1st floor Calcutta 700001
Telephone 20-2242/0486/0593/3718/7642
Telex 7592 VCK IN Gram LIQUIDITY

Sotheby's/VCK/1/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tory" because, ideally, the examination should be conducted by the Directorate General of Civil Aviation (DGCA), the authority which issues pilot licences. But the DGCA pleaded that it was short-staffed and did not have competent pilots to conduct examinations.

IC 113 had proceeded normally towards Ahmedabad, got in touch with the tower and at 6.32 a.m. was given clearance to descend from 2,100 feet to 1,500 feet—the initial manoeuvre for landing. The tower then radioed the Speci or special meteorological report taken a minute earlier which stated: visibility 2,000 metres, calm winds, haze with cloud formation at 1,800 feet. The report added crucially: 'No sig' meaning no significant change in weather conditions expected in the next two hours. Meanwhile 1,500 feet below, near the control tower, the meteorological office was, as the court opined, committing serious errors.

As with most Indian airports, visibility at Ahmedabad is measured arbitrarily. For determining that visibility was 2,000 metres on that fateful morning, B.J. Alika, the senior observer on duty, depended on the fact that he could spot a cinema theatre 2.2 km away from the tower. Under cross examination he admitted that visibility had been decreasing.

Then, as the court discovered, came the strangest of explanations for no action being taken to report the deteriorating visibility. If the visibility was less than 2,000 metres, then the meteorological staff would have had to go to the other end of the runway and report the true visibility conditions. To do that they would have had to requisition a vehicle from the controller and the whole procedure would have taken over 20 minutes.

A study of the actual weather during that time showed that visibility had rapidly dropped below 2,000 metres and instead of haze, a mist had developed.

There were also other indirect contributory factors.

Although the instrument landing systems, a set of navigational aids, at Ahmedabad airport had been installed in 1986 they had yet to be made functional. Reason: the outer-marker, an instrument indicating the distance from the airport, had not been given power connection for two years.

PRASHANT PANJIAR

Coffins of victims at Ahmedabad

Though the reports on the Ahmedabad and Guwahati crashes were submitted early this year, they have not yet been made public.

Worse, the National Airports Authority, the agency responsible for maintaining domestic aerodromes, admitted under questioning that it had not checked the accuracy of other crucial navigational aids for over two years. This despite a statutory requirement that it be done once in three months. The authority trotted out the excuse that it did not have enough aircraft to carry out these checks. The court pointed out that even simple aids like approach lights, which indicate the beginning of the runway, had not been working for two months. The authority's excuse: frequent pilferage of bulbs.

Despite that, the pilots could still have avoided the crash. But they too had begun making irrevocable blunders. Nagpal was supposed to read out the altitude at intervals—a standard procedure while descending. He didn't. They then violated another procedure by descending below the safety height of 500 feet before spotting the runway. That height is needed in case they are unable to see the runway and have to overfly it. They then compounded the error by putting down their landing flaps without spotting the runway. The subsequent crash left 135 people dead. Of the five who survived, three died later in hospital.

While the two courts of inquiry have exhaustively sifted through the evidence and pointed out several glaring errors, their reports rely on standard terminology to describe the causes of the crash. The court inquiring into the Guwahati crash states that "it was caused by an error of judgement of the pilot-in-command" that resulted in his not "adhering" to landing procedures. It also points out that the "wrong clearance" given by the control tower "contributed to the accident".

Using almost similar language, the court of inquiry into the Ahmedabad crash concludes that it was caused by "error of judgement on the part of the pilot-in-command as well as the co-pilot". It added: "It was associated with poor visibility which (information) was not passed to the aircraft."

The National Transportation Safety Board, formed two years ago, has objected to this. In a strongly worded brief to the Civil Aviation Ministry last month, it said: "The words 'error of judgement' give the impression that there was unavoidable failure of the human element and there is nothing more to be done." It felt that in the Vayudoot crash the correct description should have been "a series of serious mistakes on the part of the pilot at the time of approach and landing". And in the Ahmedabad crash the cause should have been described as "non-adherence to prescribed flight procedures by the pilots".

While the report on the Ahmedabad crash was submitted to the ministry on January 31 and that on the Guwahati crash on March 30, these are yet to be made public. Meanwhile, the ministry is still waffling over the other major recommendations they have made. In doing so, the ministry is only following the trail of neglect that is becoming a hallmark of civil aviation in the country.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Vital Services... for Vital Sectors.

Unrestrained performance in flying services. Carried out by a core of hand-picked, qualified pilots, engineers and technicians. And a fleet of 39 sophisticated helicopters... That's what makes us at Pawan Hans fly and reach anywhere, anytime our services are needed.

Support services for the energy sector—ONGC, Oil India, Coal India, Gas Authority of India...

Linking inaccessible areas, providing rescue and relief services for the State Governments of Meghalaya and Mizoram. And the islands of Lakshadweep, Andaman and Nicobar. Where Pawan Hans helicopters provide a reliable link between far-off and scattered isles. Making for better administrative control, casualty evacuation...

Even emergency duties... charter services for business, aerial photography...

Expanding our airmap to bring remote and far-flung regions together... promoting tourism.

With an over-riding sense of commitment to scale greater heights, explore newer vistas of operation. And contribute our mite to the nation's growth and prosperity.

Last year we carried 4,00,000 passengers, 10,00,000 kg of cargo, and saved the nation Rs. 45 crore in foreign exchange.

And we're only three years old.

Advtg. Integrated/PHL/13889

PAWAN HANS LIMITED

(A Government of India Enterprise)

Palika Kendra, Sansad Marg, New Delhi-110 001.

Exploring new frontiers

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Voltas' Business Associates Are Not Always Rs.400-Crore Companies.

Cold storage plants from Voltas have contributed significantly to the development of the marine products industry, and opened up a steady new source of income for lakhs of fisherme

Just one example of how a Voltas

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

m Voltas tly to the products steady new of fishermen
w a Voltas

product has created downstream business opportunities and generated economic growth.

There are numerous other examples in Voltas' 800-plus product lines. You'll find the story repeated with machine tools, textile machinery, construction equipment and dozens of other lines.

.New projects – such as the joint venture with Punjab Agro and Pepsico – will continue to be in pioneering areas, and will continue to generate significant economic growth through a ripple effect.

And, incidentally, will continue to create many more 'business associates' for Voltas.

VOLTAS LIMITED The Results Are Showing.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Enterprise/VL/53 F

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

How TouchWood protects your beautiful wooden furniture in ways no polish can

Introducing TouchWood Polyurethane Clear Wood Finish. It forms a tough layer over wooden furniture — a layer that resists scratches and stains many times better than polish.

Polish is just not tough enough

Immediately after you apply it, polish makes wooden furniture look beautiful. But, the first spill leaves a stain — one that remains until you polish your furniture again.

That's because polish can only form a weak and thin coat: a coat that just can't stand up to spills and scratches.

So within a few months, your furniture starts looking stained and scratched.

It starts looking ugly.

TouchWood: polyurethane strength

TouchWood contains polyurethane: a tough plastic. It forms a thick transparent layer that clings tenaciously on to wood.

A layer which resists hot spills, cold spills and scratches for a very long time.

And it lets the natural beauty of wood shine through, years after the average polish is not even a memory.

Brush on. Takes longer to dry to protect better

Like paint, TouchWood can be brushed on; a job any painter can do. So the next time, instead of getting your furniture polished, try TouchWood.

And because it forms a tough, thick, protective layer, unlike polish, it takes longer to dry. But no longer than the paint on doors and windows.

What's more TouchWood protection spreads to every intricate carving, reaches every hidden corner.

And though TouchWood costs a little more than polish, it more than pays its way by the protection it gives your beautiful wooden furniture: many times longer than polish.

Glossy or matt finish

TouchWood is available in two finishes glossy and matt — unlike polish. And unique TouchWood stainer can make even ordinary wood look special.

Freely available

You can find TouchWood at any Asian Paints dealer: just walk in and ask for it.

TouchWood. You need to try it just once and you'll see how well it preserves your furniture's beauty.

TOUCH WOOD

Brush on. And keep wood looking new.

asian paints

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

who gives a damn!

Flamboyant.
Daring.
Defying the rules.
And the fabric —
Oswal Premium.

OSWAL®
PREMIUM
SUITINGS

For the rebel in you!

Product of Arihant Fabrics Ltd.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MARRIED WOMEN

Changing Sexuality

Over the last decade there has occurred a palpable transition in the attitude of the urban middle class woman towards herself, her career and her place in society. Perhaps the most dramatic change is the way she has begun to come to terms with her own sexuality, and become more sexually assertive within and outside marriage.

PARVATI Krishnan, 59, from a well-off, conservative Mysore business family was married off at the age of 17. Her household has been her only context—the reference point of her existence. Her life, a pendulum between the kovil (temple) and the kacheri (music concerts). In the mornings, the grain came in; in the evenings, the women of the house collected jasmine and strung it with little orange flowers for the evening aarti (prayer). She programmed herself to the needs of her husband and his family—she never questioned him once in their 42 years of married life. And marital sex? A duty? A chore? Enjoyable? Repulsive? The secret will probably die with her. Women like Parvati never talk about the subject. Says she: "When we took our seven pheras it was for ever. There could never be any other man. Not even in thought. Firstly, there was no opportunity. Secondly, what would people say."

Parvati may not have changed. But she realises that the world has. Her daughter, Srilatha, 34, married and a bank executive in Delhi earning good money, not only discusses her relationship with her husband but also freely admits to fantasising about an affair. "My relationship with my husband is very important to me but I am seeing extra-marital relationships happening around me and, frankly, who knows one day?"

This attitudinal metamorphosis is nothing short of dramatic. What has changed between the mother who said never and the daughter who can say maybe? The answer is, the Indian woman. Increasingly she wants equality in her marriage, good sex from her husband and perhaps most striking of all, when she doesn't find either in marriage, satisfaction through extra-marital affairs. The educated, middle class married woman is making new demands on her husband: she wants tenderness, romance, compliments, foreplay, not merely lust in fast forward. Says a 34-year-old university lecturer from Delhi: "I want excitement, all that life has to offer. Marriage is a nice institution, but biological needs and urges and attractions go on throughout."

Illustrations by MANJULA PADMANABHAN

This attitudinal metamorphosis is nothing short of dramatic. What has changed between the mother who said never and the daughter who can say maybe? The answer: the Indian woman.

Today, the Indian female is becoming a multiple choice woman. She is in the job market to stay as a breadwinner, in the universities to teach, in the home if she wants to mother, on the road if she wants to travel, or, in bed enjoying sex as she had never dared to do a generation ago. Going by data gathered from their work experience, lawyers, marriage counsellors, social scientists and analysts believe that in the last decade, there has been a sea change in the attitude of urban, middle class women towards themselves, their careers and sexual relationships.

Says Dr Jyoti Parikh, gynaecologist: "I see infidelity in women far more during the last decade. The husband fulfils some needs, the boyfriend others. A single man can't do it all."

Arguably, Dr Parikh's view may be a little extreme, and applicable perhaps to a small segment of highly-westernised Indian women with avant garde, self-indulgent lifestyles. But it is an indicator of a changing sexual climate which is part of (Names of some people have been changed to protect identity.)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the sociological dimension of the phenomenal growth of middle class India—a society bumping off old traditions in its hurry to harvest the consumer boom—the break-up of the joint family, the huge influx of women into the work-force, and their increased mobility.

Analysts believe that with women beginning to earn their own money, there has come a possibility of a whole new range of relationships that push through the frontiers of family: office colleagues, independent women friends, and male companions. This new woman has begun the process of pogo-leaping from the "us" notion of the joint family marriage to the "we" notion of the nuclear couple. Some of them have even arrived at the "me" notion of self. Says Rupa Bhandari, 39, a vivacious housewife, who is married to a sales executive: "All my friends look so confident and sexy. I'm always on a diet. I know I overspend on clothes, but I enjoy the attention I get."

Their increased presence in the work force enables women to compare their husbands with other men. If they have a loveless marriage they now have the opportunity of fixing it without guilt.

Well-known writer Krishna Sobti, 64, whose Mitro Marjani, a story about the yearnings of a married woman, created a sensation in the '60s, says: "My mother spent her life looking at her watch—time for his coming home, his dinner, his bed. At the end of her life she asked, what have I done for myself? For her generation this realisation came too late. For younger girls, it's now."

SARLA Mudgal, president of Kalyani, a women's organisation providing counselling and legal aid to lower and middle class women, describes the change in the middle class in this way: "Twenty years ago, women simply kept quiet. Ten years ago, they would cry about their husbands going to prostitutes. Five years ago they started coming with their own complaints. They had started feeling angry. Now we have men coming and crying that their wives are having relationships."

And the physical evidence, sometimes brazen, of the country's changing sexual mores is flaunted in seductive dress codes, video, movies, pulp fiction, sex clinics not just in big cities but even in small towns like Dehra Dun, tantalising new sexual aids, and a mushrooming of faceless hotels.

Video, especially the easy availability of soft and hard porn, even to lower-middle class India, has brought sweeping changes into the Indian bedroom, leading to an explorative sexuality. "In India people did not even take their clothes off," said David Jacob, a journalist. "Now you've got Scandinavian erotica close-up." A significant outcome is that the Indian male has become more aware of his wife's sexuality, and she of her own, in a manner unknown a decade ago. Says Bombay sexologist Prakash Kothari: "Many couples read erotic passages as one of the variations on foreplay and report it had a wonderful effect."

According to Bayeshwari Parikh, a marriage counsellor based in Bombay city: "Many traditional women are at first astonished by new demands like oral sex that their husbands have begun making." Often, this in turn, awakens in many women the deeply repressed nature of their own sexual desires. And the husband is not the only stimulus in this sexual awakening. The confessional school of writing—Savvy, Society, film magazines with their kiss-and-tell culture—also give the woman guts to think sex. She is able to acknowledge her sexual urges—or "turn on" as the colloquialism goes—with less shame. Says Neeraja Trivedi, 23, from Moradabad, daughter of a PWD junior engineer, unhesitatingly: "If my husband enjoys sex, why can't I? I am not some passive kind of person. In fact, we see blue films together, read Playboy letters, try out different things: French kissing, oral sex, new postures."

And even some of the older generation of women are learning not to be guilt-laden when visited by a new flush of sexuality before menopause. Women past their 40s, even middle-aged widows, no longer want to resign themselves to being viewed as premature grandmothers with nothing more than the rocking chair on the horizon.

Women at mid-life are perhaps even more acutely sensitive about the way they look. The paradox has always been that at this stage of life—even though they are coming face to face with "My mother spent her life looking at her watch—time for his return, bed. At the end she asked, what have I done for myself?"

—KRISHNA SOBTI, Writer

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Twenty years ago, women kept quiet; then they began complaining. Now men cry that their wives are having affairs." —SARLA MUDGAL, Counsellor mortality, their children don't need them as much, husbands sometimes stop thinking about them as sexual beings, their nests are emptying—their sexual drives are often revivified. The age-old Indian prescription for this stage of life was for the woman to play coy, and to intensify her relationship with society and family by involving herself more deeply in rituals and ceremonies and religion. That, too, is changing.

Says psychoanalyst Udayan Patel: "The old belief that sex goes out with menopause is out." Not completely, perhaps, but noticeably. Adds Parikh: "I know of many instances when a woman in her 40s has gone to men in their 20s. Sometimes it's the son's friends—they come over often and no one would know."

Even healthy marriages develop excruciating phases of loneliness after some years. So many middle class women live lives of quiet desperation, that a brief affair—with its attention, adoration, and snatches of stolen time—comes as a heady reprieve. "Within a marriage people stop reacting to each other sexually, but with another person you get recharged," says Manjit Arora, 34, a housewife who runs a small garments boutique. "Every new body has a new current. It's the fear, the challenge—the charge is very strong sexually. Because it's forbidden, something you cannot have."

Once an affair actually takes off, sex becomes the single most important factor. Anu Sachdev, 29, a journalist describes it this way: "You're doing something wrong anyway. So you're doing it with wild abandon, trying out new postures, working out your wildest fantasies." And this often snowballs into another sexual problem. As Anu puts it: "Because you go home to your husband you have to consciously underplay all that you've learnt. One wrong move and your husband will say, hey, where did you learn that?"

And because, unlike in the past, there is less guilt associated with this new self-awareness—whether it manifests itself in the occasional extra-marital fling or in the quest for more pleasurable sex within marriage—women accordingly make extravagant sexual demands of their husbands, sometimes to the utter confusion of the male. That this change is real, that it is palpable, is measurable by a simple yardstick. While a decade ago women would be loathe to discuss their sexual habits even with close friends, today they are ready to talk about their sexual behaviour openly to experts.

Video, especially the easy availability of porn, has brought sweeping changes into the bedroom. The male has become aware of his wife's sexuality, and she of her own, in a way unknown a decade ago.

In fact, Kothari, in a survey of 3,000 women, says that 70 per cent admitted that they did not enjoy "the missionary position as much as being on top". The significance of this is not just that married women are demanding different and varied sex, but that they are willing to discuss it more easily. Perhaps, five years ago, a survey like this would not even have been possible because women would have thought twice before discussing their sex lives with a sexologist. And that, is a change.

Also, because of heightened sexual awareness, these women will not tolerate having to live with the traumatic wedding nights their mothers often experienced at the hands of their often unlettered fathers. No foreplay. No afterglow. Not expected. Not given.

A woman, now 38, remembers the first few gauche years of her married life: "Sex lasted for only a few uncomfortable seconds. And afterwards my husband would always ask me: 'Are you satisfied?'" Radical feminists characterise this as male insensitivity or marital rape. This is probably facile because the sexual tragedy of this cuts both ways. Males of that generation had little experience of sex except in its crudest

"In India people did not even take their clothes off, now you've got Scandinavian erotica close-up." —DAVID JACOB, Journalist

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DEAR CHAIRMAN, PRESIDENT, VICE-PRESIDENT...

... ADD 72 NEW OFFICES AND 54 LOCATIONS TO YOUR EXISTING NETWORK OF BRANCHES.

CAPITAL INVESTMENT ON US.

Expand your market, go for new business. Beat the competition by knowing first, quoting first, and getting the orders first.

With MBCC as your partner, you have a unique concept – do business in new ways, with new levels of sophistication, at incredibly low costs! Hook up to your customers, suppliers and dealers through our personalised services.

- Shorten the order processing cycle.
- Speed up your collections – outstandings and public issues.
- Exchange drawings and documents.
- Send medical reports and blood requirements.

The world has suddenly shrunk for you. Somebody has at last given business the talk, listen, be-in-touch edge.

Timings: 9.30 a.m. to 7.30 p.m. on weekdays
9.30 a.m. to 4.00 p.m. on Saturdays

maegabyte

BUSINESS & COMMUNICATION CENTRE

• A Division of Maegabyte Consultancy Services Pvt. Ltd. •

Giving business the talk, listen, be-in-touch edge

Yes! I am interested in MBCC. Please rush me details.

Name: .....

Designation: .....

Organisation: .....

Address: .....

..... Tel. No. .....

Regd. Head Office: Krislon House, Saki Vihar Road, Saki Naka, Andheri (E), Bombay 400 072.

For a corporate presentation, contact our Corporate Sales Manager at any of the following centres: BOMBAY: A.B. Centre, 3rd floor, Vaswani Mansion, Dinshaw Vacha Road, Bombay 400 020. tel: 220371/220372 • DELHI: C-16, C Block Market, Vasant Vihar, New Delhi 110 057. tel: 674919 telex: 031-72026 IDI IN • BANGALORE: 3rd floor, 51, Thapar House, 1st Cross, J.C. Road, Bangalore 560 027. tel: 235279/227214 • CALCUTTA: 6th floor, "Circular Court", 8, Acharya J.C. Bose Road, Calcutta 700 017. tel: 432370

For more details, send the coupon to any of the above addresses.

List of cities which represent MBCC. East: Calcutta, Cuttack, Guwahati, Jamshedpur, Patna • North: Allahabad, Bareilly, Ghaziabad, Gwalior, Kanpur, Kota, Lucknow, New Delhi, Varanasi • South: Bangalore, Belgaum, Bijapur, Cochin, Coimbatore, Davangere, Erode, Guntur, Hubli, Karur, Madras, Mangalore, Pondicherry, Secunderabad, Trichy, Trivandrum, Vijayawada, Vishakapatnam • West: Ahmedabad, Ahmednagar, Akola, Aurangabad, Baroda, Bhopal, Bombay, Gandhidham, Indore, Jamnagar, Karad, Kolhapur, Nagpur, Nasik, Panaji, Pune, Raipur, Rajkot, Sangli, Surat, Thane, Vasco-da-Gama.

Mudra: B: MBCC: 26: 2417

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Every body has a new current. It's the fear, the challenge—the charge is very strong sexually. Because it's forbidden." —MANJIT ARORA, Housewife variety—masturbation or prostitutes. And premature ejaculation—for which males can now receive counselling in the nation's burgeoning clinics—was a private shame men had to live with. And if the women of yesteryears were afraid to confront their own sexuality, men too were not conditioned to view their female partners as orgasmic. Also, most women experienced what could be described as their first sexual shock on their wedding night.

But in the new generation, as sexual liberality has spread, both men and women have experienced at least some form of premarital sex, and have some expectations from their marital partners. Doctors admit that in the last few years there has been a significant increase in teenage pregnancies. Says Dr Parikh: "Schoolgirls from the 9th and 10th classes have been coming to me—they're either pregnant or want to know if their future husbands will find out about their loss of virginity."

Problems arise, particularly in arranged marriages, which are still the most common, in which the female has been sexually active with boy friends before her marriage and the male is a virgin or simply has experienced quick and casual sex with prostitutes. But even in these dead-end situations, the Indian female, rather than the male, has begun to seek solutions. Professional counsellors also see a distinct change in their older patients who now openly talk about their sexual relations with their husband and their levels of satisfaction. Many women express their anxiety about pain, orgasm and frequency, and curiosity about new methods of contraception.

Another significant change in this decade lies in the subtle shifts in the institution of marriage. Frustrations of marriage—like male impotence and brutality—were rarely talked about outside the joint family. In the most conservative scenario, coitus was all about guilt and shame—except when it had to do with producing children.

Dolly Thakore, media personality, 46, describes the unhappy ebbs in her marriage: "I cried on my wedding day. He never told me I look beautiful. Here was I brought up on the image of candle light and soft music. He'd ask me to kick his mobike and start it. It destroyed my confidence completely." Adds Prabeen Grewal, a social worker formerly with Saheli, a women's counselling centre: "The real change today is the quest for basic, sensory excitement. Romance has to be creative, an adventure. Sexuality is the shakti in you." And the frustration of these growing urges can manifest itself either in divorce, which is on the increase in India. Or, in many cases, infidelity.

Even healthy marriages develop excruciating phases of loneliness. So many women live lives of quiet desperation that a brief affair—with all its attention—comes as a heady reprieve.

More and more Indian women find that tensions and conflicts can have a sexual outlet. Some cases of infidelity, for instance, are being born out of a sense of revenge—getting-even affairs. And there is discernible, a pattern among some middle class women tormented by demands for dowry. "This woman deliberately takes steps to get involved in an affair," says Mudgal. "She is taking revenge on her husband and her in-laws."

And these changes could hardly have occurred without one crucial factor—opportunity. Many more women are out of the house, working in closer proximity to men than ever before. The workplace has become a meeting ground and friendship at work can easily trip into a 9 to 5 romance. "There are little things you do in a work situation that bring you close," says Mohit Khanna, 39, a chartered accountant. "You spend two-thirds of your conscious life at work. A woman colleague does little things for you. First, you

"People ask me whether there is a method to avoid guilt. There isn't. You just can't hack off the guilt and throw it away." —SAILESH KAPADIA, Analyst

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Mr. RAM GUPTA, YOUR OFFICES AT GANDHIDHAM, KARAD, GUNTUR AND GUWAHATI ARE READY.

COMPLETE WITH TELEPHONE, TELEX, FAX, COMPUTER, SECRETARY, COURIER...

Incredible access. To markets hitherto out of reach. Suddenly, the power to increase your business and reduce marketing costs, is in your hands.

72 modern, high-tech, fully equipped business and communication centres in 54 locations throughout India. Enabling you to fix tour reservations and appointments well in advance. And carry information on floppy disks. What's more, you can even receive documents and information from your contacts abroad.

Come on, access convenience, growth and profit.

Timings: 9.30 a.m. to 7.30 p.m. on weekdays
9.30 a.m. to 4.00 p.m. on Saturdays

maegabyte

BUSINESS & COMMUNICATION CENTRE

• A Division of Maegabyte Consultancy Services Pvt. Ltd. •

Giving business the talk, listen, be-in-touch edge

Yes! I am interested in MBCC. Please rush me details.

Name: .....

Designation: .....

Organisation: .....

Address: .....

..... Tel. No. .....

Regd. Head Office: Krislon House, Saki Vihar Road, Saki Naka, Andheri (E), Bombay 400 072.

For a corporate presentation, contact our Corporate Sales Manager at any of the following centres: BOMBAY: A.B. Centre, 3rd floor, Vaswani Mansion, Dinshaw Vacha Road, Bombay 400 020. tel: 220371/220372 • DELHI: C-16, C Block Market, Vasant Vihar, New Delhi 110 057. tel: 674919 telex: 031-72026 IDI IN • BANGALORE: 3rd floor, 51, Thapar House, 1st Cross, J.C. Road, Bangalore 560 027. tel: 235279/227214 • CALCUTTA: 6th floor, "Circular Court", 8, Acharya J.C. Bose Road, Calcutta 700 017. tel: 432370

For more details, send the coupon to any of the above addresses.

List of cities which represent MBCC. East: Calcutta, Cuttack, Guwahati, Jamshedpur, Patna • North: Allahabad, Bareilly, Ghaziabad, Gwalior, Kanpur, Kota, Lucknow, New Delhi, Varanasi • South: Bangalore, Belgaum, Bijapur, Cochin, Coimbatore, Davangere, Erode, Guntur, Hubli, Karur, Madras, Mangalore, Pondicherry, Secunderabad, Trichy, Trivandrum, Vijayawada, Vishakapatnam • West: Ahmedabad, Ahmednagar, Akola, Aurangabad, Baroda, Bhopal, Bombay, Gandhidham, Indore, Jamnagar, Karad, Kolhapur, Nagpur, Nasik, Panaji, Pune, Raipur, Rajkot, Sangli, Surat, Thane, Vasco-da-Gama.

Mudra: B: MBCC: 38: 2417

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I have a nice home, food, servants. Why give it up? A woman can keep her marriage alive by outside stimulation." —KAVITA APTE, Private Consultant don't notice, then you notice. Gratitude turns to sharing confidences. Soon you have dinner after work. It can start with a small touch—or holding hands."

For most women, the first time it often just happens—unprepared. It could be an old friend, a work colleague, or someone from her social circle. Radhika Nair, 32, from a conservative middle income family was at a particularly vulnerable stage in life when she slipped into an extra-marital relationship: her mother had died recently. Her husband was sympathetic but didn't understand the depth of her loss. She found herself turning more and more to an old family friend.

She says: "I got carried away by the sheer closeness of another man. I allowed myself the kissing and touching, but I thought I would stop there." She couldn't.

Then the questioning began: was it worth it? Am I a bad wife? Does the lover think I'm a loose woman? When she actually faced the everyday reality of her child, husband, home—and how much all this meant to her—the enormity of what she had done got to her. There was no second time.

Psychoanalysts feel that women seldom rationalise before the first time—only after. Initially, the sheer sensations pole-vault the guilt. But later it can hit with double force. It can be triggered by something innocent your child may say or do, such as kissing both his parents. "Most women tend to see-saw between the euphoria and the 'my god what have I got into?'" says Indrani Sinha, 44, who runs a small bakery in Delhi. Explains Kiran Bhatia, a counsellor now with Sumaitri, a suicide prevention cell in Delhi: "Women who have a reason find it easier to be unfaithful: an alcoholic or impotent husband, a tyrannical mother-in-law, family tensions. But if she wants to satisfy her personal needs—creative, intellectual, sexual—it's that much harder."

Yet it's not the act of infidelity, but what it signifies, that is important. Says Veena Das, sociologist: "It can mean a redefinition of marriage, an insight into the self, a void being filled. It can also be the done thing in a certain society."

New indicators of the woman crossing the Lakshman-rekha of her own volition come from Indian films that have begun increasingly to deal with female infidelity, and have been doing it sensitively: Paroma, Silsila, Arth, Ek Pal, Ek Baar Phir, Antarjali Yatra. In fact, old censorship rules said that the sanctity of marriage could not be violated. Now that rule has been scrapped. "The act of infidelity is being presented with some amount of understanding, if not approval," says National Film Development Corporation Chairman B.K. Karanjia. "We are getting many more scripts on this subject."

The Indian female, rather than the male, has begun to seek solutions. Counsellors see a distinct change: women now readily express their anxiety about pain, intercourse and orgasm.

A script depicting the transformation in the sexual responses of women to changes in their lives in modern India could well be based on this real life account of Meera Raj, 32, a writer, for whom the turning point came after 11 years of marriage, when her child was born. She had developed hepatitis and almost died. She had also begun to feel frumpy and listless. And boring. She met a married man at a seminar. "He made me feel I was fascinating," she says. "He asked me to take a sip from a glass of wine. We sat all night holding hands. I was crying and he kept kissing me. I felt I had only one life to live. Suddenly I was saying I want this for me."

In similar vein, asserts Kavita Apte, 35, a private consultant who has had one extra-marital relationship: "Life is too exciting and short. I have a nice home, good food, efficient

"The real change is the quest for sensory excitement. Romance has to be an adventure. Sexuality is the shakti in you." —PRABEEN GREWAL, Social Worker

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MODERN, HIGH-TECH, BUSINESS AND COMMUNICATION CENTRES AVAILABLE...

... IN METROS, MINI-METROS, CLASS III, CLASS IV, CLASS V TOWNS.

FOR AS LOW AS Rs. 1000.

No excuses now for not expanding your marketing operation. Just avail of the MBCC network: 72 modern, high-tech, fully equipped business and communication centres. In 54 locations throughout India.

Each centre provides a complete business infrastructure, an ultra modern communication network and a host of unparalleled business services.

Go ahead. Access profit and growth. No excuses.

Timings: 9.30 a.m. to 7.30 p.m. on weekdays
9.30 a.m. to 4.00 p.m. on Saturdays

maegabyte

BUSINESS & COMMUNICATION CENTRE

• A Division of Maegabyte Consultancy Services Pvt. Ltd. •

Giving business the talk, listen, be-in-touch edge

Yes! I am interested in MBCC. Please rush me details.

Name: .....

Designation: .....

Organisation: .....

Address: .....

..... Tel. No. .....

Regd. Head Office: Krislon House, Saki Vihar Road, Saki Naka, Andheri (E), Bombay 400 072.

For a corporate presentation, contact our Corporate Sales Manager at any of the following centres: BOMBAY: A.B. Centre, 3rd floor, Vaswani Mansion, Dinshaw Vacha Road, Bombay 400 020. tel: 220371/220372 • DELHI: C-16, C Block Market, Vasant Vihar, New Delhi 110 057. tel: 674919 telex: 031-72026 IDI IN • BANGALORE: 3rd floor, 51, Thapar House, 1st Cross, J.C. Road, Bangalore 560 027. tel: 235279/227214 • CALCUTTA: 6th floor, "Circular Court", 8, Acharya J.C. Bose Road, Calcutta 700 017. tel: 432370

For more details, send the coupon to any of the above addresses.

List of cities which represent MBCC. East: Calcutta, Cuttack, Guwahati, Jamshedpur, Patna • North: Allahabad, Bareilly, Ghaziabad, Gwalior, Kanpur, Kota, Lucknow, New Delhi, Varanasi • South: Bangalore, Belgaum, Bijapur, Cochin, Coimbatore, Davangere, Erode, Guntur, Hubli, Karur, Madras, Mangalore, Pondicherry, Secunderabad, Trichy, Trivandrum, Vijayawada, Vishakapatnam • West: Ahmedabad, Ahmednagar, Akola, Aurangabad, Baroda, Bhopal, Bombay, Gandhidham, Indore, Jamnagar, Karad, Kolhapur, Nagpur, Nasik, Panaji, Pune, Raipur, Rajkot, Sangli, Surat, Thane, Vasco-da-Gama.

Mudra: B: MBCC: 34: 2417

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

> "In India, a woman's infidelity is usually a one-shot affair—after which she stops it on her own, realising it was worthless." —DR R.L. KAPUR, Psychiatrist servants, fine cutglass. Why would I want to give that up? A woman can keep her marriage alive by outside stimulation." What of the guilt? "One by one, like an onion skin, everything has peeled off: the shame, the guilt, the fear of what people will say. Only the sense of risk is left," she says.

Film director Govind Nihalani, who is working on Drishti, a film on infidelity, says: "It's quite possible that a change of location, state of mind or a new landscape can stimulate the mind and lead one to the moment of desire." Says Thakore: "It's come to be accepted that biologically one strays, but no one is giving up marriage."

Yet despite Apte's avowals, in infidelity, as in marriage, there are few couples who live happily ever after. Guilt hangs, like an albatross. And jealousy. "People ask me whether there is a method to avoid guilt. There isn't. You just can't hack off the guilt and throw it away," says analyst Sailesh Kapadia.

Radhika Menon, 35, a sociologist who has spent half her life abroad, fell in love with a film maker. Initially, the intensity of her feelings for him kept her blissful. But she could not understand the migraines which began. When the strain of the pirouette between her unsuspecting husband and her lover became too much for her, she stopped. And so did the headaches. "I feel that the reason was this double, schizoid life I led. I had to be one person to my husband and another to my friend."

According to Dr R.L. Kapur, former head of the Department of Psychiatry in NIMHANS in Bangalore: "In India, a woman's infidelity is usually a one-shot affair—after which she stops it on her own, realising it was worthless." After the first time, many women freeze, and the doubts begin.

Doubts are part of the sexual transition. The next generation of women will have it easier as this one tries to answer the questions: is this right? Is this wrong? Clearly, the Indian woman is at the crossroads as she confronts her sexual dilemmas. This is a far cry from not so long ago when in some joint families there was not even a bed for the woman. She entered her husband's room with a glass of hot milk as an excuse—and crept back after hasty nocturnal trysts to share a bed with sister-in-law or child.

> Existential doubts are part of the sexual transition. The next generation of women will clearly have it easier as this one tries to answer the questions: is this right? Is this wrong?

Today, apart from the media, other factors such as the birth control campaign, the availability of condoms, and the pill have opened the pressure cooker repressed sensuality which is escaping like steam. Parents are more willing to accept a daughter walking out on an impotent husband.

Moreover, their newfound mobility has opened up a new world of men which the women had only known secondhand. They now have the opportunity of being able to compare their husbands with other men. And if they have a loveless or tired marriage, they now have the opportunity of fixing it without guilt, or at least dreaming of romance outside it.

Of course, the dilemmas continue to multiply, springing perhaps from the peculiar status of the Indian woman. "Women are in a very hybrid position. On the one hand, 5,000 years of Indian culture, and on the other, the massive exposure to the West," says Kiran Sharma Bhatia.

Perhaps the time has come when this ancient land, which absorbs and synthesises races, philosophies and religion, has evolved a new hybrid—the modern Indian woman: one sari-draped foot rooted in the Indian marital tradition, the other, bare and sensual, jutting out as an aggressive expression of her new independence.

—MADHU JAIN and SIMRAN BHARGAVA

> "Women are in a hybrid position. On the one hand 5,000 years of Indian culture; on the other massive exposure to the West." —KIRAN SHARMA BHATIA, Counsellor

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

... ANYWHERE IN INDIA.

MBCC – YOUR LINK TO THE BIG CITY!

maegabyte

BUSINESS & COMMUNICATION CENTRE

• A Division of Maegabyte Consultancy Services Pvt. Ltd. •

Giving business the talk, listen, be-in-touch edge

It's the best thing that could have happened to your town.

Instant access to the only total business and communications package. Linking the remotest small town to the biggest of cities. Via telephone, telex, fax, courier...

And offering a host of unparalleled business services. At 72 centres in 54 locations across India.

You in your small town now have an office you can call your own, anytime. And where others can contact you, from any place. The cost, as low as Rs. 1000.

Timings: 9.30 a.m. to 7.30 p.m. on weekdays
9.30 a.m. to 4.00 p.m. on Saturdays

Yes! I am interested in MBCC. Please rush me details.

Name: .....

Designation: .....

Organisation: .....

Address: .....

..... Tel. No. .....

Regd. Head Office: Krislon House, Saki Vihar Road, Saki Naka, Andheri (E), Bombay 400 072.

For a corporate presentation, contact our Corporate Sales Manager at any of the following centres: BOMBAY: A.B. Centre, 3rd floor, Vaswani Mansion, Dinshaw Vacha Road, Bombay 400 020. tel: 220371/220372 • DELHI: C-16, C Block Market, Vasant Vihar, New Delhi 110 057. tel: 674919 telex: 031-72026 IDI IN • BANGALORE: 3rd floor, 51, Thapar House, 1st Cross, J.C. Road, Bangalore 560 027. tel: 235279/227214 • CALCUTTA: 6th floor, "Circular Court", 8, Acharya J.C. Bose Road, Calcutta 700 017. tel: 432370

For more details, send the coupon to any of the above addresses.

List of cities which represent MBCC. East: Calcutta, Cuttack, Guwahati, Jamshedpur, Patna • North: Allahabad, Bareilly, Ghaziabad, Gwalior, Kanpur, Kota, Lucknow, New Delhi, Varanasi • South: Bangalore, Belgaum, Bijapur, Cochin, Coimbatore, Davangere, Erode, Guntur, Hubli, Karur, Madras, Mangalore, Pondicherry, Secunderabad, Trichy, Trivandrum, Vijayawada, Vishakapatnam • West: Ahmedabad, Ahmednagar, Akola, Aurangabad, Baroda, Bhopal, Bombay, Gandhidham, Indore, Jamnagar, Karad, Kolhapur, Nagpur, Nasik, Panaji, Pune, Raipur, Rajkot, Sangli, Surat, Thane, Vasco-da-Gama.

Mudra: B: MBCC: 30: 2417

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THAR DESERT

Moving Menacingly

Desert advances as the Aravallis suffer denudation

THE forebodings are ominous. Like a menacing leviathan the Great Indian Desert is crawling towards other parts of north India, including Delhi. There have been unmistakable signs of this phenomenon: droughts and famine are becoming more frequent.

In fact, this century's worst famines were recorded in the past two years. Never before have eight droughts occurred in a decade, like from 1978-1988. The Palam observatory in Delhi recorded 153 mm of rain this year, which is 487 mm less than the normal. Increasingly, the capital and nearby regions are being shrouded by dust.

The reason: the once-green 692-km-long Aravalli ranges, stretching from the Delhi ridge to Banaskantha in north Gujarat, have been denuded of their forest cover in a short span of 40 years. Worse, the core of the Thar desert region has shifted from the central to the northern fringe of the Aravallis and is now centred in Delhi. The Aravallis, the last bastion between the encroaching desert and the north Indian bread basket, is gradually withering away.

Now even the Bhil, Meena and Damor tribes find it difficult to survive in the ranges. The onslaught on forests began after Independence when the nationalisation of forests and the privatisation of community pastures were completed. The Forest Department went a step further and cut down the forests for commercial purposes. In the process, the Aravalli forest range has shrunk from 40,000 sq km in 1947 to a mere 6,000 sq km now.

Due to the consequent reduction in rainfall in the region, crop yields have slumped. "The number of rainy days have gone down from 101 days in 1973 to 58 in 1989," says Dr S.S. Dhabriya of the Jaipur-based Birla Institute of Scientific Research. And conditions are not even congenial for growing grass.

What is, however, alarming is that such dismal weather might soon be seen in the 'Granary of India' in eastern Rajasthan, south-west Punjab, south-west Haryana, western Uttar Pradesh, Malwa and Kutch, which lie on the eastern part of the Aravallis. "To check desertification in the west, solutions have to be applied in the east of the Aravalli ranges especially in Rajasthan," explains Anil Agarwal, director of the Centre for Science and Environment in New Delhi.

The Aravallis are the eastern boundary of the Thar desert. "Till it remained densely forested, the Aravalli hills checked the expansion of the sandy desert towards the Indo-Gangetic plain. Now, there is no effective green barrier," asserts Laxmi Narain Modi of the Rajasthan Catalyst Foundation.

Dust storms blow into Delhi through Singhana-Digrota, the longest gap of 22 kms—there are 12 gaps in the ranges totalling 93 kms. The gaps have been recorded by satellite pictures and verified on the ground. Digital processing of the Sambhar Gap and Pushkar Gap by the Computer Compatible Tape and field verification have confirmed that the desert is spreading.

Planning Commission officials, however, assert that efforts are underway to get the Aravallis into the Hill Area Development Programme, at least in the Eighth Plan. But even that is small consolation. "The Government pumps in drought relief, which, for the most part is used to employ people in kutcha road construction and fodder subsidies," explains Kishore Saint, who has been working to green the Aravallis in Udaipur district for the past decade.

Such superficial measures are repeated. The roads are built and rebuilt. There's large-scale corruption. Warns Saint: "When the future in their own region is bleak, people will go out in search of fresh pastures—inflicting damage on neighbouring regions. It will open the doors for the desertification of the Indian subcontinent."

The Aravallis, the lifeline for not only 14 million people and 24 million cattle in the desert but also the densely populated north, is being ravaged by man and smothered by the desert. And action ought to be urgently taken, for unlike bureaucrats, deserts don't take much time to move.

—SUDHIRENDAR SHARMA

The Thar desert: spreading quickly

BHAWAN SINGH

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ATV PROJECTS INDIA LIMITED

Registered Office: D-8, MIDC, Street No. 16, Marol, Andheri (East), Bombay-400 093

A Turnkey Project Construction Company.

Into the future charged with a new energy!

ATV has entered into a collaboration for modernisation, with IHI, Japan, the world's second largest engineering company. Now every core sector project becomes an exciting opportunity.

Public Issue of 10,75,132 — 14% Secured Fully Convertible Debentures of Rs.150/- each for cash at par aggregating Rs.16,12,69,800

ISSUE HIGHLIGHTS

- ★ A well established turnkey project construction company
- ★ Unbroken dividend-paying record and high profit margins
- ★ Entering into hi-tech areas with IHI, Japan, the world's second largest engineering company; latest know-how on continuing basis with R & D support
- ★ With IHI, Japan, every core sector project becomes a rewarding opportunity for ATV
- ★ Substantial order book position
- ★ Professionally managed with proven track record of success
- ★ Unique offer that combines steady returns and attractive capital appreciation
- ★ Easy liquidity — listing at Bombay, Delhi and Ahmedabad Stock Exchanges
- ★ No gestation period as company is already in operation
- ★ The share was quoted at Rs.57.50 on September 7, 1989 on the Bombay Stock Exchange

The added muscle of IHI technology will mean:

* Access to the latest IHI project know-how on a continuous basis.
* Help in acquiring internationally accepted quality assurance stamps
* Upgradation of the operational capacity of ATV's Mathura Plant along with computer aided design facilities.

Sista's-ATV/330-89A

Issue Opens on October 4, 1989

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A few among the upper league have cultivated the art of making a point — without saying a word.

THE PORTRAIT OF A WINNER

They use the subtle language of shade and design.

A language possible, only when the fabric is Vimal's Worsted Woollen range. A range which demands time (and patience) to choose from its over hundred designs. Each an original. Like the distinguished wearer. Who insists on this exclusive fabric range. Worsted Woollens from Vimal.

Mudra:A:RIL:4895

THE FINEST IN FABRIC HIERARCHY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

d the art

sign.

Vimal's

nds time

d designs.

er. Who

Woollens

m Vimal.

Featured here is the classic European Herringbone design in muted steel grey. From Vimal's Oakridge Collection.

VIMAL®

WORSTED WOOLLEN

& POLYRICH SUITINGS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

MOTHER TERESA

Hope and Anxiety

Worldwide concern as the Mother struggles for life

NORMALLY, it is Mother Teresa who prays for the world. Last month, in a reversal of roles, there was a silent prayer on lips the world over as the frail little 'messenger of God' struggled for her life in Calcutta's Woodlands Nursing Home, where she was admitted on September 5, suffering from high fever and exhaustion.

Three days later her condition became dangerous. The Mother is a heart patient and as a senior sister from the Missionaries of Charity said: "Her life that day hung on a thin thread." Though her condition improved over the next few days, it was obvious that constant hard work and selfless sacrifice had started taking its toll. In 1983, the Mother had suffered a heart attack while in Rome. But she ignored her health, lived on a simple diet and continued to spread her message of compassion and love in the world's trouble spots.

Now, it appeared that a shining saga of modern-day sainthood was slowly coming to an end. Initially, her personal physician, Rajen Wats, and a team of doctors headed by cardiologist, A.K. Bardhan, detected ischaemia, a heart ailment which she has suffered from earlier. Her heart beat was irregular and she developed nausea and high fever. Dr Bardhan later found that she was suffering from a cardiac problem known as 'transient left bundle branch block'. She was then fitted with a pacemaker.

Meanwhile, Dr Vincenzo Bilotii of Rome's Salvator Mundi Hospital rushed to Calcutta and was soon joined by Dr Charles Lambardy of the US. What worried them were the intermittent chest pains, fever, breathlessness and inability to swallow enough liquids. Last week, she still lay in the Intensive Care Unit (ICU), with a ban on all visitors, indicating that her condition was still serious.

The powerful of the world or their emissaries quickly rushed to her side. Rajiv Gandhi and wife Sonia visited her for a quarter of an hour. Putting her arms round him, the Mother said: "I have seen you as a boy and now you have grown up into a big man." President Bush sent a telegram through his consul-general in Calcutta, as did the Soviet Prime Minister, Nikholai Ryshokov. From the Vatican, Pope John Paul II, to whom she was deeply attached, sent "assurance of his prayers and spiritual participation" in her sufferings and called on the Virgin Mary to intercede on her behalf.

As the world waited in fretful anxiety, the sisters of the Missionaries of Charity, founded by the Mother exactly 43 years ago, continued their round-the-clock prayer vigil. Inside the ICU, the Mother was like the still-centre of the storm. Next to her bed in a little box on the table was the holy sacrament of Jesus—bread consecrated during mass. "She has God with her," said a glowing Sister Paule, waiting outside the corridor. "You see, God is in Jesus. Jesus is in the bread. So, God is with her. "Normally, nobody is allowed to keep the sacrament in their living quarters. But the Mother is so close to God," explained Sister Agnes, the Mother's first disciple and next to her in the hierarchy.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The sisters exude their normal serenity but it is difficult to keep the anxiety from showing. Their main problem is preventing the Mother from talking. Rooted to her bed, her mind is constantly on her work. "She never talks about her health. She wants to know how everybody else is," says Sister Blandine, one of the junior sisters who was able to see her recently. "She wants to know the details: whether the sisters who were supposed to go to Rome went, what the other sisters are doing. But then suddenly, she gets exhausted. She talks for five minutes, and her head drops and she dozes off."

Doctors have now forbidden visitors, especially after her condition became grave. But the letters pour in, from all corners of the world, from the rich and the poor, adults and children. Some are simply addressed to Mother Teresa, Calcutta.

The sisters give the impression of closing ranks behind an exterior of fortitude, like a solid wall. The smiles never cease, the skins glow. But within, they are clearly worried. Without the Mother, they would really become like the orphans they minister to. "No decision is taken without her," says Father Edward Le Jolly, 80, former spiritual Father of the Missionaries of Charity. "People ask me whether Mother Teresa, like Indira Gandhi, is a banyan tree under which nothing grows. The sisters are excellent workers, but the Mother has kept it all in her hands. She has not decentralised."

Work goes in all the homes set up by the Mother. But sadness has crept in. "This has been a deep experience. But we have seen the hand of God. He has a purpose: people are praying. But work goes on. Our hearts are heavy," says Sister Shanti, one of the six councillors of the Missionaries of Charity. Once mass—described by Sister Shanti as "our powerhouse"—is over, the sisters plunge into work. But for almost three weeks after the Mother fell ill, there was listlessness. Not only were there round-the-clock prayers, but most of the sisters also fasted. "They all had long, sad faces, and the rhythm of work slowed down," says one foreign volunteer working at the mission.

THE sadness is not confined to the sisters. In Shishu Home, which has nearly 300 abandoned or seriously ill children, the little inmates are also concerned. The day the Mother's condition was very serious and hope was at its lowest ebb, the sisters found Priti, 10, alone in the chapel, praying with tears running down her eyes. "She sat there for half an hour, squatted on the floor and put us all to crying," says Sister Alex, who runs Shishu. Priti's prayer was simple and straight from the heart: she asked Bade Pita (Big Father) to make Badi Ma (Big Mother) well. She fasted for two days, as did her friend Meera, 11.

On the other side of town in Prem Dan, a sprawling home with hundreds of destitutes—who were literally picked up from the streets by the determined little Angels of Mercy—another personal kind of litany is taking place. Most of the inmates are Hindus, but many of them keep going to the chapel to pray for Ma. The old men just sit and cry. Says Sister Norbert who is temporarily in charge of the home: "Before I even open the chapel or put on the lights for the adoration, many of them are inside, praying. They come in silently, one by one, and pray."

Some are dying. Too ill to go to the chapel, they sit up in bed and pray. Nanda is old and almost blind. He prays for Ma three times a day. "We feel so bad. Our life is over, God should take us. But for Ma there are so many people to look after. Ma is a gift from God to us."

Mary Magdalene, who is almost blind, holds her rosary in her hands, saying: "I pray six times during the day, and night too. This is our Mother. There can be nobody like her." The other women sitting nearby nod tearfully in assent.

In the home for the dying, Nirmal Hriday, in Kalighat, the Mother's first home, they are too close to death for prayer. But an old man, a twisted bunch of shrivelled, immobile limbs, looks up and smiles when her name is mentioned. Expression flickers briefly in his dead eyes. It is here, perhaps, that the spirit of the Mother is more palpable.

The Mother seems like a prism through which the light or the vision she saw comes through and breaks into hundreds of little images of her. Some of the sisters speak her language of bewildering simplicity, punctuated by the words, Love and God. They see Jesus everywhere: in the abandoned babies, in the decomposing old men and women, even in the indifferent and cruel.

The question on all minds, but a question which dare not be expressed, is: After Mother Teresa who? She may recover. But she is now 79, and after her current illness will obviously not be able to continue at the same furious, body-battering pace. The doctors say that her heart has already "taken quite a beating".

At present, Sister Agnes is in charge. As the Mother has been spending half the year abroad expanding the missions—including three in the Soviet Union—Sister Agnes already has considerable experience. But it is clear that the sisters are so dependent on the Mother that they have not even contemplated a future without her.

The most precious gift the Mother has given them is faith. It is that, more than the marvels of modern medicine, which keeps alive the hope that a higher being will intercede and return Mother to them—and to a world so desperately in need of her kind. —MADHU JAIN and FARZAND AHMED in Calcutta

Sisters pray for the Mother's recovery

SAIBAL DAS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Remember CANSHARE made your money

Grow
and Grow
and Grow
and Grow and now

CANGROWTH

The High Growth Potential Share

OFFER OPEN

GROWTH WITH SECURITY

CANBANK MUTUAL FUND

Orient House, Adi Marzban Path (Mangalore Street), Bombay 400 038.

Trustee: CANARA BANK

Always a step ahead

For Application Forms contact your nearest Canara Bank Branch

Concept

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

80% of all human diseases are water-borne

Water-borne Diseases	Caused By	Combatted By Tap Attachments/ Conventional Filters	Combatted By Chemicals & Disinfectants	Combatted By Aquaguard
BACTERIAL DISEASES
Gastro-enteritis	Bacteria	X	✓	✓
Typhoid	Bacteria	X	✓	✓
Cholera	Bacteria	X	✓	✓
Paratyphoid	Bacteria	X	✓	✓
Dysentery	Bacteria	X	✓	✓
Diarrhoea	Bacteria	X	✓	✓
VIRAL DISEASES
Polio	Virus	X	X	✓
Hepatitis	Virus	X	X	✓
Gastro-enteritis	Virus	X	X	✓

Trust Aquaguard for clear, safe drinking water.

Disease-causing viruses in your drinking water are more difficult to destroy than even bacteria, as can be seen from the above chart. Trust AQUAGUARD to eliminate all known, water-borne, disease-causing bacteria and viruses.

Give your family the confidence of water from AQUAGUARD.

For a free demonstration at your home, contact:

EUREKA FORBES LIMITED
P.O. Box 936, G.P.O., Bombay 400 001.

Aquaguard for clear, safe drinking water.
On-line water filter-cum-purifier

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THEATRE

The Fading Arclights

A historic retrospective, but theatre is at an impasse

CONTEMPORARY Indian theatre seems to be stuck in an impasse. Last month's two-week-long smorgasbord of nearly half a century of Indian drama presented under the ever-stretching canopy of the Nehru Centenary celebrations showed that theatre in the country is barely alive. And hardly kicking.

The Nehru Shatabdi Natya Samaroh organised by the Sangeet Natak Akademi was no doubt a historic occasion. There were 15 plays spanning a wide arc. From Bijon Bhattacharya's Nabanna, directed by Kumar Roy, which deals with Bengal's traumas of 1942-1943 to a recent Mahesh Eklunchwar play, Wada Chirebandi, directed by Vijaya Mehta which depicts the disintegration of a joint family.

The 'retrospective' included works of grand marquee names: Mohan Rakesh, Girish Karnad, Vijay Tendulkar, Habib Tanvir, K.N. Panikkar, Rattan Thiyam—23 Sangeet Natak Akademi awardees no less. Among the plays staged was Utpal Dutt's Kallol, which had once landed him in jail. Conspicuously absent were Shanta Gandhi's Jasma Odan, Shiela Bhatia's Heer Ranja. Also absent were Badal Sircar, E. Elkazi and Shombhu Mitra.

Still there were the chef d'oeuvres such as Adhe Adhure, Hayavadana, Ghasiram Kotwal, Urubhangam, Chakravyuha. The last by Rattan Thiyam—a highly stylised rendering of a portion of the Mahabharata—electrifying the audience. But what the big show ultimately proved was that Indian theatre has not gone anywhere, particularly after the golden age of the '60s and '70s.

"The '60s were easy. Post Independence we were conscious of a national identity. We looked for folk forms. The issues were carved out by historic conditions," says playwright, actor and Chairman of the Sangeet Natak Akademi Girish Karnad. Tendulkar's Ghasiram Kotwal, Karnad's Hayavadana and Tanvir's Charan Das Chor used folk forms to enhance urban theatre and won critical acclaim.

But in the present era of instant utsavs, folk forms have been ritualised. Says Dr Jabbar Patel, who directed Ghasiram Kotwal: "This play was a post-Independence look at grassroots to find a new format. Today we choreograph the rituals. We have not really presented the soul. The modern application of all this has yet to come out."

"The urban artiste has become a kleptomaniac. He lifts bits of tradition and then decorates his art with it."
MAHESH EKLUNCHWAR

"Do we expect actors to starve or stand outside on the road? How long can you be qurban for theatre?"
MANOHAR SINGH

"Look at any of the plays in the festival. Do they deal with any of our concerns today, our political realities?"
M.K. RAINA

Often, these plays have become no more than emporium theatre, boosted by government grants and peddled abroad. "The urban artiste has become exploitative, a kleptomaniac," complains playwright Eklunchwar. "He steals song, dance, colour from the rural. He lifts bits of tradition and then decorates his art with it. Like icing on cake."

Tanvir, who delved deep into the traditions of the tribals of the Chhattisgarh region and came up with original theatre like Mitti ki Gadi and Charan Das Chor, is also sceptical. "What seems to be folk-oriented is actually imitative. I don't see why we should not oppose imitation of Indian rural by the Indian urban and vice versa. We have to produce a play related to our cultural ethos."

One reason for the lack of growth is this inability to examine the contemporary urban or rural Indian. Says G.P. Deshpande, playwright and professor of Chinese at Jawaharlal Nehru University, whose play Uddhwasta Dharmashala was staged: "It is only now that we are beginning to come to terms with modern man." Volatile actor-director M.K. Raina feels that the turn to the classical or to the folk is an escape from reality. "Look at any of the plays in the festival. Do they deal with any of our concerns today?"

For Shyamanand Jalan, from Calcutta, the only relevant theatre is the popular. He describes traditional theatre as "laboratory theatre". Says he: "In the villages there is no audience for them. Is it for drama critics and for seminars?"

Played out, too, is the naturalist theatre which came out of the European mould of Ibsen and Shaw. Those like Karnad believe that this form does not work for Indian realities. "The naturalist form is constricting. Ours is a far more complex society. People just don't come and sit on the sofa and talk," says Karnad. "Indian society does not express itself totally in eloquent words. In Shaw's plays everyone was capable of expressing his woes in eloquent terms. But here the daughter-in-law is not going to speak in front of her mother-in-law. In a sense we are more like Chekhov where people want to say but can't say—the 19th century feudal family." But there are

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sangeet Natak Akademi

Scene from Urubhangam (above); and Naseeruddin Shah in Andha Yug

Sangeet Natak Akademi

those like Eklunchwar who are quite comfortable with the living-room. His reasoning: "We are in the proscenium and I see no reason to go out of it. We have not really tapped the strength of Indian prose."

But the biggest problems are financial. There is no equivalent of the National Film Development Corporation. Complains actor Mohan Agashe: "This is the only country where there is no subsidy for theatre. Nor is there a national association of actors." Even places to rehearse in are difficult to find. Says Eklunchwar: "All the halls are rented out for weddings today."

However, most damaging has been the exodus of talent to television and cinema. The best playwrights—Tendulkar, Jabbar Patel, and Karnad—today concentrate on these mediums. So do actors with long standing theatre links like Naseeruddin Shah and Amrish Puri.

So theatre remains an amateur effort. Nobody draws a salary. Says Agashe: "We don't even get pocket or smoke money." Result: theatre is treated like a hobby, or a part-time job. The Theatre Academy of Pune for instance is made up of bankers, architects, teachers and doctors. Says actor Manohar Singh, who has taught at the National School of Drama: "Do we expect actors to starve or stand outside on the road? How long can you be qurban (martyr) for theatre?"

Many dramatists believe that eventually something might emerge out of the present chaos. Says Tanvir: "The abundance of cultural things throws up high quality. Our fiction is strong. There are lots of little groups in small towns trying new things. Something will come up. Whether it is from street theatre or the Indian People's Theatre Association (IPTA)."

What also interests him is that even the die-hard Sanskrit scholars, who blindly followed the line of thought drawn by the occidental orientalists like Max Mueller that Sanskrit could only deliver poetry and not drama, have come on stage. "Now Sanskrit pundits are also acting and producing plays," adds Tanvir.

A fresh wind is also blowing in from the streets. Coincidentally, next door to Kamani Hall—where the Akademi staged its plays—political satire adorned Chauraha, the first All India Street Theatre festival. And the audience shuttled between the two.

Thirteen groups participated in the three-day festival. Corruption, superstition, dowry deaths, environment were some of the themes examined. Among the more effective was the play on communalism by the Lucknow IPTA group—a brilliant send up of "computer baba" who recommends pitting pundits against mullahs as the quickest route to electoral victory.

Indian theatre will have to soon find an exit from the impasse it's in. And in a country in which various centuries exist side by side, it is a variety of forms of expression that will provide the answer. —MADHU JAIN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ATHLETICS

Tracking the Stars

A galaxy of international champions dazzles at the Nehru meet

A blur of colour, flashes of near-Olympian endeavour, a wave to the crowds, and suddenly it was all over. For thousands of Indian sports fans, last fortnight's athletic extravaganza barely lasted the 10.47 seconds it took Carl Lewis to hit the tape in the 100 m. But even that—and the downer of seeing the legendary Lewis beaten into second place by a relatively unknown Austrian—was enough to bestow the two-day Nehru International Athletic Meet with the stamp of delightful success.

True, for most of the world athletes on display, the attraction of the meet was mainly the bonus it offered to visit India, a country far off their beaten track. The heat and humidity, and the fact that it was the fag-end of the international track season, ensured that timings were well below their best. As British star Nicky Morris complained: "It's too hot to break records." But the presence of 16 Olympic and world champions was enough to send spectators into a frenzy of appreciation.

The list was straight from athletics' Hall of Fame. Carl Lewis. Said Aouita. Steve Ovett. Evelyn Ashford. Grace Jackson. John Walker. But more than their prowess on the tartan track of Delhi's Jawaharlal Nehru Stadium, it was the aura of glamour and star quality that dazzled the most. Their flashy, designer running gear was an unusual enough sight on Indian track. But even that was dimmed by the presence and parade of international megastars. As Lewis himself explained: "You could now actually see people whom you normally saw only on television. Sometimes, people touch us and say—Ah! it's flesh!"

But the flesh was augmented by the flash. Carl Lewis, winner of four gold medals at the 1984 Olympics, spent most of his time signing autographs and basking in the adulation. Predictably, the meet turned into an Indian tamasha. On day one, the solemn opening ceremony was interrupted by the blare of an announcement: "Ladies and gentlemen, Carl Lewis has just joined the President's box." Fifty-thousand eyes swivelled around as Lewis walked into the VIP enclosure.

Despite the star-studded field, Lewis was clearly the main draw (see box). His track appearances—a second place in the 100 m and anchoring the Santa Monica club team to a win in the 4 × 100m relay—didn't matter. What did was that the long-limbed legend was actually on view. Said Delhi University student, Sandeep Reddy, 18: "I never thought one would see Carl Lewis here. I mean he is actually here."

Moroccan Said Aouita, who holds a spectacular five world records, ran a close second in the popularity stakes. Aouita has a special relationship with India. He confided: "As a kid I used to love seeing Indian movies." He recalled watching Dosti. His favourite stars: Raj Kapoor, Dharmendra, Hema Malini and Rekha.

Meanwhile, the other track stars were soaking in their first dose of Indian heat and dust, colour and spice. Nicky Morris was expectedly affected by the poverty,

Carl Lewis (centre) beaten by Berger in the 100 m dash: shock defeat

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

Sandra and David Patrick, both winners of 400 m hurdles: popular couple

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Danny Everett: Lewis's Santa Monica club mate who won the 400 m was amazed at the traffic, but loved the Red Fort, Qutab Minar, Chandni Chowk and Janpath. Said she: "This trip means so much to me." Several stars said they were here to see a part of the world they had never seen. Former Olympic gold medallist, Donald Quarrie, said: "At the end of the season, it's a nice chance to see India." He took back a miniature Taj Mahal.

Little known Austrian policeman, Andreas Berger, turned out to be the discovery of the meet, beating Lewis in the 100 m. Ironically, Lewis drew more attention because of his defeat. He refused to offer excuses for his 10.47 showing—well below his normal sub-10 timings—simply saying he'd been sluggish.

BUT the real darlings of the meet were the husband and wife team of David and Sandra Patrick, who each won the 400 m hurdles. As they ran a personalised victory lap close to the stands, waving and signing autographs on their way, they were adoringly adopted by the crowds.

At the end of it all, what was left were a few questions—had Indian sports gained anything? While most Indian athletes returned with well-below their personal bests, a few excelled in exalted company. Bahadur Prasad (timing: 3:43.40), the most promising Indian middle-distance runner, was inspired by running alongside Said Aouita into breaking the 23-year-old national record of 3:43.7 for the metric mile set up by Edward Sequeira in 1966. Shiny Wilson too did well, P.T. Usha clipped another second from her recent best in her favourite intermediate hurdles and Ashwini Nachappa returned her life's best timing for the 200 m. "I had to prove a point," she said jubilantly.

The main benefit was that the meet gave numerous Indian athletes—who may be national champions but still have little hope of ever qualifying for an Olympics—the chance to perform with the megastars. Ovett explained: "Many Indian have the potential to become international stars with proper exposure." It gave them the opportunity to exchange notes on training methods, diet—the very approach to competitive athletics.

P.T. Usha: eclipsed by megastars, yet a crowd favourite

Shiny Wilson up front in 800 m: one of the rare Indian victories

There was some controversy as well. Union Sports Minister Margaret Alva—with whom Suresh Kalmadi, Amateur Athletics Federation of India (AAFI) president, has had a running row—failed to show up. There were questions also on whether the foreign stars were paid large sums in foreign exchange as appearance money. J. Narayan, deputy chairman of ITC—which sponsored the Santa Monica club—officially stated: "We paid air fares, provided accommodation and gave AAFI Rs 5 lakh, an expenditure of about Rs 11 lakh." Kalmadi categorically denied any payments were made to the stars in foreign exchange or otherwise.

However, what does seem a positive fall-out is that athletics—the orphan Annie of Indian sport—received a major commercial transfusion. Former badminton ace Prakash Padukone, now promotion manager of Carona which co-sponsored the event, said: "We have spent Rs15 lakh for this meet." Added Kalmadi: "Our idea was to bring glamour athletics into India to attract the younger generation."

Even the foreign stars were optimistic. Says Lewis: "When people see us in the flesh, they realise we are human like them. Everyone has a talent which can be developed." Added Aouita: "With money and organisation, Indians can absorb the experience of world athletes."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

And exposure is critical. Lewis' personal manager, Joe Douglas, explained: "Sponsorship is important as it shows everyone what happens when you develop talent. Besides athletes, coaches and other sponsors need to know there's something up there to aim for."

There was one major benefit. Having staged its third Permit Meet, India is now eligible to bid for the coveted Grand Prix Championship next year. These are controlled by the International Amateur Athletics Federation (IAAF) where participation by top athletes is mandatory. Kalmadi was cautiously optimistic: "We'll need to do a lot of lobbying."

Significantly, the IAAF observer at the meet, P. Solomon, stated: "I'm totally satisfied with the technical side of the meet." And, with all the top stars saying how impressed they were with the facilities, the chances are high. Said Aouita: "With these facilities and organisation, India can get the Grand Prix."

Morris: meaningful trip

For the Indian sports enthusiast the meet offered an encounter with the kind of athletic talent even Asia-level meets rarely see. To that extent the endeavour was worthwhile. More than anything else, transcending all controversy and the disappointment over the lack of world-class performances, the meet set a positive new precedent: of an Indian sporting organisation succeeding in organising so major a show, defying the politics and bickerings that chronically dog Indian sport. —SHANTANU DEY

CARL LEWIS

Top Draw

LEWIS mania. That was the name of the game. From the moment he landed at New Delhi's Indira Gandhi International Airport at 12.15 a.m. on September 19, till he left 48 hours later, the US megastar was mobbed wherever he went. The life-size hoardings of Carl Lewis plastered all over Delhi had already raised anticipation to fever pitch. And now, here he was in person.

In a private conversation with INDIA TODAY just before leaving, Lewis, 29, said he was overwhelmed by the reception. "In the US they recognise you, but the crowds are nowhere like they are here." He didn't know the names of any Indian athletes but did know tennis star Vijay Amritraj. Lewis, sporting a new hairstyle, a ponytail, was curious about Sindoor and the "Indian dot" (bindi). He quizzed: What does it mean? Is it a fashion like rings? How do they do it?

Earlier, Lewis spent time at Maurya Sheraton sampling Indian food. He loved mutton biryani, murgh kausk purdah (a chicken and pastry concoction) and the traditional lassi. In between, he slipped out looking for curios, miniatures and jewellery, while his personal manager, Joe Douglas, kept refusing endless interview requests.

But when film maker Amol Palekar asked for a three-minute recording for his promotional film on sports targeted at children, Lewis agreed. "I was overwhelmed," said Palekar. Lewis, in fact, has a special love for children. "I'd like to have lots of kids. Maybe 15," he said.

Lewis and his Santa Monica clubmates were sponsored in India by corporate giant ITC, who agreed to foot the bill when the Amateur Athletics Federation of India approached them. They went overboard playing host to their celebrity guest, obviously pleased at what was ultimately a major publicity coup.

Lewis had his own reasons for coming to India. Besides wanting to see the country, he has other less publicised Indian interest points. He is reported to have an Indian guru and the wife of one of his close friends has recently taken up Indian dance.

Lewis with Usha: at home in India

While fans searched the stadium for the star after he lost his 100 m race, the pop-singing athlete was back in his hotel checking out what an Indian discotheque was like. After a visit to Maurya's Ghungroo, Lewis commented: "It's just like those in America."

Next morning, the deeply religious track star was trying to arrange a meeting with Mother Teresa. Ultimately, Lewis did not get to meet her but sent a card and $ 100 to the Missionaries of Charity. As reporters kept chasing Lewis around, the man himself was finalising his shopping list. He arranged for jewellery and silk to be sent for his mother—to whom he is very close—and some dance jewellery for his friend's wife. Lewis also picked up a raw silk menu of the Dum Pukht restaurant for his mother who is an avid collector of menus from all over the world.

The superstar says he hasn't married because he hasn't yet met the right person. Said he: "I have to wait for someone who'll sweep me off my feet." Speaking about girlfriends, one of the world's most eligible bachelors admitted: "No, I don't have a steady girl-friend." And then, the fastest man in the world added: "Neither am I fast."

Did he have any regrets about his Indian debut? "Yes, I didn't have time to see much of India." Before boarding his flight, Lewis summed up his visit: "I leave with the most favourable impressions. I enjoyed it." —SHANTANU DEY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

l side of op stars re with
gh. Said
d organ-d Prix."
iast the he kind el meets leavour nything rsy and lack of eet set a
Indian ling in ving the onically
ANU DEY

and has ium ace.

n his dian it to nen-ca."
ious ge a Ultiher
the ters man ping
and —to ome nd's silk ant avid the sn't met e to me girlnost

o, I d."
the st."
out In't
a."
wis ith
s. I
DEY

Performance.
As if life depended on it.

ONIDA VCR

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sugar Free sets you free!

Free from bitter saccharin taste. Free from weight-inducing calories.

Throw those saccharin tablets away. Don't even look at sugar! Now you have Sugar Free, made from 'aspartame' — a natural protein derivative.

Sugar Free type sweeteners are approved in over 69 countries and used in products like Diet Pepsi and Diet Coke. Sugar Free. Brought to you for the first time with the Cadila stamp of international Quality.

Say YES! to Sugar free

It's not saccharin. It tastes just like sugar.

Confirm with your doctor. See instructions on pack.

Cadila CHEMICALS LTD

MULTIMEDIA AQUARIUS/CC/6/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IT'S TIME TO CHANGE...
... INTO THE LATEST, LATEST.

Live up to the order of the day. From dawn to dusk.
Always well-dressed
to suit the occasion.
With Newman's wide, wide range of clothings
and accessories.
Designer shirts.
Pleated and baggy trousers. Casual jackets.
Smart blazers.
Belts and abstractly
patterned ties...
All trend-setting.
Just the way you are.

NEWMAN

THE HI-FASHION MAN'S SHOP

Only in New Delhi at: South Extension • Palika Bazaar • Karol Bagh

ev/res/89/NS/371

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Non~Stop

Every week, Thai flies non-stop 3 times to London, twice to Paris and 8 times to Bangkok. From Bangkok, Thai flies non-stop and direct to over 45 Asian and Australasian destinations, and daily to 12 key European destinations.

Savour the luxury of Thai's renowned in-flight service. You'll sample delicious delicacies, dine in the finest fare, and sip wine from the world's most celebrated vineyards.

Fly Thai International to discover what flying is really all about !

Thai
Smooth as silk.

LINTAS (DELHI) THAI 73

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEW DELHI METRO

The Great Rail Race

Frenetic lobbying by foreign and Indian firms

NOW you see it, now you don't. Like the smile of the Cheshire cat, the much talked about rail-based mass transit project for the capital keeps appearing now and then, before vanishing again.

With religious regularity, committees, study groups and task forces have been set up to suggest ways of solving the capital's accelerating transport problem. In almost every case, the reports have become irrelevant before they could be acted upon, defeated by the burgeoning population and bureaucratic lethargy. The outcome: Delhi's traffic speeds from bad to chaotic.

The capital's lifeline, the Delhi Transport Corporation (DTC), with a fleet of over 5,000 buses that carry close to 5 million passengers daily, is under severe stress. To meet the city's needs a decade from now, the fleet will have to be upgraded to 12,000 buses, a number even Delhi's wide roads can hardly take.

Realising belatedly that this problem can no longer be shelved, planners have finally got into the act. Rail India Technical and Economic Services (RITES) is working on a detailed project report for a 36-km east-west corridor, to be taken up in the first phase of a mass transit system in the capital (see map). And though the Rs 2.5-crore study is incomplete, the question of who will get the prize contract for the project—worth an estimated Rs 2,000 crore—has suddenly acquired Bofors-like importance.

One of the first to enter the fray were the Belgians. In 1986, a consortium headed by Transurb—a joint sector company that specialises in urban transport and built the Manila light rail—made a bid for a light rail transit (LRT) system, expected to cost about Rs 800 crore. Also in the reckoning is the public sector Bharat Heavy Electricals Ltd (BHEL), armed with the futuristic maglev (magnetic levitation) technology under an agreement with the West German Magnetbahn, a member of the huge AEG-Telefunken group. Competing with them for a piece of the action are companies from the Soviet Union, Canada, France and Japan.

Despite much lobbying, both the Belgian and BHEL proposals have run into trouble with the railways, which believes that only a heavy rail metro—like the one in Calcutta—can meet the city's gargantuan requirements.

The choice now is between an LRT system, costing Rs 800 crore, and a heavy metro system, costing twice as much.

It is in fact this debate over the most suitable system that has led to the most delay. In the mid-'80s, the Urban Development Ministry, the nodal agency for urban transport, favoured the cheaper LRT system. The view was reinforced in 1986 by the report of the study group set up by the Ministry of Railways.

Later, it became evident that there had been a gross underestimation. An LRT system can transport up to 30,000 persons an hour in any one direction. The demand estimated on the east-west corridor is 80,000 people an hour during peak time by the time the system becomes operational, progressively rising to 1 lakh.

As for maglev, the main argument against it is that the technology is untried. This is hotly contested by BHEL which points out that Berlin and Las Vegas have opted for it. But, says a railway official: "We can't trust it. It's not carrying passengers in the capacity we want anywhere in the world."

BHEL has even thought of taking up the metro project on a turn-key basis as the leader of a consortium, using either maglev or the LRT system. The BHEL proposal includes as project consultants RITES and the Indian Railways Construction Company (IRCON), both public sector undertakings under the railways.

The railways, on the other hand, had suggested the creation of the metropolitan transport construction corporation that could take up metro projects throughout the country—a proposal the Cabinet shot down as premature. Yet, the railways are considered the only agency capable of absorbing the technologies needed for a rail-based rapid transit system. And the general opinion tilts towards the heavy metro, whether underground or overground.

There is, however, a big catch: the cost of heavy rail would be double that of the LRT. Says Virendra Prakash, adviser to the Planning Commission: "An underground heavy metro system is best if cost is no consideration." Confirms an Urban Development Ministry official: "LRT is now more or less out of the reckoning." Even if that question is settled, there is stiff competition to grab the deal.

The project was put on the fast track following Minister of State for Railways Madhavrao Scindia's visit to the Soviet Union last year. Impressed by Moscow's underground, Scindia sought Soviet help for Delhi's mass transit system and got an immediate positive response. In February this year, a team arrived in India.

Almost simultaneously, the Canadians offered systems manufactured by Lavalin and Bombardier. While Lavalin is offering an advanced LRT that can carry up to 1 lakh persons an hour, Bombardier is in the heavy metro field. Both packages are likely to have significant financial aid components from the Canadian Government and provisions for transfer of technology. Bob Logie, a Canadian High Commission official, says both firms have had discussions with Indian companies for setting up manufacturing facilities here.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Not to be outdone, French companies such as Alsthom and Interinfra used the Festival of France in India as an excuse to organise a seminar on railways and urban transport early this year. But, admits a French Embassy official: "We were a little late in entering the race."

Eventually, Japanese, Italian and even British companies may join the race. British High Commission sources say two firms, Merz and McLellan and Design Triangle, have already shown interest. What may eventually clinch the deal is the aid component of the package. As an official points out: "We are simply not in a position to have the project executed on a commercial basis on our own."

That's why the Russians seem to have the best chance as their aid is likely to be liberal. Besides, since trade with the Soviet Union is in rupees, there will be no drain on foreign exchange reserves.

What goes against the Soviets is their not-so-up-to date technology. According to a RITES official this problem can be overcome by getting the civil works done by the Soviets and using other technology for the rolling-stock and signalling equipment. Apparently, an Urban Development Ministry official says, the Soviets are not averse to the idea.

There is good reason for them to accommodate Indian demands. Besides Delhi, Hyderabad, Ahmedabad, Bangalore and Lucknow are also planning mass transit systems. And by the year 2001, as many as two dozen cities will have a million-plus population and the need for metro systems. The rail race is undoubtedly on.

—ALOK TIWARI

METRO FINANCE

New Ideas

EVEN after the issue of who will build Delhi's metro is settled, the big question of financing it will remain wide open. It's not just the Delhi metro which is yet to get on the rails, but metros in a host of other cities too. Finding the cash required will be tough as losses in existing rail systems have soared.

The railways, which run the suburban systems in Bombay, Calcutta and Madras, faced a loss of Rs 147 crore in 1988-89 in these cities. So, they don't want to pick up the tab for the Delhi metro. Says R.K. Jain, former chairman of the Railway Board: "Metros should be under the cities they serve." The Maharashtra Government is contributing to the new Mankhurd-Belapur section in Bombay.

Most metro systems around the world are losing propositions. Creating huge capacities for peak hours which remain underutilised during the rest of the day is a costly affair. Combine this with low fares for socio-political reasons and you have the perfect recipe for heavy subsidies.

With the railways not willing to foot the bill, planners are trying to evolve innovative methods to raise the cash. The proposals being contemplated by the Planning Commission and the Urban Development Ministry are:

► Development of property along the rail route and in stations.

► Tax on employers. Firms in downtown areas, enjoying the benefits of a mobile work force, may have to pay for it.

► If a locality is connected by a metro, the value of property there goes up. The owners may be asked to pay more taxes.

► Those who use their own vehicles where public transport is available may be penalised for increasing congestion. This may include a toll on entering downtown during rush hours, increased parking charges or both.

This last proposal could rake in money. For instance, Delhi has just 1 per cent of the country's population but 10 per cent of its vehicles. In the last two decades, the city's human population has grown 130 per cent and vehicle population 1,300 per cent. Many of these methods have been successfully used in other countries. And as a Planning Commission official says: "The buck has to stop somewhere."

Besides, last year the Planning Commission approved setting up of a Consortium Fund for Urban Transport with a nominal sum of Rs 2 crore. It is proposed to expand the fund to Rs 100 crore and use the amount to finance urban transport projects nation-wide. A combination of charity and cleverness should see Delhi's metro chugging along.

—ALOK TIWARI

Calcutta's metro: facing losses

SAIBAL DAS

Give the gift that says it in writing.

Flair brings you a classic selection of elegant writing instruments. Unique gifts to be cherished for a lifetime.

Multiaction: Black, blue and red in one ball pen ... changing colour with a magical twist of the wrist.

Fortune: Fountain pen and ball pen sets in memorable patterned surfacings.

Signature: Individualized ball pen studded with the receiver's own initial in cut American diamonds.

Flair®

The write choice

For bulk orders, write to: Flair Writing Instruments, 30 A, Deven Industrial Estate, I.B. Patel Road, Goregaon (E), Bombay-400063. Tel: 6731152, 6734347, 6730544. Telex: 011-70057 NPPL IN Cable: FLAIR Bombay. Delhi - Tel.: 730457, 738024. Ahmedabad - Tel.: 345877. Calcutta - Tel.: 256663. Madras - Tel.: 470340.

Situations/FP/53/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FABRI

FO

ME

AN

FO

BOL

WOME

Available at Mill's SUMANGAL showrooms and other leading stores

Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

AJAX/OCM/DC/893

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cherry® BLOSSOM LEATHER NOURISHING CREAM

New Cherry Blossom Leather Nourishing Cream. Extra creamy richness that goes deep down into leather, nourishing and protecting it. Specially formulated by the makers of Cherry Blossom.

New Cherry Blossom Leather Nourishing Cream. Use it alongwith Cherry Blossom Shoe Polish— and give your shoes a softer, suppler, richer shine!

You can use Cherry Blossom Leather Nourishing Cream on leather of any colour.

LINTAS (CAL)/CBLNC/1/2720

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Ultimate Test

WHEN the chief judicial magistrate of Tellicherry, Kerala recently sought the help of the Centre for Cellular and Molecular Biology (CCMB), Hyderabad, in determining the parentage of a boy, it marked a new bold step in judicial and scientific history. The test known as DNA fingerprinting, discovered by British scientist Alec Jaffreys in 1983 and now developed by the CCMB scientists led by Lalit Singh is the biggest advance in crime detection since the discovery of fingerprinting in 1891 and the first bio-technology-based service to be commercialised in India.

BABJI

CCMB's DNA fingerprinting lab: major step

The test is based on the fact that DNA—the living unit of the body—is different in every person. The test detects genetic fingerprints in tiny samples of blood, semen, skin scraped from under a suspect's fingernails, hair roots or marrow. "The DNA print is an indelible tag. It cannot be changed and can be used to identify a person after death," says Lalit Singh.

The DNA test is complicated and takes about two weeks. The scientists have to analyse the results of chemical reactions and radioactive photographs. For this the test relies on short sequence of lab made DNA known as 'probes'.

The difference between the western techniques and the one developed in CCMB is mainly in the speed with which the probe—derived from the venom of a branded krait—developed by Singh and his colleague Sridevi Naidu works. "It acts like a blood hound seeking out its matching DNA sequences," says Singh.

The CCMB charges only Rs 7,500 for isolating and printing three samples of DNA strains plus Rs 1,200 a day for the expert who presents the evidence in court—just a third of the rates charged abroad. The Central Forensic Science Laboratory has used the test in 16 cases till now but these have not yet come up for trial.

Radical Finding

● Ever since William Harvey discovered the circulation of blood in the 17th century, scientists have believed that veins carry blood from various parts of the body back to the heart. Now, a group of plastic surgeons in Bombay is turning that belief on its head. Its investigations suggest that blood in a vein flows both ways.

Skin graft: new explanation

The finding explains why a skin flap removed from one part of the body for transfer to another remains alive for at least an hour though there is no blood flow to the flap. "The single venous channel with the internal to and fro flow meets the demand of the flap tissues during its wait for transfer," says Dr R.L. Thatte, head of the Department of Plastic Surgery at the Tilak Hospital, Bombay. Thatte presented the findings at the annual conference of the British Association of Plastic Surgeons in Bristol, UK, in July and won the prize for the best paper.

Plastic surgeons at the Tilak Hospital have been working since 1981 on improved skin transfer methods. They stumbled on their latest findings while conducting skin transfer experiments on dogs. Using a dye and a tracer, Dr Nitin Kamdar of the Department of Nuclear Medicine, KEM Hospital, showed that blood flow in a vein was two-way. And a fluid mechanics specialist, Dr D.V. Khakkar of the Indian Institute of Technology, Bombay, confirmed the result in computer-based studies.

The ramifications of the finding? They haven't yet been explored. But Thatte quips: "The significance is more than skin deep."

World on Wheels

● It is the latest addition to the land of rathams. This motorised chariot, though, is aimed at dispelling superstition. Called Astro Car, it is equipped with a mini-planetarium from Japan, video and cine screening systems and a telescope and has been doing the rounds of villages in Andhra Pradesh since August 6. Launched by the B.M. Birla Science Centre, Hyderabad, the Astro Car offers a package of astronomy and popular science programmes aimed specially at schoolchildren and teachers. But eager villagers too flock to take a look at the indoor sky.

BABJI

Astro Car: welcome project

Says B.G. Sidharth, the centre's director: "It opens up the sky and creates interest in astronomy and space through programmes in and around the van." Built at a cost of Rs 3 lakh, the Astro Car has its own portable generator, so villages without electricity too will fall within its orbit.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

He'll never wear a tie that screams for attention. But he'll never wear a tie that you'll fail to notice. He is the Riviera man. He knows what he wants.

RIVIERA

Designer briefs from premier

For men who know what they want.

Mudra:M:PM:3681

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WE ARE TALKING TO YOU, MARUTI OWNERS !

When you have a new generation car, you need a Standard Furukawa Battery.

You can make your Maruti start like a Suzuki. By using the same batteries used by Suzuki, Toyota, Honda or Nissan: Furukawa Automotive Batteries.

Yes, The Standard Batteries Ltd. have tied up with The Furukawa Battery Co. Ltd., Japan, the largest suppliers of batteries to Suzuki.

Soon, you will be able to buy Standard Furukawa Batteries manufactured in India. They are already being used as original fitment in Marutis.

After all, if your Maruti has been designed like a Suzuki, why should you start it on anything else?

SBL

THE STANDARD BATTERIES LIMITED
VAKOLA, SANTACRUZ (EAST), BOMBAY 400 055.

A Member of the M&M Group

CHAITRA-B SBL 34

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

BY K. NATWAR SINGH

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gandhiana Relived

EARLY in the year I had a conversation with an acquaintance from the Soviet Union. That conversation led me to re-read some of Gandhi's books. Also Romain Rolland's (1886-1945: Nobel Prize for Literature, 1916) correspondence and conversations with Gandhi, Professor Raghavan Iyer's three volumes The Political and Moral Writings of Mahatma Gandhi and George Orwell's essay Reflections on Gandhi.

Orwell's illuminating essay begins: "Saints should always be judged guilty until they are proved innocent." To this I might add my own minuscule contribution to Gandhiana: "Was Gandhiji a saint among politicians or a politician among politicians or a politician among saints?" Orwell says: "That one even thinks of asking such questions indicates his stature."

Gandhi's achievement is so colossal that nothing can diminish its glow. The only important original political idea that has, in the last 150 years, come out of Asia, Africa and Latin America, and which has influenced and changed human beings and the modern world came from Gandhi—satyagraha. A priest in Belgium, a teacher in Argentina, a black civil rights leader in the US and a black political activist in South Africa were awarded the Nobel Peace Prize because they were followers of Mahatma Gandhi. Lech Walesa, the Solidarity leader, told me in Warsaw in June, how much he respected Gandhi and his teachings.

Gandhi was the most creative communicator of the 20th century. In 1930 he immortalised a historical moment. Who else could have turned 'salt' into a magical word? Without the aid of public relations agencies, TV, the jet plane, the computer and, during the initial years of his political life, without the radio, he got his message through to the people of India and much of the world. Just as the Buddha did 2,500 years ago. "My life is my message," said Gandhi.

To use another of Orwell's memorable phrases, Gandhi "disinfected the political air". He had the supreme courage to own and correct mistakes. In history, truth, non-violence, virtue, morality and goodness, if not totally bypassed, have often been in abeyance. When Gandhi arrived on the scene he brought them centre stage. We need to do so again if we are to extricate ourselves from the moral crisis which is beginning to envelop us.

I have been carried away. Let me get back to my Soviet acquaintance. We discussed the New Delhi Declaration of November 1986 on which appear the signatures of Rajiv Gandhi and Mikhail Gorbachev. Non-violence finds an important place in that document.

I shall paraphrase what he said. For the first time in the Soviet Union, efforts were afoot to study and analyse Gandhi's life, teachings and his message. This is all part of our new thinking. The world has run out of political ideas. Ideology is becoming passe. Marxist salvation is not round the corner. Glasnost and Perestroika have room for Gandhi. Hence, the Delhi Declaration.

The Gandhi-Rolland correspondence and conversations are fascinating. The book was brought out by the Publications Division some years ago and carries a foreword by Jawaharlal Nehru. Wrote Nehru: "In the turmoil and agonies of the world today, I think that Gandhi's message has a peculiar significance for all of us, whether we live in Asia, Europe or America...."

Returning from the Round Table Conference in 1931, Gandhi spent several days at Villeneuve in Switzerland. He held prolonged talks with Romain Rolland, an outstanding European intellectual who had done much to make Gandhi known to the West. Their conversations have that rare quality which makes even the most cynical realise that while man cannot live without bread, he does not live by bread alone. Rolland kept a detailed diary of Gandhi's visit and we get, through friendly but not uncritical European eyes, glimpses of the range of Gandhi's thought, activities and style in a European setting and the impact they made on the world.

Iyer's three volumes are quintessential Gandhi. Gandhi's collected works, published by Oxford University Press, run into over 120 volumes. A discriminatory and authoritative anthology was needed. Iyer fills the gap. Volume I deals with civilisation, politics and religion. Volume II with truth and non-violence. Volume III with non-violent resistance and social transformation.

Gandhi is generally presented in a solemn, reverential manner. Often, it is forgotten that the Mahatma had a marvellous sense of humour. A foreign newspaper man asked him as he came out of one of the sessions of the Round Table Conference: "Mr Gandhi, what do you think of western civilisation?"

"It would be nice," Gandhi replied.

You can't beat that.

The only important original political idea that has, in the last 150 years, come out of Asia, Africa and Latin America, and has in a significant manner changed the modern world came from Gandhi—satyagraha.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Stormed on.
Stomped on.
Smashed on.
Spilt on.

Shine on.

Extra tough and trouble free, Naveen Tiles use the latest technology from Sacmi, Italy. So no dust, no stains, no scratches. And so easy to lay, it takes just one day. Do your home in style. Choose from an outstanding range of colours and sizes, with the option of a natural marble or parquet finish. Then, sit back and watch the years shine by.

MURUDESHWAR CERAMICS LTD.
Murudeshwar Bhavan
Gokul Road
Hubli 580 030 Phone: 66615

NAVEEN
CERAMIC TILES

Tiles that forgive and forget.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Let's walk ... awhile."

"A quiet evening stroll. Through banks of glorious, sun-warmed flowers. Leaves a-rustle in the soft breeze. Relaxing easily in the cool comfort of Gwalior Suiting and Shirting. It's one of our favourite times of the day."

– M.A.K. PATAUDI

GRASIM
GWALIOR
SUITING

IN A CLASS OF ITS OWN

A PRODUCT OF GRASIM INDUSTRIES LTD.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Some of our technology is 12,500 miles away from Earth.

And some is at home.

Satellite technology to home electronics. You really can't expect less from NEC. Formerly the Nippon Electric Co. Ltd.
As Japan's frontline electronics company, manufacturers today of over 15,000 products.
And the undisputed leader.
In supercomputers.
Semiconductors. Industrial robotics.
Putting high technology to work in the manufacture of TVs and VCRs – some of the finest in Japan and in the world.

That's NEC. Electronics in the service of man. And his family.

Models FS-3300 & DX-1000 E

FROM HI-TECH TO HOME TECH.

NEC

NEC Corporation, Japa

For information

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cat on a Cold Tin Roof

A high society potpourri, bland and banal

SOCIALITE EVENINGS
by SHOBHA DE
Penguin India
Price: Rs 50; Pages: 224

DESPITE the trumpets heralding the arrival of the Indian Lace, the desi Conran has yet to be born. The much-touted kiss-and-tell first novel of Shobha De, Bombay's reformed Hedda Hopper, is only a tease.

They say don't judge a book by its cover. But what do you do with Socialite Evenings? The seductive face of actress Neena Gupta (more famous for her love child than for her histrionics) stares out from the cover. Had the book been about the actress or come gift-wrapped with a film, this might not have seemed incongruous—like the French acute accent taking off from the last letter of the author's name.

The book attempts to look at the ugly side of the super rich and the super famous with the dolce vita gone sour, like its American supermarket bestsellers do: voyeuristic servings of souped-up, four-wheel-drive-sex-in-all-directions. But at least they have characterisation and plot. Here, the beautiful, naughty people are like cardboard cut-outs, put together from descriptions and one-liners—the kind of party repartee one always thinks of after the moment has passed.

The book, in fact, is one big party. It takes the reader to one orgy-laced party after another: on board the concrete ship harboured in port (where the high-heeled ladies of Bombay have to delicately negotiate a narrow ladder unless they want their "panties to show") or in filmi Juhu villas. The characters who wander about in search of a story line are: Varun, the blackmailing gay publisher, with a goatee beard; Anjali, the horny socialite; Girish, the widower, and flopped art film maker; a green-eyed actress with a husky voice; Babaji the Rajneesh clone; Gul, a Dubai-based member of the international underworld; Abe, a powerful Muslim adman who lusts after "pretty Hindu virgins".

This whirlwind of a guide through life at the top (ad world, film world, business world) suggests that this world is only peopled by predatory women, gay men (including "the gay arts and crafts guy who...looked like a Gupta-period temple deity") and boring "wimp" mother-guided husbands, with the odd macho-poetic lover thrown in.

As for sex, parts of the book sound like the confessions of a man-eater. The book could just as well have been called Boudoir Tales from Bored Housewives. A Henrietta Miller, De certainly is not. The sexual scenes are about as erotic as a cold naan. Worse, they couldn't be for real. The author's real obsession: her heroines' menstrual cycle which find recurring reference in her book.

Certainly, as founder-queen of Stardust, Society and Celebrity—magazines the former model edited as Shobha Khilachand—the author has had ample opportunity to observe the glitzy world of cinema and socialites at close quarters. This is her turf. Some of the characters could have jumped out of the pages of her magazines.

The story line is roughly in the Puss and Boots genre of the bumpkin from the provinces discovering the big, bad city and making good. The protagonist is Karuna, daughter of a "middle rung" government official who grows up in distant Satara, yearning for the other world. Predictably, her conduit is modelling, where she meets Anjali, the middle class lady who shimmied up the laminated ladder and now teeters on the top with her "fire engine red... talons" (her painted nails are her signature tune), rich, playboy husband and her succession of lovers and "toy-boys".

Karuna (only those who know De should look for autobiographical parallels) sees Anjali as the great escape from middle classdom to the world of the beautiful, and hitches her ambitions to her.

The novel is too clever. Finally, it is its cleverness which prevents this novel from being one. Somewhere along the way De seems to run out of clever lines. All her characters begin to sound the same. Even the dull husband. Mid-way through the book he begins to sound exactly like Karuna in upbeat mode. When she fantasises of "Morocco, Tangiers, China", he says: "We are not in the movies.... And I am not Bogart."

The hostesses of this novel would—heaven help them—never dare serve a flopped souffle. But the book is, in the end, just that. It promises everything but gives away nothing. And that's a pity for De with her armoury of barbed similes which fix people in aspic could have delivered a devastating high society roman-a-clef. But there are only bits and pieces of famous personalities here, and you can shake the kaleidoscope any odd way. De has covered herself shrewdly to pre-empt libel suits. La belle dame sans merci has, when it comes to the crunch, pulled in her talons.

—MADHU JAIN

NAMAS BHOJANI

Shobha De: princess of pulp

EXTRACT

As for husbands, they came into the picture only in a crisis—death in the family, a kitchen accident, or something that required a man's intervention.... And as all of us agreed, it wasn't the husbands who were the real villains. Poor fools—they were simple and uncomplicated and, therefore, happy creatures. It was us with our denuded anger who were miserable. But how could we communicate anything at all to men who perpetually sat reading the business pages of The Times of India while concentratedly picking their noses.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A US Odyssey

Tale of self-discovery

JASMINE
by BHARATI MUKHERJEE
Grove Weidenfeld
Price: Rs 300; Pages: 241

EARLY this year, Bharati Mukherjee declared her love for the new world, became a US citizen and won the National Book Critics Circle Award for The Middleman and Other Stories. These short stories were a tribute to her new homeland, a poem to the changing face of American society, seen through the eyes of new immigrants of various nationalities. Now, with the publication of her third novel Jasmine, Mukherjee zeros in on the story of a young Punjabi widow, an immigrant whose spiritual odyssey parallels her own.

Jasmine, the Indian girl from Trinidad in a short story of the same name from The Middleman, was a "bright pretty girl with no visa, no papers and no birth certificate. No nothing other than what she wanted to invent and tell." Mukherjee admits to being "intrigued by that particular kind of survival". But she has transformed Jasmine into a young Indian from Punjab for Jasmine the novel, which opens in a Punjab village and follows its heroine, Jyoti—not yet Jasmine—through the traditional life of a farming community. A brief but happy marriage to an ambitious city boy transforms the feudal Jyoti into a modern Jasmine as her husband liberates her from the ways of the village in preparation for the America he hopes to immigrate to. A terrorist bomb, set off by a Khalsa Lion in a Jalandhar sari shop, ends their idyllic dream. The traumatised widow leaves for the US—with no visa, no papers, like her Trinidadian namesake—ostensibly to commit sati on the Florida campus where her late husband had yearned to start a new life.

What follows is a marvellously circuitous westward journey through European airports that culminates on a Caribbean shrimper, replete with the terrible conditions "boat people" must endure to land on dark nights on the US coast, avoiding border patrols to sneak in illegally. Although she does not know it yet, Mukherjee's heroine is beautiful, potent in her impact on others and an instinctive risk-taker who has incredible inner strengths. Indeed, "Jasmine is the essential American. Some people are born to be American." By American, Mukherjee explains, "I mean an intensity of spirit and a quality of desire."

In a climactic encounter with American violence as soon as she lands, Jasmine discovers her will to live and, instead of committing sati as she had planned, burns the suitcase containing her husband's college suit and her white widow's sari before she sets off on the highway to instant Americanisation. By the time she leaves Florida for New York, Jasmine has already discarded her salwar kameez and glittery chappals for a faded T-shirt and hand-me-down jeans: she has learned to "travel light" and "walk and talk American".

Bharati Mukherjee: immigrant images

ARVIND GARG

With her third novel Jasmine, Mukherjee zeros in on the story of a young Punjabi widow, an immigrant whose spiritual odyssey parallels her own.

Then, a five-month hiatus in a Punjabi "professor's" apartment in the Indian ghetto of Flushing offers a realistic view of the typical Indian immigrant's life. It's a life of economic refugees where America is kept at bay with Hindi films on video, fried snacks are served with tea and social life is restricted to a neighbourhood where the various communal groups remain so distinctly separate that even Jats and Sikhs don't intermingle. Mukherjee's fictional heroine (like other daring young women in real-life immigrant situations) breaks out of this airless cocoon, making her get-away with a fake green card into the brave new world of the more democratic Americans. As a "caregiver" in an upper westside home, Jasmine looks after the adopted child of a Columbia University professor and a Park Avenue publisher. With wit and compassion, Mukherjee describes Jasmine's acculturation into this liberal, liberating community. But, in the US, nothing is static for long; new possibilities always loom temptingly. Jasmine witnesses the disintegration of her employers' "happy" marriage even as Mukherjee imports a ghost from Jasmine's Punjabi past that makes her run away from New York in sheer panic.

Of course, like the old American pioneers, Jasmine was destined to go west. Almost arbitrarily, she chooses Iowa which is where Mukherjee herself started off when she came to America in the '60s to study at the famed Iowa Writers' Workshop. Jasmine's exotic looks and Indian background simultaneously fascinate and frighten Iowans, who try to make her over and give her yet another new identity as Jane, the common-law wife of the town's middle-aged banker Bud.

Together, they adopt Du, a Vietnamese teenager from a refugee camp who becomes Jasmine's spiritual son. In Mukherjee's scheme, he represents another kind of immigrant—one with a very different pattern of assimilation. Eventually, however, Jasmine is "caught between the promise of America and old-world dutifulness". She finds herself, once again, "greedy with wants and reckless from hope". So she "repositions the stars" and moves on to—where else?—California. Change, restlessness, social mobility and a new kind of non-biological "family" are, in the end, Jasmine's all-American choices. Mukherjee ends the novel with optimism and an upbeat belief in Jasmine's American future.

—VIBHUTI PATEL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"In the highly competitive world of modern business, what is probably more difficult than reaching the top, is staying there. And in this respect, the role of an efficient, versatile computer support system cannot be over-emphasised.

So when I went about choosing a computer company I had certain parameters in mind. In the first place to prevent machine malfunction I needed a company that would use only the finest quality components.

But, since even the finest machines can break down, I needed a company committed to providing quality service. With a service team quick on the uptake.

Then, the company would have to have a national and not a territorial orientation. So that our branch offices, wherever they are, would get the same quality of service.

And of course, most importantly, I was looking for a company with the right kind of attitude towards customer satisfaction. A company that kept in touch. Was responsive to our needs.

PCL, when they started out with us, did have their share of problems. The high quality of service demanded by us kept them on their toes, and they did slip up initially a couple of times. On delivery schedules. On service.

But what really emerged in our relationship was a keenness on their part to listen. To learn. To understand our needs. And to provide professional solutions to our problems.

Today the relationship has matured. The problems have been ironed out. And I'm happy to say that on all the parameters I've talked about, PCL has come close to my expectations.

Nobody's perfect. It's the ones that strive towards perfection, that stand apart from the rest."

PCL

India's fastest growing computer company.

Pertech Computers Ltd.

Corporate Office : E-46/10, Okhla Phase-II, New Delhi-110 020.
Tel : 6847687, 6841864, 6846472, 6837379, 6832307.
Telex : 031-75163 PCL IN. Fax : 6841860

everest/d89/PCL 222

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection

"I didn't expect PCL to match our exacting service and support standards"

Venky Ramanan
Vice President, American Express Bank Ltd.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Fatima: new nymphet

◆ Even Peter Pan must feel old by comparison. And certainly envious. For Dev Anand continues to pull out nubile nymphets from his tilted golf cap with relentless elan. So after the Zeenies, Tinas, Richas, there comes Fatima Sheikh: a 22-year-old former air hostess. Says Dev, typically: "She's witty, pretty, talented. She'll become a big star." Sau Crore, her launch film, is based on the Syed Modi murder case. Gushes Fatima: "I associate the film with the population of India. I want all the sau crore to like me." Now, one would have thought Dev's attention was enough.

◆ You need a Bihari to upstage a Bihari. And if both happen to be legendary loudmouths, the show-down should make for apocalyptic noise, and boundless entertainment. Bihar's boy in Bollywood, Shatrughan Sinha, has taken on the state's professor-propagandist K.K. Tewary in New Delhi. The star, known for his over-acting, has already made up his mind to campaign for the Opposition in the coming elections. Even if he doesn't contest. What Shotgun is smug about is the mammoth crowds he has been drawing in north Bihar. Declared he in Patna last fortnight: "I'm not like Tewary. I do not need Doordarshan to promote myself." Actually neither does Tewary. Few will contest that the two gentlemen are by themselves quite enough.

Sinha: campaign noises

KRISHNA MURARI KISHAN

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Bano: diplomatic diva

◆ Relations between India and Pakistan are now moving to the lilting sound of the ghazal and thumri. The diva of ghazal singing, Iqbal Bano, was in the capital last fortnight mesmerising audiences. Her two performances—part of the Indo-Pakistan cultural exchange programme—fetched packed halls. Her renderings of Faiz Ahmed Faiz's revolutionary Hum dekhenge and Dashte tanhai mein enthralled. And then she belted out two Punjabi sizzlers that had the audience swaying. Bano exulted: "The audience was great." Then added: "Just like in Pakistan." Well diplomacy obviously doesn't overwhelm loyalties.

Scene from Buddha

◆ Naresh Sohal and Gautama Buddha together make sense. For both seem to belong to the same part of the world. What was unusual was that their fusion occurred through an occidental medium: western classical music. Composer Sohal's first ballet, Gautama Buddha, was performed last month by the Houston Ballet Company at the Edinburgh festival. The 50-minute score, said critics, was reminiscent of Stravinsky. Sohal, who arrived in England 27 years ago with £ 2 in his pocket, is now celebrating his 50th birthday with a string of concerts. Says he about his Buddha theme: "Every artiste must aspire to something beyond mortal fame." Of course, the practical bottom line is: there are plans afoot to make the ballet into a film shot at Sarnath.

◆ First there was Heat and Dust, and now there's Dust and Ashes. India has a way of getting itself summed up in these pithy, down-and-out phrases. And then the projects that bear these titles win awards too. A co-production between BBC-2 and Delhi-based Kas movie makers, Dust and Ashes has won the Earthwatch Award of the National Geographic Society, Washington DC. Jointly directed by Naresh Bedi and Michael York, the film is about the extraordinary faith that moves 15 million people to undertake the Kumbha Mela pilgrimage. The film moves beyond the crush to discover the meaning this has for two of the pilgrims. Says Bedi: "It's a great feeling winning the award." Meantime, we wait for the next ashes and charcoal venture.

Bedi (centre): coveted award

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IN FOCUS THIS FORTNIGHT

Dangerous Dimensions

As November 9, the date set for starting construction of the controversial temple at the mandir-masjid site in Ayodhya, approaches, the atmosphere is getting tense. Political parties are playing the religious card, and the communal situation is being dangerously exploited for its electoral worth.

COVER STORY 26

Controversy and Cover-up

With The Hindu publishing fresh evidence, the Bofors controversy has again taken centre-stage—and triggered off a public rift between Editor G. Kasturi and Associate Editor N. Ram who charged that Kasturi had stopped further exposes, fearing government action against the family-owned newspaper.

SPECIAL REPORTS 38

The Politics of Peace

The award of the Nobel Peace Prize to the Dalai Lama, the spiritual and political leader of 6 million Tibetans, is an honour long overdue. But against the backdrop of the Tiananmen crackdown and the anti-China movement in Tibet, the award has taken on a bold political tint.

SPECIAL REPORTS 56

Flying into Battle

Rajiv Gandhi has embarked on the pre-election ritual of criss-crossing the nation with gusto. In less than six weeks, he covered over 200 Lok Sabha constituencies, laid foundation stones for projects worth over Rs 8,000 crore, and launched a blistering attack on the Opposition.

SPECIAL REPORTS 50

The Big Push

Reliance Industries, the third largest corporate group in the country—known for its closeness to the ruling party at the Centre—is embarking on a massive, Rs 4,000-crore, expansion drive, despite the controversies it's caught in. A report plus an exclusive interview with group Chairman Dhirubhai Ambani.

BUSINESS REPORT 112

Back to the Crease

The Indian cricket team under a new captain but comprising mostly old faces is ready to face a challenging season. The team has to live down the trauma of the battering at the hands of the West Indians and the searing controversy with the board that followed. Also, an interview with Captain K. Srikkanth.

SPORTS 136

CONTENTS

COMMENT 11
CAPITALOOK 14
VOICES 19
INDIANOTES 20
THE FORTNIGHT THAT WAS 25
COVER STORY
Communalism: Dangerous Dimensions 26
SPECIAL REPORTS
The Hindu: Controversy and Cover-up 38
Rajiv Gandhi: Flying into Battle 50
Dalai Lama: The Politics of Peace 56
J.F. Ribeiro: A Disputed Legacy 65
CURRENT EVENTS
Elections: Guessing Game 72
Morarji Desai: Disappointing Verdict 77
Indian Air Force: Disastrous Display 78
Kashmir: Militant Might 86
Andhra Pradesh: New Energy 91
Gujarat: In the Dock 91
SPECIAL FEATURE
Fringe Leaders: Increasing Importance 96
BUSINESS FEATURE
Ludhiana: The Spirit of Success 102
TRADE WINDS 109
BUSINESS REPORT
Reliance Industries: The Big Push 112
BUSINESS
Russi Mody: Golden Boy of Steel 123
The Markets: Bumpy Ride 129
GUEST COLUMN 130
THE INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT
H.K.L. Bhagat: "Doordarshan Isn't Rajivdarshan" 135
SPORTS
Cricket: Back to the Crease 136
AVIATION
Air-India: Flying Colours 149
ECOLOGYWATCH 152
CINEMA
Dev Anand: An Ageless Wonder 156
DIPLOMACY
Medical Conferences: Tough Stance 163
MUSIC
Sarangi: Strains of a Dying Art 169
SPECIAL FEATURE
Environment: A New Militancy 174
MEDIAWATCH 181
BOOKS
In his Calling 182
Valuable Guide 187
New Heights 187
AGRICULTURE
Kharif Crop: An Election Harvest 190
CRIME
Imports: Booking Culprits 195
RELIGION
Priests: Modern Rites 196
EYE-CATCHERS 200

Cover Photograph by BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Yamatake Honeywell, Japan – Instrumentation.

Honeywell, USA – Instrumentation.

Nakajima All, Japan – ACN Electronic Typewriters.

Valentine, France – Ranutrol Hansa Showers.

Centre for Development of Telematics, India – ACX EPABX Systems.

Schlumberger (Singapore), Wayne Kerr & Deltest (UK), Polar (Channel Islands), Aehr (West Germany)–Automatic Test Equipment.

SINCE 1969, THE RANUTROL GROUP WORKED VERY HARD

Twenty years ago, we started with a dream.

Today, the Ranutrol Group has a turnover of over Rs. 30 crores.

And twelve foreign collaborations and business co-operations, stretching from Tokyo to Minneapolis. Each an undisputed world leader in its field.

To get them was difficult enough. But the real hard work began after the handshake was over.

The result is a team of over a thousand well-trained personnel. Three factories. Nine branches. An advanced R&D Centre.

And thirty five world class products that can pass the most difficult quality control tests. Anywhere in the world.

From home improvement products (Ranutrol Hansa Aqua Mixers, Ranutrol Aquapure, ACN Electronic Typewriters, electronic products, Instrumentation). So, every time you look forward to one more

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Homer Group, UK – Power Showers.

Teledyne Water Pik, USA – Ranutrol Aquapure Water Filters.

Paul Isphording Metallwerke, West Germany – Gas Controls.

Emerson Electric Gmbh, West Germany – Heating Controls.

Hansa Metallwerke AG, West Germany – Ranutrol Hansa Aqua Mixers.

Teddington, West Germany – Air-conditioning & Refrigeration Controls.

GROUP OF COMPANIES HAS HARD INDEED.

Ranutrol Aquapure Water Filters) and office automation equipment ACN Electronic Typewriters, EPABX Systems) to advanced electronic products (Automatic Test Equipment, Process Control Instrumentation).
So, every time we shake hands with someone new, you can look forward to one more.

The Ranutrol Group.

We want you to have the best.

TECHNOLOGY QUALITY SERVICE
RANUTROL GROUP

Corporate Office : F-85, Okhla Industrial Area, Phase-I,
New Delhi-110 020. Tel : 683 6001. Telex : 031-65372 ACPL IN.
FAX : 91-011-684 1386.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Enterprise/D/ACL/302

An exclusive start to a new decade

CC-0. Vasishtha Tripathi Collection. Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SLIM-LINE DIARY 1990
Code: IT 102
Size: 82 mm × 177 mm
Price: Rs. 65

INDIA TODAY YEAR BOOK 1990
Code: IT 101
Size: 222 mm × 289 mm
Price: Rs. 250

POCKET DIARY 1990
Code: IT 103
Size: 79 mm × 127 mm
Price: Rs. 35

India Today Diaries and Address Book

The India Today Yearbook 1989 established distinctive standards which were widely appreciated by discriminating users, for meticulous attention to production and the quality of information offered. This year's edition, the India Today Yearbook 1990 upholds these fine standards and comes with a comprehensive range of exclusive pocket diaries and an address book produced with an eye to detail—a hallmark at India Today.

INDIA TODAY YEAR BOOK 1990

Much more than just a diary, this yearbook puts invaluable information on your desk where it belongs.

The information includes a statistical overview of the Indian economy, a political profile of India, a complete travel guide, city guides, International Time, and 16 pages of full colour maps.

The diary section is laid out with busy executives in mind. The easy-to-read, easy-to-write format includes: a week-at-a-glance, hourly slots for appointments, current and forward year planner, ample space for notes, address and phone number section.

Attractively produced with a burgundy red cover, gold leaf embossing, gilt-tipped pages and a handy ribbon marker, the India Today Yearbook 1990 belongs on your table.

DELUXE MINIATURE DIARIES.

To match the diary on your desk, there is now a slimline for your jacket or the briefcase and a pocket diary specially designed to be carried on your person. With these miniatures, you can now carry all the day-to-day information you need with you. Alongwith provision for space for your appointments, you get 35 pages of invaluable information like India at a glance, Conversion Tables, ISD and STD codes, International Times and a 3-year Calendar 1989-1991.

Make your selection now and send in the order with coupon

ORDER FORM—1990

Product Code	Product Details	Price (Rs.)	Qty. Ordered	Total Amount (Rs.)
IT 101	India Today Yearbook 1990	250
IT 102	India Today Slimline Diary	65
IT 103	India Today Pocket Diary	35
			Total (in Rs.)
	Gold Embossing of Initials @ Rs. 10 per Item facility available for diaries only.
			Total Amount of Order (Rs.)

Please give maximum of 3 initials per diary ordered, on a separate sheet.

I enclose my crossed cheque/DD for Rs. _____ (add Rs. 5/- for outstation cheques, i.e. outside Delhi) payable to 'Living Media India Ltd.' Please send the diaries and address books, as listed in the coupon, at the following address:

Name _____

Address _____

_____

_____

_____ Pin _____

Mail your order to:

Living Media India Ltd.
P.B. No. 29,
New Delhi-110001

FREE DELIVERY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE
VOLUME XIV NUMBER 20
FOR THE FORTNIGHT OCTOBER 16-31, 1989

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
DEPUTY EDITOR DILIP BOBB
SENIOR EDITOR PRABHU CHAWLA
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR SHEKHAR GUPTA
ASSOCIATE EDITOR RAMINDAR SINGH
ASSISTANT EDITOR P.G. MATHAI

CORRESPONDENTS
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT RAJ CHENGAPPA
NEW DELHI MADHU JAIN
PARANJOY GUHA THAKURTA
SIMRAN BHARGAVA
DAVID DEVADAS
PANKAJ PACHAURI
SURAJEET DAS GUPTA
BHASKAR ROY
AHMEDABAD UDAY MAHURKAR
BANGALORE CHIDANAND RAJGHATTA
BHOPAL N.K. SINGH
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN
SALIL TRIPATHI
S.N. VASUKI
CALCUTTA FARZAND AHMED
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
LUCKNOW DILIP AWASTHI
MADRAS C.S.G PRASAD
PATNA UTTAM SENGUPTA
TRIVANDRUM RAMESH MENON
NEWS COORDINATOR SANDHYA MULCHANDANI

ART EDITOR SHIRLEY JOSHUA

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
CHIEF OF PRODUCTION ANURADHA KAPOOR
LAYOUT ARTISTS PEALI DUTTA GUPTA
PRABAL MANDAL
KAMINI SINGH

ASSISTANT PICTURE EDITOR BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA
PRASHANT PANJIAR
NAMAS BHOJANI
SHYAM TEKWANI

COPY EDITOR TARUN J. TEJPAL

COPY DESK SABA NAQVI BHAUMIK
NANDITA SARDANA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

REGIONAL MANAGERS ADVERTISING
BOMBAY NEENA MONGIA
NEW DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL

ADVERTISING MANAGERS
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE S.J. NAIDU

• EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD. F-14/15, CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-62634 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTIONS: LIVINGMEDIA INDIA LIMITED, POST BOX 706, FARIDABAD-121002, HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER, F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE, NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-62634 INTO IN • ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2040235. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY • 4-5 PANCH MARGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONES: 3325378, 3325379, 3321123 AND 3321273. TELEX: 31-62124 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA NEW DELHI • FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188, 479163. CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS • 74/1 ST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 213037, 212448. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE • 46/C CHOWRINGHEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 443938, 447726. CABLE: LIVINMEDIA, CALCUTTA • COPYRIGHT © THE WORLD, REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY AROON PURIE FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •

ALARMING RISE

The stress has now shifted from who has what and how much in numbered Swiss accounts, to a more existential area where the pinch is felt by the voters directly ("Crisis on Prices", October 15). Your analysis of the skyrocketing prices is a pointer to the electoral verdict hanging above the ruling party like the sword of Damocles.

New Delhi — R. RAJAGOPAL

■ The current hike in prices has given the Opposition a new issue for the coming elections. And if the ruling party does not check this rise, it will be facing a hostile electorate.

Baroda — AMIT LOIWAL

■ The present rise in prices has taken place at a time when the Government has been claiming record production of foodgrains and oilseeds. This rise is the cumulative effect of mismanagement of the economy, particularly after the last budget when the prices of essential commodities were increased.

Delhi — V. SAGAR

DANGEROUS DRIFT

Your cover story ("Falling Apart", September 30) proves beyond doubt that a political solution is the only way to bring peace and normalcy to Sri Lanka which has virtually become a killing field. To end the present crisis, all political parties must come together.

Madras — ROBIN PALARAMB

■ At least now the Sri Lankans should realise that clashes among different sections of the people on the basis of language and religion will be suicidal.

Trivandrum — A. JACOB SAHAYAM

■ Peace cannot descend on Sri Lanka as long as the JVP continues to follow the path of violence. The economy is in a shambles and it is a miracle that the country is still surviving. Given the continuing animosity among the various Tamil groups, the proposed pull-out of the IPKF will also throw the relatively quieter north-eastern provinces into turmoil.

Pune — D.B.N. MURTHY

■ President R. Premadasa has adopted a short-sighted strategy of exploiting the Sinhala nationalist sentiments to mount pressure on India to withdraw its troops from the island nation. But in the process, he has let the JVP get an upper hand.

Chandigarh — SANJAY CHOPRA

TERRORISM IN UNIFORM

It is sad that the police in Punjab are harassing innocent men and women ("Uniformed Brutality", September 30). Doesn't repression of innocent people by the police amount to terrorism? Although the people have protested against these incidents, the Government has not done anything to stop police brutality. This will only increase dissatisfaction among the Sikhs.

Kanpur — -RAJPRIT SINGH SALUJA

■ With the Centre following the "bullet for bullet" policy regarding terrorists, and the Akalis remaining divided, the innocent youth of Punjab are paying a heavy price. Those who have taken up arms to vent their frustrations bear testimony to this fact.

New Delhi — SURINDER SINGH

GOING PLACES

At last, women have shown they are in no way inferior to men ("Heels on Wheels", September 30). They no longer have to depend on anyone and are free to move around swiftly.

Nagpur — VEENA ADIGE

■ Driving by children should be discouraged. The case of 15-year-old Ritu Nanda who has been driving a moped for a year and now possesses a scooter is a gross violation of traffic rules. Even for non-geared or automatic-geared two-wheelers, only persons above 16 years can hold a licence. If this trend continues, road accidents can rise steeply.

Kanpur — SANJAY PRASAD

■ After experiencing the new liberation, Indian women must start wearing helmets. They should not lose their head over the new-found freedom.

Ooty — PRIA KRISHNAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

REGRET

In the feature "A Slow Fade-out" (INDIA TODAY May 15, 1982), it was reported that Kamleshwar ran into trouble when he opposed a proposal, by a beverages company, to set up franchise stations in Bombay and Delhi with South Korean collaboration. Instead, Kamleshwar successfully pushed his idea of a second commercial channel, even as he turned down the same company's offer to sell TV rights for the Indian performances of a Afro-rock group. It was also stated that the Congress(I) politician who owned the company complained against Kamleshwar to Dhawan, and that some others too were cut up with Kamleshwar because they had expected a cut from the Rs 20-crore franchise station proposal. All this had sealed Kamleshwar's fate.

On further inquiry we find that there were some factual errors in the report. We had no intention to malign or discredit the reputation of Mr Charanjeet Singh of M/S Pure Drinks (New Delhi) Ltd., or any other person. We regret the error and any distress or embarrassment caused to Mr Charanjeet Singh.

—Editor

GLOSSING OVER REALITY

All the short films on Doordarshan on national integration ("Patriotic Plugs", September 30) very subtly stress that all is well, that the common man need not worry, and that India is in safe hands and on the road to progress. The reality, however, is grim and depressing.

Nasik — NITIN PARANJAPE

■ The films on national integration may be an election stunt but they make an old-fogey like me feel a patriotic glow.

New Delhi — H.C. SHARMA

DAMNING DEFEAT

The apology by The Illustrated Weekly of India ("A Shocking Surrender", September 30) is a blow to Indian journalism. Freedom of the press is absolutely necessary for the functioning of a democratic country. But it is sad that many exposes are made without cross-checking facts.

Cuttack — SRIMAY KUMAR SARANGI

■ The Weekly editor Pritish Nandy and his fellow journalists have made the situation worse by making the apology look malafide and a ruse to get out of the defamation suit.

Faridabad — PADMA WAHEED

■ Ultimately, power has prevailed. This crushing defeat of the journalists has belittled the stature of the press.

Indore — PRABHAKAR S. HARSOLE

THE HIDDEN HAND

You have painted a vivid picture of the CBI's inefficiency ("Controversial Cases", September 15). Impartial investigation and honesty have been forgotten by the CBI, which has become a puppet in the Government's hands.

Bangalore — C.R. NAIDU

MAPS PUBLISHED

In "Last of the Unknowns" (August 15), it is stated that "more than 40 years after Independence, the area (Abujhmarh) remains unsurveyed, with no administration, no police, and no accurate maps of the area". This is not true as 1: 50,000 scale maps of the area have already been published.

Dehra Dun — P.R. DATTA deputy surveyor general, Survey of India

JHOLAWALA JOKES

"The Jholawala Syndrome" (August 15) was amusing. It enthused me to create a few jhola jokes. Here are some: What is the favourite appetiser of jholawalas? Jhola jeera; Sauce? Jholandaise; Dish? Jholar maach; Sweet? Jholebi; Musical instrument? Jholatarang. Which are the popular tourist towns? Jholalabad, Jholander, Jholapaiguri and Jholarpet.

Pseudonyms adopted by budding writers? Jholazhynytsin and Emily Jhola. What is a pick-pocket called? Jholamaar. Which is the gratest romantic tragedy? Jholaram and Jholiet. Why does a Jholawala get tired without his jhola? He suffers from exjholashun. What happens when a jhola is crammed to the brim? It reaches its jholastic limit. What is the name of the hero who walked round the ring road in his chappals in 80 minutes? Jholas Verne.

Mangalore — M.V. KINI

REPRESSIVE MEASURES

After reading "Act of Desperation" (September 15), it became amply clear that Chief Minister Farooq Abdullah has no control over Jammu and Kashmir. This was further substantiated by the celebration of Pakistan's independence day and a total bandh on India's Independence day. By trying to gag the press, he only made matters worse.

Vidyanagar — VASANT PRABHU

■ Though subversive elements are on the rampage again in the valley because of the Abdullah Government's failure to contain terrorism, they have not been able to garner mass support.

Kurnool — P. SIVA RAM PRASAD

A CLARIFICATION

The report "Booming Scandal" (July 15) distorts facts to malign a new product. Your correspondent did not contact B.G. Shirke; and it is not true that he refused to be photographed.

Your correspondent has ignored the fact that the Central Building Research Institute at Roorkee, has conducted trials on the anti-corrosion treatment on steel reinforcement in Siporex products in Bombay for two years and concluded that it is highly satisfactory for use in coastal and highly polluted areas. The tests also prove that corrosion of steel in Siporex products is 15 times less than in conventional concrete over a span of 60 cycles. Incidentally, Siporex has exported prefabricated material worth Rs 14.37 crore to West Asia and Japan.

The legality of the Government Resolution (GR) regarding the use of prefab technology was upheld by the Bombay High Court as "good in public interest". The Maharashtra Housing and Area Development Authority engineers have made a feeble last-ditch attempt to sabotage the GR, after new guidelines were issued last April.

Items like concealed wiring in slabs and fixing of fan hooks are incorporated at the planning stage and not after buildings are completed, even in the case of conventional work. Similarly, false ceiling and air-conditioning ducts can be fitted. Plastering is not required as the slabs are factory finished. Again, nobody applies oil paint to ceilings.

As for the quality of construction at the City and Industrial Development Corporation (CIDCO) Prefab Colony, a complete building at this project was load-tested under the supervision of IIT, Bombay. It certified that the performance was satisfactory as specified by the Bureau of Indian Standards. CIDCO's certificate states that the product is superior to conventional construction.

Further, B.G. Shirke & Co has government audit. Its net surplus is restricted to 8 per cent and under clause 10 of the GR, doors are open to everyone. The Government has now appointed a permanent technical committee of four senior secretary-engineers to assess the claims of the organisations/industries regarding the new technology.

Pune — VIJAY B. SHIRKE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

are on ecause lure to ot been

PRASAD

l" (July
w pro-ot con-
that he red the search ted tri-ent on roducts cluded use in

as. The steel in than in n of 60
as ex-
worth Japan.
t Reso-prefab ombay erest".
d Area
rs have o sabos were n slabs porated t after he case y, false cts can d as the nobody tion at opment ony, a ct was n of IIT, perfor-

fied by CMCO's
duct is uction.
as gov-
is reuse 10
eryone.
inted a of four ess the ustries

SHIRKE

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There is an air of confidence about them

There is no looking back when you're in Liberty.

Shoes that blend tough PU soles with flexible, sleek uppers. Crafted from the finest quality leathers. For comfort. For style.

To match your dynamic stride through time.

LIBERTY®

One step ahead, always!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A SMALL ARGUMENT IN FAVOUR OF CHOOSING THE SAFER SCOOTER.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Think of yourself on a scooter. With your wife and little one.

And you're out on the road. There's speeding traffic to be careful of. Potholes to be avoided. And you're trying your best to ride safely.

What you need then, is a scooter that thinks like you do. Responds as you would like it to.

A scooter that's built with your safety in mind.

LML Vespa.

BETTER BALANCED FOR GREATER STABILITY.

What's the greatest security you need while riding all kinds of roads or taking turns? Stability, we think.

That's why each of our scooters, built around a unique aerodynamic chassis, is designed to be better balanced than most other scooters.

DESIGNED TO STOP. NOT SKID.

It happens so often. A cyclist dashes across the road, or the traffic light changes to red...and you have to brake suddenly.

At this critical moment, it's the double-action suspension and unique movable front brake back plate of the LML Vespa that act together to ensure that you stop safely. Without skidding.

POWERED TO STEER YOU THROUGH RISKY SITUATIONS.

LML Vespa also recognises how important it is for you to have the pick-up that's sometimes necessary to get you out of dangerous traffic situations.

So, every LML Vespa offers greater power than any other scooter in its category.

BUILT-IN DIRECTION INDICATORS FOR SAFER TURNING.

At turns, we have always believed, it is safest for you to have both your hands on the handlebar. That's why, even before the Government made them compulsory, we provided built-in indicators on both, the front and rear of our scooters.

Each, having a specially toughened plastic cover for extra long life.

STEADIER HEADLIGHT KEEPS YOU SAFER AT NIGHT.

When you're riding an LML Vespa at night there's a 12V magneto making sure that neither your headlight nor tail-light dim when you're slowing down, or while idling.

COME HOME SAFE ON YOUR LML VESPA.

The unbeatable NV. And the classic T-5. LML Vespa gives you a choice of scooters engineered by Piaggio of Italy.

To match international safety standards. And keep you all safe, wherever you are.

Isn't it amazing that, small as they are, our children help us make some of our biggest decisions?

LML
vespa
BUILT SAFER. BY DESIGN.

LML LIMITED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

everest/d89/LML/213

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DOUBLE PROTECTION FROM IMITATION

The name itself is a guarantee. DUROBORD is made from specially selected and perfectly seasoned timber. It is free from corrugation and warping and has an extra smooth surface finish.

DUROBORD is now available in 100% Boiling Waterproof grade—DUROBORD-PF, having super strong Phenolic Resin Bonding. Hours and hours of boiling of DUROBORD-PF in water, show no signs of delamination or swelling. It is totally resistant to termite, moisture, cold, tropical damp climates, abrasive sea-weather conditions or extreme cyclic changes in weather.

DUROBORD is also available in ordinary grade.

DUROBORD-PF, you have got the guarantee of a leader to bank on.

Durobord™

The real No.1

Insist on DUROBORD-PF, the 100% Boiling Waterproof Blockboard.

DURO–
THE HERO OF BLOCKBOARDS

Sarda Plywood Industries Limited
Works: Jeypore (Assam)
General Sales Office :
1/7 D. B. Gupta Road, New Delhi 110 055

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Uneven Scales of Justice

IN modern republican societies, the rule of law is what keeps men from turning into beasts, governments into despotisms, bureaucrats into commissars, businesses into rapacious exploiters, the press into an organ of malice. It is the dharma that enforces fairness, engenders popular national consensus and the participation of citizens in the institutions of their nation. And more than the executive or the legislature, the keeper of this faith is supposed to be the judiciary. It is for this reason that judges should be judged by standards far higher than those applicable to any other national institution: their actions should not suggest even a hint of a conflict of interest; they should act without fear or favour.

It is, therefore, troubling that the judiciary is increasingly coming under critical scrutiny. It is in a state of imminent collapse. Chief Justice E.S. Venkataramiah was the first to admit this publicly. He warned recently that so paralysed is the system because of backlogs and inefficiencies that it will break down in a year. He concluded rightly that justice delayed is justice denied. And he deserves the nation's full attention.

But is the chief justice, described as a man in a hurry because of some radical reforms he has suggested—such as decentralising the powers enjoyed by the Supreme Court to district courts, and immediately filling all judicial vacancies—getting the attention of the judiciary he heads? Apparently not. With two lakh cases filed each year, the courts are barely able to dispose of 90,000. Failure of the system fuels the impression that justice is the prerogative of the influential and the rich.

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

And this belief is not without foundation. Last fortnight, the Supreme Court created history on Gandhi Jayanti day—when all the courts were closed—as two of its judges, P.K. Roy and S. Mukherji held a special hearing in Mukherji's home on a writ pending in the Bombay High Court, on whether Larsen and Toubro, now owned by the Ambani group, should be allowed to go ahead with their mega public issue. During this unprecedented hearing, the judges also heard an oral appeal from the Ambanis' lawyers that a newspaper be barred from reporting on the subject.

This is not to argue that the Larsen and Toubro case was not justiciable. But was there such an emergency? This case did not involve a last minute reprieve for a condemned man nor was a stay order against demolition of a housing colony being sought. Should a corporate case receive such prominently displayed judicial solicitude when hundreds of thousands of cases involving murder, the Essential Commodities Act, Goondas Act, fundamental rights, habeas corpus petitions and labour-management disputes have been languishing, some of them for as long as a decade, without even a hearing? This was precisely what the chief justice was talking about when he suggested radical decentralisation.

That the courts concern themselves with high-profile matters was also buttressed by the priority it gave to hearing the dispute over the disbarment of some cricketers from upcoming matches. The point is not that the dispute was unimportant. All Indians love cricket. But is cricket more important than the agony of a human being deprived of liberty and awaiting dispensation of justice for years?

THIS image of the courts is not new. The Delhi High Court set a precedent in 1986 when it entertained a midnight bail petition and freed industrialist Lalit Thapar. This is not to argue that Thapar did not deserve justice, but to emphasise that the alacrity with which the courts can act in cases involving the influential solidifies the common man's view that privilege and justice are synonymous.

The question mark that hangs over the judiciary has been created by the conduct of some of the subordinate judges. For example, the physical abuse of a chief judicial magistrate in Nadiad by the police was contemptible. But also questionable was the action by subordinate judges in Delhi who protested the incident by going on strike even after the Gujarat Government had initiated an inquiry. Judges behaving in the manner of trade unionists is hardly conducive with respect for the exalted position they occupy. Nor does the recent revelation that there are at least 80 judges in the country whose close relatives practice law in the same court, confer any glory on the judiciary.

It is small wonder then that increasing numbers of intellectuals, lawyers and retired judges have started raising questions in areas where the judiciary was never before scrutinised. These include the hanging of Kehar Singh, the questionable use of judges in commissions of inquiry and most recently, the striking down—after a year of delay—by the Delhi High Court of the Jain-Bannerjee Committee charged with investigating people responsible for the 1984 Delhi riots.

Administrative reforms suggested by the chief justice will, no doubt, lead to logistical amelioration. But the main problem confronting the judiciary right now is its image. And to tackle this, reform-minded judges must insist on a strict code of ethics—public declaration of assets, refusal of cases involving a conflict-of-interest, barring relatives from practicing in the same court, forbidding ex-parte communication with litigants including the Government, refusal to join government-sponsored inquiry commissions. The code should be inviolable and those transgressing it must be accountable to an ethics committee of peers empowered to mete out penalties. As former Supreme Court Judge V.R. Krishna Iyer recently said, justice is more important than justices.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For the last 25 years Aplab has been replacing USA, Germany and Japan with Aplab at its units, has been innovating solutions to electronic instrumentation problems – substituting imports and boosting exports.

25 years ago. One man, one dream. Today a pioneer and leader in professional electronics instrumentation. A name respected the world over. 8 divisions, 2,000 products. 3 plants, 100 engineers.

That, in brief, is the Aplab story. A story of how dedication to quality, and a commitment to technology can make an Indian company an international success.

R & D – the touchstone to technology

Aplab is a technology corporation. Committed to in-house research and constant updating. We know that technology never stands still. So neither do we. Technical challenges bring out the best in us.

Import Substitution – the Indian market

Almost every new product we manufacture substitutes an import. We know it can be done in India. And if it can be done, Aplab will. Which is why leading Indian users of professional electronic equipment trust us to meet their needs.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

with

Thane, Santa Cruz and Pune.

eam. Today a electronics
the world over.
s, 100 engineers

A story of how ment to npany an logy on. Committed to lating. We know

o neither do we.
best in us.

market nanufacture an be done in ill. Which is why electronic eds.

Product Export – turning the tide

Aplab exports almost 30% (by volume) of its production to many developed nations. In the most demanding markets in the world, Aplab is a name recognised and respected.

Reverse Technology Transfer – a triumph for Indian R & D

Aplab exports its technology and expertise to answer the specialised needs of companies in USA, Germany and France. Developing and designing products for solving electronics problems in advanced countries. Another testimonial to Indian skills.

Collaborating – with a difference

Aplab has announced two joint ventures, Seba Electronics and Aplab-Seba Electronics, in collaboration with Seba Dynatronics of West Germany. These ventures involve no royalty and show low fees. Another indication of the confidence Aplab commands – internationally.

Seeking Challenges – keeping ahead

Aplab's repeated technological breakthroughs come from a conscious striving for excellence. A deliberate policy of seeking and responding to challenge in order, not only to remain on the frontiers of technology, but to actually extend them.

Some important reverse technology transfer projects are:

- Telephone cable fault locator — West Germany
- Cable test van software — West Germany
- High resolution digital storage oscilloscope — USA
- Cable TV test equipment — USA

In addition Aplab has supplied products to leading companies like British Aerospace, Rolls Royce, Mercedes Benz and Marconi Instruments as well as to the Australian Army and Air Force.

We are committed to leadership, through innovation in technology.

25 Twenty Five Innovative Years in Professional Electronics.

Aplab

Applied Electronics Limited

'Aplab House', A-5 Wagle Industrial Estate
THANE-400 604.

Leadership through innovation in technology

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Friend in Need

● Last fortnight, during his official trip to Bombay, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi took some time off to visit poet Harivanshrai Bachchan, Amitabh's father, staying at the actor's Juhu residence. The senior Bachchan has been keeping indifferent health. The prime minister also used the occasion for what turned out to be an hour-long pow-wow with his childhood friend, 'Amit', whose hectic film shooting schedules over the last several months have kept him away from Delhi.

The meeting triggered off speculation that the major topic of discussion was whether Amitabh would consider running again on the Congress(I) ticket from Allahabad in the coming elections. Amitabh has repeatedly said that he has taken political sanyas. A powerful section of the Congress(I) high command feels that V.P. Singh will eventually contest the elections from Allahabad, and is of the opinion that only Amitabh is capable of giving the Janata Dal leader a run for his money. Also, if V.P. Singh faces a serious challenge in Allahabad, especially from Amitabh who he has repeatedly dared to a fight at the hustings, chances are that he will be heavily tied down in his own constituency and have less time for national campaigning. And that precisely is the ruling party's aim.

Technology Trauma

● With more and more efficient electronic telephone exchanges being set up in the nation's capital, there's a beeline of VIPs demanding to be served on a priority basis. Last month, several ruling party MPs—whose telephones were hooked on to the old cross-bar exchanges—were given electronic connections on a priority basis. But the boon, as some of them discovered, turned out to be a pain in the pocketbook. The new exchanges are capable of recording the exact time and date of each outstation telephone call. Their billing is also more efficient. So when one MP received a bill of Rs 8,000 for a month, he decided to challenge it.

Instead of meeting with the usual clerical obsequiousness of yore, the member came face-to-face with computerised evidence of his telematic extravagance—time, date, and the number called. Unable to argue further, the MP put in a new request: that his telephone be returned to its antediluvian former cross-bar home. And according to the capital's telephone authorities, similar requests are coming in from other MPs faced with the same dilemma.

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

Negative Victory

● Who says that the ruling party bigwigs and the Prime Minister's Office don't learn from their mistakes? They've learned at least one lesson, at a price: it had been a fatal mistake to mount a propaganda warfare against the Opposition-sponsored Bharat Bandh through bureaucratic diktats and Doordarshan. The publicity virtually assured the bandh's success.

So when the Opposition began to plan Jat leader Devi Lal's birthday bash at Delhi's Boat Club with the announcement that some 30 lakh people would attend from all over India, Rajiv was bombarded with conflicting advice. The never-learn-a-lesson hawks insisted that people travelling to the rally should be harassed by the police at the Delhi border through devices such as deliberately created traffic jams. Also, they suggested that Doordarshan should launch an all-out campaign against the rally.

But better sense prevailed. And the exact opposite order went out. The police was asked to be accommodating and courteous. No harassment that would give the Opposition a political edge. And no propaganda campaign. Senior Congressmen are now gloating at having achieved their objective. Instead of the expected 30 lakh, only about 5 lakh showed up—a minor victory for the ruling party.

Damp Squib

● Notwithstanding poll-eve, Rajiv Gandhi continues to give enormous weight to projecting India's image abroad—no matter how cosmetic the exercise—even at the expense of local political mileage. Recently, the Himachal Pradesh Congress(I) held what was billed as its most important rally at Kangra to flex its muscle in an acknowledged BJP stronghold.

The MP from the state, the street-smart Anand Sharma, spent over a month to ensure the rally's success and show the high command his clout in the state. But just as Sharma was getting ready to pull out all the stops and go to Kangra to lead the rally, he received an urgent message to travel to, of all places, Namibia, as part of a delegation of observers of the Commonwealth Committee on Southern Africa. Instead of Himachal, Sharma found himself in Africa.

Now, no one quite knows what the committee attained in Namibia. But in Kangra, Sharma's youth brigade, utterly perplexed by its leader's inexplicable absence, went into a confused slump. And the rally proved to be a bit of a damp squib.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hawkins® Pressure Cooking Masala
For delicious VEG. dishes

Hawkins® Pressure Cooking Masala
For delicious NON-VEG dishes

Hawkins® Pressure Cooking Masala
For delicious CHANNA dishes

Hawkins® Pressure Cooking Masala
For delicious DAL dishes

Your Natural Choice

Hawkins pure, blended spices. Four varieties. An average of eighteen choice spices in each. Sealed in tamper-proof, triple-heritage foil packets. Just open, add and cook.

Great taste. Specially blended by Hawkins for pressure cooking. Also great for other cooking.

For a FREE COOKBOOK with 33 recipes, send one empty Hawkins masala packet to Hawkins Dept. No. 006, P.O. Box 6481, Bombay 400 016.

Maximum retail price (inclusive of all taxes) 100 grams, Rs. 15.00.

Hawkins® Pressure Cooking Masala

DISTRIBUTORS AND DISTRIBUTORS WANTED. APPLY IMMEDIATELY.
COPYRIGHT RESERVED BY HAWKINS COOKERS LIMITED.

Quality India Trusts. Hawkins

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The shape of excellence.

Swiss Made / Mod. dép.

Individuality, clarity, style and perfection: all these attributes are perfectly blended in the new Rado Florence 'Anatom' models. The revolutionary design, using a scratchproof, diamond-polished sapphire crystal, enables an aesthetically perfect fit to the human wrist. And the mirror-like gold coatings on the crystal ensure that unmistakable radiance for which Rado watches are famous the world over. Despite its slim and elegant look it is still a very dependable and waterproof Swiss top-quality watch.
Rado Florence 'Anatom' – a piece of personality. And a joy forever.

RADO
Florence

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

• Rajiv Gandhi can never declare elections before consulting Kanshi Ram. Because if he doesn't consult me, he will get zero seats in Uttar Pradesh for example.

■ KANSHI RAM in The Sunday Observer

• Gather enough courage to give a stinging blow to your pride. Don't stand on the fault lines of history.

■ BABA AMTE, in a letter to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, against the clearance of Narmada Sagar Project

• Urdu like any other Indian language has grown in the soil of this country and belongs to each of us....Polarisation and politicisation on this issue is not only uncalled for but also dangerous, an example of which are the incidents of Badaun.

■ V.P. SINGH in The Statesman

• We are opposed to Urdu being regarded as a second language. But we are not opposed to Urdu per se. Urdu is an Indian language. The future of Urdu lies in India, not in Pakistan where it is being crowded out by Punjabi, Sindhi etc.

■ A.B. VAJPAYEE in The Times of India

• Justice is more important than justices.

■ V.R. KRISHNA IYER, former Supreme Court judge

• The 'stuff' you are presently holding in your hands, interestingly, has weathered more than normal turbulence, and I must confess there have been nights when I have contemplated joining Arun Singh and his lady love in Almora.

■ VINOD MEHTA, on the launching of the Bombay daily The Independent

• Given the current (political) situation or what little I know of it and your professional compulsions, I regret I do not meet the press.

■ ARUN SINGH, in reply to a journalist's request to see him, quoted in Sunday

• It is my mother's determination to fight gender prejudice and her conviction that having a daughter is in no way shameful that my sisters and I have accomplished what we have.

■ BHARATI MUKHERJEE in Gentleman

• Hemant Kumar died in Calcutta on Tuesday morning. He was murdered by Doordarshan on Wednesday evening. Long live Hemant Kumar!

■ T.K. RAMASAMY, commenting on Chitrahaar, in The Tribune

• We forgive them (the players). They made a mistake. They did something seriously wrong, and we showed them that they could not get away scot-free. But when they surrendered, we decided to show them mercy.

■ BISWANATH DUTT, BCCI president, in Sportsworld

• I am what I am today largely because of the set-backs I received early in my career. When you are successful you take so much for granted. You get carried away.

■ MADHURI DIXIT in G

SEE BETWEEN THE LINES

Even after you've heard about it all and read about it all – see it all on India's first newsmagazine on video cassette – Newstrack.
Press the play button and you're on the ringside seat – to people, places, events, issues – incisively covered like on no other medium ever before.

▶ ONLY ON NEWSTRACK ◀

SPECIAL OFFERS

SINGLE CASSETTE
• Current Issue Rs. 135/- and a money-back guarantee.
• Back Issues Rs. 125/- each.

SUBSCRIPTION
• Annual Rs. 1200/- and a FREE INDIA TODAY YEARBOOK 1990 worth Rs. 250/-.

Offers valid upto December 31, 1989. Year Books will be home delivered at your given address by the year end or early January 1990.

Mail a DD/Cheque favouring
Living Media India Limited to P.O. Box No.29,
New Delhi – 110 001.

For more details contact
Delhi: 3320689. Bombay : 2027867.
Madras : 479163.
Calcutta : 445398. Bangalore : 210834.

Home delivered by courier or Registered Post

India Today Presents
NEWSTRACK
▶ The newsmagazine to watch ◀

MILESTONES/IT/236

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LUNATIC PLAN

■ With the stoneman stalking the streets, Calcutta's pavement dwellers were literally dying of fear. But in its enthusiasm to trace the murderer, the city police rounded up around 150 vagrants from the streets, even though it did not have a shred of evidence against them. They included a large number of roving lunatics.

The police hoped to pin the sidewalk killings on one of them. Only to be driven round the bend themselves.

For one thing, when the 150 detainees were asked to identify themselves, they trotted out about 750 names and aliases. To compound the confusion, each detainee "confessed" to being the elusive killer, now known as the stoneman.

The scramble to confess is probably due to the fact that these human derelicts thought it would give them some importance. With 150 nuts on its hands, each claiming to be the stoneman, it is the police which is now going nuts.

THE COY BRIBE

■ Corruption and coyness hardly go hand in hand, as a havildar in Maharashtra's Shivanagar discovered to his cost, literally. Having nabbed a scooterist for driving into a 'No Entry' zone, the havildar thought he would make a quick buck, or 20 to be precise.

But his conscience would not allow him to accept the money directly, so he asked the scooterist to hand it over to a paanwallah who had a stall across the street.

The scooterist went across and conspiratorially whispered to the puzzled paanwallah. The paanwallah, in turn signalled to the havildar, in pantomime, asking him what was to be done.

The policeman held up two fingers to indicate the amount, and the bewildered paanwallah meekly handed over Rs 20 to the pleasantly surprised scooterist who rode off wondering about the coy policeman.

Moral: Corruption does not pay, but if you must seek bribes, it's better to be brash.

WINGED CURRENCY

■ Visitors to a mining office in Salem recently were happily surprised to discover hundred and fifty-rupee currency notes fluttering down from the sky onto the lawns.

Manna from heaven? Without stopping to ask questions, everyone present set about hastily garnering this heaven-sent harvest of currency notes. But they were soon stopped by men of the vigilance department.

The bills had apparently been thrown down from an upper floor balcony by officials and contractors exchanging 'speed' money when the police swooped down on them. Surprised by the arrival of the police, the staff threw caution to the winds, along with the money: Rs 2,100 to be precise, which wafted down onto the lawns.

Unfortunately for them, the winged money was evidence enough. The police decided that the contractors' bucks had stopped there. Salemites now say corruption in the mining office has gained new currency.

FUSION VS FISSION

■ To every action there is an equal and opposite reaction. This basic law of physics applies as forcefully to marriage, specially when the person getting the action is someone other than the wife. A philandering physics lecturer of Indore learned this lesson the hard way.

The lecturer got too involved with his experiment in extra-marital fusion. He offered to redecorate his girlfriend's apartment, and strapped for cash, he joined a gang of thieves. They went house-breaking every night and the amorous adventurer picked up luxury items needed for the apartment.

But he had not counted on the reaction of the woman scorned—his wife. She tipped off the police who nabbed the lecturer as he was returning from a successful heist with a Maruti car and gold jewellery. The Indore Romeo is now cooling his heels indoors, in jail.

ROYAL RITES

■ Rajas and maharajahs are not the only ones to get a royal funeral. Recently a monkey of Varanasi in Uttar Pradesh, probably regarded as Hanuman's avatar, had the privilege of taking his last ride on an elephant's back.

With the elephant serving as a stately hearse, the funeral procession was solemnly winding its way through the town till it reached a particularly narrow street. The elephant could not possibly pass through. After a brief debate on whether they should take a new route or continue the journey without the huge hearse, the mourners decided on the latter.

The monkey's body was brought down to earth, completing its journey to the Manikarnika Ghat cremation ground like ordinary mortals—on the shoulders of four members of his evolutionary descendants: homo sapiens.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Who gives a damn!
Flamboyant.
Daring.
Defying the rules.
And the fabric —
Oswal Premium.
OSWAL®
PREMIUM
SUITINGS
For the rebel in you!
Product of Arihant Fabrics Ltd.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When jeep owners demand rough riding strength on tough terrains they trust India's No. 1 tyre manufacturer...

You c
After a tyres h highw standa
And th
the wo Contin has go in jeep

What all-ter

RM –

- Off-mar
- Circ
for
- Uni
for

No. 1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

And you thought Modi Continental only makes India's best truck tyres?

You could hardly help thinking that.

After all Modi Continental's N416 and RL8 truck tyres have led the way on India's challenging highways for the last 14 years – and have set standards others are still trying to match.

And the same proven technology – backed by the world renowned tyre manufacturer, Continental Aktiengesellschaft, West Germany– has gone into making Modi Continental No. 1 in jeep tyres too.

What makes the RM and RL8E the best all-terrain choice?

RM – Cross-country pattern

- Off-shoulder lugs for excellent maneuverability on all types of terrains
- Circumferential grooves on shoulder lugs for better traction on dry and wet tracks
- Unique compound for tread and sidewall for longer life.

RL8E – Semi-lug pattern

- Special circumferential grooves ensure better traction on dry and wet tracks
- Semi-lug pattern for riding comfort even during rugged operations
- Wear-resistant tread compound for longer life
- Highly flexible sidewall compound – which can bear a high degree of flexing and stress – for a smoother ride.

Plus! A nationwide network of 40 centres to ensure prompt after sales service.

Modi Continental jeep tyres. Excellence only India's No. 1 tyre manufacturer can offer.

JEEP TYRES

No. 1 in tyres – technology, sales, exports

O&M/4644/3

Modi Continental

The tyre that never tires

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Give the gift that says it in writing

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Flair brings you a classic selection of elegant writing instruments. Unique gifts to be cherished for a lifetime.

Multiaction: Black, blue and red in one ball pen ... changing colour with a magical twist of the wrist.

Fortune: Fountain pen and ball pen sets in memorable patterned surfacings.

Signature: Individualized ball pen studded with the receiver's own initial in cut American diamonds.

Flair®

The write choice

For bulk orders, write to: Flair Writing Instruments, 30 A, Deven Industrial Estate, I.B. Patel Road, Goregaon (E), Bombay-400063. Tel: 673-0152, 6734347, 6730544. Telex: 011-70057 NPPI-IN Cable: FLAIR Bombay.
Delhi - Tel.: 730457, 738024. Ahmedabad - Tel.: 345877. Calcutta - Tel.: 256663. Madras - Tel.: 470340.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Serious Questions

RAGHU RAI

Dalai Lama: inspirational

THERE were serious questions imbedded in the fortnight that was, stark and searing punctuation marks that loom larger with each passing day. Once again, the ghost of Bofors has pointed a skeletal finger at the Rajiv Gandhi Government, this time, with the accompanying whisper of doom.

The kind of questions the latest revelations in The Hindu have raised are clearly the most devastating in the sordid Swedish saga. There is now convincing proof of a deliberate cover-up to protect the beneficiaries of the kickbacks and, more important, collusion at the highest levels on both sides. On this alone could precariously rest the political fortunes of Rajiv Gandhi—and a party seemingly dependent on him for electoral survival.

Desai: uncomfortable

No less serious, in the electoral context, is the increasingly incendiary manner in which major political parties are prodding the communal scorpion. The fact that the latest communal shockwaves emanate from areas untouched till now by its mesmeric madness is symptomatic of its spread. But with electoral desperation in alarming ascendancy, parties like the BJP have even removed the final fig-leaf of secular pretence. That is a dangerous game—and an ominous warning that the coming elections could stoke the communal flame higher than ever before.

Even the crash of a Mirage 2000 at the Air Force Day aerobatics is a timely, if tragic, warning. Complicated aerial manoeuvres in modern, highly advanced fighter aircraft with large crowds in attendance is a dangerous enough indulgence. But the alarming number of IAF fighters that have crashed in recent years raises more serious questions, and not merely those involving the struggle to master high-technology. In the end, it is the system, rather than individuals, which is always the most vulnerable.

In the end, it is the system rather than individuals, which is the most vulnerable.

The tawdry theatricals surrounding the resignation of Vayudoot boss Harsh Vardhan is a point in case. The drama is intended to guise serious questions; a system, where safety should be of paramount importance, is stretched to vulnerable levels merely to serve the interests of politicians in power. The cost of power is often unaffordably high.

Morarji Desai will testify to that. Now, in the twilight of his years, the 94-year-old former prime minister is forced to live with an uncomfortable feeling: the charge levelled against him in The Price of Power, American journalist Seymour Hersh's book on Henry Kissinger, that he was supplying information to the CIA. However unbelievable the accusation, the American legal system, loaded as it is against libel suits involving public figures, has ensured the charge will haunt his remaining years. More so, since the man set himself such stern moral standards.

Political parties are playing a dangerous communal game, a sign of electoral desperation.

Politics and morality are the most irreconcilable of bedfellows. Which is why the awarding of the Nobel Peace Prize to the Dalai Lama is of some special significance. As a man who walks a precarious diplomatic tightrope, the Dalai Lama has succeeded in combining both with remarkable success. His life, and his belief in the cause of humanity, should serve as an inspiration. History, instead, has forced him to live in relative obscurity. As a testimony to our times there could be none so tragic.

—DILIP BOBB

SANJAY SHARMA/The Hindustan Times

The Mirage crash: alarm bells

YASBANT NEGI

Badaun riots: communal curse

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COMMUNALISM

DANGEROUS

As town after town in north India erupts in communal rioting and as the countdown begins for November 9, the day on which lakhs of holy bricks will arrive in Ayodhya from every corner of the country for the building of a new Hindu temple near the disputed masjid-mandir site, the atmosphere is turning ugly and vicious. So much so that even the prime minister of the country has lashed out at those trying to create a Hindu Rashtra.

"No single issue has so adversely affected communal harmony between Hindus and Muslims as the Ram Janmabhoomi-Babri Masjid controversy," notes a recent Home Ministry document, adding that the growing temptation to communalise politics has become a strong impediment to the normalisation of communal relations. The ministry has solid cause for sounding this frightening alarm. For if a united backlash erupts from the minority community, the nation can be shaken to its very foundations. Muslims are a minority only in relation to their percentage of the total population. But what percentages don't account for is the stark reality that they number more than 100 million, half the size of the population of the United States, spreading from Kashmir to Kanyakumari, making India the second largest Muslim country in the world.

With the Ramshila pujas, the fundamentalist organisations believe they can galvanise the entire Hindu community.

But demographic reality neither fazes nor daunts the charioteers of the Hindu juggernaut. "You will soon see within this country a vertical divide within each political party—those who accept Hindu nationalism and those who don't." When Ashok Singhal, mahamantri of the Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP), the intellectual arm of the RSS which is spearheading the militant revivalism, uttered these words in a May 1986 interview, he was in deadly earnest. At that time the VHP, with the "liberation" of the Ram Janmabhoomi in Ayodhya as its religio-political battle-cry, was in the midst of launching a fresh struggle, a jagaran (awakening) to arouse Hindu

RAGHU RAI

YASBANT NEG

BJP leaders at Ramshila puja (top); Riot-ravaged Kota

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

US DIMENSIONS

PRASHANT PANJIAR

R.K. GUPTA

YASBANT NEG

militancy through a four-point programme: bring Hindus under one manch to fight for Hindu causes, ban proselytisation, promote Sanskrit as a uniform language, and back political candidates who support Hindu interests.

Three years later, with elections round the corner, communalism—violent and latent—has come to straddle the country like a scourge. Today, religion—as symbolised by the Ram Janmabhoomi-Babri Masjid issue—has been inextricably woven with politics.

Communal voting is not a new phenomenon. Traditionally, Muslims have tended to vote en bloc. Constituting more than 20 per cent of the electorate in about 98 crucial constituencies, they have been every party's dream vote bank—especially the ruling party's. The difference this time is the quest for a new vote bank—a consolidated Hindu vote—cutting across caste lines and extending into rural areas where voting has been along caste rather than religious lines.

As November 9 draws near, and the communal divide deepens, Muslim leaders are feeling increasingly insecure.

What the VHP's campaign to carry consecrated bricks—emotively called Ramshilas—for constructing the Ayodhya temple has done is to carry the Hindu message to every town and village. More important, the BJP has thrown its weight behind this move. The situation, according to Home Ministry reports, is sure to worsen.

This year alone, between January and September, some 336 people have been killed—more than the toll for the whole of last year—in communal flare-ups in Uttar Pradesh, Karnataka, Bihar, Madhya Pradesh, Gujarat, Maharashtra and Rajasthan. More alarming, violence has broken out in areas hitherto untouched by the communal scourge. For instance, Kota in Rajasthan, Badaun in Uttar Pradesh, Sasaram in Bihar and Mhow in Madhya Pradesh. Says Home Minister Buta Singh: "International forces are active in this violence. We are the largest democracy in the world. This is our test (see interview)."

Communist-run West Bengal too felt the communal Muslim leaders at Delhi rally (top); Badaun riot victims

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

From Growing to Processing and Marketing quality Teas worldwide

This is Yule !

And So is this !

We take pride in continuously perfecting our expertise in Tea for over a century. Across the gentle slopes of the Himalayas, the lush green plains of the Dooars and the fertile Brahmaputra valley, lie Andrew Yule's fourteen prized tea estates. Giving the world 4,000 million cups of the finest quality teas annually.

All this and more makes Yule a multidimensional 125 year old national enterprise. Geared to meet the changing scenario of the Indian Industry.

Many Technologies – One Name

125 YEARS
Y
YULE

ANDREW YULE & CO., LTD.
(A GOVT. OF INDIA ENTERPRISE)
'Yule House'
8, Clive Row, Calcutta - 700 001

Sobhagya/AYT/1/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

heat when the VHP launched the Ramshila puja during the Durga Puja festival. To Jyoti Basu's credit, he came out firmly against this: "If anybody wants to worship bricks, he is free to do it at home, but we won't allow it in public places at the cost of communal harmony."

In Madhya Pradesh, after four years of a communal build-up, the eruptions have begun. In the last fortnight, rioting in Mhow, Ratlam and Khargone claimed five lives and property worth several lakhs. It is the BJP that has set the tone for nasty chauvinism. Its state unit chief Sunderlal Patwa has been lashing out at Sonia and Rajiv, saying: "This talk of nationalism comes from a prime minister who has kept in his house a videshi and vidharmi (foreigner and non-believer) wife who has endangered the independence and sovereignty of the country by providing easy access to the Italian mafia, Christian missionaries and foreign intelligence agencies."

Countrywide, the communal cauldron is on a high boil. According to a top secret Intelligence Bureau (IB) study: "Mutual distrust between communities remains at a high level. The number of riots classified 'serious' is higher than in 1986."

One dangerous trend is that communalism which was limited to towns so far—is spreading into the hinterland. In 1988, of 611 communal incidents, 55 per cent were in rural areas. This is cause for redoubled concern as it strains beyond limit the states' policing capacities. Also alarming is the fact that against 80 communal incidents classified as "hypersensitive" in 1971, the number rose to 213 last year. The number of "hypersensitive" districts last year was 82; in 1989 the hundred mark has already been crossed. Says a worried Home Ministry official: "The line between a communally sensitive area and a hypersensitive area is getting increasingly blurred."

A new meanness is abroad. The beatific smile of Ram in VHP posters has been replaced by a warlike image—trident and bow at the ready. The slogans, too, have changed. Earlier they were: Saugandh Ram ki khate hain hum mandir vaheen banayenge (We swear by Ram we will build the temple at the same site) and Bachcha-bachcha Ram ka, Janmabhoomi ke kaam ka (Every child belongs to Ram and for Ram Janmabhoomi). Now the air is rent with: Jis Hindu ka khoon na khaule, khoon nahin vo pani hai; Janmabhoomi ke kaam na aye, vo bekaar jawanee hai (That Hindu whose blood does not boil has water in his veins, youth that does not serve Ram Janmabhoomi is youth lived in vain).

Says the national Bajrang Dal President, Baikunth Lal Sharma 'Prem': "We are committed to the cause of the temple." These hotheads, belonging to fringe Hindu groups

Countdown to Confrontation

1984:

April: VHP-sponsored Dharam Sansad launches a movement to "liberate" the disputed Ram Janmabhoomi site in Ayodhya where Babar had constructed a mosque in the early 16th century.

June: Ram Janmabhoomi Mukti Yagna Samiti formed.

1985:

Ram-Janaki Rath Yatras start.

1986:

February: Faizabad district judge orders opening of the locks on the shrine, allowing unhindered access to Hindu devotees.

March: Babri Masjid Action Committee formed, followed by a country-wide Muslim "mourning".

1987:

March: Three lakh Muslims gather at Delhi's Boat Club to demand handover of the Babri Masjid.

April: Hindus congregate at Ayodhya to pledge liberation of the shrine.

1988:

August and October: Babri Masjid Action Committee issues call for marches to Ayodhya, but cancels them later.

December: Babri Masjid Action Committee splits.

1989:

February: Maha Sant Sammelan at Kumbh decides to construct a temple in Ayodhya.

May: Another sant sammelan at Haridwar lays down schedule of temple construction.

June: Communist Party of India takes out a peace march to Faizabad.

July: Bajrang Dal youth pledge to lay their lives for the temple at Ayodhya.

August: High court issues interim directive to maintain status quo about the disputed property pending a final judgement. Coordination Committee for the Babri Masjid Movement accepts adjudication by a bench of the Allahabad High Court, while the Babri Masjid Action Committee wants a special three-member bench comprising neither Hindus nor Muslims.

September 27: VHP agrees to lay the foundation-stone away from the disputed shrine.

September 30: VHP says it will not abide by an anti-Hindu judgement. VHP begins shila puja in villages with a population of 2,000 and above, with the bricks to be carried to Ayodhya. Tension escalates.

October: Riots spread to Madhya Pradesh and Gujarat. Government declares mosque cannot be demolished. Deadlock on VHP demand for handing over the shrine continues.

November 9: Laying of the foundation-stone for the Ram Janmabhoomi temple at Ayodhya. VHP to decide on giving the Government a new deadline to hand over the entire site to the Hindus.

Map by B.K. SHARMA

Babri Masjid-Ram Janmabhoomi

BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

associated with the VHP, are a source of concern even to their own leaders because their outspoken fanaticism can cause the reins of the Hindu movement to slip out of the hands of the more moderate leadership.

This was visible in Delhi when BJP President L.K. Advani and General Secretary Kedar Nath Sahni attended a brick consecration ceremony. When it ended, the youth burst into a roar of communal slogans. Advani and Sahni watched helplessly. Singhal meant a step further and adopted a challenging tone of his own: "We gave the Government a deadline to open the locks and they did. Now we have given them another deadline for construction of the temple, they will meet that too."

There is little doubt that the Government is in no small measure to blame for the situation. The BJP's Maharashtra unit chief Pramod Mahajan holds the Congress(I) responsible for communalising elections.

He cites three examples. The Mizoram elections where the Congress(I) issued brochures saying it would fight for Christian rights; the Urdu language issue which sparked off riots in Badaun; and the use of Arun Govil, who portrayed Lord Rama in the TV serial Ramayan, in the party's campaign during the 1988 Allahabad by-election.

BADAUN

Anatomy of a Riot

BADAUN died last fortnight. Not that the western Uttar Pradesh town of 1 lakh residents, half Muslim and half Hindu, had much going for it. As a city it is a typical filth-choked, drain-clogged agglomeration of fly-infested bazaars and serpentine alleyways, a town of mechanics and traders, transporters, grain and cloth merchants, empty of industry but replete with semi-rural Harijan slums like Lotanpura and Muslim ghettos like Nayee Serai whose residents eke out a hand-to-mouth existence.

Yet, those who grew up there remember it as a pleasant sort of place. Flying kites in pre-monsoon breezes from the roof-tops of Jallandari Serai and Kacheri Road. Lining up for sugar-coated pedas at Mamman Khan halwai's shop. Playing hockey at the parade ground. Here, in Badaun and the nearby tehsil town of Ujhani, Muslim and Hindu milled and mixed, respected each others' masjids and mandirs. On Eid-ul-Azha, Muslims would deliver the choicest cut of meats to Hindu households, and on Holi, Muslims dressed in the finest white khadi and silk churidaars and adorning colourful caps would troop to Hindu households for the traditional milan (meeting).

Hindus and Muslims spoke to each other in Urdu-laced Hindustani, with Doordarshan's Hindi universally scoffed at as some incomprehensible tongue. After all, it was Badaun that gave birth to poets Shakeel Badauni and Fatri Badauni. And it is to Badaun that Hindus have travelled to worship at the ancient Ziyarat of Sufi saints Bade Sarkar and Chhote Sarkar under the guidance of Muslim priests. The Ganga cuts a wide swathe at the boundary of Badaun district. This is where lakhs of Hindu pilgrims head to participate in the centuries-old Kakora mela.

R.K. GUPTA

Ravaged town: deep divide

Really, Badaun is not Muslim. It's not Hindu. Ask, in any of its outlying mohallas which communities live there, and the answer you would get is Brahmins, Kayasthas, Mahajans, Muraos, Kurmis, Yadavas, Jatavas, Thakurs, Gaddis, Julahas, Ansaris, Pathans. Never "Hindu" or "Muslim".

And the citizens of Badaun had one proud boast. In recent years, Hindus and Muslims had rioted in adjoining areas like Shahjahanpur, Pilibhit, Moradabad, Allahabad and Barabanki. Not in Badaun. Even Partition saw limited tension here. The MP from Badaun is a Congress(I) Muslim, Salim Sherwani, the MLA, a Hindu, Pramilla Mehra, minister of state for tourism. Both won on a combined vote of Muslims and an alliance of Hindu caste votes.

Today this secular vote lies shattered. The Ziyarat lies abandoned of the faithful. Children no longer chase each other through the lanes of Khairati Chowk and Choona Mandi. They live in cloistered fear as Badaun limps out of 10 days of curfew. They have blood on their hands. Hatred in their eyes. Revenge in their hearts. Their souls are ruled by rumour. Every firecracker hurled by a mischievous child is a machine-gun attack. Vultures atop the town's water tanks are gun-wielding fanatics of the "other" community. Truckloads of warriors are supposed to have stolen into Badaun and Ujhani from other districts.

Who would believe that Badaun's riot of September 28, in which 30 lives were lost, was sparked off, of all things, by the introduction in the Vidhan Sabha of Urdu, a language which Badaun has loved? Its timing was foolish for it came when Badaun, even though the majority of its people did not give their feelings rabid expression, had begun to show signs of communal infection from the fundamentalist Hindu revivalism afoot countrywide, as well as from the short-sightedness of local Muslim political leaders. Better than its citizens, local criminals who typically gain political respectability by engendering communal riots and then emerging as community "leaders" had been able to judge Badaun as fissionable material.

It started with a peaceful BJP-inspired march on September 27 mostly by students of the S.K. Inter College to the collectorate—amid some ugly pro-Hindu sloganeering—to present a petition op-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hindu organisations cite other arguments to justify their militant stance.

▶ The Rajiv Government did not accept the Supreme Court ruling on the Shah Bano case and introduced the Muslim Women's Bill under severe communal pressure. The VHP now says if the Government can overrule a judgement through legislative action, it too is not bound to accept the Allahabad High Court judgement on the Ayodhya controversy.

▶ The Muslim leaders—especially Syed Shahabuddin of the Babri Masjid Action Committee (BMAC)—have indulged in brinkmanship. He gave a call to boycott the Independence Day celebrations, then cancelled it. Later, he called for a march to Babri Masjid, then withdrew it after discussions with the Government. Hindu groups are now playing a similar game.

What is alarming is that the Government has known all this for some time. As early as July, the Director of IB, M.K. Narayanan, wrote to the chief secretaries of the states, saying: "The activities and movements of sants and the spectacle of Bajrang Dal volunteers and RSS workers consecrating and carrying bricks to Ayodhya can disrupt the tenuous peace." Still, the Government trod softly on the Hindu militants. For example,

YASBANT NEGI

Riot victims in hospital: innocent posing the Urdu bill. It was an obviously communal situation in which Hindus were equating Urdu with the Government's pampering of Muslims. Next day at 9.30 a.m., a 200-strong procession of slogan-chanting students, joined by criminal elements, marched from Islamia Inter College to S.K. College. It is still being debated whether this procession should have been allowed. But given the history of Badaun's communal peace, District Magistrate Sisir Priyadarshi and Superintendent of Police N.R. Srivastava did not expect violence.

It occurred when the marchers tried to force their way into the other college. They clashed. With brickbats, with knives. Priyadarshi and Srivastava rushed to the spot. Within half an hour the violence had spread downtown to the Chahsaraka area, the main chowk. Armed combatants began firing at each other from roof-tops, indicating an element of preparedness. Some 5,000 people were participating in the battle within the next hour with no more than 50 policemen conducting lathi charges and firing in the air. By the time reserves arrived from Bareilly, some 70 km away, Badaun was on fire. More than 200 shops were gutted, and places of worship damaged. Before relief could arrive, a train was held up near Badaun Railway Station and 13 people were butchered. The man arrested in connection with the incident was Ram Sewak, a Kurmi criminal-turned-politician, a history sheeter with several murder cases pending against him, a former Lok Dal "diehard" as police dossiers describe him, and of late a Janata Dal activist.

"Why this in Badaun?" Prabha Shankar, Badaun's most eminent lawyer is asked. He responds: "It's obvious that Hindus are not ready to tolerate their own government treating them as second-class citizens." Shankar is not a communalist. Perhaps he doesn't know the "pampering" he talks about, apart from the vote bank benefit to the ruling party, has a social element to it because more than 60 per cent of Muslims in the country live below the poverty line.

But he does articulate a commonly-held Hindu belief that minorities have been appeased while the majority has been restrained from asserting itself, and that some day, because of mass conversions and non-acceptance of family planning, the minorities will gain an edge. And there have been no efforts by the Government to explain that given the 1941 census base—and not the 1951 in which Muslims were undercounted—the rate of growth in Muslim and Hindu populations has been about the same.

It is this kind of thinking that has caused the majority community to develop a minority complex and given credence, even in places like Badaun, to the Hindu revivalist movement. The political behaviour of the Muslims in Badaun has perhaps also been short-sighted. Their voting patterns have tended to isolate them. Though the Muslims of Badaun have voted for Hindus, they have tended to vote as a community.

These patterns, of late, have disturbed Hindus of Badaun district. During municipal elections in June, Muslims turned out en masse to elect a Muslim causing some Hindu insecurity over the fact that with a Muslim MP and Muslim chairman there was a deliberate effort to create a Muslim raj. This paranoia was exploited in Ujhani a few weeks later by Janata Dal politician Sri Krishna Goyal. He made a communal speech that so galvanised the Hindus that they were able to elect a Hindu municipal chairman even though Muslims had rallied en masse behind Dr Nihal Ahmed.

In microcosm, this was the communal divide. And in Badaun it is sharpening as the elections draw near. For the first time Hindus and Muslims have drawn blood. Out of sheer insecurity, Muslims will flock together even more, perhaps to the Congress(I) side. Hindus have already begun demanding from their elected leaders the release of some 60 people jailed for the killings. Some even see the criminal Ram Sewak as a Hindu hero, and the message of Hindu-Muslim disharmony is spreading into Badaun district's villages where Yadavas and Thakurs and Muraos are being told that their identity is Hindu, that they should vote as Hindus.

What the future holds is anybody's guess. But, Badaun used to be Indian. Today it is Muslim and Hindu.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR in Badaun

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Dornier Lithotripter MPL 9000

Technology of the Future for Human Gall-bladder/Kidney Stone Therapy

From Dornier Medizintechnik GmbH of West Germany, the inventors of the machine. Installed in 400 centres world wide, and over 1 million patients treated. The most up-to-date method of providing therapy for most stone patients. The Dornier Lithotripter MPL 9000 provides:

- Easy and positive stone location,
- Disintegration of stone into fine grain,
- Easy and best positioning of the patient at the touch of a button,
- Computer aided,
- Safe and reliable.

All this without anaesthesia, and of course without the scalpel.

Sales Representatives

All India (except South India), Bhutan, Nepal, Sri Lanka & Bangladesh.

DSSI

DYNAMIC SALES SERVICE INTERNATIONAL (P) LTD.

210 Din Dayal Upadhya Marg (Rouse Ave), New Delhi-110 002.

Phone: 3310130/3310135/3310136/3318722
Telex: 31-61896/65129. Cable: PRESBUTTON
Fax: 011-3312720

In South India

HEALTH WARE

6-3-456/22, Dwarakapuri Colony, Hyderabad-500 482

Phone: 226204, Grams: ITMA.
Telex: 0425-6699 VIJAY IN
Fax: (0842) 242072

Now available in India

F.N./XIII-388

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

last month, the Uttar Pradesh administration was asked to acquire land in Arvind Ashram close to the disputed site for storing the consecrated bricks arriving there. The nazul (government) land where the temple's foundation-stone is to be laid is also being acquired by the Government for handing over to the Ram Janmabhoomi Mukti Yagna Samiti, an organisation led by VHP and Hindu priests. Naturally, Muslims have responded angrily. Says Shahabuddin: "Till the title is decided any such allotment will amount to official support and patronage to an unlawful activity and prejudging a sub judice matter." Adds Ahmed Bukhari, the Imam's son and leader of the militant faction of BMAC: "The opening of the lock has already done irreparable damage. This will be sowing the seeds of a perennial conflict." Militant Muslim organisations are flexing their muscles for a showdown. The Jamaat-e-Islami-Hind has strong Pakistani links; the Students Islamic Movement of India, with 637 study circles, emphasises the Islamic way of life; the Students Islamic Organisation, founded in 1982 as the Jamaat's youth front has been campaigning against the telecast of Mahabharat and Ramayan. Then there is Ahmed Bukhari's Adam Sena, and the Qaumi Morcha, headed by Zafaryab Jilani, also a leader of the BMAC's militant faction.

At the moment, all parties are busy assessing the emerging communal scenario in electoral terms. At stake are about 100 Lok Sabha constituencies where Muslims constitute an estimated 20 per cent of the electorate. When the electoral race first began to get off the blocks, the Congress(I) had found itself competing for the Hindu vote with the BJP. In June, the party organised a parallel Hindu sammelan in Chitrakoot, roping in the Shankaracharya of Dwarka, Swaroopanand Saraswati, to steal the thunder from the VHP. Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office Shiela Dixit chalked out this strategy, aimed at driving a wedge between Hindu religious leaders. Buta Singh told visitors he too had a shankaracharya waiting in the wings.

But the plan failed, and the Congress(I) appears to be returning to its traditional Muslim vote bank hoping to combine it with Hindu backward and Harijan votes. Ali Siddiqui, a gadfly politician and open admirer of the Gandhi family, has been meeting Shahabuddin. Rajiv too has come out openly against the Janmabhoomi campaign, declaring: "There will be no Hindu Rashtra." The party strategy seems to be: woo the Muslims but avoid offending Hindus by being lenient on those involved in communal incidents.

For the Janata Dal, all this has meant serious trouble. With the BJP growing militant, seat adjustments have caused divisions in the party. The reason: V.P. Singh wants to be everything to everyone. During a recent meeting of the party's minority cell, he held that if the party could somehow pull the BJP into a mainstream alliance, the communal crisis would de-escalate. Others disagreed. Said the cell's chairman, Mufti Mohammad Sayeed: "There was near-unanimity among the members to take up the issue of communalism with the BJP."

SINGH has been confusing colleagues, swearing by secularism even as he calls on fundamentalists like Abdullah Bukhari; wanting to carry moderate, progressive Muslims like Mufti and Arif Mohammad Khan in the central leadership even while retaining the hawkish BMAC general secretaries Azam Khan and Shaqikur Rehman Barq. He has also been talking to Shahabuddin on seat adjustments.

These chronic vacillations have divided the Janata Dal into two neat compartments. One wanting to continue ambling along with the BJP and another advocating some tough talking with them. There is also a small radical minority which believes Singh can still seize the initiative by announcing

Muslim convention: confused leadership

Constituting more than 20 per cent of the electorate in about 100 constituencies, Muslims have been every party's dream vote bank.

Map by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WE ARE TALKING TO YOU, MARUTI OWNERS !

When you have a new generation car, you need a Standard Furukawa Battery.

You can make your Maruti start like a Suzuki. By using the same batteries used by Suzuki, Toyota, Honda or Nissan: Furukawa Automotive Batteries.

Yes, The Standard Batteries Ltd. have tied up with The Furukawa Battery Co. Ltd., Japan, the largest suppliers of batteries to Suzuki.

Soon, you will be able to buy Standard Furukawa Batteries manufactured in India. They are already being used as original fitment in Marutis.

After all, if your Maruti has been designed like a Suzuki, why should you start it on anything else?

SBL

THE STANDARD BATTERIES LIMITED
VAKOLA, SANTACRUZ (EAST); BOMBAY 400 055.

A Member of the MM Group

CHAITRA-B SBL 34

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

categorically that he will not play ball with anyone with a communal leaning. The scenario is familiar. Ten years ago the Janata government had collapsed on a communal issue—dual membership in the Janata and the RSS. Today, as the communal issue hots up again, the Opposition's bid to defeat the Government in one-to-one contests again looks bleak.

Also, the attitude of the CPI(M) has hardened. A group led by Jyoti Basu was open to playing ball with the Janata Dal even if it had an electoral understanding with the BJP and Harkishen Singh Surjeet even met Vajpayee to clear the air. But after the BJP's recent Bombay meet, the CPI(M) is having second thoughts. The CPI, closer to the Congress(I) compared to the CPI(M), has redoubled its attacks on the BJP-RSS-VHP triumvirate. It suits the communists; they would like the Janata Dal to minimise the BJP's influence in Bihar and Uttar Pradesh.

But communal or fanatical, the BJP appears to be having the last laugh. "We will go it alone and triumph," was the refrain at the national council meeting in Bombay. Moreover, Vajpayee told INDIA TODAY: "There is no formal tie between the BJP and Janata Dal, we are not even in the National Front. Effort is being made only for seat adjustment. If they (Janata Dal) think by getting close to the BJP they will lose Muslim votes they are free to choose their electoral allies."

The BJP's hardline stance on controversial issues like Article 370, the minorities commission and the Ayodhya shrine dispute, has been born out of practical necessity. After its 1984 electoral rout, the BJP felt that the dilution of its stand as a champion of the Hindu cause had cost it dearly. The return-to-the-roots process started with the installation of L.K. Advani as party president in May 1986. The Ram Janmabhoomi issue is viewed as a means of refurbishing the party's Hindu identity and retrieving its traditional vote bank. The party feels that because of the situation in Punjab and Kashmir, a massive Hindu backlash is building up. And it is determined to prevent the Congress(I) from exploiting it as in the past.

But there are those who debunk the BJP's reach. They note that in Uttar Pradesh, the BJP has an effective influence in no more than 15 constituencies, whereas the Muslims are the deciding factor in about 50. Even Devi Lal, who'd accommodated the BJP in his cabinet, has sharply criticised its stand on Urdu. He has declared that even if it means the collapse of his ministry he will not hesitate to review his party's relationship with the BJP. He is clearly pre-empting a move by someone like Chandra Shekhar to use the anti-communalism plank. Janata Dal leaders fear that lumpen elements in the mushrooming senas may give a bad name to the entire opposition. The BJP, however, remains unfazed. Hence, the Janata Dal must now choose between Muslim votes and the BJP.

THE communal combination that will perhaps reap the richest electoral rewards is the BJP-Shiv Sena alliance in Maharashtra. At last count, the Sena had 9,657 branches all over the state. And unlike the Muslim League or even the Jamaat-e-Islami, it is not fragmented. "The Muslims do not have a leader," laments the All India Dalit Muslim Minorities Suraksha Sangh President Haji Mastan, "thus they do not know how to vote. We are trying to organise them so that they vote for those who work for them at the Centre."

With all hues of political opinion there is one certainty: that the coming elections will be largely communalised. Says Dawoodi Bohra reformer Asghar Ali Engineer: "Going by the utterances of the Shiv Sena and the BJP, communal tensions will run high at the time of the poll." He is critical of the ruling party's role: "Urdu was made the second language to woo the Muslims. But the backlash was negative for the ruling party. If the intentions were clear they could have made Urdu the

BUTA SINGH

"Foreign agencies are involved"

HOME Minister Buta Singh has been in charge of Rajiv Gandhi's policy on the Ram Janmabhoomi-Babri Masjid controversy. In an interview with INDIA TODAY, he reveals the Government's stand on the issue. Excerpts:

On the Ayodhya controversy.

Foreign agencies are involved. Huge amounts of money are coming in, and Hindu communalists are getting ideological backing from groups abroad. We are the biggest democracy and as elections are coming closer, international forces are interested in our affairs.

On the evidence of foreign involvement.

These forces use very subtle means. Look how they have brought down Japan. A year ago the yen was riding higher than the dollar. It only took the discrediting of three prime ministers to undo all that. In India, attempts are being made to discredit our prime minister.

On the Government dragging its feet on the issue.

We have identified a common ground, but this ground is very small. The law will have to take its course.

On which side has been more rational.

The Muslims say they will abide by the court's verdict. The VHP is not willing to accept a decision against Hindus.

BAL THACKERAY

"This will remain saffron Hindustan"

IF any one person symbolises Hindu chauvinism and revivalism, it is the outspoken chief of the Shiv Sena, Bal Thackeray. Senior Correspondent RAGHU NANDAN DHAR spoke to him in Bombay. Excerpts:

On the Shiv Sena playing the communal card.

We are not communal. Whatever issues we have raised are of national importance. How do you expect us to keep quiet when we see the tricolour being burnt in Srinagar or read placards saying, "Indian occupants quit Kashmir"? These are important national issues.

On the fact that such a stand helps get Hindu votes.

It is not a question of Hindu votes. It is a question of focusing on the issues. In Maharashtra we'll win.

On the Shiv Sena instigating communal violence.

We don't have a violent attitude. But if we are attacked, we will retaliate.

On safeguarding Hinduism.

Where will the Hindus go if the Government and the minorities keep on behaving the way they do? As far as we are concerned, the colour of this country has been saffron since ages, and we will never let it become green. This will remain saffron Hindustan.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNITED ARTISTS

Tinker TOYS PRESENTS

TINKER INVITES YOU AND YOUR CHILD TO HOLLYWOOD

5001 PRIZES

Hey Kids! It's funtime with Tinker Toys again. Win a fabulous trip for two to Hollywood. And Rs. 10,000 to spend there.
And that's not all. There are 5000 more prizes to be won. And winning them is so easy. Just fill in a simple quiz and a slogan. And start packing your bags.

FREE
Pocket Puzzle Diary With Each TINKER TOY.

Kidstuff, 206, Desein House, DLF Commercial Complex,
Greater Kailash II, New Delhi 110 048. Tel: 6414212

Information/Contest forms freely available at all Toy Dealers.

HOLIDAY HOLLYWOOD GIFTS	NO.
• 2 Return Tickets To Hollywood And Rs. 10,000/- Spending Money	(1)
• 2 'Holiday Nepal' Packages	(1)
• Aiwa Complete Music System V 550	(1)
• Aiwa Double Stereo Cassette Recorder	(2)
• Electronic TV-Games	(2)
• Racing Cycles	(5)
• Young People's Science Encyclopedia	(5)

• Colliers Dictionary	(5)
• Child Horizons Encyclopedia	(5)
• Allwyn & Titan Sports Watches	(10)
• Hammond's Ambassador World Atlas	(5)
• Cartoon Video Cassettes	(100)
• Exciting Books	(100)
• Magnasound Audio Cassettes	(100)
• Tinker 'Holiday Hollywood' Puzzles	(2250)
• Tinker 'Mini' Jigsaws	(1400)

HERALD-KS-008/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NAMAS BHOJANI

Chitrakoot Hindu sammelan; (right) BJP's national council meet second language earlier. However, if riots continue over such issues, Muslims would prefer voting Congress(I) than BJP, as it is generally felt the BJP is behind the riots."

Madhu Dandavate of the Janata Dal doesn't think the elections will be highly communalised. Says he: "Hindus never vote as Hindus. There are regional barriers, caste and even sub-caste considerations. Besides, villages have problems of a more immediate nature than communalism." He believes the communal attitude is an urban trait.

For all the frenetic attempts to create the Hindu vote bank, the real question is—does it exist or can it ever materialise? Historically, the most familiar pattern of Indian politics is the attempt to divide communities before elections. In the 1967 elections, divisive forces took the form of the Jan Sangh campaign against cow-slaughter but no real Hindu wave emerged. In 1971, Congress(I) leaders sought mileage from the fact that Indira Gandhi had taught a lesson to Pakistan in the war. Before the 1980 poll, Indira Gandhi went to the extent of writing a letter to Imam Bukhari, promising sops to the Muslims. And during the last general elections, slick advertisements by the Congress(I) whipped up the fear that Pakistan's borders were coming close to the people's doorsteps—subtle propaganda that dubbed Sikhs as Khalistanis. But in each case, the Hindu votes can also be interpreted as a vote for national security and integrity.

The creation of a vertical divide between the 83 per cent Hindu population and other minorities could well be a Herculean task. Says former Janata Party leader Madhu Limaye: "Hindus traditionally do not vote en bloc." In his opinion, the caste complications among Hindus, prevent this. So the move to consolidate Hindu votes is actually a strategy to counter Muslim votes in their areas of concentration. Admits an RSS leader: "Even if the backward classes do not come with us, the upper caste Hindus can swing the elections if they vote together."

And that is a big if. Because there are 98 constituencies in the country where the estimated Muslim electorate is over 20 per cent—a decisive chunk (see chart). The major distribution is in Uttar Pradesh (25 Lok Sabha seats), West Bengal (18), Bihar (9), Andhra Pradesh (6) and Assam, Karnataka and Rajasthan (5 each). In 100 other constituencies—where Muslims are between 5 and 10 per cent—their collective vote can be decisive in closely contested elections. The Congress(I) has been using this factor successfully by playing to the Muslim gallery. The BJP's aggressive wooing of Hindu votes can further push them into the Congress(I)'s lap.

In the communal mania that is holding both Hindus and Muslims in its grip, the epitaph of secularism is being written.

But there are certain basic miscalculations in the BJP's thinking. First, the emotive appeal of the Ram Janmabhoomi issue is by and large restricted to the Hindi heartland. Second, being an essentially urban party, the BJP has minor influence on the Hindu caste considerations in rural areas. However, communal violence before elections has always polarised votes. For instance, after the anti-cow slaughter movement in 1967, the Jan Sangh got 36 Lok Sabha seats—and more than 9 per cent of total votes polled. Again, after communal riots prior to the 1971 polls, the Bharatiya Kranti Dal unexpectedly bagged the Aligarh seat, as the Congress(I) fielded a Muslim.

But the most unexpected element in an election—which might disrupt any communal calculation—is the Indian voter. Shahabuddin illustrates this point. "The only assembly segment I lost in my Lok Sabha election had a Muslim majority," he says. That puts a big question mark on the ongoing efforts of Hindu communalists.

The quest for the elusive Hindu vote and the Hindu Rashtra, for these very reasons, may be conceptually flawed. It is like reaching out for what could be an imaginary Holy Grail. But in the process of doing so, the perpetrators of this ideology have created a situation fraught with the horrendous consequences of religious warfare in which there will be no winners.

The sants and sadhus, the VHP activists and the RSS diehards, the Bajrang Dal volunteers and the Shiv Sena enthusiasts, the Adam Sena, Qaumi Morcha and the Jamaat-e-Islami-Hind, the Students Islamic Movement of India and the Students Islamic Organisation, are not merely propagators of religious faiths. They comprise the armies of the communal night. And as they clash, they will release not the illumination of religious enlightenment but the pitch darkness of anarchy. Everybody will lose.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR and PANKAJ PACHAURI with BHASKAR ROY, KANWAR SANDHU and bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BOFORS

Controversy & Cover-up

Startling exposes by The Hindu amid allegations of the paper being gagged

FULLY one week before The Hindu exploded its latest Bofors bomb on October 9, the Government had an inkling of imminent trouble. Its rumour-mills in the nation's capital were abuzz with gossip that the Madras-based newspaper was about to publish another scoop that would embarrass the Rajiv Gandhi Government as much as General Krishnaswami Sundarji's revelations.

The rumours soon proved correct. But this was attributable not so much to the regime's sleuthing abilities as to the fact that an open power-struggle had broken out in The Hindu, amid allegations that the newspaper was being pressured against printing any further damaging exposes arising from its three-year investigation.

The October 9 story—billed as the first in a new series of exposes—was sensational enough as it contained excerpts from the secret portion of the Swedish National Audit Bureau (SNAB) report dating back to June 1, 1987. The story, the paper said, was 'to be continued'. The second instalment was expected on the 11th, the 10th being a holiday. But what created an even greater sensation were the developments following the story that did not appear on October 11. What did appear, was a cryptic front page note by the editor, which said: "Enough has been written supported by extensive documentation, in The Hindu to establish the fact of the cover-up and the non-serious pursuit of the investigation

CHASING A RED HERRING

DECOY TRAIL

SEPT. 15, 16 & 18, '87

- AT secret meetings in New Delhi between the Bofors delegation and a Govt. of India team, Bofors states that Moresco is a Switzerland-registered company which was originally known as Pitco. It was paid SEK 81 million (Rs 16.2 crore). So far, Bofors had claimed that Moresco and Pitco were code or reference names.
- Bofors adds that its Per Ove Morberg had called on the Swedish Central Bank in Dec. 1986 to furnish clarifications in respect of the remittance of SEK 188 million (Rs 37.7 crore) to Svenska Inc.
- Bofors repeats it has not paid any amounts to any Indians.

OCT. 6 LETTER

Bofors tells Bhatnagar that "Moresco is not a company but a reference for Moineao S.A."

OCT. 15 LETTER

Bhatnagar asks Bofors to explain why a registered company (Moresco) requires a reference name.

NOV. 4 LETTER

Bofors tells Bhatnagar that "the name of the company is and has been Moineao S.A. The rest is all reference or code names, and is used for sake of convenience."

SNAB REPORT

JUNE 1,'87: The SNAB report reveals that "Commission payments to business or accounts in Switzerland were made to those who took care of the Bofors FH-77 deal.... The current President of AB Bofors, Per Ove Morberg, has in his talks with the Swedish National Bank stated that the principal beneficiary in Svenska Inc. is an Indian who has been an agent for Bofors for 10-15 years (minutes from visit to the National Bank 1986-12-18)".

SVENSKA

DEC. 14,'78: Bofors signs a consultancy agreement with Svenska Inc. for 4 % commission on its sales in Asia including India.

MAR. 11, '81: The agreement is renewed and the commission increased to 6 %.

JAN. 13,'86: The commission is virtually, and inexplicably, halved. The two agree to terminate the agreement on a commission of 2.24 % on the advance payments to be made by the buyer and 0.96 % (totalling 3.2 %) on subsequent payments if Bofors won the FH-77 deal with India.

- Bofors pays SEK 188.4 million (Rs 37.7 crore) between 27.2.86 and 18.12.86.

PAY-OFF TRAIL

SEK 188.4 million (Rs 37.7 crore)

SEK 81 million (Rs 16.2 crore)

PITCO

OCT. 15,'79: Bofors signs an irrevocable consultancy agreement with Pitco, Switzerland, an identifiable company registered in Switzerland for 12 months & agrees to pay a commission of 8 % - 6 % on advance payments to be made by the buyer and 2 % on the delivery of the material.

MAY 7, '80: The agreement is renewed till Oct. 10,'81. JUNE 22,'81: The commission is raised from 6 % to 10 %, of which 7 % is to be paid on advance payments and 3 % on the delivery of the material.

SOGEVALOR

Holding company for Pitco. Registered in Switzerland.

THE HINDU EXPOSURES

APR. 22,'88: Five documents establish a link among Moineao S.A., Moresco & Pitco as code names - and Sangam Ltd, the Hinduja's company, in the form of "Pitco, c/o Sangam Ltd" and "Pitco, c/o G.P. Hinduja, Sangam Ltd".

OCT. 20,'88: Government confirms authenticity of Hindu documents.

MORESCO

JUNE 29,'84: The irrevocable Bofors-Pitco agreement is transferred to Moresco Inc., also registered in Switzerland.

- Bofors pays SEK 37 million into Manufacturers Hanover Trust, Geneva, between May 22 & Dec. 22,'86. Code name: Tulip.
- SEK 12 million into Credit Suisse, on May 21,'86. Code name: Mont Blanc.
- SEK 32 million into Swiss Bank Corporation between Nov. 13 & Dec. 22,'86. Code name: Lotus.

Total Payments: SEK 81 million (Rs. 16.2 crore

ARDBO DIARY ENTRIES

JAN. 30,'87: "London. Meeting with GPH" (alleged to be G.P. Hinduja)

MAY 21,'87: "Met H."

OCT. 9,'87: "Carlberg phoned and wanted to have a meeting immediately. It concerned India. I called Hanover who was breathing fire and fumes over Nobel's entering (recording) of the Indian deal. I stated quite clearly that I was not into forgery. The contract could go to hell."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

by the official agencies...".

The hottest rumour that day was that the Government had somehow been able to gag The Hindu. In Madras, the paper's Associate Editor N. Ram was flooded with phone calls from all across the country about why the 'to be continued' portion of his story had not appeared. Ram interpreted the phrase "enough has been written" to mean that future exposes had been barred. Still, his response was guarded. "Wait," he told the questioners, "I'm coming to Delhi this evening, and you'll know the rest."

The next day the capital witnessed an unusual press conference. In front of some 250 journalists, Ram openly accused his editor-uncle Gopalan Kasturi of buckling under pressure and killing a story which showed that the Government had colluded with the Swedes in a massive cover-up of the Bofors payoffs. Ram said he had stepped out of the four walls of The Hindu and into the public arena because "the larger issue is whether the people have a right to know". He then released to select publications—based on his assessment of their "independence and integrity"—the report that The Hindu did not publish along with supporting documents dug out by him and his Geneva-based star reporter Chitra Subramaniam, pointing to a trail damaging to the Government.

Kasturi, predictably, defended his stand. One of the arguments put out by him for holding up the story was that it

Chart by B.K. SHARMA and Compiled by HARPAL SINGH

B

BOFORS

Lies & More Lies

WIN CHADHA

■ "Bofors used no middlemen, paid no commissions for contract."

● Fact: "Commission payments... were made to those who took care of the Bofors FH 177 deal." (SNAB report)

■ "Bofors has not paid or conspired to pay any bribes."

● Fact: "There is reason to presume that bribery crime has been committed." (Lars Ringberg)

■ "The name of the company is Moineao S.A. The rest is a code."

● Fact: "There's no company such as Moineao. Moresco is a registered company." (The Hindu)

■ "I have nothing to do with Svenska or any such foreign company. I heard of Svenska, AE Services and Moresco from newspapers."

■ "To my knowledge no Bofors' representative has said that commissions were paid."

■ "To the best of my knowledge, no money was passed, nor any commission paid."

● Fact: "Morberg...stated that the principal beneficiary behind Svenska 'is an Indian who has been an agent for Bofors for 10-15 years'." (SNAB report)

JPC REPORT

APR. 25,'88 : On the basis of incomplete information given to it by the Swedish and Indian delegations, the JPC concludes that :

- Moresco and Pitco are not registered in Switzerland.
- Win Chadha did not act as a middleman.
- There is no evidence that winding up costs were paid to any Indian in the country or abroad.
- There is no evidence to show any middlemen were involved. Therefore, the question of payments to any Indians or Indian company does not arise.
- Mere suspicion about middlemen and commissions is not sufficient ground to terminate the contract with Bofors or claim reimbursement of Rs 64 crore.

MOHAN KATRE

In September 1987, at a secret meeting, Bofors gave Indian officials names of companies that received the payments. The JPC was given an altered version of this information.

CBI is misled to investigate the decoy Moineao S. A. instead of Moresco.

MOINEAO S.A.

OCT. 6,'87 : Bofors introduces Moineao S.A. into the plot as a company with which it had entered into an agreement on Oct. 15,'79, and concluded at the turn of the year 1985-86.

NOV. 4,'87 : In response to an enquiry from Bhatnagar about the status of Moineao S.A. Bofors says that "the name of the company is and has been Moineao S.A. The rest is all reference or codes, and is used for sake of convenience." This varies from what Bofors told the Government of India team in its Sept. 1987 secret meetings.

Bofors team meeting JPC members

PRASHANT PANJIAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

was a mere rehash and that there was "nothing new" in what Ram was offering his readers. But the record suggests otherwise.

With the technical and operational quality of the Bofors gun now more or less accepted, the burning questions still haunting the nation are who received the illegal payoffs and whether the Indian Government faithfully carried out its stated objective of conducting a thorough investigation by following all leads that may have pointed towards the culprits.

THE Government's official, and final, position on the payoffs scandal has been that it was exhaustively investigated by the Joint Parliamentary Committee (JPC), with the aid of the Ministry of Defence and investigative agencies headed by CBI chief Mohan Katre.

The JPC began its work in August 1987 and submitted its final report in April 1988. Its conclusions: There were no middlemen involved in the deal, no Indians were paid any commissions for helping the Swedes to secure the contract, and that the Rs 64-crore paid to Win Chadha, Svenska, Moresco-Moineao, and AE Services were "winding up" costs for consultancy services provided by them to Bofors. Also, the JPC concluded that despite the Government's best efforts, some of these companies remained untraceable and that the Swedes had been unable to supply the names of the people who had benefited because of secrecy laws.

This, in summation, has been the official and constantly-repeated theme of the Government—including that of Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi.

But has the Government really made every effort to get at the names, in other words, to comply with what is after all its most solemnly pledged objective? The first massive doubt was raised by Sundarji's revelation that his advice to threaten cancellation of the contract to pressure Bofors into coughing up the names, was turned down by Rajiv.

Where the October 9 Hindu story, and the one that Kasturi refused to publish on October 11, break new ground is in showing that the JPC's conclusions are totally untenable, and that the Swedish Government too colluded in the lies. Ram's investigation unearthed a mass of documents from Swedish sources, including a secret portion of the SNAB report which declared that Chadha was the "principal beneficiary behind Svenska Incorporated"—one of the three front companies which was paid Rs 37.7 crore specifically for its help to Bofors in winning the

N. RAM

"They can't go after Chadha or Hindujas"

FOR nearly two years N. Ram, the Marxist-oriented associate editor of the Madras-based The Hindu and his Geneva reporter Chitra Subramaniam, have been giving their readers a blow-by-blow commentary on Bofors pay-offs. But last fortnight, the iconoclastic Ram jumped from the ringside seat into the ring, and went public, charging his editor-uncle G. Kasturi of sabotaging the latest exposes. He released the unpublished documents to select papers. Ram spoke for two hours to Associate Editor RAMINDAR SINGH about the exposes and the fall-out. Excerpts:

BHAWAN SINGH

Q. You have published so many documents. What have they proved?

A. Bofors says that there was no connection between the payments and the contract, but the documents prove they all were contingent on winning the contract. I have no doubt that Win Chadha was the principal beneficiary of Svenska. He was entitled to 6.2 per cent and somebody—that is AE Services Limited—cuts in on November 15, 1985 and takes away 3 per cent, four months before the signing of the contract. It makes no sense because AE Services performed no service whatever.

Q. Who is behind AE Services?

A. I want to keep that for later. We have a document of a meeting between Bob Wilson of AE Services and Martin Ardbo (former president of Bofors) in which Wilson says he will never reveal the persons behind AE's holding company Ciaou Anstalt.

Q. The Government knows this?

A. Rajiv Gandhi and Gopi Arora are fully in the picture. Officially the Government came to know of AE Services only in September '87 (when Bofors gave a list of the recipient companies). But, on behalf of top people, the CBI had negotiated with Bob Wilson of AE Services before that.

> "I told Rajiv Gandhi when I met him sometime last year that A.E. Services is your real smoking gun.... He was terribly nervous."

Q. Are you convinced this is a cover-up which goes right to the top?

A. Absolutely. Right to the top. But they can't take any action, they have got tied down. I am convinced completely that they cannot afford to go after Chadha, or the Hinduja nexus with Pitco-Moresco. The minimum would have been to go after Chadha, why can't they do it? Because the whole story of the cuts will come out.

Q. Should Rajiv resign?

A. Absolutely. Rajiv Gandhi is involved in a corrupt deal, and in the cover-up of it. If it's somebody else, then what's there to hide?

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Q. Are we going to get to know the names of those who took the money?

A. I told Rajiv Gandhi when I met him (last year) that AE Services is your real smoking gun. He said he did not take (money) nor his family, but if some party politician took it then I must help him to find out. Now I discover that Moresco is even more damaging. And it links up with what G.P. Hinduja told me in April 1988. He said: "Of course we know who is behind Svenska, who is behind AE, who is behind Pitco, but we cannot reveal it because of a larger objective."

Q. What kind of feeling did you get after your meeting with Rajiv?

A. He was terribly nervous. It appeared he either did not know anything or knew too much. He was interested that I should look at the Middle East connection; he suggested there was a Middle East angle involved. That's what the Hindujas were telling us.

Q. Did he suggest you should not publish anything else on Bofors?

A. Nothing like that. It was to get a briefing, to find out. The first 20 minutes talk about Sri Lanka was very relaxed. On Bofors it became strained. He was nervous. He took notes and often told me: "Don't go too fast. I'm getting mixed up." Basically he said, please cooperate. It was very odd: they ask you for material, want cooperation but there's no follow-up. They were very angry later on. G. Parthasarathy (joint secretary to the prime minister) came to me repeatedly afterwards and asked: "Are you a campaign journalist like Arun Shourie?" He set up a meeting with Katre, who said he had told Rajiv that the documents were authentic.

Q. What is your view of Rajiv's Government besides his sins on Bofors?

A. There are many other corrupt deals. HDW for one. All round, in matters of policy too, he has flunked the test. He should go.

Q. What is the specific charge?

A. The specific charge is that the Government of India has colluded with Bofors and in a secondary capacity with the Swedish Government to obstruct justice. It has connived at the doctoring of facts and conspicuously failed to go after leads established. There is a conflict of interest because of the nature of AE services and even Pitco-Moresco. I have reason to believe that you cannot possibly afford to have the owners of AE Services and Moresco-Pitco revealed.

Q. Is Rajiv Gandhi responsible?

A. Rajiv Gandhi directs this.

Q. What are the other leads they failed to act on?

A. No cooperation was given in August 1987 to Ringberg, who was sitting on a mass of information and documents. He repeatedly asked for cooperation and sent questions to Katre who said his hands were tied because he was assisting the JPC. This was the device used to obstruct any possibility of cooperating with the Swedes.

Q. You are convinced that Pitco-Moresco is a Hinduja operation?

A. Pitco is definitely linked with Hindujas. We published three documents on it, where the Pitco address was care of G.P. Hinduja, Sangam Limited. The original agreement with Pitco dated 1979 said its entitlement was 8 per cent. That would have meant Rs 120 crore on the value of the Bofors contract. When Pitco became Moresco, the entitlement was divided into three parts and banked in the code names of Tulip, Lotus and Mont Blanc. Pitco is basically a front for a Swiss holding company Sogevalor.

> "The Government of India has clearly colluded with Bofors and, in a secondary capacity, with the Government of Sweden to obstruct justice."

Q. How will your stand affect the family ownership of the newspaper?

A. I think there will be a division but who can say. I think public response will shame any element which tries,... let the people judge. After June 1988 Kasturi said 'no more Bofors'. But in November we published something. After that he would not permit even the first piece about the SNAB secret report. I gave him three days saying I will have no choice but to go public. So he printed the first.

It was doublespeak. First he said "no Bofors", then asked "what's new", and then he wanted to clear everything once and for all. He was obviously reacting to some environmental danger. Then, when that editor's note appeared on the front page saying "enough has been written on Bofors...", that did it.

Howitzer contract in India.

This, by itself, totally demolishes the Bofors line, aped willingly by the JPC and the Indian Government, that no Indians were paid, that there were no middlemen, and that only winding up charges were involved. Though the full SNAB report was presented to the Swedish cabinet in June 1987 by the minister for foreign trade Anita Gradin, yet, on April 12, 1988, Gradin told a constitutional committee investigating Bofors: "The report (of the audit bureau) does not say it could be anything else but winding up costs."

The charitable explanation for this would be that the Swedes simply refused to part with the secret report despite the Indian Government's persistence and so the JPC and the Government came to their conclusions on the basis of the information available. But the worst case scenario—as it emerges from The Hindu's documents—suggests that the Government was not only less than eager to pursue leads but that it appeared to have misled the JPC by providing it selective information. Thus the Government obscured a vital trail that had been established during a crucial September 1987 meeting between representatives of Bofors and a delegation of secretaries of the Indian Government.

BETWEEN September 16 and 18, 1987, Bofors President Per Ove Morberg and Chief Jurist Lars Gothlin, met with a high-level Indian team comprising the then defence secretary S.K. Bhatnagar, law secretary P.K. Kartha, special secretary to the prime minister, Gopi Arora and additional secretary, defence, N.N. Vohra. This was prior to their scheduled appearance before the JPC. At this meeting, two crucial things gave the Government a fresh opportunity to pursue the matter of the payments. First, in response to a question from the Indian side, Morberg admitted that he had given details about the Svenska payments to the Swedish Central Bank. This has raised the question of whether anybody in the Indian Government had knowledge at that time of some part of the secret portion of the SNAB report, which had concluded on the basis of Morberg's statement to the bank, that Chadha was a middleman. Even if the Government did not have prior knowledge, the point is that the subject of Morberg's admission to the bank never came up before the JPC for any kind of questioning.

And perhaps for good reasons. Because the secret minutes of this meeting between Bofors and the Indian team were withheld from the JPC. These minutes also list details of the payments made to Pitco

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

At South Indian Bank you are not just a face in a crowd.

The South Indian Bank believes in giving you personalised attention, personalised service. Its special schemes include the Vajra Nidhi Scheme, the Kalpaka Nidhi Scheme, the Jubilee Cash Certificates, and the new Home Loan Scheme. Today, if South Indian Bank is known as the people's bank, it is because of its concern for the individual. You.

The South Indian Bank Ltd

Regd. Office: Trichur

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

MAA COMMUNICATIONS 903

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

(whose name was later changed to Moresco) and AE Services. Moresco, the minutes said, was legally registered in Switzerland, and AE Services in the UK. Here the plot thickens, because the Swedes had, perhaps unwittingly, given away more than they should have.

The Hindu in documents published in April-June 1987, had mentioned these very companies as being the recipients of the payoff money, and had in fact, linked Pitco to the Hinduja family—a charge hotly denied by them. The Government had then asked CBI Director Mohan Katre to help the JPC investigate the authenticity of The Hindu documents. And then, four months later, the Swedes were officially confirming the existence of Moresco as a registered company that had received some of the payments.

The Ram-Subramaniam story suggests that Bofors and the Indian Government, nervous about where the trail would lead if they passed on details about the Moresco connection to the JPC, acted in tandem to suppress this information from the JPC. For on October 6, 1987, Bofors sent a letter to the Indian defence secretary stating that Moresco was not the name of the company but a

THE HINDU

Pangs of Change

"THE Hindu always reminds me of an old maiden lady, very prim and proper, who is shocked if a naughty word is uttered in her presence. It is eminently the paper of the bourgeois, comfortably settled in life. Not for it the shady side of existence, the rough and tumble and conflict of public life..."

THAT was Jawaharlal Nehru, many years ago, commenting on 'The Old Lady of Mount Road'. The sobriquet sits well on The Hindu's century-old shoulders. Even today, it continues its tradition of carrying a religious tract based on discourses by Hindu religious leaders on its last page. For its fiercely-loyal 22-lakh readership (circulation: 4,28,672) The Hindu is as much a part of Tamil culture and identity as idli and sambar.

For that, it has paid a willing enough price. Despite the paper's recent launch of a Delhi edition, The Hindu retains a powerful parochial image, an image that Tamil historian S. Muthiah once described as "the modern orthodox Madras conservative". Until Chitra Subramaniam and the paper's associate editor and part-owner Narasimhan Ram launched their series of sensational exposes on the Bofors scandal and radically altered the paper's image.

Last fortnight's press conference by N. Ram, attacking his uncle-editor, Gopalan Kasturi, for allegedly caving into government pressure, was rendered even more extraordinary by the fact that it was The Hindu that was involved. Screaming headlines, sensational exposures, dogged investigations and public family feuds are as alien to The Hindu image as was Ram's move. In a sense, the family differences are a reflection of the paper's own internal struggle, spearheaded by Ram, to shed its conservatism and gain wider editorial acceptance.

Ironically, The Hindu's early image was adventurous, even rebellious. In 1889 it became a daily and 16 years later, for the sum of Rs 75,000, passed into the hands of Kasturiranga Iyengar, an ambitious lawyer who was then the paper's legal adviser. His family, whose descendants still control majority shareholding, termed it a "mad venture". Iyengar, changed the paper from a vehicle for social reform into a strictly business proposition.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

At the same time, from being a comfortable adjunct to the Tamilian's morning cup of filtered coffee, the paper acquired a more controversial aura, attacking the philosophy of Annie Besant and George Arundale. But The Hindu's finest hour was when it adopted the cause of Independence in 1918. From then, its growth and stature was inextricably linked with that of the nationalist movement.

The editors that followed from the family stable led to sharp fluctuations in the paper's editorial stance. After A. Rangaswami became editor in 1928, it witnessed an era of editorial moderation, striving to copy as closely as possible, its editorial guru, The Times, London: an emphasis on views rather than on news.

That legacy epitomises the current division in the family. G. Kasturi, the editor since 1965, is a conservative. N. Ram, quite the rebel: a Marxist background, married to an Englishwoman. In the family, he is resented for not being a "team player".

That could decide his future position in the paper. Kasturi denied that there had been any government pressure on the paper, saying that there was "nothing new" in the latest Bofors expose. Most of the paper's staffers disagree and feel that Kasturi is being pressured, if not by the Government, then by others named in the scandal.

However, at the meeting of family shareholders last fortnight to decide on aborting the Bofors reports, a majority of them, including Ram's younger brother and deputy editor, N. Ravi, backed Kasturi. This is not at all surprising for most of them, unlike Ram, are cut from traditional Hindu cloth.

There were other reasons for friction. Ram had declared publicly that Karunanidhi would be the next chief minister, a stand Kasturi took strong objection to. In public speeches, Ram has been stating categorically that Rajiv will lose the next election, another stand that Kasturi severely frowned upon.

After last fortnight, that relationship has reached breaking point. The family is deliberating now on whether to allow Ram to continue or ease him out. On that will also depend the future of The Hindu.

—DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

reference (code) name for Moineao S.A. with which Bofors purportedly had an agreement since 1979. "With reference to the minutes dated September 19, 1987, we would like to give the following information: Moresco is not a company but a reference for Moineao S.A.," Morberg wrote to Bhatnagar. Moineao's address was listed in Geneva. Even The Hindu's sharp nosed team was initially misled by this false scent and started investigating Moineao, but they soon homed in on the real connection with Pitco-Moresco.

Mohan Katre

Gopi Arora

S.K. Bhatnagar

The exposes in The Hindu indicate that senior Indian officials appeared to be working in tandem with the Swedes in order to manage the crisis.

The JPC report says that the information given by the Swedes to the Indian delegation during the September meeting and recorded in the secret memo, was passed on to the committee. But a perusal of the report discloses that this was not so. What the Government gave the JPC was information contained in the October 6 letter in which Bofors, for the first time, substituted the name Moineao for Moresco. Nowhere does the JPC report reflect the contents of the September 1987 meeting in which Moresco is described as one of the recipient companies.

The purpose of this, The Hindu reports, was to deflect attention away from the Moresco-Hinduja connection. If the full details of the September meeting had been submitted to the JPC, then the investigating agencies under Katre would have had to probe Moresco's antecedents. Instead, Katre began to pursue the Moineao red herring. After several months, he reported to the JPC that "enquiries made at the Companies Registration Office in Geneva and scrutiny of all published information of all companies registered in Switzerland reveal that no company by the name of Moineao S.A. is registered. Similarly the names of Moresco and Pitco were also not found in these records."

It was true that Moineao S.A. did not exist. But an independent inquiry by The Hindu in September 1989, through a computer-aided search from the Central Federal Registry in Berne, confirmed the existence of Pitco and Moresco. The Ram-Subramaniam investigation is now zeroing in on the ownership of Pitco-Moresco as well as that of AE Services. According to Ram, there is solid information on the record showing that high-level Indian Government contacts were established with AE Services several months before the September 1987 meeting, at which the AE Services' name was officially communicated to the Indian delegation for the first time.

In June 1987, The Hindu published documents linking the Hindujas to the payoffs. By October 1988, CBI had confirmation of the documents' authenticity.

While Moresco was entitled to a solid 8 per cent commission on the value of the contract, The Hindu investigation details how Chadha and Svenska's 6 per cent was carved up, with Svenska retaining half and the remaining 3 per cent going to the mysterious last-minute entrant, AE Services which, on its own admission, had rendered no service in India in connection with the contract.

Chadha, in fact, was treated with kid gloves and deference by the Government even after the earlier censored SNAB report revealed that he had received substantial sums. He was allowed to leave the country and return on his own terms and was merely fined Rs 70,000 for technical violation of the foreign exchange regulations, a penalty he has appealed against before the FERA Appellate Board. Chadha was in Delhi when the latest storm broke but remained incommunicado.

In summary, The Hindu revelations are devastating. According to the paper, the total payoffs would have mounted to Rs 155 crore. It has revealed that contrary to the Government-JPC line, the Bofors deal had middlemen and commission agents; that information given to the Government that could have led to a line of inquiry against Moresco was withheld from the JPC which was fed, instead, the name of a non-existent company; that the Government knew, and officially confirmed in October 1988, that The Hindu's documents of April 1987, establishing the Pitco-Moresco-Hinduja connection, were authentic.

Government reaction was all too familiar. It pleaded for cooperation from the press and despatched officials to Switzerland for a new inquiry. In 1987 also, in response to the Hindu exposures, it promised action and sent its sleuths to Switzerland. Nothing came of it. Once again the ball is firmly in the government's court.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR with RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Featured here is part of the Louis Philippe collection in reds.

Louis Philippe. The only shirt with international features:

Exclusive fabric specially designed for Louis Philippe.

Perfect matching of every part for flawless elegance.

Neat, twin-needled sideseams.

French seaming for underarm comfort.

A fused, two-piece collar for a perfect fit.

And buttoned-down sleeve guards to prevent the sleeves from gaping open.

CHAITRA·K·MCL 32 R

Louis Philippe
SIGNED DESIGNERWEAR

ALSO FROM THE MAKERS OF LOUIS PHILIPPE, THE Elysée RANGE OF SHIRTS AND TROUSERS.

Louis Philippe and Elysée are designer labels of The British Van Heusen Co., U.K. brought to you by Madura Coats Ltd.

Louis Philippe Exclusive Showrooms at: BANGALORE: Davidoss Building, Commercial Street; BOMBAY: India House No.2, Kemps Corner; CALCUTTA: 3B, Upper Wood Street; COCHIN: North End, M.G. Road; NEW DELHI: 43, South Extension I; MADRAS: Kasi Seethai Hall, Opp. Anna Flyover.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya S

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

What they don't teach you at Harvard Business School.

For those engaged in marketing warfare, the ammunition. The corporate briefcase by Csango. A totally new positioning statement for the entrepreneur of today. Guaranteed to do things to your marketability. Subliminally, of course. It's built on the principles of compartmentalization. So it's as functional inside as it's good-looking on the outside. Even if you're not a corporate mover and shaker, come invest in the finest leather accessories at Csango. Suitcases. Wallets. Totes. Belts. Bags. Folders. And jackets. So exclusive, they're available at only one address in the country. Make a lateral move to Csango.

The art. The craft. The store.

Dhanraj Mahal, Apollo Bunder, Bombay.
Kakani Towers, Nungambakkam, Madras.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"In iron making alone, we have saved energy worth over Rs 100 crore during the past decade."

Mr L M Chatterjee, Divisional Manager, Blast Furnaces, feels proud of his Company's achievement and, perhaps, justifiably so.

As the world is fast running out of energy reserves and the cost of energy is skyrocketing, industries across the world are exploring all possible ways and means to maximise energy conservation.

India is a country that is rich in iron ore, but does not have enough coking coal to convert this ore into iron. In this context, it is of paramount national interest, to develop an energy conservation programme that is structured to optimise the utilisation of raw materials. And the importance of an effective energy management programme, in a steel plant, cannot be overemphasised.

TISTECH ENERGY

And it is here that Tata Steel technology or TISTECH is playing a vital role.

In iron making alone, a series of measures have been taken to ensure maximum energy conservation in an area where 65% of the energy consumption takes place in a steel plant.

In the coke ovens, closer monitoring of oven temperature, better control over fuel air ratio have improved the quality of coke and resulted in major energy savings.

In the blast furnace, the introduction of variable throat armour along with the rotating chute has substantially reduced the coke rate. Better coke quality, increased proportion of sinter and higher blast temperatures have all contributed to energy savings.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Today, the introduction of stamp charging technology to produce better coke and the development of a new process to utilise blue dust in sinter making, clearly illustrate TISTECH's success in working out a relevant energy management programme that is appropriate to the Indian context. A programme that encompasses every operation from mining to steel making and processing. A programme that involves every mind at Tata Steel. A programme that is designed to contribute many more crores of rupees to the national exchequer in the years to come.

Not only machines and processes, TISTECH is working on minds too. Today people in the collieries are talking not only 'tonnes' but 'energy values' and 'ash contents'. Workers in blast furnaces are discussing 'calories' used for producing iron. In other words, a whole new philosophy is operating at Tata Steel.

Because TISTECH ENERGY is more than an energy conservation programme in a steel plant. It is a pioneering attempt at evolving a technology that is relevant and an attitude that is contemporary. TISTECH ENERGY is a deep rooted commitment towards meeting the country's needs of today without compromising its tomorrow.

- 100°C higher hot blast temperature reduces input of coke
- Rs. 100 crore energy savings in the iron making stage alone
- Rotating chute and variable throat armour introduced to reduce coke rate
- Stamp charging technology introduced to produce better coke for blast furnaces

TATA STEEL

The first and still the foremost

An external view of a Blast Furnace

Rotating chute in a Blast Furnace

HTA 3756

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJIV GANDHI

Flying Into Battle

Rajiv Gandhi is launching blistering attacks on the Opposition even as he attempts to refurbish his secular image.

In the last few months, Rajiv has criss-crossed half the country and laid foundation stones for about two dozen projects worth over Rs 8,000 crore.

WHIRLWIND trips to different parts of the country and the regular laying of foundation-stones in the months before the elections have been a political ritual for most prime ministers. Faced with a gritty battle ahead, Rajiv Gandhi is conforming to this practice with a new fierceness. Recently, he has been barnstorming the country, playing out a calculated strategy.

In less than six weeks, the prime minister has criss-crossed almost half the country covering over 200 Lok Sabha constituencies, addressing over 50 public meetings and laying the foundation-stones of about two dozen new projects worth over Rs 8,000 crore. He has also Says Mulayam Singh Yadav, Uttar Pradesh Janata Dal chief: "Like his mother he has launched the election campaign on predictable lines, misusing public funds for purely political purposes." The ruling party, not surprisingly, has a different explanation. Says Ghulam Nabi Azad, AICC(I) general secretary: "The prime minister always liked to be amongst the people and Congress(I) workers. That is perhaps the most effective way of getting the feedback not only on the party but also on the implementation of the government schemes."

Undoubtedly, a well-defined objective underlies Rajiv's forays into the countryside. His visits were mostly confined to the Hindi heartland where he faces major threats from the BJP and the Janata Dal. Last month, he visited Rajasthan, Madhya Pradesh, Uttar Pradesh, Gujarat and Maharashtra. The states were chosen after careful planning and the target audience was defined. While it was the slum dwellers in Maharashtra—in Gujarat, Madhya Pradesh and Uttar Pradesh, the peasantry was the primary target.

A scrutiny of Rajiv's speeches during such tours points to the thorough homework done by his campaign managers to apprise him of the issues involved in the politics of the different states. The target for his attack varies, from the BJP in Madhya Pradesh and Gujarat to the Janata Dal in Uttar Pradesh. If he promises a new package for the farmers in Rajasthan, assurances are given to the slum dwellers of Dharavi in Bombay that their living conditions would be improved.

Maps by B.K. SHARMA

In six weeks, Rajiv has addressed 50 meetings and covered 200 constituencies.

On October 5, he laid the foundation-stone for the Rs 103-crore Sidhmukh irrigation project at Birani in the Ganganagar district of Rajasthan. He told a rally that in the Parliament session beginning later in the month a package programme for farmers would be announced. Next day, hopping over to Gujarat, he accused V.P. Singh of opposing the Narmada river project, warning his audience that they could vote for the Opposition but at the risk of the dam project being reviewed. Interestingly, a day before Singh had clarified that with Rs 700 crore having already been spent on the project, it should be completed. Tempting the predominantly agricultural Rajasthan with the hope of a bonanza for the farmers he sought to politicise what was essentially an ecological controversy.

Briefed about the new grounds the BJP had gained in Gujarat, he charged the party with instigating communal violence and working for the 'Hindu Rashtra'. Shrewdly, he punctuated this attack on the BJP with an occasional praise for the communists. To keep the Opposition somehow divided is his major objective. He asked: "But why are the CPI and CPI(M) silent (on the proposed BJP-Janata Dal poll alignment)?" While he claims that many promises would be realised if the Congress(I) wins, Rajiv warns that there will be only chaos and confusion if the Opposition gets voted to power.

Addressing a public meeting at

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

R.K. GUPTA

Singh addressing a rally: rapport

V.P. SINGH

Tenacious Campaign

Visits to four states and 50 Lok Sabha constituencies in the Hindi belt. An endless series of rallies—of tribals, students, farmers and workers. And confabulations with leaders of his own and opposition parties. All in the space of one month. It is clearly campaign time for Janata Dal President Vishwanath Pratap Singh. Said he: "Removing the Rajiv Gandhi Government is the biggest challenge of my life. And all my energies are now being channelled to achieve that objective."

It's a tough objective. The odds are heavily against him. Pitted against him is the gargantuan might of the Government and the formidable power of the electronic media. At the same time, he has to reckon with the squabbling among various pressure groups in the Janata Dal. Yet Singh remains unfazed—pushing ahead with grit and rugged tenacity.

His rival used aeroplanes and helicopters—in themselves, successful crowd-pullers. Singh employed humbler means. In his own home state, Uttar Pradesh, he used a bicycle. The aim was obvious: to identify himself with the toiling masses. And the crowds responded. As they did to his puns and biting ridicule. Singh did not denounce Rajiv Gandhi. Nor did he hurl vituperation against Doordarshan. He preferred to call it "jhoothdarshan" or "Rajiv Darshan". The effect was more devastating. And instead of long-winded speeches, he threw questions to his audience who delighted in answering them. The rapport which the dialogue established was excellent.

The strategy was evident all through the last month. In a hectic one-month spell of campaigning beginning September 5, Singh participated in 17 big rallies including an excruciating bicycle rally in western Uttar Pradesh immediately after which he fell ill.

The first round of rallies was in eastern Uttar Pradesh. The state, Singh knows, could possibly decide the outcome of the elections. Even more, it could set the mood for the entire Hindi belt. Not surprisingly, he singled it out for special attention. And the move seemed to have paid off. The public response was impressive and political observers are already talking of a "VP wave" raging through the state.

During the past month, V.P. Singh addressed 17 rallies and visited four states.

After the first round of campaigning, he hopped to the capital on September 12 to address a lunch-time meeting of government employees along with BJP leader Atal Behari Vajpayee. It was a lethal combination—Vajpayee's oratory with Singh's question-and-answer dialogue with the audience.

The next day, it was the leftists who came in for attention. Singh, along with Devi Lal, held talks with West Bengal Chief Minister Jyoti Basu, known to be the most pragmatic of the Marxist leaders. The objective: an electoral adjustment including both the left and the right that would confront the ruling Congress(I) with a single candidate in every constituency.

Next stop: Nagpur, where Singh addressed several rallies. Back in Delhi, Singh, with a galaxy of opposition leaders excluding the CPI(M), addressed a mammoth rally to celebrate Haryana Chief Minister Devi Lal's birthday.

Then, on to Rajasthan for a two-day tour along with Devi Lal. The rise in the prices of sugar and other essential commodities formed a major feature of his attack on the Government here.

Sarnath was next on the itinerary. The occasion: the centenary celebration of Acharya Narendra Dev, doyen of the socialist movement in India. And finally, a trip to Gujarat.

Indeed, Singh is like a man possessed—who believes that his destiny is to fight. And though his adversary has sophisticated weaponry at his disposal, Singh is slowly discovering that it can cut both ways.

Doordarshan, for instance. For Rajiv Gandhi, it provides access to a nationwide audience. And since fair play is not an article of faith with the ruling party, Singh can be freely attacked without fear of retaliation. But that very lack of restraint has boomeranged. An overkill of propaganda against Singh on Doordarshan has aroused, at the very minimum, curiosity, and often, sympathy for him. Unwittingly, the Government media has made a martyr out of him.

Also, unlike Rajiv Gandhi, Singh has neither VIP admirers nor rings of security personnel who prevent him from reaching out to the people. In the end, that could make a crucial difference.

—BHASKAR ROY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sanjay Photographers

Rajiv at Ambaji temple; laying the stone for a petrochemical project

Mandsaur in Madhya Pradesh, he threatened the traders with stern action if they failed to check prices of essential commodities. Moving at great pace, the prime minister, during a two-day visit to Madhya Pradesh at the end of September, covered 12 constituencies. And in a spurt of public relations, he visited an ailing Mother Teresa in a Calcutta nursing home and former cricket star Lala Amarnath at New Delhi's Ram Manohar Lohia Hospital.

Rajiv's entire campaign strategy has been elaborately chalked out by a team comprising both bureaucrats and party functionaries. Immediately after the opposition members resigned en masse from the Lok Sabha, the AICC(I) decided that the prime minister should address a rally in every revenue division of the country. Even some experts were consulted for the kind of campaign Rajiv should spearhead. The prime ministerial think-tank was impressed by the fact that despite the certain edge the Democrat challenger Michael Dukakis had maintained in the beginning of the last US presidential election, George Bush surged ahead with an aggressive negative campaign attacking his opponent. AICC(I) General Secretary V. N. Gadgil admits: "Our campaign will be both negative and positive."

As the strategy unfolds, it seems the thrust is more on attacking the Opposition. The party bosses have realised that none of the much publicised programmes like the Panchayati Raj and Jawahar Rozgar Yojana is selling as well as was expected. So, the new strategy is: offence is the best defence. They know that the battle will be won even before the polling day if the Opposition can be kept divided. The communalism issue has become a useful weapon for Rajiv. With this one stone he is hoping to kill several birds—bring back the Muslims to the Congress-fold, drive a wedge into the Opposition and refurbish his own secular image.

Even in clearing the projects for which the prime minister is laying the foundation-stones in different states, norms are being increasingly relaxed. Two major petrochemical projects—Auriya of the Gas Authority of India Ltd and the Gujarat project of the Indian Petrochemicals Ltd—were cleared in just 48 hours to facilitate Rajiv's pre-election campaign. The two projects involved an investment of Rs 4,000 crore.

While sharpening the attack on his rivals, Rajiv still seems to believe in the efficacy of the carrot. In a bid to impress the rural electorate about the benefits of Panchayati Raj he has recently written a letter directly to the village sarpanchs intimating them about the schemes and projects for which the panchayats will receive finance. A controversy erupted when the Haryana Chief Minister Devi Lal, incensed by what he felt was an effort by the prime minister to bypass the state governments and interfere in their affairs, blocked the delivery of the letters. The promises made by Rajiv during campaigning are rarely kept:

- Haryana is yet to receive the Rs 1,500-crore oil refinery at Karnal which he promised before the June 1987 assembly elections. His assurance that the Sutlej-Yamuna Link canal would be completed for drawing the state's share of the Ravi-Beas waters still remains unfulfilled.
- He pledged additional projects worth Rs 1,000 crore to Jammu and Kashmir after his accord with Farooq Abdullah. So far, the state has received only Rs 150 crore.
- Out of a promised Rs 100 crore for slum development in Maharashtra, the state has received only Rs 35 crore.

But promises not kept is no deterrent to making fresh ones. So Rajiv moves from place to place holding out visions of the manna to come. Hoping that in the wild hyperbole that marks electioneering he will be forgiven the past, and be given a new lease for the future.

—BHASKAR ROY

Slab Spree

Rajiv lays foundation-stones on:

August 18: for a medical college at Tumkur and a beedi workers' colony at Mysore—both in Karnataka.

August 28: of Haj Manzil, Delhi.

September 1: of a Rs 695-crore fertiliser plant at Shahjahanpur, Uttar Pradesh.

September 15: of pagasse-based newsprint factory at Aliganj, a fertiliser complex at Babrala, a road bridge at Pinhat Ghat, and the Rs 2,000-crore Auriya gas complex at Pata—all in Uttar Pradesh.

September 29: of M.P. Petrochemicals complex at Vijaypur, Madhya Pradesh.

October 5: of Sidhmukh canal at Birani and a benefication plant of the Rajasthan State Mines and Minerals Limited at Jhamarkota—both in Rajasthan.

October 6: of Rs 2,290-crore integrated gas cracker project of the Indian Petrochemicals Corporation at Dehej and a TV glass shell project of GNFC at Borkhadi—both in Gujarat.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WHEN DO YOU WISH YOUR COURIER WAS DHL?

WHEN

YOU'VE BEEN CALLED UP

BY THE DIRECTORS

BECAUSE

YOUR TEXTILE BUYER

LOST HALF A MILLION DOLLARS

BECAUSE

HE DIDN'T GET THE

GARMENT CONTRACT

BECAUSE

THE SAMPLES HE NEEDED

DIDN'T ARRIVE ON TIME

BECAUSE

YOUR COURIER WASN'T

DHL.

RAKA: 2767: 89: A

THAT'S WHEN.

BECAUSE DHL HAS MORE OFFICES WORLDWIDE THAN ANY OTHER COURIER, YOU'RE IN SAFE HANDS ALL THE WAY.

To contact us, please refer to your Telephone/Yellow Pages Directory.

DHL
WORLDWIDE EXPRESS
DHL THE COURIER DIVISION OF AIRFREIGHT LIMITED.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Welcome to a warm hug tonight.

Presenting Tuck In's Duvets. The new quilt cum bedcover.
A warm, cosy quilt at night. Cool, beautiful cover by day.
Ranging in a wide spectrum of designs. In soft pastels, bright florals and stripes.
Also available, specially designed, Tuck In's children's collection.
Now sleep the way the world sleeps.

Tuck In's
duvets

Warmer, lighter, washable quilts.

For more information to: Chandni Associates Palace Chennai Restaurant Rd., Delhi 7. Dealers: BANGALORE: Art Works*, Ph.: 214206. BOMBAY: Benson, Ph.: 822007. Chandni, Chennai, Ph.: [illegible] Little Kingdom, Ph.: 506176. CHANDIGARH: Gift Palace, Ph.: [illegible]. NEW DELHI: Kulkarni, Kangri, Collection, Ph.: [illegible]. Gift Emporium, Ph.: 567184. Handicom Emporium, Ph.: [illegible]. Wonder, Ph.: 672033. Mini's Fabrics, Ph.: 43600. SIMLA: Chetan Chand Alma Ram*, Ph.: 3060. And at all Little Kingdom stores. * Children's Collection only.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PHOTOGRAPH: CHARANJIT SINGH BAGGA

DALAI LAMA

The Politics of Peace

The Nobel Peace prize awarded to the Dalai Lama is an honour long overdue. But in the context of China, it has also acquired a sharp political edge.

THE scene was solemn and worshipful, the only sound, the rich baritone of the robed figure seated on a colourful throne delivering a sermon. Suddenly, in mid-sentence, the sermon abruptly stopped. The congregation looked up in surprise only to discover the real reason: an insect had crawled onto the lap of the bespectacled man on the throne. With infinite care, he manoeuvred the insect onto his finger, gently blew it into the air and watched it land safely on the floor with a broad smile on his face. Only then did he realise that the audience—many who had trekked hundreds of miles to hear his words of wisdom—was anxiously waiting for him to resume his sermon. "But this was more important than what I had to tell you," he exclaimed and immediately burst into loud laughter.

That one incident is more illustrative of the man who is worshipped by 6 million people as the 'living Buddha' than any of his philosophical discourses or his prodigious religious writings. In the most serious of situations, he bubbles over with laughter. Interspersed with his teachings on Buddhism, is his homespun philosophy. "If you believe these teachings, put them into practice," he once told an audience, adding, "if not, forget them." Revered by Tibetans as the reincarnation of Chen-Rezi, the God of Mercy, he calls himself "a simple Buddhist monk".

That unique mixture of humility and responsibility, preacher and reluctant politician, was nowhere more in evidence than last fortnight when the Dalai Lama was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize amid a storm of protest from China, the country that invaded Tibet in 1950, forcing Tenzin Gyatso, 54, the 14th Dalai Lama, into exile in India. Asked for his reaction, his answer was typical of the man. "My case is nothing special," he said, reiterating, "I am just a simple Buddhist monk. Nothing more. Nothing less."

Clearly, the Nobel Peace Prize Committee doesn't think so. Nor do the thousands of people across the world who hailed the decision and added to the wild celebration and all-night dancing in Dharamsala, or 'Little Lhasa', the hill resort in Himachal Pradesh that houses the Tibetan government-in-exile.

The Dalai Lama himself clearly was not expecting to be so honoured. When the announcement was made, he was in California attending a conference (see interview). But to the world, it was a recognition long overdue. As an apostle of peace and an inspiration to his people—and the international community—the Dalai Lama occupies a unique niche. The Wall Street Journal in an editorial, termed the award a "Nobel for the oppressed".

That is precisely what gives this year's award a bold political tint. The reaction from Beijing, terming it "interference in China's internal affairs", aroused speculation that the prize committee—a six-member group of Norwegian statesmen and academics—was making a political statement regarding China's crackdown on the pro-democracy movement.

Perhaps emboldened by the award and widespread acclamation, the Dalai Lama also used the occasion to denounce the Chinese leadership in harsher terms than he normally employs. Charging the People's Republic with "practising a form of genocide", he declared: "Tibetans today face the real possibility of elimination as a people and a nation."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

That uncharacteristic outburst, however, was also a testimonial to the shrewdness and skill with which he has played his other, lesser-known role: that of a political leader to 1.25 lakh exiles, the refugees the world likes to forget. Now, suddenly, the Tibetan question was resurrected on the front pages of the world's press, brought more sharply into focus by the global revulsion against the massacre at Tiananmen Square last June. China's violation of human rights in Tibet, largely ignored by most governments because of China's superpower status, was back as a live international issue.

To many, therefore, the recognition afforded to the 14th Dalai Lama, a line of succession that stretches back 600 years, was equally a tribute to his humanity as it was to the skill with which he has negotiated the diplomatic tightrope he has been forced to walk ever since he fled Tibet 30 years ago. Successive Indian governments have unofficially barred him from playing a political role or making any political statements from Indian soil.

Yet, such is his standing as a respected

■ (Clockwise from below) The Dalai Lama at a religious ceremony; in his office in Dharamsala; and taking a walk the wild ncing in the hill

t houses
e. arly was
d. When e was in nce (see t was a apostle of people—ity—the iche. The l, termed ressed".
his year's reaction rence in d specu-
—a six-atesmen political ackdown nt.
e award
he Dalai enounce er terms ging the g a form etans to-nination

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

world leader—the only true heir to the mantle of the Mahatma who has been his inspiration—that in his own quiet and subtle way, the Dalai Lama has managed to wear his political hat with unobtrusive success. His steadfast stand on non-violence and the search for "peaceful solutions based on mutual respect" has harnessed the militant and restive Tibetan youth who would like him to play a more activist role on the Tibetan question.

■ Dalai Lama addressing a congregation (top); people paying their respects

But his adroit combination of western politicking and serene eastern mysticism has allowed his voice to be more forcefully heard. In the last two years, the Dalai Lama has been touring world capitals, lobbying the US Congress for his 'Peace Zone' plan or pressing for the compromise solution he enunciated at the European Parliament in Strasbourg in 1987—in exchange for ultimate Chinese sovereignty over Tibet and control of defence and foreign policy, the region would be granted internal autonomy.

Thus, to the majority of Tibetans and the worldwide followers of the Buddhist faith (including luminaries like Hollywood actor Richard Gere), the Dalai Lama has, in the circumstances, fulfilled his standing as "Protector of the Land of Snows", keeping alive the spirit of his ancient theocracy in Dharamsala where thousands of Buddhists converge to pay him homage and cherish his homilies.

It is here, in Dharamsala, among his own people and sustained by the spirituality which surrounds him, that Tenzin Gyatso reveals his real self, a man whose unassuming humanity and shrewd mind have coalesced to produce a truly extraordinary human being. Down to earth yet quixotic, he is a leader who sustains his mission in life with a bubbling vitality and self-deprecatory humour.

Last year, reminiscing about his early life in Tibet, he told INDIA TODAY: "In Tibet, whenever I saw farmers taking herds of sheep or yaks to the butcher, I would send my representative to buy the animals and send them to a special farm where they could live for the rest of their lives. I had bought more than 20,000 animals like this." And then that frothy humour surfaces: "Here, being a poor refugee, the best thing I can do is to close my eyes and recite 'mani' (prayers) for them. Don't you think 'mani' is more effective than money?" He spends his day reading, writing or in meditation. In between, he indulges in his favourite hobbies, gardening and gadgetry.

To his people, he may be the absolute spiritual and temporal head of Tibet. But at heart, he has remained a humble if

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Your long wait is over...

KAUSHAMBI APARTMENTS (Phase III)

- At '0' distance from the Developed area of Delhi
- Land in possession and work in progress.
- Possession within 2 years
- Payment in 2 years (Six monthly instalments.)

20% Reservation on Cash down payment.

Details of Apartments on Self Financing Basis

S. No.	Accommodation	Covered area (including circulation) (in sq. mt.)	Cost of apartment in Rs.	Registration Amount (10%+ Rs. 20/-)
1.	Single room Suite/ guest house	27.87	1,75,000	17,520
2.	Double roomed apartment	57.59	3,60,000	36,020
Composite Deluxe Type
3.	Double roomed apartment (Deluxe) 2 bedrooms, drawing/dining and accessories.	84.72	4,65,000	46,520
4.	Three roomed apartment (Deluxe) 2 bedrooms drawing/dining, lounge & accessories	113.34	6,20,000	62,020
5.	Four roomed apartment (Deluxe) 3 bedrooms, drawing/dining lounge & accessories.	134.24	7,25,000	72,520

Salient Features:- 24 hours water & electric supply • Provision for telephone, geyser, multi channel antenna double lifts • Facilities of school, club, community centre & parking etc.

Registration booklet can be had from Allahabad Bank Wright Ganj on payment of Rs. 35/- (Rs. Thirty Five) & also from following branches by paying Rs. 45/- (Rs. Forty Five) through M.O. to Allahabad Bank, Wright Ganj, Ghaziabad.

Ghaziabad : Wright Ganj (Ghanta Ghar) • Navyug Market • Delhi Gate • New Delhi : 17, Parliament Street • Lajpat Nagar • Karol Bagh • Darya Ganj • Delhi : Chandni Chowk • Park Road, Krishnanagar. Bombay : Fort. Madras : Mount Road. Calcutta : 14, India Exchange Place. Lucknow : Hazrat Ganj. Meerut : Begum Bridge. Chandigarh : Sector 17-B, Jalandhar : Civil Lines. Ludhiana: Clock Tower. Amritsar : Katra Ahluwalia • Allabahad: Civil Lines Kanpur: Swarup Nagar Varanasi: Chowk Branch

Registration opens from 28.9.89 & closes on 27.10.89

KRITI

Anil Kumar Sharma
Secretary

Prabhu Nath Misra
Vice Chairman

Ghaziabad Development Authority

(Vikas Path, Ghaziabad, U.P.)

A beautiful City—Our Commitment

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

charismatic Buddhist monk who loves laughter and the rustic simplicity of his home in exile. Even when flying abroad on his frequent diplomatic missions, he prefers to fly economy class, despite the fact that he is afforded the status of a head of state. Had China's ruthless suppression of the Tibetan uprising in March 1959 not taken place, the modern world would perhaps have seen a different Dalai Lama enjoying the powers due to a monarch, a pope, a dictator and a president, as his predecessors once did.

The Dalai Lama's innate humility is testimony to his humble origins. Born in a cowshed in the obscure farming village of Takster 54 years ago, Tenzin Gyatso was two years old when a party of monks arrived at his door led by Kewtsand Rinpoche, a senior lama of Lhasa's Sera Monastry. They were a search party, decreed by Tibetan tradition, to find a successor to the 13th Dalai Lama who had died in 1933. They had been led there by a series of auspicious signs and symbols.

THE two-year-old boy was shown an array of objects from which he unerringly identified the late Dalai Lama's eating bowl, spectacles, walking stick and other personal items. He also displayed the physical characteristics of a Dalai Lama. Taken in procession to Lhasa, he was installed in Potala Palace to undertake an 18-year course in metaphysics. In February 1940, he was installed on the Dalai Lama's Lion Throne. Though he remained a playful little boy with a mischievous streak, by the age of seven he was leading prayers before 2,000 monks. At the age of 15, he was plunged into international politics when Chinese forces invaded Tibet and he went to Beijing to negotiate with Mao Zedong. In 1959, disguised as a soldier, he travelled across the mountains of his beloved homeland to exile in India.

Even now, his self-deprecating attitude stands as a testament to his will and his inner strength. "Thanks to China, I am the first Dalai Lama to be interviewed by BBC or the world media," he chuckles, adding in a more sober vein, "but this is the darkest and the most crucial phase in the history of Tibet. That is why the present Dalai Lama has become the most needed, the most useful and the saddest Dalai Lama." And none more deserving of the Nobel Peace Prize.

—DILIP BOBB with VIJAY KRANTI

INTERVIEW

"My belief in non-violence is fortified"

AS Egil Aarvik, chairman of the Nobel Peace Prize Committee announced the Nobel Peace Prize for 1989 in Oslo last fortnight, Tibetan refugee communities all over the world celebrated with prayers, cheers and 'chang' (home brewed beer). But the 14th Dalai Lama, Tenzin Gyatso, 54—recipient of the prestigious award worth 3 million Swedish kroner (Rs 7.5 million)—was his usual serene self at the California University campus in Los Angeles where he was attending an east-west foundation conference. The Dalai Lama agreed to a telephonic interview with INDIA TODAY'S VIJAY KRANTI. Excerpts:

Q. Aren't you excited about winning the world's most coveted prize?

A. Being a monk I should not be bothered about whether I get this or that award. But I do realise this prize has been given to me in recognition of my contribution towards peace and human rights. It has fortified my belief in non-violence, although I would have continued my efforts in this direction even otherwise.

Q. How will this affect the Tibetan cause?

A. It should help everyone who believes in peace. And, of course, the Tibetan cause will get a better understanding from people who were earlier unaware of it. Now that the Dalai Lama has been selected for the prize, everyone in the world would like to know what is Tibet and who is this Dalai Lama. This will give my people fresh encouragement and determination.

Q. How do you intend to use the prize money?

A. I have yet to make up my mind. I have given some thought to this question and I have some good ideas too. One is that a part of the money should be spent on a good programme to alleviate hunger in the world. I am quite aware that many of my fellow refugees have yet to be settled properly and that we could not do this for want of funds in the past. Yet, I strongly believe that more than the Tibetan refugees, our brethren in Africa and other parts of the world whose existence is threatened by starvation, need attention and help immediately.

Q. Do you have any other plans?

A. Yes. Another idea is that I invest a part of this money on a programme which would aim at bringing peace to the world. We need a permanent solution to hunger. And once there is peace on this earth, there is no chance of any one dying of hunger. I think it will be a good investment.

Q. Do you have any specific organisation in mind?

A. There are quite a few organisations which are seriously working along these lines. One is the Peace University in Costa Rica. There are many others. Then I also think it would be a good idea to have a global programme for people's education, especially the young. It should be education on peace and preservation of the environment. People who are seriously working in this direction would be invited to evolve a common programme.

Q. What about peace in Tibet?

A. In the past two years, our people have been demonstrating for their due human rights. I am happy this movement has been non-violent. Even the Chinese students' non-violent movement has given me new hope about China and Tibet.

Q. But the Chinese Government does not believe in what you are preaching.

A. Unfortunately, that is true. But I have faith in the path of ahimsa which Mahatma Gandhi showed. It has always inspired me. I hope Tibet's plight will be resolved in a similar manner.

Q. If the Tibetan issue remains unsettled for too long, don't you think the Tibetan youth may adopt the path of violence out of frustration?

A. To such a question my answer is quite simple: if the situation goes out of my hands or if the Tibetan freedom movement goes against my philosophy, the only thing I can do is quit. Non-violence is the only way.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

STAR OF THE TIMES.

EA 7044-55E

EA 2634-59P

EB 0312-50E

EA2632-54P

She's got star quality. Whichever face she shows the world, it's there. That aura of elegance. Those perfectly timed movements. Water resistant timepieces famous the world over. Citizen. For the lady of fashion, it's time to be the star.

Available at Duty Free Shops in India (Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and Trivandrum).

CITIZEN

CITIZEN IS A REGISTERED TRADEMARK OF CITIZEN WATCH CO, JAPAN.

SUPPORTED BY THE MOST EXTENSIVE SERVICE CENTRE NETWORK IN INDIA: BOMBAY: Crown Watch Corporation, 1/F, 24 Mahendra Chambers, 136 D.N. Road, Opp. V.T. Station, Bombay 400 001 • 16/18 Abdul Rehman Street, Bombay 400 003 NEW DELHI: Amarson Watch Co., 10-C Connaught Place, New Delhi 110 001 • 71 Janpath, New Delhi 110 001 COCHIN: Kanlamparam Bros. Watch Co., P.B. No. 2582, Broadway, Ernakulam, Cochin 682 031 MADRAS: Dushi & Dushi, 3 Blackers Road, Next to Casino Theatre, Mount Road, Madras 600 002 • 28 Devaraja Mudali Street, Park Town, Madras 600 003 • 116 Royapettah, High Road, Mylapore, Madras 600 004 CALCUTTA: Anglo-Swiss Watch Co., 6 Binoy Badal Dinesh Bag, Calcutta 700 001 HYDERABAD: K.C. & Co., [illegible] BANGALORE: [illegible] Street, Bangalore 560 001

(For information only)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The new anti-theft lock in the Premier Padmini.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Everything about the new Padmini is quite spectacular. You must sit inside to fully appreciate the finer points.

Like the elegant back-lit LED dashboard. The extra-soft two-spoke steering wheel. The three-speed wipers. The handbrake indicator light. The quartz clock. The velour upholstery. The perfectly fitted air-conditioner. And, of course, the fuel efficiency.

Driving the Padmini is now an even greater pleasure.

The Premier Padmini is moving up in life.

We've upgraded all our Padmini models. All models can accommodate air-conditioners. Every car now comes with a special anti-theft lock-cum-ignition switch, a back-lit instrument cluster, hazard warning and reversing lights and plush new upholstery. Check out the new Premier Padmini, you will be delighted with what you see.

PREMIER PADMINI

The Premier Automobiles Ltd.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Thirst Treat

Limca for the ravenous
Limca for the ravishing

When you're hot and thirsty after treating yourself or making sure you look a treat... reach for zero-bacteria Limca with isotonic salts to quench your thirst.

Limca®

is veri veri lime'n' lemon!

SERVE CHILLED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ARTIFICIALLY FLAVOURED. CONTAINS NO FRUIT JUICE OR FRUIT PU
® THE REGISTERED TRADEMARK OF PARLE (EXPORTS) LTD., BOMB

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

J.F. RIBEIRO

A Disputed Legacy

As J.F. Ribeiro prepares to don diplomatic credentials in far-off Rumania, his reign in Punjab is under severe critical scrutiny. And his legacy of escalated violence finds more detractors today than votaries.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Ribeiro in the Golden Temple

THERE had been no police officer like him before. He had tamed the notorious smuggling mafia in Bombay, had throughout his career stood up to political pressure, and was known to walk taller than the 6 ft 3 in. he stood in his socks. So, when Julio Francis Ribeiro, in March 1986, came to arrest the deteriorating situation in Punjab, he was hailed with uncommon fervour.

And he did not disappoint. With transparent sincerity, flamboyant turn of phrase, and a confident, brave mien, he captivated the nation. The media too took to the man, and lionised him.

Three and a half years later, the tide has turned. Even as he prepares to don diplomatic credentials in far-off Rumania his reign is under severe critical scrutiny, with his detractors outnumbering his votaries. The Akalis who brought him to Punjab regret the decision, police officers describe him as "honest but naive", and his critics gleefully label him the "Super Flop". Even the accolades of the press have become considerably muted.

But then so has Ribeiro. As Punjab's director-general of police, he was a tough-talker and hard-fighter. He was known for his "bullet for bullet" policy, which he now denies having pronounced (see interview). Though in an interview carried in the Hyderabad-based daily Newstime (May 6, 1986), he had said in response to a question about the bullet-for-bullet policy: "I made this statement, and I'm not going to explain to you why I did it. Go to the court and file a case if you want to."

Actually, the denial is part of the metamorphosis. Since his elevation to the rank of advisor to Governor S.S. Ray in April 1988, Ribeiro has been advocating a moderate and humane approach. Some put it down to his being a much misunderstood simple policeman who got carried away by the media hype around him: others declare that he is simply a big-talker who has conveniently somersaulted because of his failure to live up to his initial pledges on tackling terrorism. What no one disputes is that he leaves behind a legacy more controversial than his stay was.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ribeiro departs from Chandigarh a sad man. Last month, he said: "If the sufferings and miseries of the people were a little less than when I came, I would have felt happy." But that is not so. And several people hold the man himself responsible for his misery. Ribeiro came to Punjab with no experience of tackling terrorism, nor even a rudimentary knowledge of the state's people. He was a special secretary in the Home Ministry, when the Daresi Ground killings at Ludhiana on March 28 brought him to Punjab. He came in roaring. As veteran CPI leader Satpal Dang says: "Ribeiro came at a critical time and did much to improve the morale of the Punjab Police."

Sent initially only for three months to put the force in working order, he was fated to stay on and become a pivotal

BHAWAN SINGH

INTERVIEW

"You have to win over the Sikhs"

AS advisor to the governor, J.F. Ribeiro had been marginalised, shut out of the policy-making process. When Principal Correspondent KANWAR SANDHU interviewed him a fortnight before his diplomatic assignment to Rumania was announced, the celebrated officer was not his usual self. Instead of being flamboyantly on the offensive, his reactions were defensive—as many as three times he fished out files to substantiate a point. Though articulate as ever, his demeanour had a touch of the melancholic. Excerpts:

Q. What was your brief in Punjab?

A. I was told to go there for three months to put the police force in working order and raise its morale. I never thought I'd be required to go as I had moved on to a higher rank.

Q. Did Barnala accept you?

A. He was pressing for me. K.P.S. Gill's name also came up at the time. But it was for Barnala to decide.

Q. What was your perception of the terrorist problem at that time?

A. When I first came, I had no experience of terrorism. It took time to realise what it meant, and to perceive it would take a long time to tackle it.

Q. You said then that there were 37 to 38 top terrorists—eliminate them, and there will be peace.

A. Barnala himself gave me names of some terrorists from Gurdaspur. He said, neutralise them, the situation will change. We did, and things did change. But only for a while.

Q. Don't you think your 'bullet-for-bullet' call was misinspired?

A. When seven policemen were killed at Jalandhar soon after I arrived, the press asked me what I would do. I said I'll teach the force to fight back. When somebody attacks, they should reply and take even more lives than they give. The press called it "bullet for bullet". I never used these words.

Q. You sought absolute powers.

A. I did not. I only sought the power to shift and post my personnel. I do not crave for power.

Q. Didn't it send wrong signals?

A. I have my way of working. If people get the wrong signals, how am I to blame? If anybody feels I am guilty of injustice, I will be very unhappy.

Q. How did you approach the job?

A. I had never dealt with terrorism. But I knew how to deal with policemen, and how to motivate them. Both Gill and Chaman Lal worked well with me. I made the force fight.

Q. Do you agree your style eroded the civil administration's authority?

A. This is wrong. I was always for consulting the deputy commissioners.

Q. That is the general impression.

A. If IAS officers like S.P. Bagla and K.R. Lakhanpal say so, what can I do? They don't like policemen and I'm one.

Q. Were there covert operations?

A. Covert operations are a part of police work, even in normal times.

Q. Does the law justify killing of people suspected to be terrorists?

A. We need undercover groups to find out terrorists' movements. If they come up against each other, it's one man's life against another.

Q. But surely it's not so simple. You had one such group indulging in looting, and one agent killing an SSP.

A. It is a question of control over such groups. In my tenure, they erred twice, and I disbanded both groups. I prefer not to get information, than to allow criminal acts.

Q. What about killing of innocents?

A. Whenever innocents suffered, we ordered magisterial inquiries and provided compensation. I have always been for winning over the people.

Q. What is your perception of the terrorist problem now?

A. I am convinced that such movements last for long. They never lack recruits due to the emotional nature of the issue. It has to be tackled at the emotional level. You must go for terrorists, but ensure there is no injustice to people. You have to win over the Sikhs. We must be moderate in our approach and not be in a hurry.

Q. Was your stay satisfactory?

A. People's expectations were too high. They expected me to end terrorism, which was impossible.

Q. You built expectations.

A. All I said was that we'll fight: put terrorism under manageable limits. The thing that makes me most sad is that some thought that I was here to suppress Sikhs. I wouldn't dream of that. It's not in my nature. It's never happened in my earlier postings. I can't believe it.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SOME FACES, AS YOU CAN SEE, HAVE CHARACTER.

BORN OF A LINEAGE AS ILLUSTRIOUS AS HMT. TECHNOLOGY, GRACE AND SINCERE AFTER SALE CARE DISTINGUISHING THE FINEST FROM THE REST.

CHARACTER TELLS.

hmt
QUARTZ

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AIM AIM AIM

NDIL offers cold rolled steel in all the grades, from ordinary to extra deep drawing, be it IS-513, JIS-G3141, DIN-1623 or any other specification. You can procure these coils in exact size, thickness, width and length as per your requirements.

NDIL'S 170 Crore pioneering venture with computer operated 6 Hi combination cold rolling mill, the only one of its kind in India, enables' us to manufacture international quality cold rolled steel indigenously.

NDIL's Cold Rolled Steel – designed to meet your specific requirements.

OUR RANGE OF COLD ROLLED STEEL

Width	–	100 mm to 1,250 mm
Thickness	–	0.15 mm to 2.0 mm
Length	–	1000 mm to 4000 mm
Grades	–	O, D, DD, EDD

NIPPON DENRO ISPAT LIMITED

Head Office : 'Gulab Bhawan' 6th Floor ■ 77 Residency Road ■ Sadar ■ Nagpur–440 001
Telex : 0745-426 NDIL IN ■ Fax : 0712-33194 ■ Cable : 'NIPPON'

We are the future.

Bombay ■ Delhi ■ Jullandhar ■ Chandigarh ■ Srinagar ■ Ghaziabad ■ Kanpur ■ Parwanoo ■ Jaipur ■ Bangalore ■ Hyderabad ■ Madras ■ Cochin

admas (N)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In its warp, in its weft, in its weave...

India. Primordial, deep, faceted. The wellspring of countless creative impulses. Palpably alive, to this very day. Strikingly and most colourfully manifest in the handspun magic of its fabrics. The handlooms of India. Resplendent, intricate, patterned, rustic, sophisticated, earthy, ethereal. In Indian handlooms rests India's very soul.

Handloom House's entire National Design Collections at specially subsidized prices –
right through the year.

...India lives.

handloom house

Sarees ○ Dress Materials ○ Readymades ○ Furnishings ○ Carpets ○ Bed, Bath & Table Linen

THE ORIGINAL ONE STOP SHOP

Ahmedabad • Bangalore • Baroda • Bombay • Calcutta • Chandigarh • Coimbatore • Delhi • Ernakulam • Gorakhpur • Hyderabad • Imphal • Jaipur
Madras • Madurai • Patna • Ranchi • Secunderabad • Surat • Vijayawada • Vishakapatnam.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Interact:AIH.177A

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

figure in the unfurling of Punjab's destiny over the next few years. His style of functioning created schisms in the shaky Barnala government. Ministers accused him of "oneupmanship". Finance minister Balwant Singh wrote to Barnala stating that his policy of "police absolutism had no place in a democratic set up". The letter was prompted by Ribeiro's interview to INDIA TODAY (May 15, 1987) in which he'd said that duality of control hampered anti-terrorist efforts, and had declared: "In an abnormal situation like this, I should have the powers of an army chief."

And he got them. In May 1987, President's Rule was imposed. But no dramatic improvements resulted. Criticised then MLA Jasdev Singh: "Since he attributed his failures to interference by jathedars, how does he explain the worsened situation now?" True, Ribeiro's shooting from the hip and mouth made little dent in the law and order situation. When he took over, the police records showed a total of 101 hardcore terrorists. In April 1988, when he handed over charge to K.P.S. Gill, the number had gone up to 178, even though during his tenure more than 800 suspected terrorists were killed by the police.

Ribeiro symbolised the state's stand against separatist forces, and he is the one who has given these forces a dangerous and indefinite impetus.

The march of events has shown that Ribeiro's initial functioning betrayed a poor understanding of the terrorist problem in Punjab. He escalated the level of violence, and started the system of huge rewards—even Rs 1 lakh—for wanted terrorists which gave the terrorists a new sense of importance. The immediate aim of all terrorists is publicity—good or bad. Ribeiro gave them plenty. Meantime, the dangerous consequences of rhetoric unsupported by statecraft began to tell. The feeling grew among Sikhs that he was out to suppress them.

Ribeiro's style also discomfited the civil servants. "He upstaged the IAS," says a joint secretary. He claimed a higher status vis-a-vis other IAS officers, leading to quibbling. And he developed an exaggerated sense of importance. In a letter to the governor in September 1987, over his lower placing in the officers' order of precedence, he wrote: "It was unfair on the people that for the last few days I have been mulling over such personal injustice." Ribeiro had severe problems with two senior IAS officers, S.P. Bagla and K.R. Lakhanpal. Bagla, in April 1987 as the secretary, information and broadcasting, had warned against the dangers of the Ribeiro policy.

TODAY as the tide turns, the policy of rapprochement he has been recently advocating fetches criticism. "Why did he not undertake it during his two years as DGP?" asks an officer. Barnala is more charitable, saying: "He tried to do more than he should have." But former MP, Captain Amarinder Singh, is unsparing: "Ribeiro's faulty policy of repression abetted terrorism."

The death knell of Ribeiro's era was rung with the successful completion of Operation Black Thunder. K.P.S. Gill came into the limelight, and his understanding of the situation impressed everyone. Ray started depending more on Gill and Ribeiro began to be shut out of the policy-making process in a manner that was humiliating. The fall-out of Ribeiro's eclipse was that his contact with the public and IAS officers increased, giving him a new perspective. Deprived of power, he began to see what lay on the other side of the fence and his attitudes softened. The turnabout became clear when he recommended that four IPS officers against whom he had received reports of corruption be shifted. Gill resented this. The governor asked Ribeiro to lay off the Police Department. His recommendations went unheeded.

Today, police officers are divided on his contribution to the police working in Punjab. Says an IG: "Only a tough-talking policeman like him could pull the police out from the slough of despondency in 1986." Others feel that Ribeiro's advocation of the "Chaman Lal Line" after the latter had differences with Gill, resulted in confusion in police functioning. Strident criticism has also come Ribeiro's way for the covert operations he initiated in Punjab and the unconstitutional means he adopted. District level officers say methods like elimination of terrorists after their arrest too received a new thrust during Ribeiro's tenure. Ribeiro, of course, denies this, declaring: "I have done no wrong. I stand responsible for what I did." Ribeiro is also criticised for not making structural changes in the state police, once he had realised that it was going to be a long-term battle.

During a talk at the IAS academy at Mussoorie last year, Ribeiro had compared terrorists to man-eaters. An officer, pursuing his analogy, said Ribeiro's response was that of an improvident hunter: "With his tall-talk and rough-shod policing he has left countless wounded—making them potential man-eaters." Ribeiro's legacy in the final count is one of tragic-irony: he is the one man who symbolised the state's stand against separatist forces, and he is the one who has given these forces a dangerous and indefinite impetus.

—KANWAR SANDHU

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ELECTIONS

Guessing Game

Speculation on simultaneous assembly polls

"WE will go along with what the chief ministers want."

—Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi on being asked about the possibility of holding simultaneous elections to the Lok Sabha and the state assemblies.

IN politics, the most innocuous and noncommittal of statements can trigger off intense speculation. Particularly if it is made by a prime minister, and more so if it deals with elections. So when Rajiv Gandhi made that guarded reply to a reporter's query in Bombay last fortnight, he set the cat loose among the political pigeons. Immediately, electoral arithmetic was being redone and new equations were emerging as political pundits tried coming to terms with the possibility—howsoever remote—of elections to Parliament and the assemblies taking place simultaneously.

The last time this happened was in 1967. Though officers at the Election Commission's headquarters in New Delhi's Nirvachan Sadan dismiss talk of simultaneous elections as nothing more than mere conjecture, Congressmen are taking the possibility far more seriously. The pros and cons of such an exercise are being carefully weighed by ruling party strategists. And many of Rajiv's advisors are doing their utmost to convince the prime minister of the wisdom of the idea.

Simultaneous polls, many Congressmen believe, will unleash a fresh wave of infighting within the Janata Dal. As it is, opposition unity hangs by a thin thread—which will be snapped by the renewed burst of infighting. Explains a Congress(I) leader: "They may somehow manage to distribute Lok Sabha tickets, leaving a big chunk for other opposition parties with whom they have seat adjustments. But they can't manage to peacefully distribute 2,000 assembly tickets." Factionalism in the Janata Dal, he predicts, will take on ugly proportions with the various group leaders jumping at each other's throats to ensure their candidates' nomination.

The ruling party's design is clear: renewed infighting means that the Janata Dal leaders, particularly the Congress(I)'s bete noire V.P. Singh, will get bogged down in taking fire-fighting measures. This would leave principal crowd-pullers like Singh and Devi Lal with little time to campaign.

There is another advantage that advocates of simultaneous polls are citing. They believe it would give Rajiv the opportunity to get rid of dissidents in the party—at both the national and the state level—at one stroke.

Not all Congressmen, however, support the proposal. Some believe that simultaneous polls will confuse local and national issues. And the Congress(I) strategy of presenting itself as the sole protector of national unity could misfire as issues like the nation's stability will get overshadowed by local concerns.

There is another reason for opposing the proposal. If the Lok Sabha polls are held before the assembly elections, state politicians aspiring for assembly tickets will have an incentive to campaign vigorously for the party. But once the assembly nominations are decided, many—particularly the disappointed aspirants—will take a back seat.

The political calculations apart, there are some downright practical reasons for holding the polls at the same time. While the term of the present Parliament expires on January 14, 1990, elections to as many as 17 state assemblies will be due soon after, by April 1. In fact, even before Rajiv's statement, speculation on this issue began in June this year when at a conference of chief electoral officers, the Chief Election Commissioner R.V.S. Peri Sastri, said: "General elections will have to be held in the near future for constituting a new Lok Sabha and for constituting as many as 17 legislative assemblies."

In fact, in the first annual report of the Election Commission submitted in 1983, the then chief election commissioner R.K. Trivedi had observed: "The commission is of the view that a stage has come for evolving a system by convention, if it is not possible or feasible to bring about a legislation, under which the general elections to the House of the People and legislative assemblies of the states are held simultaneously."

P.B

R.V.S. Peri Sastri

Speculation over simultaneous polls began in June when the Chief Election Commissioner R.V.S. Peri Sastri announced that both general elections and 17 assembly elections will have to be held in the near future.

If the two elections are indeed held together, the state exchequer will save about Rs 150 crore. According to the most conservative estimate, all political parties have given short shrift to the Election Commission's ceiling of Rs 1,000 crore that can be spent on a general election. With the campaign going hi-tech, expenses will skyrocket. But if the parliamentary and assembly polls are clubbed together, at least the doubling of expenses would be avoided.

Though technically the Election Commission can advance an assembly poll by six months in order to club it with the general elections, it cannot dissolve a state assembly before its term is over. But it is unlikely the commission will meet opposition on this count. Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao—a prominent National Front leader—has announced that he is in favour of having polls along with the general elections. And the BJP has made simultaneous polls part of its draft election manifesto.

The Election Commission has now announced that state governments willing to hold the assembly polls along with the general elections should inform it before November 15. Eventually it is the Congress(I) chief ministers who will decide whether or not the nation will have simultaneous polls. The monetary advantages to the nation notwithstanding, the Congress(I) will only permit this if it works to the party's advantage.

—BHASKAR ROY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SIEMENS

The Power Broker

Siemens Network Automation System is enlightened technology. An advanced load despatch system, it processes vital information on power generation and transmission. With its pulse on the pattern of power consumption across a region, it acts as a 'power broker' ensuring equitable distribution and optimum use of generated power. Helping people come from darkness into light is just one example of how Siemens harnesses technology for the well-being of man.

High technology with a human face. Whether it is control and automation systems or railway signalling equipment, medical electronics, switchgear, switchboards, drives, motors or new dimensions in telecommunications, Siemens focusses technology on human problems, human needs. Its close association with Siemens AG, W. Germany, helps keep Siemens in India in the frontline of international technology. With 120 years of experience in the country, Siemens is committed to India's progress and shares its hopes for the future.

As technology changes the face of the future, Siemens will be one of the foremost companies helping India keep pace with the world.

Siemens Ltd.,
P.O. Box 6597, Bombay 400 018.

Siemens. Where international technology meets human needs.

LINTAS SM 157 2720

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Short and sweet

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation

Maybe not exactly magic, but speed is of the essence.

At HDFC you get a Home Loan quicker than you thought. HDFC's processes are constantly streamlined to make loan approvals truly short and sweet.

You just write in or call on us. Send in the application, we process it and revert with our decision.

Now wasn't that fast?

But then you won't believe it till you experience it. So why don't you write in or call on us today.

H·D·F·C

HOUSING DEVELOPMENT FINANCE CORPORATION LIMITED

Regd. Office: Ramon House, 169, Backbay Reclamation, Bombay 400 020. Phone: 220282, 220265,220908, 231054, 231146 Telex: HDFC-011-6762 Gram: HOUSCORP
Branches: Ahmedabad • Bangalore • Bhubaneswar • Bombay (Parel) • Calcutta • Chandigarh • Cochin • Coimbatore • Guwahati • Hyderabad • Indore • Jaipur • Lucknow • Madras • Nasik • New Delhi • Pune • Trivandrum • Vadodara • Vashi (New Bombay)

We know the way home.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEW Amul CRUNCH milk chocolate

'so c-c-c-crunchy

so m-m-m-munchy

so very tasty

DEUS/AMC/4-88

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Marketed by Gujarat Co-operative Milk Marketing Federation Ltd. Anand 388 001

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MORARJI DESAI

Disappointing Verdict

US jury acquits Seymour Hersh of libel charge

HE received the news with characteristic stoicism. But even for the austere Morarji Desai, 94-year-old former prime minister of India, the verdict delivered last fortnight by a US court on his libel suit against author-journalist Seymour Hersh, must have been a disappointment. A six-member jury acquitted Hersh of the charge of having libelled Desai by calling him a Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) spy in his 1983 book, The Price of Power: Kissinger in the Nixon White House.

Even when the case was filed six years ago, it was clear to Desai and his Chicago-based lawyer, Cyriac D. Kappil, that the going would be tough. In the US, it is the plaintiff who has to prove that the defendant's allegations are false. Desai had to prove that he had never been a CIA "asset"—a difficult task as the agency is not in the habit of providing affidavits; that Hersh's information was false; that he had knowingly printed lies about Desai; and that he had doubts about the truth of his allegations.

"We always thought we had a good case," said a jubilant Michael Nussbaum, Hersh's attorney, "Hersh had six sources who were high officials in the US Government and each had identified Desai as a CIA agent." Hersh alleged that Desai had passed on sensitive information about Indian foreign policy and domestic politics to the CIA for $20,000 (Rs 3.4 lakh) a year during the Johnson and Nixon administrations. Desai's defence was that in the years he was said to be on the CIA's payroll, he was not in government and had no access to sensitive information. His lawyers, who'd asked for $3.5 million (Rs 5.5 crore) in damages, claimed Hersh had fabricated his notes.

Hersh's lawyers countered that a man who had won the Pulitzer Prize was unlikely to stoop so low. His case was strengthened when Federal Judge Charles Norgle Sr. ruled that while Hersh had to describe his sources, he needn't reveal them. The two weeks of courtroom drama had its high point in the unexpected appearance of Henry Kissinger. The former secretary of state testified that to his knowledge Desai was not a paid CIA informant. This contradicted Hersh's statement in the book that Kissinger was really impressed with an "asset" of Desai's stature.

Hersh (top); his book; and Desai: courtroom drama

Desai lost because US libel laws require him to conclusively prove that Hersh knew he was lying.

Neither Hersh nor Desai took the stand, though the Indian's testimony was videotaped. In it, Desai attempted to explain his philosophy of life, satyagraha and the ideals of the Bhagwad Gita. But the description of his disciplined life-style backed Hersh's lawyers' stand that Desai's life had not suffered after the book's publication—a fact which has to be established before claiming damages.

The dejected Kappil believes that they might have won if the Indian Government had been supportive. Before the book was published the then Indian ambassador to the US had gone through it and made corrections without mentioning the charge against Desai. Says Kappil: "Hersh led the jury to believe the book had the blessings of the Indian Government. When we required cooperation to challenge that, the response was not favourable."

Still, three years ago Hersh had tried for an out of court settlement. Nussbaum says he would have apologised for any trouble he might have caused Desai. And just three months ago, Hersh offered to pay lawyers' costs if a settlement was reached. "But," Nussbaum adds, "they asked for more than we were prepared to give." Kappil still believes this was a correct decision, "for if we had accepted, I would have been rich but Desai's name would still be tarnished".

Desai's son Kanti says the decision on whether to appeal would be taken later this week. But it could be a futile move. Ill-health will prevent Desai from appearing in person—a fact that could have affected the Chicago trial—and US libel laws stack the odds against him.

Meantime, Desai has repeated that Hersh's allegations were "totally baseless and wrong". In his typically self-contained manner, he is believed to have said: "My character does not change by what judges and juries think." In any case, Desai can draw consolation from the fact that few Indians believe he was a spy. Just as his Indian admirers can be comforted by the fact that as always, Morarjibhai appears completely unperturbed by the verdict. —DEEPA ARORA in Chicago and M. REHMAN in Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIAN AIR FORCE

Disastrous Display

Eyewitness account of aerobatics tragedy

FOR a breath-taking four minutes and 50 seconds, he held the audience spellbound. Applauding as he climbed, doing a high-G turn, a loop. Holding their breath as he did a Derry-turn, and wove a vertical figure of eight. And sighing as his nimble, delta-winged Mirage 2000 approached the parade ground, low and slow with a high-angle of attack, for the grand finale.

The nose cleared the front row of seats, the engine roared, flames leapt out of the afterburner, the Mirage rocketed vertically upwards, spinning as if its tail was the pivot of a top. Just as it seemed to disappear in a blur in the bright sunlit sky, Wing Commander Ramesh 'Joe' Bakshi, the 38-year-old pilot at the controls, flipped the 9.5-tonne jet on its back for the most daring feat of all: the execution of similar rolls while hurtling vertically downwards. One roll, second, third. Then, as there was a microsecond's hesitation, many among the legion of veteran aviators in the audience stood up, aghast. "What's he doing?" one shouted as the aircraft went into a fourth roll. And then it disappeared among the trees to the right of a water tank and, as everybody waited for the blast, its nose appeared for one fleeting moment over the trees. Then, an explosion, a fireball, a black mushroom cloud of smoke, flying debris, and panic.

The applause turned into a cacophony of cries as thousands of people milled about in shock and confusion. The scene was surreal: many screamed, others clutched their children and rushed to the car park, even as a truck and the bus that had taken pressmen to the aerobatics display caught fire. And just when the panic began to subside, there was another explosion as the cartridges placed under the pilot's ejection seat went off, sending the crowds scurrying again. In four roller-coaster seconds, the Indian AirForce's 57th anniversary celebration at New Delhi's Palam Air Force Station on October 8 had ended in a shattering tragedy. The fires caused by the disintegrating fighter left at least a dozen persons injured—one succumbed the next day—and scores of huts in a heap of ashes.

Yet, a catastrophe of unimaginable proportions had been averted. A clump of trees and the empty building of the Movement Control Unit (MCU), which took much of the impact of the crashing jet, prevented the debris and the burning fuselage of the plane from reaching the parade ground where top brass of the armed forces and other VIPs were seated. "The tragedy here could have surpassed the destruction at Ramstein several times over," said a senior IAF officer, referring to the catastrophe that occurred last year when three aerobatic jets had crashed into a crowd of onlookers in West Germany, killing 69 of them.

How close a shave it had been was evident later as IAF experts traced the path of the Mirage's last journey. After hitting an empty patch of ground near the water tank, it bounced forward

Photographs by SANJAY SHARMA

(From top) the Mirage hurtles downwards; explodes on crashing; and Wing Commander Bakshi: tragic death

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE NEW INDIAN CLASSIC

INTRODUCING
THE ONLY SOAP WITH SANDAL AND GLYCERINE.

A classic blend of natural sandal oil and pure glycerine.
Let the sandal soften, smoothen and perfume your skin.
Let the glycerine gently moisturize your skin.
All the year through and specially during winter.
And let your skin be simply divine.

FROM THE HOUSE OF MYSORE SANDAL SOAP

CLASSIC

Hmm... So exclusive. So exciting!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

VITREOUS®

HINDUSTAN SANITARYWARE

The first choice for over 25 years

Bahadurgarh 124 507, Rohtak, Haryana, India.

FREE!

To help you plan your bathroom, write for our colourful Product Range Folder.

Name _____

Address _____

Occupation _____

Cut and post this coupon to :
Hindustan Sanitaryware & Industries Limited
Bahadurgarh 124 507, Rohtak, Haryana.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INSIDE AND OUTSIDE WITH GSFC ACRYLIC SHEETS

For the partition door panels of posh interiors or the sturdy window panes of your finished exteriors, GUJPOL-S reflects your taste and choice as an ideal substitute for glass.

GUJPOL-S Designer Sheets and Cross Linked Sheets are available from 2 to 50 mm thickness at competitive prices. Also in smoke grey colour. To reduce the room temperature.

Suitable for innovative uses in Sanitaryware and Decoration.

GUJPOL-S Sheets are also used for Furniture & Decoration, Glowsigns & Novelty Items.

The GSFC Acrylic Products, a continuity in its plastics range since the merger of PCGL (Polymer Corporation of Gujarat Ltd.) with GSFC in 1983, have proved to be excellent in quality and most suitable for various applications.

GUJPOL-S

A Reflection of Good Taste

GSFC—
Basic to India's Progress

Chief Marketing Manager (I P)
GUJARAT STATE FERTILIZERS COMPANY LIMITED
Polymer Unit
Giriraj Apartment, Race Course Circle, Baroda - 390 015

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

National Phenol-bonded Plywood

Boiling water proof!
Termite resistant!
Specially treated!
ISI approved!

Ideal for furniture, ceiling and wall panels, partitions, kitchen and bathrooms, panel inserts for panel doors and windows.

The National Plywood Group of Industries

National PLYWOOD · Pioneer National GROUP · PRESTIGE National GROUP

Trust the name that's National!

H.O. 5 Fancy Lane, Calcutta 700 001, Phone 280116/77, Fax (91) (33) 281246, Gram WOODSHEET, Telex 021 2208 WOOD IN Branches Calcutta 268878 • Bombay 332058 • New Delhi 517100 • Madras 35295 • Hyderabad 41234 • Jaipur 66401
• Ahmedabad 25520 • Raipur 28457 • Patna 34080 • Bhubaneswar 57217 • Goa 2154 • Chandigarh 27408 • Bangalore 77470

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

going over a clump of huts, then hit a bund along a nullah, bounced so high as to clear the Palam village road and the 10-ft high angle-iron fence of the air force station, finally landing on the roof of the MCU building where it exploded. A grove of trees blocked its destructive journey towards the parade ground where, according to experts, it would have just skidded on the asphalt, ploughing into hundreds of onlookers.

The air force officers recovered from the shock first. The top brass held a quick conference and decided to put up a brave front. "We are extremely sorry that this happened," said Air Chief Marshal S.K. "Polly" Mehra. But, he said, the IAF had no intention of stopping aerobatics for "the show must go on" and because "such things happen in aviation". He blamed the crash on "an error of judgement by the pilot", and most aviators present on the spot agreed.

Senior IAF officials confirmed that on his last downward dive, Bakshi seemed to hesitate after the third roll. "He seemed to have either lost count of his rolls or thought he had the altitude to do a fourth, unscheduled one," surmised a senior official. The fourth roll brought him close to around 3,000 ft from the ground. Veterans say this was too low an altitude to pull out from, as by this time, the pull of gravity had already increased his speed to around 450 knots. Senior officials say they noticed he was pulling at the stick desperately, as the plane's nose lifted a little. But the downward inertia and velocity by then were too strong. A preliminary study of the point of impact indicates that he had indeed been able to straighten the plane by that time. "The point of initial impact seems as if the plane touched down flat, skidding as if in a planned crashlanding without the undercarriage," said an officer, indicating that if the pilot had had another 6 metres before he hit the ground, he may have pulled it off and saved his own life. "All evidence indicates he was pulling desperately till the last moment, which is an example of incredible nerve," said a senior officer, explaining that by initiating his pull-out so late, Bakshi got into a 'mush'—a situation where an aircraft is unable to gather adequate lift.

How exactly did he get into such a tragic predicament, is a question experts can't answer just yet. The Mirage 2000, unlike fighters of the past, is equipped with a flight data recorder which the court of inquiry will study, along with the flight profile and fractures in the aircraft body. "The fact is, Bakshi must have had a reason why he chose to do a fourth roll when he did not have the height or the time for it. But who is to answer for him now?" remarked one of his juniors in the IAF's No. 7 squadron (the redoubtable Battle-axes), which he commanded at Gwalior.

Bakshi, commissioned in 1969, was a veteran at show aerobatics, an art he had perfected on the Mirage 2000, considered extremely agile and safe for aerobatics because of its fly-by-wire system which ensures the plane almost never spins out of control or stalls. If a pilot tries to subject it to stress the aircraft is incapable of taking, the computer prevents him from doing so. Equipped with such an aircraft, Bakshi was a master at the game.

LAST year, on the IAF's 56th anniversary, he had performed a similar show at this very air force station. Also, on September 29 this year he displayed his skill to a visiting team of experts from the National Defence College at the Ambala Air Force Base. And only three days before his fatal flight, he held a full rehearsal for 250-odd Delhi Public School students who happened to visit the Hindon air-base. "Joe was the best, so we were happy to show him off," said a senior official. But some of Bakshi's squadron-mates remember that he had complained of a backache the day before the crash. His wife Aruna, now left alone to bring up their two children, was too distraught to say anything, but others who flew with him do not think the back trouble could have had anything to do with the disaster.

The destruction of the Rs 30-crore fighter and the death of an ace combat pilot serve to focus on the debate on whether such air shows should be banned. The IAF's logic is that such displays are the best way to get the lay public interested in joining the air force. As for accidents, the IAF prefers to play them down. It points out that the air force holds several such shows every year and yet, in its 57-year history, only two fatal crashes have taken place during a display. The last one occurred way back in 1946 when Wing Commander Hem Chaudhry crashed in his Tempest in Lahore. "Accidents are a part of our life," said a pilot. "We can't stop aerobatics because of that."

But despite the bravado, the IAF is seriously considering methods to make air shows safer or to at least minimise chances of collateral damage. Last fortnight's disastrous Mirage crash will ensure that no more such displays are held at Palam which is particularly unsuitable. The high hangars and trees to the east of the parade ground, and the fact that displays take place in the morning, force the pilots to fly straight into the sun. Aviators point out that at the moment Bakshi made the fatal flaw, he too was facing the sun. If the pilots were to come over the trees and hangars, they would arrive much too suddenly over the ground, reducing the display to a blur. Also, to come from the east they have to overfly large parts of the capital which include forbidden airspace around VIP residential areas. Says a senior official: "Since we can't shift the trees, the hangars, or for that matter, the sun, we will perhaps change the venue of the displays." But, unless they are forced by a political decision, the IAF top brass is not inclined to ban air shows. The IAF's answer is: why don't we first ban mountaineering, diving and, of course, coal-mining—the only profession considered more risky than fighter-flying?

—SHEKHAR GUPTA

Diagram by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Assured value for your hard-earned money from EQUITY

The unique 3-in-1 Juicer, Mixer and Grinder.
A tough and durable tripple-action food-processor cum juicer. With India's first self cleaning system. Optional attachments available.

The only
IS : 366
CM/L-1903653
Range Of Irons available in India.

HOT PRESS IRON

AUTOMAT-IRON

FEATHER LITE

EQUITY CONCORD

The only Sandwich Maker used by millions, with full satisfaction.

A wide range of Washing Machines to suit every budget.

The largest range of quality Pressure Cookers.

Top Performance Home Appliances

ADVEL / E/ 550

EQUITY
For every home
Available at all leading stores

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Capture the beauty of a butterfly on your wall

For those who value taste here's your chance to bring back the romance of colour and beauty of course with ECONOMY

ANGOOR® and Cherry

- Lime Colours
- Dry Distemper
- Cement Oxide Colours

Bachhraj COLOURS (P) Ltd.

Regd. Office : Machharhatta, Patna City-800008
Phones: 42389, 42092, 41115

Branch Office: 119, Sector 37, Noida-201301 Phone: 22050

mahima/bcpl/10450/89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

J&K

Militant Might

Outcry over Shabir's arrest

MISHANDLING of a volatile situation and official misfeasance have made a martyr out of a militant in Kashmir. Shabir Ahmad Shah, the 37-year-old leader of the rabidly separatist People's League, is fast becoming a cult figure in the valley, a people's hero. The sharp public outcry that followed his sudden and dramatic arrest last fortnight served to drive home this frightening fact.

Shah was arrested along with another militant, Mohammad Nayeem Khan, on September 28 near Ramban, on the Jammu-Srinagar national highway. The two were apparently planning to cross the line of control near the Rajouri Poonch sectors and enter Pakistan. Accounts of Shah's arrest differ. According to one, the state police nabbed him after being tipped off by one of his close aides who was not happy with his growing power. Another version has it that Shah was arrested by IB sleuths, who had planted some men in his inner circle. Either way, it was the biggest breakthrough for the state authorities in their battle against growing separatism.

The public response to the arrest made it abundantly clear that Shah was the undisputed supremo of the secessionists who have wreaked havoc in Kashmir over the past two years. A spontaneous bandh was observed for four days throughout the valley. Normal life was completely paralysed and few ventured out of their homes. Violence broke out in a number of places: worst hit were Anantnag—Shah's hometown—in south Kashmir and Sopore town in the north. Indefinite curfew was clamped and the army called out in both towns. In Anantnag, three persons were killed in police firing, while in Sopore one youth fell to police bullets. In Srinagar too, the police indulged in indiscriminate firing which resulted in the tragic death of a nine-year-old boy, Zahoor Ahmad, who was struck by a bullet while he was watching the bedlam in the street from a second floor window.

All lingering doubts about Shah's growing sway over the people of the valley were quelled about a week after his arrest, when rumours about his death in police custody broke out. Thousands of men, women and children poured out into the streets of Srinagar, beating their breasts and praying for the jailed extremist. So explosive was the situation on the evening of October 5 that the authorities were forced to make repeated announcements over radio and television that Shabir Shah was unharmed and very much alive.

Shah's interrogators are, in fact, yet to use third degree methods to extract information from him as his health is poor and the state Government cannot risk anything happening to him. And Shah—who is incarcerated at the Hariniwas complex, opposite Srinagar's Dal Lake—is reported to have revealed nothing of value as yet. Prison is a familiar place for Shah who has been behind bars for 11 of the 17 years that he has spent in active politics.

This time round, Shah behind bars has proved as potent a threat—if not more—as he was while a free man. And both the state and the Central Governments have only themselves to blame. For if a secessionist like Shah has become something of a hero, it is because of complete disillusionment with the mainstream leaders, the dismal performance of the state Government, the Centre's repeated bungling on the Kashmir issue, and Chief Minister Farooq Abdullah's obvious ineptitude.

Repressive police measures and blatant misgovernance have only added to the groundswell of support for the separatists, and made extremists out of moderates. For instance, secessionist activity gained momentum early this year after Shah's father, Ghulam Mohammad Shah, died in police custody in Anantnag. The riots that followed shot Shah into prominence and he soon emerged as the most influential of Kashmir's many underground secessionist leaders.

Photographs by MERAJ-U-DIN

If a secessionist like Shah has become a cult figure it is because of people's disenchantment with the mainstream leaders.

Aside from police hamhandedness, the Centre's misguided policies are also responsible for making a hero out of the extremist. Some believe that in order to neutralise other secessionist leaders, the Centre had at one point propped up Shah. In a way, just as it created Bhindranwale in Punjab, the Centre has created Shabir Shah in Kashmir.

Now, both the Centre and the state Government can only watch helplessly as villagers in remote corners of the valley get together to pray for Shah's health and longevity. And Farooq Abdullah can merely despair but do nothing to stop people from calling Shah's mother, Habla Begum, madri meharban (kind mother)—a title once reserved for his mother, Sheikh Abdullah's widow, Begum Akber Jehan.

—ZAFAR MERAJ in Srinagar

Shabir Shah; arson in Srinagar; and Habla Begum: dangerous drift

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Chennai and eGangotri

Rs. 745*

Why risk buying a smuggled watch when you can get a world class Titan Quartz from Tata?

80% of the watches smuggled into India are fake or substandard. So should you still buy one when you know you may be cheated?

No longer do you need to risk buying a smuggled watch, or worry about the cost or inconvenience of repairing even a genuine import.

Now you can buy a world class watch from Tata: Titan Quartz. Choose from an international collection of over 250 fine quartz watches. From Rs. 395 onwards.

With Titan Quartz you have the Tata assurance of many years of faultless performance. And every watch is guaranteed for two years. Our after-sales network offers service with speed and economy. Battery replacement costs only Rs. 17.

With Titan Quartz, you'll never have to take any chances. Not ever.

Titan Quartz from Tata

The changing face of time

TITAN QUARTZ

Rs. 745*

Rs. 691*

Rs. 703*

Rs. 703*

Rs. 1

*PRICES SHOWN ARE INCLUSIVE OF ALL LEVIES IN DELHI.

Corporate Office: Titan Watches Limited, Sona Towers, 71, Miller Road, Bangalore 560

Regional Office: 423-A World Trade Centre, Barakhamba Lane, New Delhi 110 001.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"400 computers working round the clock at 10 Apple Education Centres, spread all over the country. That's what I mean by 'large.'

And that's what made us sceptical about choosing PCL as our computer company in the beginning.

Both in terms of being able to provide us the necessary hardware.

And the service support that's so critical for a computer training organisation.

But were we in for a surprise! Not only did PCL deliver the hardware on time, they also came across as totally professional in their approach to our problems. And displayed a standard of efficiency that's rare today.

What impressed us the most was PCL's concept of preventive maintenance, which was, and still is strictly followed at all levels, in all parts of the country.

Giving us consistent quality of service all through.

And size? Well, even now PCL is not the biggest computer company. But they're equipped to handle accounts even bigger than ours.

Most of our computer systems today are from PCL. And we're planning to buy another 325 odd computers from them in the near future. "How's that as testimony from a company that thought its requirements were too large for PCL!"

India's fastest growing computer company.

Pertech Computers Ltd.
Corporate office : E-46/10, Okhla Phase-II, New Delhi-110 020.
Tel : 6847687, 6841864, 6846472, 6837379, 6832307. Telex : 031-75163 PCL IN.
Fax : 6841860.

everest/d89/PCL/262

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

"I thought our computer requirements were too large for PCL."

Atul Nishar
Managing Director, Apple Industries Ltd

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Quality is the 'Turnkey' word to success

KT APARTMENTS – Garden City of Bangalore

Turnkey Constructions, a third generation family enterprise, have been in the Civil Engineering field for over 25 years, and are renowned promoters in Bangalore.

Turnkey have been actively involved in promoting residential apartments (popularly called KT Apartments) - with a high degree of success. Having handed over possession to more than 600 proud flat owners, Turnkey have established an enviable reputation for high quality construction & timely delivery.

Currently, KT, a prominent feature on the changing face of Bangalore, has various projects under way at prime locations in Malleswaram, Basavangudi, Benson Town etc.,

With lot more to come, Turnkey is dynamically poised to achieve greater heights. Thanks, to your patronage.

4/TC/89

Fill up this coupon and mail it, for us to send you our brochure.

COUPON

Yes! I would like to know more about your apartment projects under way.

Name: _____

Age: _____ Profession: _____

Choice: _____

Address: _____

_____

Phone: _____

TURNKEY CONSTRUCTIONS PVT LTD.,
(Promoters of KT APARTMENTS)
57/1, 11th Main Road, Malleswaram
BANGALORE - 560 003, Ph: 344118, 347423
Telex: 0845-8727 TNKY-IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANDHRA PRADESH

New Energy

Congress(I) hits the streets

THE 'no stock' signs in front of khadi shops in the state last fortnight best symbolised the new-found enthusiasm of the Congress(I). More than six years after the Telugu Desam whirlwind swept them out of office and into a state of shock, Congress(I) activists with new Gandhi caps and khadi shirts once again swarmed the streets.

For three alternate days beginning Gandhi Jayanti, they picketed mandal, municipal and state government offices to protest against "the failures of the Rama Rao Ministry" and courted arrest. Ex-ministers, MPs and MLAs of the party, rarely seen in public, visited their constituencies and rubbed shoulders with workers. It was a remarkable show of unity.

On the last day of the agitation, October 6, APCC(I) President M. Channa Reddy along with his wife, sons and grandchildren picketed the office of a deputy commissioner of police. The agitation was peaceful, except at Siddipet in Medak district where some activists stormed the revenue divisional office. In the police firing that ensued, 20 partymen were injured.

All those who took part in the jail bharo agitation signed a pledge listing 16 charges against Rama Rao including nepotism, corruption, abuse of administrative machinery, rise in the number of lock-up deaths and misuse of Central funds.

The campaign is part of the strategy of Channa Reddy, a shrewd organiser, to close ranks and gear up the party machinery for the elections. Earlier, on September 7, he mobilised truck-loads of flag waving party supporters who presented a memorandum with tens of thousands of signatures to President R. Venkataraman at the Rashtrapathi Nilayam, Secunderabad, his official residence in the south.

Rama Rao was surprised by the remarkable response to the jail bharo campaign. But not to be outdone, he announced the formation of his party's election propaganda committee and thought up new ways to woo the electorate. As a party member admitted: "It will not be a cakewalk for us."

Of course all was not smooth for the Congress(I). In one of those inevitable side-shows, party General Secretary K. Keshava Rao and other party men from the backward classes accused Channa Reddy of a communal bias and demanded that he step down from the office of PCC(I) president. Neither Reddy nor other party office-bearers took the threat seriously. As a party secretary put it: "They are people who will not leave even if they are thrown out of the party. It is only a nuisance."

The confidence seemed well-founded. For the unexpected involvement of a large number of workers in the voluntary arrests campaign has energised the party. The Congress(I) obviously is no longer willing to play the passive onlooker to Rama Rao's blusterings.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

Channa Reddy (seated) on satyagraha

GUJARAT

In the Dock

Supreme Court indicts police

WITH the arrest and subsequent bail of five Gujarat police officials responsible for beating up and handcuffing Chief Judicial Magistrate N.L. Patel of Nadiad, the dangerous confrontation building up between the judiciary and the police seems to have been defused, if only temporarily.

Last month, the police action against Patel, apparently in retaliation for strictures passed by him against the police, had touched off a wave of indignation country-wide, and lawyers and subordinate judicial officials struck work. Seeking punishment of the culprits, B.P. Munshi, Gujarat Judicial Service Association's president, said: "The self-respect and independence of the entire judiciary is at stake."

YOGENDRA C. PATEL

Patel in handcuffs: police excesses?

Clearly, the police assault on Patel had a double-edged message: to discipline him and to serve as a warning to others critical of police high-handedness. With incident after incident highlighting the state police's predilection for excesses, Bhaskar Tanna, senior Gujarat high court lawyer, pointed out: "The time has come to evolve a machinery to probe police atrocities in Gujarat."

The state Government lay itself open to charges of shielding the guilty officials

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

when Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary went on record in the Assembly that Patel was drunk and had misbehaved with a police official. Patel's version is that his clothes were doused with liquor and he was tied up with ropes. Interestingly, photographs of the incident established the police torture, and handcuffing of Patel in violation of Article 21 of the Constitution.

Adding another twist to the controversy, the local police failed to execute bailable warrants against the five police officials issued by the Nadiad court on the basis of a private complaint lodged by Patel. It was eventually left to the Supreme Court to intervene after numerous telegrams were received from various judicial service and lawyers' associations.

Admitting the case as a public interest litigation, a three-judge bench led by Chief Justice E.S. Venkatramiah directed the state Government to furnish details. Yet, the state Government refused to act. It was only when the court virtually issued an ultimatum directing the arrest of the policemen within two days, that the five policemen presented themselves in the Nadiad court.

Says Justice B.J. Diwan, former chief justice of the Gujarat and Andhra Pradesh high courts: "At the root is the criminalisation and politicisation of the police force. The state Government should have taken immediate steps against the policemen." Adds N.H. Bhatt, a retired judge of the Gujarat High Court: "The policemen behaved like agents of a monarch."

While the truth of the ugly episode will emerge only once the inquiries instituted into the case are completed, it once again brought into sharp focus the nexus between the police and politicians.

—UDAY MAHURKAR

BOTTOMLINE BY D. BUNKER

Poll Puzzle

THE bugles have sounded, the loins have girded, and all is set for the Great Electoral Battle. While the BJP and the Janata Dal struggle to adjust their seats, the ruling party has already launched its campaign with its Supreme Leader Rajiv Gandhi storming through the countryside and scattering his opponents, left and right.

The only ones who aren't quite ready are the ones who have to make the Supreme Decision, the voters, all 500 million of them. Specially in the rural areas where Doordarshan has succeeded in befuddling them no end. Seeing all the golden harvests and proud progress on the screen, they are naturally a little confused by the bleak landscape immediately around them. To gauge their electoral mood, INDIA TODAY commissioned the well-known pollsters, GRAM, to find out whether they would vote for the ruling party or the Opposition led by V.P. Singh. Here's how the polling went:

GRAM: Excuse me, sir. Who are you going to vote for?

First villager: Nehru.

GRAM: Nehru? You mean Arun Nehru?

First villager: No I mean that chap who is always on Doordarshan.

GRAM: But that is Jawaharlal Nehru. He's been dead for a long time.

First villager (surprised): Really. I thought that anyone who gets so much coverage on Doordarshan must be standing for elections. He seemed like a nice chap to vote for.

GRAM: Anyway, does that mean you will vote for the Congress(I)?

First villager: What has the Congress done for me that I should vote for them? In the last five years, all they have offered me was 10 rupees and a packet of gram to attend some neta's meeting.

GRAM: And you sir, what is your opinion?

Second villager: Everybody says this government only looks after the rich. Us poor people have no future. It's all very sad.

GRAM: How about you, young fellow? What do you think?

Student: The unemployment situation is terrible. Even educated people cannot get a decent job. Things are very bad.

GRAM: And you madam?

Woman: They keep announcing all these fancy schemes for women. But nothing has happened to improve my life in the last five years. I have five more mouths to feed.

GRAM: Let's ask a farmer. You sir, what is your feeling about the elections?

Farmer: I wish they would put me on Krishi Darshan. I could tell them it is all rubbish what they are saying. Us farmers are very badly off. Only madmen like that Tikait are reaping the benefits.

GRAM: My God, it looks like a wave. V.P. Singh is going to sweep the polls at this rate. Let's get a larger cross-section of people. You sir, what do you have to say?

Shopkeeper: I have nothing in stock. But I can get you sugar for 16 rupees. Tea, 13 rupees. Dal, 10 rupees. I'm sorry, but thanks to this government, everything has gone up and is selling in black.

GRAM: We are not customers. We want to interview you for the elections.

Shopkeeper: The Congress is the best party. We will all vote for them. They have made us all very happy. Prices have come down. Is that what you want me to say?

GRAM: No. We want you to tell us truthfully who you will vote for.

Shopkeeper: Oh! I thought you were from Doordarshan. They are the only people who come here and tell us what to say.

GRAM: This is incredible. This wave is bigger than 1977. All these people are going to vote for V.P. Singh.

Villagers (in chorus): Who is V.P. Singh?

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Industrial establishments

Hotels

Airlines

Railways

Paramilitary forces

Flight caterers

Ordnance factories

Shipyards

Hospitals

Discover why institutions like these buy quality tea, coffee and spices direct from Brooke Bond's Institutional Business Service

Because buying direct from Brooke Bond's Institutional Business Service ensures competitive prices. And more. One reliable source for all your needs of quality tea, coffee and spices. The widest brand choice in the market with the economy of bulk packs. All with the convenience of doorstep delivery, through a distribution network spread across the country.

So, if you are in the process of tendering for your bulk requirements of tea, coffee and spices, and would like to deal directly with one reliable source, just write to:

Brooke Bond India Ltd., Institutional Business Service,
P.B. No. 4280, Bangalore-560 042.
Tel: 84-2520 (10 lines), 84-2615, 84-2625, 84-2635,
08112-2520 (STD-Whitefield, 10 lines)
Telex: 0845-8506/8518 KORA IN

Yes, I'm interested in
☐ Teas ☐ Coffees ☐ Spices

☐ Call me at (tel. no.).....at the earliest
☐ Ask your representative to call on me

Name:

Address:

IT

Brooke Bond India Limited Institutional Business Service

Brooke Bond Products. Packed with care. Packed for consistent quality.

OMD 2917

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Modern Sulzern

SUITINGS SHIRTINGS SAFARIS

This is the attraction that is drawn to the confidence that radiates from the man with that irresistible presence that goes with that premium yarn from Modern Woollens Ltd.

It happens every time!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

LINTAS MSL MOD 3

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FRINGE LEADERS

Increasing Importance

Mahendra Singh Tikait, Syed Shahabuddin and Kanshi Ram have established pockets of influence in the Hindi heartland, the crucial battlefield in the next election. They now represent a powerful electoral triumvirate.

WITH the general elections round the corner, their shadows are looming large on the political horizon. Like vandals capable of wrecking the fortunes of the major contenders, a strange triumvirate—Kanshi Ram, Mahendra Singh Tikait and Syed Shahabuddin—has staked its claim to the electoral sweepstakes.

The trio have little in common except for the ability to cut into the votes of both the Congress(I) and the Janata Dal and upset the applecart of the principal bidders for power in the forthcoming elections. Though obscure figures a few years ago, the three are now weighing heavily on the psyche of leaders of the major parties.

And with every passing day, their stock is rising in the pre-election political bazaar. Emissaries from both Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and Janata Dal President Vishwanath Pratap Singh have made a beeline for their doors in a desperate bid to win them over.

Aware of their crucial role, the three are proving to be hard bargainers. They admit as much. Shahabuddin, president of the Insaaf Party which he recently launched, says: "I am waiting for the market to rise. And of course mine is a seller's market, not a buyer's one."

For the record at least, leaders of both the mainline parties maintain a brave front and try not to betray the fact that they are worried by the peripheral politicians' increasing clout. They dismiss as a mere myth the ability of these leaders to swing the votes of the social groups they claim to represent.

BHAWAN SINGH

KANSHI RAM
Leader, Bahujan Samaj Party

Kanshi Ram's parochial campaign has radicalised Harijan politics. He now has a strong Dalit base.

Says AICC(I) General Secretary V.N. Gadgil: "Harijans are not a monolith. Though not strictly in the Marxist sense, class consideration transcends caste consideration. What is really important in elections is what the Americans call the misery index—unemployment and inflation in our context." Janata Dal leader Satyapal Malik accuses the trio of pursuing "wrong politics that isolates a particular caste or community".

Away from media attention, Kanshi Ram has worked tirelessly—and launched a sheerly parochial campaign—to radicalise Harijan politics over the last five years. He now has a strong Dalit base that cuts across several states. The successive poll performances of his Bahujan Samaj Party (BSP) point to a growing sway over the Harijans.

The BSP got a mere 2.4 per cent of the total votes polled in the Uttar Pradesh assembly elections in March 1985. In the Uttar Pradesh by-elections held in March 1987, the BSP polled an impressive 26.7 per cent. Kanshi Ram again demonstrated his clout in the prestigious Allahabad parliamentary by-election last year. Pitted against the combined opposition candidate, V.P. Singh, and the Congress(I)'s Sunil Shastri, he polled over 72,000 votes. "You can guess the tremendous growth of my support base from the fact that during the December 1984 general election my candidate got just 1,716 votes in Allahabad," says Kanshi Ram. Admits a Congress(I) leader: "Of the three, Kanshi Ram can do the maximum damage."

Tikait, the dour kisan leader—who laid

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRASHANT PANJIAR

MAHENDRA SINGH TIKAIT
Leader, Bharatiya Kisan Union

Tikait is keeping his options open—negotiating with both Rajesh Pilot of the Congress and emissaries of Janata Dal strongman Devi Lal.

siege to Delhi's Boat Club grounds last year when he led a prolonged dharna of farmers there—might not agree with that calculation. The stronghold of his Bharatiya Kisan Union (BKU) is western Uttar Pradesh, where it could tilt the balance in a dozen-odd Lok Sabha constituencies.

So could Shahabuddin, who yields considerable clout over Muslims throughout Uttar Pradesh and Bihar—both electorally crucial states. By taking a rabidly militant line on key issues affecting the community—the Muslim Women's Bill, the Babri Masjid-Ram Janmabhoomi dispute and Salman Rushdie's Satanic Verses—Shahabuddin has tried to project himself as the messiah of the Muslims. Though he claims to be a "graduate from the Janata University", Shahabuddin attributes his incompatibility with the present Janata Dal to the party's decision to have seat adjustments with the BJP. In the event of a poll-eve polarisation on communal lines as a result of the recent flare-ups in Uttar Pradesh, Madhya Pradesh and Rajasthan, Shahabuddin certainly stands to gain.

Interestingly, though the fringe leaders may not be able to ensure the victory of their own candidates, they can wreck the chances of either of the mainline parties. For instance, in the Punjab assembly elections in September, 1985, though the BSP polled a mere 2.2 per cent of the votes, its presence sealed the fate of the Congress(I) which lost the polls by less than 1 per cent.

That is why, immediately after the Allahabad by-election, both Congress(I) and opposition leaders started wooing Kanshi Ram. A number of Central ministers, including well-known negotiators like Sheila Dikshit and Rajesh Pilot, held talks with him. Kanshi Ram says that he declined the offer of a berth in the Union Cabinet in lieu of the BSP merging with the Congress(I).

THE ruling party's concern is understandable. Kanshi Ram has succeeded in denting the traditional Congress vote-bank which comprises Brahmins, Harijans and Muslims. With the Muslims still alienated from the party, the loss of Harijan votes will prove disastrous for the Congress(I). Basking in the glow of this new-found importance, the BSP leader makes it a point to mention that a dozen-odd ministers and senior Congress(I) leaders have so far approached him. During the recent parleys, AICC(I) General Secretary Ghulam Nabi Azad, Pilot and the prime minister's man Friday Satish Sharma urged him to meet Rajiv, claims Kanshi Ram.

The wily BSP leader is learnt to have agreed to the proposal. Though Kanshi Ram has suggested seat adjustments with the Congress(I), he is cautious about the outcome. He candidly admits: "My votes are transferable, but not those of the Congress(I)." Sitting in his dingy party headquarters in Delhi's Karol Bagh area, he outlines his strategy to reach his ultimate goal and "rule at Delhi". Says he: "By deciding to concentrate in the large states of the Hindi heartland, I wanted to take the enemy by the neck." He moves a stick over the contours of the Hindi belt on the map pinned up on a wall and claims that of the 240 parliamentary seats in the region, the BSP will bag about 80. "Both the Congress(I) and Janata Dal are status quoist parties. We are for change. While others buy votes, I in fact made it a point to collect a rupee from everyone who intended to support me. One vote, one note—that was my slogan in Allahabad."

Kanshi Ram says that one of the ruling party's proposals is to field backward class candidates (not Harijans) in constituencies where he is not confident of victory. The design is clear: use Kanshi Ram to cut into the Janata Dal's votes as the backward classes have consolidated behind the Opposition. The BSP leader has promised to put up one such candidate in the prime minister's constituency, Amethi to crush the Janata Dal challenge to Rajiv. Kanshi Ram's disarming smile cannot conceal his penchant for boasting. This bragging, however, is not an end in itself. It aims at inflating his importance at the hustings.

It is precisely for this reason that he has floated the Parivartansheel Morcha along with Deve Gowda's truncated Janata Party to "bring about fundamental, structural change" in the country. Kanshi Ram says that the morcha will provide an alternative to both the Congress(I) and the Janata Dal. As they happened to meet at the airport the day after the morcha was launched, V.P. Singh told Kanshi Ram that they could join hands in bringing about parivartan (change) in a more sweeping manner.

Shahabuddin too is caught between the devil and the deep sea. Despite an offer from V.P. Singh to become a member of

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

With Apcolite, you can paint your home blue. Or blue. Or blue. Or blue. Or blue. Or blue.

Apcolite offers more shades in every colour than any other paint. Over 150 ready-to-paint shades.

26 shades in blue alone. Surf Blue, Pigeon Blue, Manor Blue, Blue Bell, Blue Chip, Sapphire, Starry Night, Holiday Sky, Sky Way, Porcelain Cloud ... and 15 more.

The myriad hues don't stop with the blues. Ask for the unique Apcolite Shade Card. And choose the right shade to suit the decor in each of the rooms. You'll have a lot to choose from.

And all the shades are ready-to-paint. So, there's no need to mix 'n' match colours. The shade in your mind will be the shade on your walls. Anytime you want, too. The shades are readily available.

Go for Apcolite – the only 100% pure acrylic emulsion.

Over 150 shades
readily available at
asian paints
COLOUR CORNER Shops.

O&M/4233

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the Janata Dal Parliamentary Board, Shahabuddin balked at the party's decision to have seat adjustments with the BJP which "represents Hindu chauvinism". Taking umbrage at the idea of being bracketed with other fringe leaders, the articulate parliamentarian remarks: "It is rather the BJP that has shrunk into a fringe party." The Congress(I) bosses have also been trying to win him over to their side. Ali Siddiqi, a sycophant of the Gandhi family, was among those deputed to persuade Shahabuddin to align with the Congress(I).

demands. He says he will issue a fatwa (edict) to his followers a couple of days before the polls. Entrenched at the BKU headquarters in Sisauli near Muzaffarnagar, Tikait has given short shrift to consistency in declaring war on the Delhi durbar one moment and praising the prime minister the next. Tikait-watchers, however, discern a method in this madness and point to his shrewdness as a bargainer.

Certainly, in the race for enlisting the support of the fringe leaders, the Congress(I) has an edge over the Opposition.

Dal has offered its symbol to its candidates. The response to this proposal is not yet known.

Nevertheless, it may not be all that easy for these fringe leaders to deliver the votes of a particular group at the door of any party of their choice. For instance, Tikait has inherited the Jat constituency of the late Chaudhary Charan Singh. Jat farmers, traditionally anti-Congress(I), may not oblige if he issues a diktat to vote for the party. While Tikait is looked upon as a leader of the farmers' movement, Charan Singh's political mantle has fallen on his son, Ajit Singh.

SYED SHAHABUDDIN
President, Insaaf Party

Syed Shahabuddin's militant stance on key issues has won him considerable support among Muslims in the Hindi heartland.

While still being urged to reconsider his decision by his old socialist comrades in the Janata Dal like George Fernandes, Jaswant Sinha and Surendra Mohan, the Muslim leader seems to have veered round to the view that for the minorities, the Congress(I) is the lesser evil. Says he: "The major issue in the next elections is the rising wave of Hindu chauvinism, which must be contained. To me it does not matter who becomes the next prime minister."

'Mahatma' Tikait with his rustic wisdom is also keeping his options open—holding negotiations with both Rajesh Pilot and Haryana Chief Minister Devi Lal's emissaries. In the heady days of 1987, when the Jan Morcha juggernaut was rolling all over western Uttar Pradesh, Tikait himself sought a meeting with V.P. Singh. However, lures from the Congress(I) in recent months have proved irresistible. He brags: "Elections or no elections, I alone can ensure that the Congress(I) will remain in power provided they concede our

The Government can easily announce concessions or implement an old pledge to appease any section of the electorate. The Opposition at best can only make promises. Says Pilot: "We will try to take help from everyone without compromising our ideology." Some significance is also being attached to Shetkari Sanghatana leader Sharad Joshi's recent meeting with Rajiv Gandhi.

THE Janata Dal's negotiations with these leaders, on the other hand, are being hampered by the intense group rivalry in the party. Devi Lal, during a prolonged meeting with Kanshi Ram, reportedly remarked: "Your supporters are naked, mine are in loin cloth. Why don't you team up with me?" Clearly the Haryana strongman's effort is to extend his own base rather than enhance the electoral chances of the Janata Dal. However, the party in its talks with these three leaders has proposed seat adjustments. Since the BKU is an apolitical organisation, the Janata

Says Janata Dal National Executive member Som Pal: "He (Tikait) must size up the popular mood."

Similarly, Shahabuddin will find it difficult to convince the Muslims to vote for the Congress(I), whose government has been held responsible by the community for the ghastly Hashimpura carnage in 1987. Kanshi Ram too will have to tread cautiously since he has built up his base solely on the anti-Congress(I) plank. Says Malik: "If these leaders decide to align with the Congress(I), they will lose their base."

The hectic parleys establish two facts: the importance of the trio who hold sway over crucial regions; and the vulnerability of the mainstream parties. The three leaders of course have an inflated sense of their own importance and stress that it is they, rather than the national parties, who represent mainstream politics. But the line of demarcation between the fringe and core of Indian politics seems to be getting increasingly blurred. —BHASKAR ROY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Men down the ages have used the moon to navigate their way into a woman's heart. I prefer to use the stars in her eyes.

DIGJAM

SUITINGS FOR THE CONNOISSEUR

A Product of VXL India Ltd.

WE EXCEL

Available at Mill's SUMANGAL showrooms and other leading stores

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LUDHIANA

The Spirit of Success

Enterprise, a few natural advantages, the readiness to build upon them and a booming export market have transformed Ludhiana from a once-sleepy town into one of India's premier industrial centres.

FIFTY years ago, M.S. Bhogal came from Jabalpur to set up a small machine-repair shop in Ludhiana. Soon he realised there wasn't much of a future in that line. So he started a small unit to manufacture cycle parts. Today, Bhogal Sons is one of the country's largest manufacturers of cycle parts. Last year's turnover: Rs 12 crore.

For more than 15 years, Gurcharan Singh worked as a foreman in Ludhiana's Hero Cycles factory, checking the quality of cycle parts and exhorting his fellow workers to produce more. Then, tiring of the routine, he quit to set up a unit to produce hand lugs. Today, he sells his product to a host of cycle manufacturers, among them his former employers. Annual turnover: Rs 40 lakh.

Unusual rags-to-riches stories? Well, not in Ludhiana. Success tales abound in the Punjab city. In fact, Bhogal and Gurcharan are just faces in a crowd of wealthy entrepreneurs. And new ones are constantly popping up, in little nooks and crannies, wherever there is place to set up a factory shed, and sometimes where there isn't. Local technical expertise, a docile labour force, the easy availability of inexpensive power and a booming export market have combined to transform this once-sleepy town into one of India's premier industrial cities. From dawn until midnight, the hum of weaving machines can be heard from the dimly lit first floors of houses that double as factories. To call Ludhiana a university for entrepreneurs would hardly be an exaggeration.

Says Satish Dhanda, managing director of the Rs 2.2-crore Sadem Industries, a 100 per cent export-oriented unit: "I would be a failure if I go anywhere else. The cost of production is at least 20 per cent cheaper here than in any other city. You have everyone here in one little city—from manufacturers of nuts and bolts to coating units." Dhanda's company exports cycle parts to companies all over the world, such as the British cycle manufacturer, Muddy Fax.

Take a look at the industrialists the

■ Jawahar Lal Oswal, Chairman, Oswal Woollen Mills: very upbeat about the city's spirit of enterprise and good labour relations

Entrepreneurship, Oswal says, runs in Ludhiana's blood. Everyone wants to set up on their own rather than work for someone else.

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

city has spawned: the Munjals of Hero Cycles fame (annual turnover: Rs 208 crore), the Abhey Oswal group (turnover: more than Rs 300 crore), the Arihant group (turnover: Rs 75 crore), Metro Tyre (Rs 100 crore). Even the Thapars began their journey to the top of the industrial big league from Ludhiana though they're no longer headquartered there. And many of the others are now spreading their wings, looking beyond the city that nurtured their enterprise.

The statistics illustrate Ludhiana's success story. Ten years ago, the city had 8,700 large, medium and small-scale units with a turnover of Rs 400 crore. Today, 47,000 units turn out woollens, hosiery, cycle parts, cotton yarn, sewing machines, auto parts, even steel. Total annual turnover: Rs 4,000 crore, a full 60 per cent of the state's industrial production. A sizeable portion of this is exported.

That's not all. The city is a force to reckon with in certain products. It accounts for 95 per cent of the hosiery produced in India, 85 per cent of its sewing machines and 60 per cent of its cycles and cycle parts. Ludhiana also supports nearby towns: 10 new satellite industrial conglomerations like Philour, Budawal and Khanna have grown around the city.

Other figures reveal even more clearly Ludhiana's pole-vault into the industrial big time. In the last six months, over 10 Ludhiana companies put out public share issues. Total value: a whopping Rs 2,700 crore. And the Ludhiana Stock Exchange's turnover has risen from Rs 2 crore when it was set up in 1983, to Rs 200 crore today, making it India's fifth largest. During the same period the number of scrips listed rose from a mere 15 to 158.

By any yardsticks, it's a remarkable economic miracle—and one that shows no signs of coming to an end. The city's big entrepreneurs are pitching for the mega league. Small entrepreneurs are thinking bigger. And unknown ones are leaping into high-tech areas like electronics.

■ Hosiery market in the heart of Ludhiana; and M.S. Bhogal: boom town where rags-to-riches tales have become commonplace

From a small unit to one of the country's largest manufacturers of cycle parts—Bhogal's is a typical success story.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ATLANTA · BOSTON · CHICAGO · CINCINNATI · CLEVELAND · COLORADO SPRINGS · COLUMBUS · DALLAS/FORT WORTH · DENVER · DETROIT · FORT LAUDERDALE · HOUSTON · INDIANAPOLIS · KANSAS CITY · LAS VEGAS · LOS ANGELES · LOUISVILLE · MEMPHIS · MIAMI · MINNEAPOLIS · NASHVILLE · NEW ORLEANS · NEW YORK · ORLANDO ·

GULF AIR & TWA. THERE'S STILL A LOT OF AMERICA TO DISCOVER.

Together Gulf Air and TWA offer you the fastest, easiest and most versatile way to travel to the States, and back.

There's a pick of over 100 destinations in the States, as well the freedom to choose from any Gulf Air or TWA gateways in Europe to leave or arrive from.

After all, America is the land of opportunity. We had to let you make the most of it!

طيران الخليج

GULF AIR

GOLDEN FALCON SERVICE

A TRULY CIVILISED WAY TO FLY.

daCunha/GA/5/89

WASHINGTON · TULSA · TUCSON · TOLEDO · SAINT LOUIS · SAN DIEGO · SAN ANTONIO · PORTLAND · PITTSBURGH · PHOENIX · PHILADELPHIA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Fo... Chennai and eGangotri

■ B.M. Munjal, Satyanand Munjal; (above) Gurcharan Singh and sons

His former employers encouraged Gurcharan to set up on his own.

Says Jawahar Lal Oswal, chairman of the Rs 210-crore Oswal Woollen Mills group: "It's a booming industrial city where everyone aims to become an entrepreneur, rather than work for someone else. Entrepreneurship is in everyone's blood."

That's no exaggeration. The city is dotted with hundreds of small units turning out a variety of products—many of them ancillary units supported by big enterprises. Says Brij Mohan Munjal, chairman of the Rs 160-crore Hero Cycles: "It has been our policy to encourage ancillaries. It helps us because we don't have to invest in producing these components." Hero Cycles supports over 100 ancillary units whose total turnover runs to Rs 40 crore.

One of these is the Rs 7.5-crore Surpal Cycles Ltd, run by Anil Surpal, which produces cycle handles exclusively for Hero. Says Surpal: "The Munjals helped us get the land and the loan. Today we are planning to set up another unit in Ghaziabad to cater to Hero Cycles' factory there."

Other big manufacturers too have helped ancillaries—and benefited from the relationship. Vardhaman Spinning Mills used to buy paper tubes for its reeling machine spindles from manufacturers in south India. Then an electricity board employee suggested he could manufacture the tubes and asked Vardhaman to help him set up a unit. It did. The unit shaped up well and encouraged by its success, three more have come up.

The spate of entrepreneurs has thrown up another ancillary industry of sorts—chartered accountants who, for a commission, help uneducated entrepreneurs negotiate loans and deal with the paper work involved in starting a unit. Says R.D. Khanna, one of them: "Small-scale units were always short of funds. They did not go to the institutions fearing they would lose control over their firms. I went to the state financial institutions and got working capital loan for Ralsons, a cycle manufacturing unit here. Today everyone is coming to us."

ALL this despite the fact that much of the city's raw material—wool, steel, chemicals—come from outside the state. Semi-finished products are drawn from farther away—the wooden bodies of sewing machines come from Batala, semi-finished auto parts from Phagwara and rough yarn from Amritsar and Jalandhar.

The political turmoil in Punjab seems scarcely to have affected Ludhiana. "On the contrary," says Rakesh B. Mittal, managing director of Bharati Telecom Ltd, "Sikhs from other parts of the country have set up units in the city after the 1984 riots, primarily to have a base in their own state."

Ludhiana's entrepreneurs have of course had advantages. Freely available power from the Bhakra Nangal power plant, for one. And since it is hydel power, it is priced low—much cheaper than in neighbouring Haryana. A more important factor has been its docile migrant work-force—60 per cent of the workers come from Bihar and Uttar Pradesh. Says Oswal: "We hardly have anything called strikes. Eighty per cent of the workers in our factory are paid on a piece-rate basis. If I offer a worker a permanent job for eight hours he may not want to work for me because he would be earning less money." The gates of Oswal Woollen Mills are open throughout the day. Workers can enter at any time. Some work 15 hours and take home wages of Rs 2,000 a month.

Pramod Kumar came to Ludhiana from Uttar Pradesh 15 years ago. Working more than 13 hours every day as a labourer in a hosiery factory, he put away enough money to buy six flat-bed hosiery machines. He has rented out five of these to others at Rs 500 a month. At the same time, he continues to work in a factory, using his own machine for which he is paid 25 per cent higher wages. Pramod is not certain about his future plans—he only knows there is no going back to his village. That's not surprising. His monthly earnings: Rs 4,000.

The city's entrepreneurs of course have built on their advantages. Overheads are low in the tightly controlled family-run industries, wastage is minimal and the typical Ludhiana businessman works on low margins. Hero Cycles, for instance, prices its cycles 20 per cent cheaper than competitors. And the Rs 7-crore C.R. Auluck & Sons, manufacturers of Luxmi sewing machines—one of the largest manufacturers in the city—tags its product Rs 100 less than others. Expectedly, buyers crowd the market. Sixty per cent of Luxmi's sewing machines are made for big companies like Usha and Merritt who find it cheaper to buy than produce on their own. And big cycle manufacturers like Atlas and Avon buy their tyres and cycle parts from the city.

Much of Ludhiana's remarkable growth has taken place in the last decade. But the beginnings go back about half a century. Ludhiana was then a small town with a few cycle and machine-repair shops. During the cold winter months, Kashmiri Muslims used to descend on it, making shawls and woollen goods.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

dinesh

Exclusives ▲ Suitings ▲ Co-ordinates ▲ Safaris

The choice of leading fashion houses, internationally.

uthorised dealers: AHMEDABAD: Bansidhar Emporium • Murlidhar Emporium • Pallav • SRINAGAR: Bombay Selection House • Excelsior aiment • Fancy Fabrics • Khyber Stores (IT/3)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The beginning of the Second World War in 1939 changed all that. To conserve resources, the colonial government banned the import of cycle parts, woollen goods and sewing machines. The result was a massive shortage of these items and of spare parts.

That was when Ludhiana stepped into the breach. Small factory sheds sprouted everywhere churning out woollen goods and imitations of imported spare parts. The need for woollen yarn gave rise to yarn manufacturers and even machine tool manufacturers. Some innovative entrepreneurs set up mini steel plants to meet the demand in Ludhiana for tools and spare parts, and in Gobindgarh, 30 km away, centre of the re-rolling industry in Punjab. Says Munjal: "Ludhiana was able to provide an alternative. The commercial acumen of the Punjabis and the technical expertise of the Ramgaria Sikhs played a crucial role in the success of the city."

The Ramgaria Sikhs, many of them handsmiths and mechanics, are famed for their mechanical ability. They are known to turn out replicas of imported machines—at a fraction of the cost. Bhogal, a Ramgaria Sikh, proudly exhibits the forging plant he built with his own hands, using only foreign catalogues for guidance. It cost him Rs 2.5 lakh. The cost of a comparable Japanese machine: Rs 25 lakh.

Man Singh, managing director of Metro Tyres Ltd, has an equally impressive story to narrate. "We are investing Rs 150 crore to set up a tyre plant, which is half the cost of a plant one of our competitors is planning to set up. The only difference is that while their machines will be imported, ours will be made by the Ramgarias."

Nowhere have these tremendous cost advantages been as well exploited as in the export market. As much as Rs 150 crore worth of hosiery goods—one third of the city's total production—is exported to the Soviet Union. The city accounts for 20 per cent of the world's exports of cycle parts.

■ Avinash Auluck, Managing Director of C.R. Auluck & Sons

With low overheads, companies like Auluck can sell products cheap.

So export houses have mushroomed. Five years ago, the city had just two of them. Today there are 30—exporting a variety of goods to the Soviet Union, the US, Latin America, Europe and the Middle East. Total value: Rs 200 crore.

What makes such achievements all the more impressive is that they have been accomplished with the barest of infrastructures. Take Bhogal Sons, one of the country's largest manufacturers of cycle parts. It has neither management experts nor trained engineers. Archaic machines churn out parts while uneducated Ramgaria Sikhs supervise the work. Most companies are tightly controlled by the families which own them. At Hero Cycles, for instance, all the key positions are controlled by family members.

But there are signs of change. A decade ago, few Ludhiana industrialists would have considered a public share issue. Today, many have successfully hit the market and there are several others waiting in the queue. Says S.P. Oswal, managing director of Vardhaman Spinning and General Mills Ltd: "Everyone is looking for faster growth."

Faster growth has also meant many Ludhiana industrialists are seeking to expand outside the city and even outside Punjab. One reason: as in other growing industrial centres, labour is becoming expensive. Other explanations are offered for the shift to other parts of India. Says K.L. Jain, managing director of the Rs 40-crore Arihant Fabrics: "Ludhiana is not getting new industrial licences. Nor does it have resources like gas on the basis of which large projects can come up here." So Arihant Fabrics is starting a Rs 100-crore acrylic fibre plant in Haryana. And Bindal Agro is putting up a Rs 695-crore gas-based fertiliser plant in Uttar Pradesh.

Inevitably, Ludhiana displays all the less pleasant sides of an industrial explosion. The city is bursting at the seams. Industries have sprung up haphazardly. The roads are congested—Contessas vie with cycle rickshaws for right of way. Hotels are overbooked and flights to and from Ludhiana are nearly impossible to get at short notice.

So, will Ludhiana go the way of many other cities in India—slowly but surely asphyxiated by its own growth? Or will it succeed in regulating growth and building up amenities to keep pace with the soaring demand for them? Going by the experience of other cities, the future seems uncertain. But then Ludhiana is not just another city.

—SURAJEET DAS GUPTA
in Ludhiana and Chandigarh

■ Rakesh B. Mittal, Managing Director of Bharati Telecom

Political turmoil, says Mittal, hasn't affected industrial growth.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

THIS IS THE STORY OF A SOFT-SELL PRESENTATION

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THAT SUDDENLY MANAGED TO SCREAM LOUDER FOR ATTENTION THAN ALL THE OTHERS!

It gets your message across loud and clear, when you're fighting to be heard in a highly competitive crowd.

By transforming the most routine presentations into stunning attention-getters!

Just about anyone, who wants to make office communication forceful and eye-catching, can now benefit from using the Quantum Desk Top Publisher from Blue Star.

For presentation power that adds visual impact to all written documents. And is the fastest, most economical alternative to getting jobs done through professional printers.

Business correspondence or sales reports, product catalogues or company newsletters ... the Quantum DTP lets you process text, include graphics, design page formats, vary typefaces, change, shuffle and edit till the very end. Then print out artwork quality material at the speed of up to 8 pages a minute.

All this not only in English but in 10 Indian languages as well with Linguist — Blue Star's Multilingual DTP Software Package.

The System? The Quantum PC/AT, Hewlett-Packard LaserJet, the largest selling laser printer in the world, and the HP ScanJet. The Hewlett - Packard connection gives you the advantage of an unequalled 50-year-old reputation for quality and reliability.

THE QUANTUM DESK TOP PUBLISHER FROM BLUE STAR.

Supported by Software designed for specific applications.

The Quantum DTP from Blue Star is among India's largest selling DTP Systems. With a client list that includes Reliance Industries, Tata Consultancy Services, Hong Kong Bank, ET&T, C-Dot, Bharat Electronics and Exim Bank.

Add to that Blue Star's own Response Centre Support. Offices in 12 major cities have qualified engineers at your service, within hours of calling in.

Please mail in the coupon to the address for a free brochure of the Quantum DTP. Discover the power of presentation which can transform the ordinary ... into the unforgettable.

Yes, I want to know more about the Quantum DTP. Please send me the brochure. 72

Name: _____

Designation: _____

Company Name & Address: _____

_____

_____ Phone: _____

Ashwini Aggarwal,
Hewlett-Packard Division, Blue Star Limited,
13, Community Centre,
New Friends Colony, New Delhi-110 065. Tel: 6834262.

A QUANTUM LEAP IN PRESENTATION POWER.

BLUE STAR

the hi-technology Company

Rediffusion/BS/7493a

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TRADE TANGLE

THE US Trade Representative's (USTR) citing last June of India's so-called restrictive trade practices as possible grounds for future trade retaliation has evoked a number of responses from US companies. Caterpillar Inc and Colgate-Palmolive Company have joined Citibank in defending India. In a letter to the USTR, construction equipment manufacturer Caterpillar (which has a joint venture with the Birlas' Hindustan Motors) said it expects sales in India to rise sharply. Colgate-Palmolive pointed out that India could be provoked into retaliating against US companies, and that India has never discriminated against foreign-owned businesses in applying import control and other regulations. So, is a groundswell of business opinion building up in India's favour? Not quite. The US Chamber of Commerce remains critical of India's so-called trade barriers.

DRIVE-IN BANKING

THE latest geegaw the banks are tooting is the automated teller machine (ATM) drive-in—clients drive in, insert a card into a machine and withdraw cash, all without getting out of their vehicles. Indian Bank introduced one in Madras last fortnight, after obtaining Reserve Bank of India (RBI) permission over a year ago to instal 25 ATMs. Vijaya Bank has expressed an interest in setting up an ATM drive-in in Bangalore. Nevertheless, some ambivalence persists in official circles on ATMs. Some months back, an RBI committee recommended that banks should not introduce ATMs, on foreign exchange considerations (ATMs are now imported). Yet New Delhi has encouraged HMA Data Systems, the Madras company that installed the Indian Bank ATM, to manufacture them, though this will call for initial imports. The NRI-promoted enterprise has signed an MOU with Diebold Inc of the US. And in Bombay, Wellman Hindustan which has tied up with National Cash Registers of the US to turn out ATMs has received government permission.

A BUSH IN HAND

INDUSTRIALIST Satish Kumar Modi has pulled off a deal that has top echelons in the Government rejoicing. Last May, Modi Overseas Investment Ltd signed a memorandum of understanding (MOU) with Bush Resources Inc, a real estate company headed by US President George Bush's elder brother Prescott S. Bush Jr to build a Rs 90-crore housing complex in Delhi. Modi met Prescott Bush along with Indian Ambassador to the US, Karan Singh, last month. The project involves building 180 swanky bungalows for non-resident Indians (NRIs). Cost: Rs 34 lakh to Rs 58 lakh each, to be paid in foreign exchange. Last fortnight, Modi Overseas submitted the building plans prepared by Bush Resources to the Delhi Administration for approval. A plot near Palam Airport is to be acquired and Modi hopes to start construction early next year. Now that's called construction diplomacy.

CHANGING STARS

INDIAN hotels have long sported star ratings. Now, a Tourism Department committee is thinking of a new system with classifications like those abroad: deluxe, first class, standard and plain budget. Some of the current five-star deluxe and five-star hotels will fall in the deluxe category, while other five-star and all four-star hostelries will get first class rating. Most three-star and four-star hotels will be budget hotels.

WIDENING GAP

THE gap between the official foreign exchange rate and the unofficial or hawala rate has been widening over the last few months. The hawala rate hovered at around Rs 18 for a dollar between January and April this year but climbed to almost Rs 21 in June and July (see chart). The official rate rose from roughly Rs 15 to almost Rs 16 between January and April, and by July was just above Rs 16. Obviously, there's been a sudden spurt in the demand for illegal foreign exchange. Official sources attribute this to increased smuggling of gold and silver (buyers are having to fork out more foreign exchange for bullion) and to manipulation of invoices by businessmen. Others point to the coming elections. Just before previous elections, foreign exchange stashed away abroad, it seems, used to be converted into rupees to finance campaigns. This time, they claim, the reverse is happening.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

QUICK WORK

THE Government that works faster is at it again. In 1986, the Centre had sanctioned Rs 2.96 crore for the Central Board of Excise and Customs (CBEC) to build a new customs building near Delhi's Indira Gandhi International Airport. So the customs took a 10,000 sq m plot on lease from the International Airports Authority of India (IAAI). Then, wrangling broke out. Dispute one: the height of the proposed building. The IAAI said it would have to be scaled down since aeroplanes land at the airport. The matter was settled. Dispute two: the fee. That too was resolved. Then came dispute three: IAAI wanted its contractors to put up the building, the customs wanted the task entrusted to the Central Public Works Department. The customs won. Finally, the financial adviser to the CBEC objected to the marble flooring proposed; he wanted cheaper flooring material. The outcome of all this: the building's cost has soared, from Rs 2.96 crore to almost Rs 5 crore.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DCM LIMITED

Speech by Shri Bansi Dhar, Chairman at the Annual General Meeting of the Company held on September 27, 1989 at New Delhi.

Shri Bansi Dhar

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I extend to you a very warm and cordial welcome. The Directors' Report and the Audited Accounts of the Company for the period ending 31st March 1989, have been with you for some time and, with your permission, I will take them as read.

In view of the amendments in the Income Tax Act, the financial year of the Company has been changed from July-June to April-March. Accordingly, the Annual Report for the period ending 31st March 1989 covers a period of 9 months. It is for this reason that the AGM is being held in September rather than in December, which all of us have been used to.

Your Company is 100 years old. Looking back, we can be proud of its growth into one of the most diversified Corporations in the country. I am sure that you will join me in paying tribute to our founding fathers and all those who nurtured and brought up this Company to a position of eminence. In this connection, I would like to make a special mention of the contributions made by Lala Shri Ramji but for whose vision, the Company could not have reached this level.

OPERATIONS

Friends, you are aware that the Company has been facing numerous problems in the past few years. Even though the returns have not been commensurate with the investments, we were still able to give some dividends. Lately, however, even this was not possible.

The continuing deterioration had generated a certain amount of pessimism and led to some quarters even having reservations whether the Company would be able to survive against such heavy odds and return to the path of growth. It is, therefore, very gratifying that during the period under review, the Company has made a gross profit of Rs. 15 crores as against a loss of Rs. 8 crores last year. If annualised, this is the best achieved in the last 5 years.

Even though we are on the path of recovery, we still have some way to go. We have to clear liabilities, reduce the interest burden and, most of all, ensure that our investments bear results.

In the last Shareholders' Meeting, I had mentioned that we have taken various steps to reverse the situation. On the basis of current performance, we expect that this trend towards improvement will continue.

A feature of the results is the addition to the reserves of the Company by over Rs. 3.5 crores as against a substantial erosion in 1987-88. The improvement that has been brought about is largely due to sustained efforts in cost-reduction on all fronts, tighter financial management, and better operating efficiencies. I am sure that all of you will join me in acknowledging the assistance, support and dedicated efforts of all the employees for enabling the Company to achieve this turnaround.

There has been an improvement in the operations of the Fertiliser, PVC, Caustic Soda, Rayons, Sugar, Vanaspati and Foundry Plants. A major contributing factor to improved performance was better power availability, particularly at the Kota complex, leading to record utilisation of capacities. Exports also registered an increase, on an annualised basis. The only areas which are still in the red are Textiles and Electronics. All efforts are being put in to reverse the trend and bring them back to a state of health.

A significant event in the current year has been the closure of Delhi Cloth Mills at Bara Hindu Rao with effect from 1.4.89. This Mill was incurring heavy lossess for the last several years and with its closure, the drain on the Company's profitability can be avoided. The Company is poised to enter into the business of Real Estate Development and we look forward to expeditious approvals by the authorities concerned so that the work can proceed.

There is a need to conserve resources to enable the Company to optimise its existing operations and meet pressing commitments in the long-term interest of the Company's health. All these factors were considered at great length by the Board of Directors and it has been decided not to pay any dividend this year despite a disposable surplus. I am confident that we can count on your support and encouragement so that we can return to a path of progress and growth.

As in the previous years, the Company continued to lay emphasis on controlling pollution to make the environment cleaner. This is a continuing exercise and your Company is committed to this objective. Every year, we will have to continue our efforts in this direction. In this context, I would, once again, request the Government to take the initiative in working out a new approach in co-ordination with the States and industry. I would also request that a package of measures and incentives to encourage and facilitate industry in meeting the exacting standards and implementing the required programme in phases should be seriously considered.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RESTRUCTURING

In the last AGM, I had informed you of the proposal of restructuring the Company.

Over the years, DCM Ltd. has become a large conglomerate with multifarious and diverse operations. Each of the units is large enough to be a fair-sized independent company. Because of its diverse nature, however, there were conflicting priorities and lack of focus in management of some of the operations, resulting in an unsatisfactory overall performance.

Your Directors have given a lot of thought to this matter and have also held discussions with the Financial Institutions. It has been felt that restructuring DCM Ltd. into smaller companies would result in giving a greater thrust to various areas of operations.

To run the business more effectively and profitably, it is therefore proposed to restructure DCM Ltd. by dividing it into four companies, namely, DCM Shriram Industries Ltd.; DCM Engineering Industries Ltd.; Rath Foods Ltd.; and DCM Ltd.

DCM Shriram Industries Ltd. will comprise of Shriram Rayons, Daurala Sugar Works and Hindon River Mills;

DCM Engineering Industries Ltd. will comprise of Shriram Fertilisers & Chemicals, Shriram Cement Works, Swatantra Bharat Mills and DCM Silk Mills;

Rath Foods Ltd. will comprise of Shriram Foods & Fertiliser Industries and Mawana Sugar Works;

DCM Ltd. will, from the date of restructuring, comprise of DCM Data Products, DCM Engineering Products, Delhi Cloth Mills Land Development, Hissar Textile Mills and the investments in Shriram Fibres Ltd. and DCM Toyota Limited.

The four companies formed will have the same shareholders as in the present DCM Ltd. Under the Scheme worked out, each shareholder of DCM Ltd. will have one equity share of Rs. 10 each in each new Company as fully paid up for every four equity shares of Rs. 10 each held by them in the present DCM Ltd. You will be approached shortly with the detailed scheme for your approval. However, you can rest assured that in this exercise, your interests are of paramount importance to us and shall be fully protected.

This restructuring is bound to result in the consolidation and growth of various operations. Since these will now be smaller companies to be managed and operated independently, the shareholders can look forward to improved prospects.

It will be easier for the management of each of the smaller companies to improve the performance, productivity and profitability further and to make the company grow and expand. Each of the companies has the managerial and technical talent and expertise available to make good use of business opportunities in the coming years. I, therefore, have no reservation that this restructuring will be in the long-term interest of all those who have a stake in the company.

By breaking through the constraints of the last few years and re-orienting ourselves to the changing times, we will be able to grow and prosper and thus contribute to the socio-economic development of our nation.

ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

During the last 5 years, the economic policies of Government have been very positive and pragmatic. As a result, last year GNP grew by 8.5%; industrial production went up by 9.3% and yet inflation was contained at 6%. These increases, in spite of the unprecedented drought of 1987 and other aberrations in the initial years of the 7th Plan, is an indicator of the inherent strength and speaks well of the overall management of the country's economy. With the impetus given by the Government in the last 5 years, the economy has achieved rapid growth and it augurs well for the future.

During the 8th Plan also, there will be abundant opportunities for growth and expansion. There are already indications that the Plan, which is still under formulation, envisages a more significant role for the private sector in the economic development of the country. The share of private sector outlay has been increased, and several thrust areas have been identified for their participation.

I am sure that the private sector in general, and the management of the new companies in particular, shall respond vigorously to these challenges. The measures of liberalisation of the regulatory system by the Government during the past few years has already proved that the approach is in the interest of economic growth and upliftment of the country and its people. I therefore hope that further relaxation of various industry and financial controls shall be continued in the coming years also.

There is also, in my opinion, scope for simplifying and rationalising various systems, policies and procedures without diluting the regulatory control as considered essential in the context of the socio-economic development. I take this opportunity to request the Government to undertake this exercise urgently and take necessary steps along with the commencement of the 8th Plan period in April, 1990.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Before concluding, I would like to express my gratitude to my colleagues on the Board for their support, guidance and advice to tackle the problems that we were faced with. We could not have improved the Company's performance without their help and assistance.

My grateful thanks are also due to the Financial Institutions and our Bankers, who have given their unreserved support and co-operation to us during a very difficult period.

I must also express special thanks to my colleagues at all levels in the Company for their hard work and dedication in improving the operations under difficult conditions.

Most of all, I extend to you, dear shareholders, my sincere and heartfelt gratitude for your continued confidence and co-operation which has been a source of immense strength and encouragement to me and my colleagues.

Thank you.

Note : This does not purport to be a record of the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

DCM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RELIANCE INDUSTRIES

The Big Push

The country's third largest corporate group—known for its closeness to the ruling party—is embarking on a massive, Rs 4,000-crore expansion drive, despite the controversies it's caught in and the uncertainty in the political climate.

FOR weeks, they've had their backs to the wall, furiously fighting court cases. Their names have been dragged into a sensational criminal case that stunned the business community. Their take-over of a giant engineering enterprise has been the subject of devastating investigations by a national newspaper chain, their attempt to raise money from the public has faced a series of legal challenges. As if this was not enough, for the first time in the history of independent India, the future of a business empire seemed intertwined with the fortunes of the ruling party at the hustings.

To the troika that is in the eye of the storm, all this has a familiar ring. Reliance Industries Chairman Dhirubhai Ambani, 56, and his sons Mukesh, 32, and Anil, 30, have been in the thick of controversy before. But the going seems tougher this time round. Leading lights of the Opposition are gunning for the Ambanis, and Dhirubhai himself is not quite the man he was. A stroke he suffered in 1986 has taken its toll: his right arm is paralysed.

Worse, the Indian Express has front-paged every Reliance move and every favour the Government has allegedly granted the group (see box). As a result, Reliance has had to face public interest litigation filed by Bombay lawyer Harish Jagtiani questioning L&T's take-over and seeking a stay on L&T's Rs 820-crore convertible debenture issue. Earlier, senior Reliance executive Kirti Ambani (no relative of Dhirubhai) was arrested and later released on bail by the Bombay Police in a conspiracy case to murder the Ambanis' arch rival, Nusli Wadia, chairman of Bombay Dyeing Industries. The stock-markets have reflected popular perceptions: the Reliance scrip has languished in the Rs 105 to Rs 110 price range, a far cry from the Rs 393 of 1986.

All this seems to spell trouble for the country's third largest business group. Yet the mood at the plush corporate headquarters of Reliance Industries at Bombay's Nariman Point is anything but gloomy. The pressures and the media attacks haven't affected the Ambanis. On the contrary, they exude an air of supreme confidence. Late last week, Anil and Mukesh celebrated with a night out in town. Reason: the L&T issue showed every sign of having been oversubscribed. As per official rules, the company will be allowed to retain 15 per cent of the excess sums collected. Quite simply, the Ambanis will have a hefty Rs 953 crore, to do with virtually as they please.

They've never quite fully explained what they intend to do with the cash. One Principal business: Textiles, polyester filament yarn, polyester staple fibre, purified terephthalic acid, linear alkyl benzene.

Financial: 1988-89 sales: Rs 1,169 crore. Net Profit: Rs 79.37 crore. Total Assets: Rs 1,502.76 crore.
New Projects: Ethylene cracker. Cost: Rs 750 crore. Export oriented purified terephthalic acid unit. Cost: Rs 750 crore. Oil refinery: at Jebel Ali export processing zone, Dubai. Cost: Rs 1,120 crore. Expansion at Patalganga: polyester staple fibre, linear alkyl benzene, purified terephthalic acid. Cost: Rs 1,000 crore.
Total Investment: Rs 3,620 crore.
Future: Projected sales in 1990-91, Rs 1,472 crore. 1991-92, Rs 1,598 crore. 1992-93, Rs 2,027 crore.

Reliance Petrochemicals Ltd
New project at Hazira, Gujarat
Cost: Rs 750 crore
Commissioning: 1990

RPL will be the largest manufacturer of mono ethylene glycol, used to produce synthetic yarn, poly vinyl chloride and high density polyethylene both key raw materials for making plastics.

MUDRA

Mudra Communications
Advertising Agency.
Billings: 1988-89, Rs 50 crore. Ranked fifth in billings.

COMMERCE

Commerce Publications Ltd
New five-edition financial daily
Launch: end-1989

Dhirubhai's vision is of an integrated group that will refine oil, extract raw materials for producing a range of intermediate items.

Larsen & Toubro Ltd

Principal business: Engineering, cement, shipping, construction.
Financial: Sales: Rs 1,107 crore. Net Profit: Rs 42.48 crore. Total Assets: Rs 565.82 crore.
New Projects: Tyres capacity: 3 million. Cement expansion: 3 million tonnes.
Future: Company will have 10 per cent share of tyre market, 7 per cent of cement market.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

explanation: L&T will extend Rs 300 crore as suppliers' credit to Reliance Petrochemicals Ltd (RPL). Also planned: a Rs 120-crore refrigerators and washing machines project.

The Ambanis are embarking on a Rs 4,000-crore expansion drive over the next five years. Undaunted, Dhirubhai Ambani is still thinking big. His vision is one of an integrated group that will refine oil, extract products like mono ethelyne glycol (MEG) and purified terephthalic acid (PTA)—raw materials for producing synthetic yarn—and a host of other products that go into the making of plastics, from the oil. The gambit will give the group control of raw materials, enabling it to produce a range of intermediate items. Indeed, Ambani confesses that his ambition is to follow the path of the "Seven Sisters," the integrated oil multinationals who first went into oil exploration, then into refining, distribution and finally into petrochemicals. The Ambanis, however, hope to do this in reverse order. "That's our dream," admits Dhirubhai.

The plan is to enter markets where the > "Reliance Industries is now a concept in which the Ambanis have become irrelevant."

>
> DHIRUBHAI AMBANI
> Chairman, Reliance Industries

RAGHU RAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ambanis will quickly become leaders, always cocking an eye at national needs. With foreign exchange scarce, exports are a priority, and the group has set a Rs 1,000-crore export target. And since there's a shortage of housing, the Government is bound to back a foray into mass house construction. Here, engineering and construction giant L&T will play a major role. So L&T has a 3-million-tonne cement expansion project on the drawing-boards (apart from a 3-million-tyre project).

Also in the offing is a Rs 750-crore unit to crack ethylene, a basic raw material for plastics, at Hazira in Gujarat. The Government has also cleared a Rs 750-crore export oriented unit for the manufacture of PTA. Even more ambitious is a push overseas—Reliance is to set up a 6-million-tonne refinery at the Jebel Ali export processing zone in Dubai. The $700-million (Rs 1,120 crore) refinery will be financed entirely overseas. "International banks are queueing up to finance the project," Anil Ambani claims.

Last but not least is an ambitious media plan. Commerce Publications, the company owned by Dhirubhai's son-in-law Dattaraj Salgaocar, is coming out with a business daily in December. The ultimate goal is to establish a total presence in the information business. If all these plans materialise, Reliance may well emerge as a formidable Rs 5,000 crore group over the next five years.

PRAVEEN PUSHKARNA

GANGADHAR BHOJANI

Gurumurthy's exposes and the arrest of a Reliance employee for conspiring to murder Nusli Wadia have been big embarrassments for the Ambanis in recent months.

OBVIOUSLY, the money for all this will be raised from the public. Since going public in 1977, Reliance has collected an estimated Rs 2,500 crore from the stock-markets—in convertible debentures. The group has followed the classic financial strategy of converting debentures into shares—to reduce the interest burden—at a high premium. The premium money collected is then tucked away in reserves, bolstering the company's net worth (reserves and surplus). This keeps the company's debt: equity ratio at negligible levels (0.62:1 last year) and enables it to borrow more money for expansion. In fact, Reliance can easily raise another Rs 1,400 crore from the markets.

It's against this backdrop that the Ambanis insist that the attacks by Indian Express are no more than irritants, and that the outcome of the elections is of little concern. Dhirubhai Ambani says (see interview): "Reliance is now a concept in which the Ambanis have become irrelevant." Reliance executives also privately argue that the costs to the country of stopping the group in its tracks are too high.

The Ambanis are clearly banking on their dominance in industry, and on their constituency, the 3.9 million investors of Reliance and of Reliance Petrochemicals. Reliance Industries Executive Director Mukesh Ambani stresses that: "Reliance is a market leader. The group accounts for nearly 1 per cent of the indirect taxes collected in the country and saves Rs 1,000 crore a year in import substitution. We are also planning to achieve Rs 1,000 crore a year by exporting manufactured goods. I am sure you will consider this a sizeable presence."

The key element here is the investor.

The Ambanis have in the recent past been snapping up multi-storeyed complexes in Bombay. One example: ICI's Crescent Building which is being renamed Reliance House.

L&T House

Reliance House

RPL House

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Two out of three investors in the country are Reliance group shareholders. Together, Reliance, Reliance Petrochemicals and L&T stocks account for 11 per cent of the total value of shares in the stock-markets today. The government-owned Life Insurance Corporation of India and the Unit Trust of India depend on stock-market operations for a good chunk of their income. So if the Reliance share price plummets, it could pull down the values of other shares too—and chew into the income of the two investment institutions. Indian Express Financial Advisor S. Gurumurthy backs the point when he says: "These institutions have a vested interest in keeping the Reliance share price high. If the share price index falls, there is panic all around."

Right now, the Ambanis also have other grounds for optimism. The Patalganga complex, which had been ravaged by floods recently, is back on its feet. The Reliance group itself is on a roller-coaster ride. Sales for the nine-month year of 1988-89 are up by 26 per cent, from Rs 1,770 crore in 1987-88 (18 months) to Rs 1,112 crore in 1988-89 (9 months). Net profits have shot up by almost 100 per cent (both on an annualised basis), from Rs 81 crore (18 months) to Rs 79 crore (9 months). This contrasts with the net profit of Rs 14 crore in 1986, when V.P. Singh was finance minister.

Reliance Money Machine: Where Rs 2,500 crore has gone.

Company	Issue/Yr.	Size	Purpose	Status
Reliance Industries	Series "E" Convertible Debentures (1984)	Rs 80 crore	Modernisation of textile division	Implemented
Reliance Industries	Series "F" Convertible Debentures (1985)	Rs 309 crore	Expansion of polyester filament yarn (PFY) division, PSF and PTA projects	PFY expansion implemented, PSF, PTA projects delayed by three years
Reliance Industries	Series "G" Convertible Debentures (1986)	Rs 500 crore	LAB/MEG/HDPE PTA projects	Cost escalation in PTA project, (Rs 268 crore to Rs 550 crore). LAB plant delayed. Both commissioned in early 1988
Reliance Industries	Rights Equity (1987)	Rs 198 crore	Increase in capital
Reliance Petrochemicals	Convertible Debentures (1988)	Rs 593 crore	MEG/PVC/HDPE projects	Slated to be commissioned in end-1990
Larsen & Toubro	Convertible Debentures (1989)	Rs 820 crore	Suppliers credit to RPL and other undisclosed projects
Total		Rs 2,500 crore

INDIAN EXPRESS

Fiery Exchange

Reliance

Charges

- The Ambanis antedated letters of credit for the import of Rs 100-crore worth of PTA. The CBI recommended prosecution. No government action as yet.
- Reliance obtained licences for the manufacture of MEG, PVC and HDPE in mid-'84. Not implemented after five years.
- There have been massive cost escalations in all the key projects.
- Reliance has been raising money again and again for the same project. In October 1986, it raised Rs 500 crore for various projects, including the LAB and the MEG ones.
- Reliance Industries transferred the licences for MEG and HDPE to RPL. Excess amount raised for these projects after implementing the PTA and LAB projects: around Rs 300 crore.
- Though the original cost of three RPL projects was estimated at Rs 345 crore, they cost Rs 700 crore.
- Reliance has huge unsold stocks of PSF and LAB. Capacity utilisation of PSF is 55 per cent, while that of LAB is 60 per cent.
- Reliance annual profit is less than the aggregate of excise and customs duty concessions it has got from government. As against Rs 280-crore bounty, its profits are only Rs 112 crore.

Replies

- Since there was no truth in the allegation, the case was dropped after seeking a report from various expert bodies.
- Not true. Final locational clearances given in 1988. Projects could not be completed according to original schedule.
- Cost-overruns due to delays in customs clearances, foreign exchange variations over which company had no control.
- The company never raised money for the LAB project. It was for the MEG venture. Reallocation of funds for ongoing projects has been done after obtaining government approval.
- The extra money was used for expansion and ongoing projects with the approval of the board, the shareholders, the financial institutions and the Government.
- The original cost was worked out in 1982. It was revised after three years. The MRTPC order in 1988 says Rs 700 crore.
- The company has only two weeks of inventory. In fact, PSF capacity utilisation is 105 per cent today.
- All financial concessions meant for the industry as whole. No concession given to Reliance only. All concessions passed on to consumers.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

With all this going for them, the Ambanis have been buying up real estate in Bombay, including the ICI India building which will be renamed Reliance House.

Yet there is no denying that the group's image has taken a beating, and that several questions have been raised about the group's practices, and not by the Express alone. For instance, it's often accused of raising money for the same project several times (see box). Says a Bombay banker: "The Reliance group has acquired a certain arrogance. It feels that if it can pay a reasonable dividend to shareholders and keep the price of the share high, nobody will question it."

There have been rumours that the money raised from the public issue was utilised to finance the take-over of L&T. There's considerable speculation today that the Ambanis are eyeing Premier Automobiles and Bombay Suburban Electricity Supply, which they deny.

The Ambani juggernaut could be heading for more serious problems. The Ambanis have a 48-per cent share of the polyester filament yarn (PFY) market—the product contributed Rs 421 crore to sales last year—but a glut is building up in the industry. The story is repeated in polyester staple fibre (PSF), where Reliance controls 35 per cent of the market. Together, these products contributed to almost half of Reliance's sales. Anil Ambani, however, argues: "Reliance is a multi-product company and will be able to weather any storm."

While it may or may not weather upsets in the market-place, it will have a hard time living down the Express charges of official favouritism. "Nobody looks at favours granted to other business houses. Why pick on Reliance?" Anil asks. Taking his case further, he says that Reliance has had its fair share of misses: it lost out on bids for the Saleempur aromatics project, a gas cracker in Gujarat, the refinery in Madhya Pradesh, and a power project in Gujarat. "This clearly disproves the sustained propaganda that Reliance gets whatever it wants," says Anil. Gurumurthy of the Express, however, doesn't buy the line: "The Birlas and the Mundhras were close to the Government in the past. But never before has a business house actually dictated terms."

If Reliance is to ride out the latest storm, it will have to overcome that common perception. And for all their statements to the contrary, what is also clear is that the fate of the Ambanis will hinge on the political, rather than the financial environment—proving once more that politics and economics don't make such strange bedfellows after all.

—S.N. VASUKI

RAGHU RAI

DHIRUBHAI AMBANI

"Success is my worst enemy"

HIS ideas race ahead of his words. Barely has he finished with one idea before he's on to the next, his mind a cauldron bubbling over.

Reliance Industries Chairman Dhirubhai Ambani may have suffered a stroke, and may even be under fire, but he's supremely confident. And there's certainly a lot of that old Ambani magic around. It surfaces in the way he talks excitedly and loudly, in his quick bursts of laughter, in his friendly approach, and in his rapid-fire conversation which is punctuated with an explosive kya (what)—a pet word.

The ideas range from the bizarre to the brilliant. Some of them are more prime ministerial in their approach than those of an industrialist looking to make a buck. He talks animatedly of the country's need to export, of the falling value of the rupee vis-a-vis other foreign currencies, of the eighth plan and of modernisation. He's concerned about India's need for energy, and offers solutions. "Every Indian has a gambling instinct, kya*? So many crores are spent on* matka every day. Why not use this for the benefit of the country, kya*? India needs so much more oil, so tell people they can invest in oil exploration but give them good odds, say 10 to 1, and make the earnings tax free. I guarantee you'll get hundreds of crores,* kya*?" Like the man, his* kya has many meanings—do you agree, so what, do you have anything to add.

But the relaxed style is deceptive. The key to the man lies in his eyes. They are the eyes of a superb poker player. His unblinking stare takes in everything, coolly sizes up every detail around him, without giving anything away. They light up only on the mention of Ramnath Goenka and the Indian Express*, describing its campaign against Reliance as journalistic terrorism—another favourite phrase.*

Ambani wears his wealth lightly, without arrogance. Like his manner, his dress is informal—a plain white bush shirt and trouser. Indeed, the Ambanis regard themselves as different from other businessmen. Unlike many other industrialists, Ambani and his sons Mukesh and Anil, don't fit into Bombay's club culture. They're workaholics who put in 14 to 16-hour days and think business round the clock.

Riled by the growth of the new industrialised countries like Taiwan, Dhirubhai believes that he'd be 10 times his present size if he'd had the same opportunities. For all that, he's set a scorching pace of growth—which some of his rivals haven't been able to. His answer to that: "Everyone had the same opportunities available to them, and I'm being made out to be Duryodhana." Last fortnight, the controversial industrialist broke his over two-year-long silence in a 4-hour exclusive interview in Bombay and New Delhi with Senior Editor PRABHU CHAWLA. Excerpts:

Q. Are you spending more time defending Reliance than managing it?

A. There is no controversy. There is only a campaign; a one-sided campaign of corporate character assassination in one chain of newspapers, Indian Express, a campaign being conducted at the behest of some business adversaries. The campaign has now become so hackneyed that I do not think it necessary or useful for me or for the paper's readers to defend myself against all the lies, half-truths and distortions which it keeps printing.

I believe my best defence is my deeds, my projects. In a few years from now, what will stand tall above all these so-called controversies is the work I'll have done and left behind me to make Indian industry great and big and competitive at home and in the world market. I'm not sure how many will really bother to remember the daily venomous outpourings of the Indian Express.

Q. Have the controversies in any way

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

affected the performance of Reliance?

A. Yes, they have—in great measure. They have sent 51 lakh Indian investors rallying to Reliance's support. They have made my colleagues at our offices and at all our plants and in the market-place work with greater vigour, dedication and solidarity to yield the type of production and financial results which we have achieved in all our companies.

Q. Why raise money from the investors when the banking system is more than willing to help you?

A. What are you saying? If you say what you have said, you haven't understood me; you haven't understood Reliance's corporate philosophy. Even my worst enemies have not denied me credit for having pioneered a revolution in the Indian capital market, for bringing the equity culture to the money market, the middle class and farmers.

Q. The Reliance scrip is languishing in the Rs 105-110 range. Is this a sign that investors have lost confidence in Reliance?

A. Certainly not. The confidence and trust of Reliance investors in their company is unshakable. Do you think we would have received such huge over-subscriptions to our public issues had our investors' confidence in the company been shaken? As for the Reliance stock price, you must relate it to the vast changes which have come about in our capital market over the last few years. Investors are dispersing their investments more widely, in different companies, even within our own group. The stock prices of our different companies are seeking and attaining a new equilibrium.

Q. Would you attribute your presence in Larsen & Toubro (L&T) to the support of the financial institutions?

A. It was the L&T Chairman N.M. Desai and its board of directors which invited Reliance to join its board. Then, once we had mutually agreed to come together, L&T stock was acquired from the market at the market price. In fact, the shares were acquired in the face of tough competition. All that is a matter of record. The entire issue has been dealt with in the Bombay High Court, which has clearly and categorically vindicated and upheld the coming together of the two companies.

Q. But that is not correct. BoB Fiscal and other financial institutions had already made up their mind to hand over the company to you through the backdoor. Please comment.

A. This is again the creation of Indian Express' fertile mind. The stocks were available in the market. We bought them at the market price. Any one could have outbid us. Even today, enough L&T shares are available in the market.

Q. Three years ago you had stated that the Reliance group was not interested in takeovers. What explains your acquisition of L&T?

A. Synergy. You know Reliance Industries Ltd (RIL) and L&T have had a long business association. We came together to take up the various Reliance Petrochemicals Ltd (RPL) projects. We both found that considering the volume of RIL/RPL orders on L&T, it would be in our interest to come together. This was really a marriage by mutual consent rather than a takeover.

Q. Your connections in the bureaucracy are legendary. Is it true that important appointments are made at your behest? You are viewed as a 'king-maker' who can make or unmake leaders.

A. I do not know whose perceptions you are referring to—the Indian Express'? Well, the Indian Express has tried to propagate, publicise and project a larger-than-life image of me, calling me the 'king-maker' and all that, all to distort my public image, my public profile. It is all a part of its prolonged psychological war against me, a part of its journalistic terrorism against our group.

Q. But you have been able to prevent action against your company. Nothing has been heard of the famous case relating to backdating of the letter of credit for imports and alleged smuggling of plants without any valid documents.

A. Do you mean to say that the Government should take cognizance of any fabricated material published on the basis of documents stolen from government offices? Let me tell you that even if the Indian Express publishes lies on all the 365 days of the year, it is not going to be accepted by the public. It is the truth which finally prevails. We have been completely exonerated by the adjudicating authorities.

Q. Is it not because you keep the top civil servants and the bankers on your side by helping them set up business? You have done it for the Bank of Baroda chairman's son, and the CBI director's son is also a beneficiary of your munificence.

A. This is a lie. The allegations, both general and specific implied in the question, which itself is based on stories run by the Indian Express, are false. Is doing business with Reliance munificence? Is it a crime? If it is so, then what about people like Ramnath Goenka, Gurumurthy, and others who have all made money out of Reliance?

No businessman can keep investigating the antecedents of all his clients or business associates. If he keeps looking at the name tags of his clients, he is bound to fail.

Q. Your clout with the Government is evident from the manner in which you have been getting all applications for licences approved so quickly.

A. This is the trouble with you newspapermen, my friend. You allow your mind to be conditioned by the so-called pseudo-journalists masquerading as investigative journalists. Every licence that

ON JANATA DAL LEADER V.P. SINGH

Reliance always deals with the Government and not with any individual. It has always been my policy to abide by government policies and rules.

ON WHY GOENKA HAS BECOME HIS ENEMY

As for me, I would say Ramnathji is not my enemy.... The sole motivating factor behind his character assassination campaign is: envy.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

we get immediately becomes a page one story but no one ever bothers to find out how many rejections we have to face. Shall I name a few? Our applications for a six-million-tonne refinery was rejected as were the applications for the Gandhar gas field development and a 600 MW power plant in Gujarat.

Q. You are believed to have stated that 'everyone has a price'. Was it this statement that turned Ramnath Goenka against you?

A. You have known me all these years. This is not your first interview with me. Can you believe that I could have said that? I never uttered such a thing and I would not, because I am myself a living example of one who could not and cannot be bought.

Q. Why has Ramnath Goenka become your enemy?

A. Why don't you ask Ramnathji himself? Only he can reply to that. I would also want to know. As for me, I would say Ramnathji is not my enemy. My success is my worst enemy. Let us look at it this way. In conditions where too many try and too few succeed, the success of someone like me is bound to cause envy and the envy becomes ever more intense, the more its designs are frustrated. The sole motivating factor behind Ramnathji's campaign of character assassination is: envy.

Q. What is so great about Reliance? Your detractors say that it is a sinking ship and that the bubble will burst.

A. They have been saying it from the day we were seen to be a threat to our business rivals. The recent reconstruction of the Patalganga plant which was totally ruined by the floods is a classic example. By getting the plant back in production, our employees have proved that they are committed to a concept, not to individuals. Reliance has survived. Dhirubhai will go one day. But Reliance's employees and shareholders will keep it afloat. Reliance is now a concept in which the Ambanis have become irrelevant.

Q. What is the status of the Reliance Petrochemicals project. You have set 1990 as the deadline and yet it seems that even the civil works have not commenced?

A. I stand by my commitment to have RPL on stream by the first quarter of 1991. We shall go together next year and you will see this with your own eyes.

Q. Money by any means seems to be your objective.

A. Well, I don't believe that. You must realise that such money which you have in mind may enable a man to make a fast buck or become rich. But it cannot enable you to raise a Reliance from scratch. You can't build an industry by fraud as some of my adversaries want all of you to believe. A small-time operator can and may become a small-time businesssman but he can't become an industrialist.

Q. What is your own assessment of the Rajiv Government's liberalisation policies so far?

A. I think the changes have done industry good. I welcome these changes. They are in the right direction. The growth of industry is proof of that. The pace of liberalisation needs to be hastened but I can appreciate the Government's concerns.

ON THE POLICIES OF RAJIV'S GOVERNMENT

I think the changes have done industry good. I welcome these changes. They are in the right direction. The growth of industry is proof of that.

ON THE CHARGE THAT HE HELPED KATRE'S SON

No businessman can keep investigating the antecedents of all his business associates. If he keeps looking at the name tags of his clients, he is bound to fail.

Q. There are conflicting versions about your health. We would like to have your last word on the subject.

A. Not the 'famous last word' I hope! (laughs). Why do you need my word for that? I'm here before you. How do you find my health? I feel fit. I'm here at the office as I always used to be, doing my hard day's labour. If this is not being in good health, what is?

Q. It is widely believed that you have been able to hound out all those politicians and civil servants who have opposed you.

A. I think it has become a fashion in the country to attack achievers. Pygmies always attack giants so that they can get attention. Who would have known of some so-called journalists had they not attacked me and Reliance? Moreover, over 25 cabinet reshuffles took place during the last five years. Over 200 civil servants were shifted from the departments we deal with. Do you want to give me credit for all these transfers and changes?

Q. Were you not hostile to V.P.Singh and his officials because they refused to be bulldozed by you?

A. Reliance always deals with the Government and not with any individual. It has always been my policy to abide by government policies and rules. But the so-called torch-bearers of truth have always been trying to poison the minds of politicians and civil servants on behalf of our business rivals.

Q. Who are these rivals?

A. You know them well. I feel the Indian Express has been put up front as our rival by others.

Q. But you are believed to have forged letters and documents to get rid of the then finance minister V.P. Singh.

A. Nonsense. This is nothing but a figment of the Express' imagination. I have no doubt that it was done on behalf of our only rival.

Q. Are you really worried about the possibility of V.P. Singh being the next prime minister of India?

A. I am not in the business of political speculation and astrology.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The pursuit of excellence

1910. A momentous year. It witnessed the birth of a new organisation in India. And with it a new pursuit of excellence. Of a new vision which looked far into the future. Of new endeavour which reached unparalleled heights. The organisation—ITC Limited.

We are looking for marketing people with the potential to be self-managing resources who thrive in a competitive environment.

J Narayan
Deputy Chairman—ITC
Chairman—India Tobacco Division

37 Chowringhee, Calcutta 700071

A Rs 1,500 crore enterprise

Eight decades later, ITC Limited is a Rs 1,500 crore enterprise with interests in fields as diverse as tobacco, paper, paperboards and packaging, hotels and tourism, information systems, edible oils and seeds and batteries. Leaders in professional management, ITC is building on its belief in people. Because ITC has faith in that quality in man which makes him dream and in his ability to translate his dreams into reality.

Your future with ITC

ITC, a name that sets the pace in today's changing marketplace. A Company whose people are its major asset. People who share the philosophy of meeting the challenges of change. Enterprising individuals who can together work as a perfect team to give ITC a unified strength. ITC, in return, gives these individuals a lifelong career and not an everyday job. Because the people who take the decisions today are people who took this opportunity yesterday.

The India Tobacco Division of ITC is looking for Marketing Pupils. If you are between 21 and 28 years of age with a first class degree from a premier institution, and have a high degree of numeracy, excellent communication skills and a readiness for teamwork, you could be the person we are looking for. You must also have sound physical health, as the job involves extensive touring. A flair for creative thinking, an active interest in extra curricular activities, computer literacy and familiarity with system would be added advantages.

We also have openings for Marketing Assistants for which, in addition, 2 to 3 years' relevant work experience and/or a Management degree from a premier institution is essential.

If the above criteria are applicable to you and you wish to join our organisation, please write to me, at 37 Chowringhee, Calcutta 700 071, with a brief resume of your qualifications, your achievements and your experience within 10 days of seeing this advertisement. Please mark the envelope with the code 'MGA' for Assistants and 'MGP' for Pupils.

New horizons. New hopes.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NIIT IN CONSTRUCTION ?

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NIIT Software—leading edge products for the leaders.

Harvard Project Manager (HPM), the world's largest selling Project Management package—used by over 100,000 project managers world-wide—is brought to India's leading managers by NIIT. HPM has already made a difference at Hindustan Construction

NIIT IN WORLD-LEADING SOFTWARE.

Company—one of India's largest construction organisation. Other users of HPM include Indian Oil, Madras Cements, Kirloskar Cummins, IRCON, Orissa Govt., EIL.

The world's No. 1 4GL/DBMS: FOCUS, is the answer to the complete information system needs of Network, the electronic typewriter leader. Other FOCUS users include CMC, BHEL, ITC, MTNL, Glaxo, BEML, L&T, C-DOT and UB Group.

The world's largest selling Expert System shell, VP Expert, is already being used by Bank of America, Hindustan Lever, Planning Commission, IIM Calcutta, Sarabhai Space Centre, IIT Madras, TISCO.

And now the latest generation Relational DBMS for online applications—SYBASE—the only one of its kind . Bringing India to the forefront of Database Technology.

That's just a sampling of NIIT's range of fully-supported, world-leading products.

NIIT Software is just one of NIIT's many facets.

NIIT is also Consultancy, Corporate Training and Computer Education.

NIIT

The power to look at Information Technology. From every perspective.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Contract NIIT 21341 C

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The perfaxtionist

EC FAX 4618 ◢ The only indigenous facsimile ◢ From India's electronics giant, ECIL ◢ Ready to deliver ◢

Manufactured to triumph in trying Indian conditions ◢ With the expertise of the world leader, NEC, Japan ◢ Matching international quality standards ◢ Supported by the trusted ECIL after-sales service ◢ EC FAX 4618 ◢ The perfectionist ◢ Flashes A4 sized documents in a mere 16 seconds ◢ Handles documents of upto A3 size ◢ Enables clear half-tone reproduction of photographs ◢ Auto-transmission with password verification for confidentiality ◢ Multiple polling ◢ EC FAX 4618 ◢ The perfect office machine ◢ For the modern office ◢ Contact today for more details:

Electronics Corporation of India Limited ◢
(A Govt. of India - Dept. of Atomic Energy - Enterprise), Communication Systems Group, Hyderabad - 500 762 ☎ 850131. Ext. 450 ◢
Telex: 0425 - 7033 ECAN-IN ◢
Fax: (0842) 851606 ◢
Bombay ☎ 4302333
New Delhi ☎ 602696
Calcutta ☎ 295523
Madras ☎ 450749
Bangalore ☎ 77072 ◢

इकाEC

JAISONS H ECIL 989.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RUSSI MODY

Golden Boy of Steel

Chairman completes 50 years in TISCO

THE twin-engined Beechcraft taxis to a halt. The man the crowd has been waiting for steps out of the aircraft last. The scene that unfolds would do a potentate proud.

The milling throng of company officials, town residents and tribals surge forward. Parked not far from the tarmac is a 1.7-tonne laddu, made in the company canteen—from 350 kg of gram flour, 43 tins of ghee, 3 kg of cardamom, and 1,200 kg of sugar—at a cost of Rs 60,000.

The focus of all this attention: Rustomji ("Russi") Hormusji Mody, the 72-year-old chairman and managing director of the Rs 1,862-crore Tata Iron & Steel Company (TISCO). The occasion: Mody's completion last fortnight of 50 years at TISCO—the longest stint ever by a senior executive. So what does it feel like? "It's the Old Man Upstairs who's responsible for my lasting," says Mody.

The hoopla at Jamshedpur in Bihar is part of a six-month-long bash. Few companies have made such a hullabaloo over their chief executives. Even in the Tata group, heavyweights like the late Tata Engineering and Locomotive Company (TELCO) head Sumant Moolgaokar and Tata Tea Chairman Darbari Seth have preferred to keep a low profile. Mody, however, is a cult figure in a company town, a corporate chieftain whose word is law.

Yet TISCO, the Tata group's flagship, has other reasons to celebrate. For the eighth year in succession, production, sales and profits are up. And after a Rs 35-crore tax dispute with the Government—which led to Tata Steel being placed on an official blacklist—was settled last year, the company is on an ambitious modernisation and expansion drive.

The Tatas are also jacking up their equity stake in Tata Steel from roughly 4 per cent to around 8 per cent—some 2 per cent more than the Birla stake of nearly 6 per cent. Tata companies have picked up nearly Rs 120 crore of the recent Rs 650-crore convertible debenture issue. "I don't think we visualise any takeover attempts," explains Aditya Kashyap, TISCO's executive director (corporate). "It's just that we have faith in our issue."

Amidst all these events,

Photographs by SAIBAL DAS

Mody with aircraft: high-flier

Mody occupied centre-stage last fortnight. A bon vivant with a keen interest in week-end cooking, bridge, and the piano, Mody took up skiing last year. And he still pilots the company plane. As head of Tata Steel and director of numerous Tata enterprises, he flits through cities like London, Paris, New York, New Delhi, Bombay and Bhubaneswar, spending on an average not more than three consecutive nights in each. "This is true only of the mad Tata executives," he chortles, adding simply: "I like to keep in touch."

He's been doing that since he joined TISCO 50 years ago as a trainee on a salary of Rs 100. Mody came to Tata group Chairman J.R.D. Tata's attention for his handling of labour, a skill that's not deserted him (the last big strike was in 1942). He was director of personnel in 1953, joint managing director in 1974, chairman and managing director in 1984.

Since then, he's helped pitchfork the steel conglomerate and its 16 associate companies and subsidiaries into the mega league, and turned its scrip into a blue chip. In terms of market capitalisation—the total value of the stock in the stock-market—Tata Steel shares are numero uno, now worth over Rs 20,000 crore (the Reliance share comes second). Indeed, Tata Steel has cobbled together an empire that rivals Dhirubhai Ambani's Rs 1,496-crore Reliance Industries. The Tata Steel group's sales run to about Rs 2,500 crore.

That's due to diversifications and take-overs, both ongoing affairs. As part of an ambitious export effort that will involve international trading in commodities, a foray into shrimp farming is planned. Tata Steel and the Hawaii-based Aquatic Farms are floating a new enterprise, Tata Aquatic Farms. On the anvil too are a 1.7 million-tonne cement plant, using a blast furnace by-product, a Rs 100-crore ferro-chrome project and a Rs 200-crore investment in power.

This is not all. Tata Steel is to buy British Steel's 39.5 per cent overseas stake in the Calcutta-based Stewart & Lloyd, to ensure that it remains in the steel company's fold (it already owns 10 per cent of the industrial pipes and construction company's equity). And about nine months ago, Tata Steel bought a 50 per cent controlling interest in MAN India, an existing engineering products unit, and will be renaming it Tata MAN.

The attempts at modernisation, aimed at improving productivity and cutting costs, have helped put the group on the fast track. Between 1980 and 1988, TISCO invested Rs 1,072 crore in updating manufacturing pro-

A STUDY IN CONTRASTS

	SAIL	TISCO
Sales (Rs crore)	7,156.00	1,861.77
Pre-tax profits	358.40	180.34
Saleable steel production (million tonnes)	7.26	1.94
Capacity utilisation	81.4%	111%

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

cesses. One outcome: steel production capacity has ballooned, from 1.74 million tonnes to 2.1 million tonnes, and will go up further to 2.7 million tonnes. "In the next seven years," says Mody, "roughly Rs 3,700 crore will be invested in modernisation, in the cement project and in capital expenditure." The cash is to come from internal resources (roughly Rs 200 crore a year), international financial agencies, and, the Government willing, debentures floated abroad.

FINALLY, the group seized the opportunities provided by the Government decontrolling the prices of special steels this decade. It's cut down the production of items whose prices are still controlled and is stepping up the output of decontrolled items. So revenue has shot up. Example: in the first five months of this year, Tata Steel realised Rs 6,996 per tonne of steel, versus Rs 6,200 in the same period last year.

For all the hype about Tata Steel's successes, it's had its embarrassments too. After claiming that it could revive Ipitata Sponge Iron, a joint venture with the Orissa Government, with in-house technology, Tata Steel had to call in Lurgi of West Germany. While Ipitata is now out of the woods, turnkey contractor Tata Davy is not. And even the steel conglomerate's most ardent fans admit to its bureaucratic functioning.

And Mody's critics accuse him of advancing the careers of favourites, of playing company officials against one another. Yet he arouses a fierce loyalty in his defenders. They insist that he delegates authority, that he picks people and drops them if he finds they're incompetent, that he's not overly authoritarian. "He does enjoy power, and I don't think it's good. But for the sort of power he enjoys, he's not half as autocratic as he could be," says an interested observer. As for Tata Steel's to-do about Mody's completing 50 years, he adds: "The eulogising has to be understood in its context. Jamshedpur is a company town. The ethos is such. J.J. Gandhi (a former resident director of the company at Jamshedpur) was a moghul and was eulogised."

The picture that emerges, then, is of a plain-talking corporate moghul who's frequently described as an outstanding manager of men, accessible to his subordinates, but nevertheless a man with warts.

Mody too has had his share of embarrassments. Last year, a Calcutta newspaper suggested he was in the running for Moolgaokar's job at TELCO. Mody had apparently been tipped to take over the chairmanship of TELCO: the report cost him the job. Asked to comment, Mody says: "Who would want to appoint a 72-year-old man? JRD quite correctly nominated Ratan Tata."

Question marks also hang over the succession at Tata Steel. Joint Managing Director J.J. Irani is one possible contender for the top slot. But Mody thinks that the posts of chairman and managing director will be split, with TISCO Deputy Chairman Ratan Tata taking over as chairman. "The posts were always split. I'm the only one who's held both posts," says he.

If Mody is a cult figure in company circles, it's also because he enjoys playing up to audiences. At a so-called Junior Dialogue—a grievance ventilation forum for supervisors and officers—last fortnight, Mody was at his biting best. One complainant: "There are no lights in the gulli behind the garage in my house." Mody: "You don't have any back lights in your backside." Loud guffaws from the audience. Mody (turning to the official responsible for such matters): "In which fifth year plan are you going to provide those lights?" Company official: "In four months time." Mody (to the complainant): "If by year-end you don't have lights, come back to me."

The audience loved it.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
in Jamshedpur

Mody acknowledging greetings; and (below) with a 1.7-tonne laddu: cult figure

Russi Mody arrived from Bombay to a tumultuous reception in the company township of Jamshedpur, the start of a unique celebration that will continue for six months.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

aging Direc-
ossible con-
t. But Mody of chairman ctor will be y Chairman ver as chairvere always e who's held

lt figure in
's also be-aying up to alled Junior nce ventilarvisors and ght, Mody
t. One com-no lights in arage in my don't have your back-
's from the rning to the or such math year plan rovide those official: "In Mody (to the by year-end s, come back ved it.

U G. MATHAI
in Jamshedpur

What did the Copenhagen Mermaid say to the Skypak Man?

"I know, you keep racing against time. But must you always prefer the sky to the sea?"

We'll deliver. Wherever on earth. SKYPAK The worldwide couriers.

Skypak House, Off M. Vassanji Road, Marol, Andheri (E), Bombay 400 059.

Avenues:SC:490:89

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The day is drawing to a close in Shahjahanpur, Uttar Pradesh. Sitting at one of his largest looms, Abdullah leans back to scrutinise his handiwork. On the semi-finished carpet, the pattern is coming alive; and in his eyes is the craftsman's gleam of pride. As he tucks one last loose thread into place, his thoughts go back to that day in 1977 when ITC's Triveni Handlooms came to his help...

Abdullah of Shahjahanpur. Even the skills inherited from his forefathers weren't getting him two square meals a day.

Until ITC established Triveni Handlooms to export his carpets and give his talent a new lease of life.

As an export agency, ITC matches requirements of foreign buyers.

ITC established Triveni Handlooms to inspire the revival of this traditional craft. Under Colonel Prem Sahgal (of INA fame), Triveni has helped over 2500 talented but poor weavers. Wages have increased from Rs 4 per sq. ft. in 1977 to over Rs 150 and the quality of product has improved impressively. With all their carpets being exported, Triveni earns close to Rs 1 crore in foreign exchange.

Apart from carpets, ITC's Exports Division markets a range of other products across the world. These include computer software, marine foods, garments and handicrafts. With fresh fruits, vegetables, spices and processed food being added to the portfolio, and with new markets showing significant potential, ITC is increasing its foreign exchange contribution to the country.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Where else is ITC working for India?

Agro-industry : ITC's technological expertise, gained from decades of R&D in seed development, is being transferred to produce high-yielding oilseeds. With the manufacture and marketing of edible and non-edible oils and their derivatives, ITC is helping reduce imports.

Family Health and Welfare : Through its far-flung marketing network, ITC distributes millions of Nirodh contraceptives and promotes the advantages of a small, well-spaced family: an effort acknowledged by the 1988 FICCI Award for Family Planning.

Paper and Board—in the core-sector : The ITC-promoted Bhadrachalam Paperboards is a leader in its field. It has set new standards by combining record productivity with exemplary concern for wood conservation, environment protection and tribal welfare.

New horizons, new hopes.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Bumpy Ride

Indices continue to see-saw

THE sharp fluctuations in share prices which started in early September show no signs of stabilising. Last fortnight, share price indices continued to see-saw even as the first of the mega issues opened for subscription. Still, the overall mood in the country's stock-markets was one of cautious optimism. Corporate managements exuded confidence, though investors apparently were more cautious.

The market volatility was mirrored by share price indices. Recovering from a trough, The Economic Times index shot up to 389.1 by end-September, close to the peak of 389.2 on September 7, before sliding down to 384.6 on October 5. Earlier, on September 25, it had dropped to 380.7. The Bombay Stock Exchange's 100-scrip national index too went up and down as did a favoured blue chip, Tata Steel (Ordinary).

Following rumours about an official move to decontrol the steel industry, the Tata Steel scrip gained nearly 100 points between September 22 and 29—going from Rs 1,191.50 to Rs 1,290. The share then settled at Rs 1,225 on October 4, presumably because it was realised that the Government would not initiate any drastic policy measures affecting the steel industry before the general elections. It is rumoured that the Bank of Baroda subsidiary, BoB Fiscal Services—which is embroiled in a controversy over the purchase of L&T shares—has picked up a hefty chunk of Tata Steel shares.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

While investor sentiments were by and large lukewarm, the market for new issues was buoyant. The first mega issue, that of Larsen & Toubro, got off the ground after an acrimonious court battle which is yet to be fully resolved. Next come the public issues of Usha Rectifiers and Bindal Agro Chem.

The indirect consequence of the upbeat mood in the new issues market was that a couple of leading scrips perked up. Such shares, which had been somewhat subdued in the recent past, included Reliance, TELCO and Associated Cements. The sprightly mood was underlined by the ACC chairman when he projected a rosy future for the company which had suffered a net loss last year. Tata Tea's open offer to shareholders of Consolidated Coffee to buy their shares ushered in a welcome trend of openness in corporate take-overs which have hitherto been shrouded in secrecy.

For all the gloom caused by the fluctuations in share prices, there's no denying that share prices are ruling far higher than they were last year. In 1988, The Economic Times index touched a high of 374.9 and a low of 218. In contrast, the index hovered around 384 in early October—almost 10 points higher than last year's peak. So much for the Cassandras.

The big question however is: is the see-saw season over? At the moment, the chances seem even. But with the impending elections throwing their long shadow on the markets, it's difficult to arrive at any firm conclusions.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1989 HIGH	1989 LOW	CLOSE 5.10.89	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	84.00	61.00	76.00	2.00 +
Associated Cement	345.00	230.00	268.00	4.00 +
Asian Paints	226.25	165.00	205.00	5.00 +
Atlas Copco	53.00	32.00	41.00	2.50 +*
Bajaj Auto	450.00	290.00	302.50	3.75 –
Baroda Rayon	755.00	285.00	702.50	27.50 –
Bata India	89.00	60.00	66.00	0.50 –
Bayer	910.00	580.00	730.00	10.00 –
Bharat Forge	202.50	68.75	71.25	6.25 –
Birla Jute	73.75	41.50	51.50	1.00 +
Bombay Dyeing	162.00	104.00	127.00	1.00 +
Britannia Ind.	120.00	89.00	111.00	1.00 +
Brooke Bond	155.00	75.00	91.00	5.00 +
Century Spinning	2240.00	1230.00	2155.00	25.00 –
Chloride India	88.50	72.00	84.00	1.00 +
Colgate Palmolive	371.25	162.50	178.75	6.25 +
Cyanamid	92.00	55.00	82.50	4.50 +
DCM	85.00	31.00	58.00	3.00 +
Dunlop	95.50	70.00	73.00	2.00 –
E.I. Hotels	68.00	50.00	60.00	1.50 +
Escorts	84.00	58.00	80.00	1.50 –
Finolex Cables	430.00	290.00	310.00	10.00 +
Food Specialities	224.00	154.00	161.00	1.00 +
Garware Nylon	55.50	36.00	49.50	nil
G.E. Shipping	46.50	33.75	40.50	0.50 +
G.S.F.C.	177.50	123.75	162.50	2.50 –*
Grasim Ind.	137.00	75.00	101.00	4.00 –
Hind. Aluminium	327.50	155.00	240.00	15.00 –
Hind. Ciba	1090.00	600.00	970.00	110.00 +
Hind. Cocoa	141.25	98.75	130.00	5.00 –*
Hindustan Lever	102.00	69.50	101.00	1.50 +
Hindustan Motors	52.50	26.75	28.30	3.20 –
ICI India Ltd.	68.00	39.00	52.00	1.00 –
Indian Organic	54.00	23.00	51.00	5.00 +
Indian Rayon	106.00	76.75	83.75	0.25 +
Indrol	335.00	218.75	248.75	6.25 +
Ingersoll-Rand	423.75	267.50	402.50	5.00 –
ITC	129.00	46.25	66.00	3.00 –
J.K. Synthetics	92.00	66.00	73.00	3.00 –*
Kinetic Engineering	395.00	130.00	137.50	12.50 –*
Kirloskar Cummins	88.75	54.50	67.50	0.50 –
KSB Pumps	445.00	187.50	192.50	2.50 –
Larsen & Toubro	128.00	81.50	100.00	1.50 –
Lipton	88.75	65.00	87.50	10.00 +
LML Ltd.	28.00	12.50	17.00	1.00 –
Madura Coats	104.00	92.25	100.00	nil
Mahindra & Mahindra	113.50	76.50	94.00	1.00 +
Milk Food	300.00	180.00	220.00	2.50 –
Motor Industries	695.00	560.00	660.00	40.00 +
Mukand Ltd.	140.50	75.00	134.00	3.50 +
National Organic	1180.00	710.00	1065.00	15.00 +
Nirlon	17.00	8.00	14.00	2.75 +
Orkay Silk Mills	29.00	13.50	17.50	2.00 +
Peico Electronics	30.50	16.50	24.25	0.25 +
Pfizer	80.00	58.00	74.00	9.00 +
Ponds	212.50	151.25	173.75	7.75 +
Premier Auto	68.00	40.00	58.50	0.50 –
Raymond	85.00	65.50	73.50	2.75 –
Reliance Industries	158.00	99.50	101.50	0.50 –
Siemens India	95.00	65.00	76.00	1.00 –
Shaw Wallace	103.25	62.00	91.00	3.50 –
Shriram Fibres	94.00	55.00	60.00	2.00 +
SKF Bearings	3020.00	1140.00	1260.00	30.00 +
SPIC	67.00	39.00	49.00	1.25 +
Tata Steel	1580.00	1062.50	1195.00	18.75 –
Telco	1075.00	657.50	1011.25	12.50 +
Vam Organic	178.00	136.00	160.00	5.00 –
Videocon Int.	172.50	55.00	165.00	12.50 +
Voltas	1000.00	470.00	920.00	30.00 –
Wimco	32.00	15.00	17.75	1.50 +

*Ex dividend

Spot delivery

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	TT Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	13.1066	12.9631
Austria	Schilling	100	1.2845	1.2706
Bahrain	Dinar	1	44.4568	44.3829
Bangladesh	Taka	100	52.9628	52.8312
Canada	Dollar	1	14.3858	14.2354
Denmark	Kroner	1	2.3109	2.2869
Egypt	Pound	1	6.2000	6.0900
France	Franc	1	2.6954	2.2724
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	2.1646	2.1426
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	0.0950	0.9000
Iran	Rial	100	23.2600	23.1628
Italy	Lira	100	1.2302	1.2170
Japan	Yen	100	12.1655	11.8624
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7528	0.7000
Kuwait	Dinar	1	54.2696	54.1600
Malaysia	Dollar	1	6.2783	6.2130
Mauritius	Rupee	1	1.0520	1.0000
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6000	0.5829
Netherlands	Guilder	1	7.9659	7.8823
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7526	0.7000
Singapore	Dollar	1	8.6020	8.5114
Spain	Peseta	1	0.1410	0.1309
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4190	0.4000
Sweden	Kroner	1	2.6282	2.6010
Switzerland	Franc	1	10.4142	10.3033
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.1160	0.1000
Thailand	Baht	100	62.1282	62.0800
UK	Pound	1	27.1706	26.9107
USA	Dollar	1	16.8919	16.7224
UAE	Dirham	1	4.55	4.50
USSR	Rouble	1	25.7228	25.5686
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	9.1491	8.9206

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 5.10.89.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Playing the Global Market

WE live in a global village where nations play a game in which some win and others lose. The game is called international trade. When scores are tallied at the end of the game, the winners are nations that sell more and buy less.

It is a deadly serious game because on its outcome depends the wealth of nations, the prosperity of their peoples and their political and military standing. Today, India is a loser in this game.

Why? What should India do to improve its performance? We must first understand that although nations may win and lose, the players in the game are corporations. The instrument for gaining market share is business, not government. The governments of the successful nations have consistently nourished and supported their corporations. The Indian Government, in contrast, has tightly controlled and hindered the growth of private business.

If we want to be a successful player we should begin by seeking our comparative advantage. An obvious one is our cheap labour. But our organised labour is not productive, and so not competitive. Both the unions and inflexible labour laws discourage productivity.

It is unorganised labour that we must thank for our modest export performance. We account for less than 1 per cent of world exports; the city of Hong Kong does better. Our major exports originate in labour-intensive small-scale factories cutting gems, making readymade garments and leather goods. Almost all these exporters are non-unionised.

To succeed in the world market, we need to sell superior products. But superior products need technology. India does not have technology for three reasons. One, our domestic market has been so protected from competition that companies have not been forced to upgrade their products. Two, our institutes of science and technology are isolated from companies and oblivious of the needs of our people. Technology flourishes in the pell-mell of the competitive marketplace. Three, technology infusion is a continuous process, not a one-shot deal. Neither business nor government recognises this or is willing to pay for it.

Superior products don't guarantee success in the world market. We need to seek out and maintain customers. This requires marketing. Because of our closed market and our "licence-permit raj" we have seen little competition. Market share in effect was won in a bureaucrat's office when a licence was awarded. Marketing skills are sharpened only in the battle for market share.

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

If we want a share of world economic growth, we have to nurture our corporations instead of putting them down.

Another ingredient of success is plenty of capital. Unfortunately, too much of our scarce capital is locked up in an inefficient public sector. Global competition requires low costs, very fast responses and flexibility of action, none of which the public sector possesses. So to succeed we will need to shift our capital to the private sector.

Size is also important. Successful companies in the world market are giants; they have the advantage of production economies, distribution clout and massive marketing budgets. Our small sector stands little chance here. Unfortunately our Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices (MRTP) Act is a great obstacle to becoming big.

In our global village there are massive flows of capital from one country to another. But compared with China, which has been receiving $2,000 million (Rs 3,300 crore) a year in foreign direct investment, India receives a meagre $100 million (Rs 1,650 crore). A significant lesson of the past 25 years is that countries which have encouraged foreign investment have consistently outperformed those which have not. There is also no evidence that they have compromised their independence.

A very real hope for enhancing our exports is through the integrative power of global companies because they represent the world economy. India can also become a supply base for MNCs, as Malaysia, Thailand, Taiwan have. To do so, we must unconditionally offer them our domestic market. They are not interested in India otherwise. Once they start making world quality products in the domestic markets they will automatically use India as a global supply source if our costs are right.

So if we want a share of world economic growth we have to go much further to liberalise our economy, make our markets genuinely competitive by scrapping licensing, reservations for the small sector and by overhauling MRTP. We have to divert capital from the public to the private sector by dismantling large chunks of the public sector; we have to improve labour productivity by amending labour laws; we have to nurture our corporations instead of "controlling" or putting them down.

Why must we compete in the world market? Why can't we manage within our own borders? We tried to do this with the principles of self-sufficiency and import substitution. They have led us to a dead end. The countries which participated in the world market got jobs, technology, living standards, and respect. Global market share is not merely a crass commercial goal. It is the basis for improving the condition of our people—all, not merely a few.

Gurcharan Das is the managing director of a Bombay-based enterprise.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

From photographs that make a heart beat faster...

... to photographs
that record a heart beat.

PHOTOPHONE IS PHOTOGRAPHY

Photophone have products that keep everyone smiling.
From the trigger-happy amateur... to the fastidious professional.
From the far-sighted corporate businessman... to the budding entrepreneur.
From the careful researcher...
to the dedicated teacher.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photophone make Hot Shot – India's favourite camera.

We put a smile behind the camera with an easy, breezy range. Cameras in the 110 and 35 mm formats. With the exclusive Universal Focus System. This is the widest range you could get—10 clever little cameras. Choose just what you want—a built-in flash... a tele lens... automatic features. We also bring you the Minolta-Photophone, with micro-processor control!

With Hot Shot, instructions can be compressed into one single line— just aim... and shoot! This is fun on a strap. Hot Shot goes out with the family everywhere—to picnics, parties, weddings... and of course, on holidays!

Photophone bring you Konica – India's best-selling film. And those unbeatable Konica prints too.

With Konica film, a thing of beauty can really be a joy forever. You can capture anything you want.
You can bring home a rainbow.
You can immortalise a smile.
You can take life's memorable moments... and make them everlasting.

We also bring Konica colour paper to give you those fabulous Konica Century Prints that last a lifetime and more. Prints in 3 finishes—matt, glossy and silk.

Insist on Konica paper— for treasured memories that live on forever.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photophone introduced Konica Square – the first international chain of colour labs.

Konica Squares are virtually one-stop photo shops, where you can get whatever you need. From world-class processing to cameras, film, photoframes, albums... even 1-minute ID photographs!

Konica Squares are springing up all over the country. Everywhere, they offer the same high quality of processing. Each Square has Konica's advanced Nice Print System with a special micro-processor to correct the exposure for every single negative.

We supply a wide range of photofinishing equipment including highly-sophisticated one-hour labs. We also provide entrepreneurs with the help they need in setting up these labs.

For identification photographs, Photophone teamed up with Polaroid.

To answer the need for quick identity photographs, we introduced Photophone's In-a-Snap System, in association with Polaroid.

Now you can walk into photographic studios anywhere in the country and get your identity picture in a minute. That's it! These are pictures in colour. On Polaroid's highly-acclaimed Viva film.

Polaroid 1-minute photographs are accepted everywhere. For official identity cards, visas/travel documents, licences, permits, membership cards, student cards, etc. They can also be used for personalised gifts, mementoes and greeting cards.

Corporations all over the country have improved the security of their organisations with instant identity cards through In-a-Snap agents. Some corporations have bought the In-a-Snap camera itself, finding this both convenient and inexpensive.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photophone have a range of audio-visual aids for classrooms and conference rooms.

Whatever the presentation aid you need, we have it. Our film projectors are in use all over the country. We also have 35 mm slide projectors with synchronisers for pre-recorded slide/sound presentations.

Our range of Overhead Projectors includes the first truly portable OHP — as small and as convenient to carry, as your briefcase!

These aids help professionals make their presentations more interesting and effective. Complex ideas can be communicated easily through graphics, pictures and charts. We also offer a variety of support services to help you get the transparencies, films and video films you need, on subjects ranging from biology to environment and atomic energy.

Photophone's presentation aids are also used in schools and colleges all over India.

Photophone bring the most sophisticated Polaroid film for diagnostic medicine and advanced research.

We offer highly specialised Polaroid films for every instant imaging need in diagnostic medicine, research and quality control. These are available in a wide range of film speeds. For diagnostic medicine, Polaroid films are an invaluable aid in everything from cardiology to nuclear medicine. In the field of quality control and research, these films find many uses — from photographing IC structures to DNA molecules. In each case, Polaroid instant film is the preferred imaging solution, offering economy, speed and convenience.

If you have any questions on photography or on any of our products, please write to us.

PHOTOPHONE INDUSTRIES INDIA LIMITED
7, Saki Vihar Road, Bombay 400 072.

PHOTOPHONE IS PHOTOGRAPHY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

H.K.L. BHAGAT

"Doordarshan isn't Rajivdarshan"

DESCRIBED as the numero uno of Delhi politics, Union Information and Broadcasting Minister H.K.L. Bhagat has been in the eye of many a political controversy. Now, on election-eve, he faces an unenviable task—to defend the role of the official media against charges of misuse, possibly a major plank of the opposition campaign. But the deceptively mild-mannered politician exuded confidence as he spoke to Senior Editor PRABHU CHAWLA in his living room adorned with photographs of the Gandhi family. Excerpts:

Q. Do you agree that Doordarshan has been turned into Rajivdarshan?

A. Doordarshan is not Rajivdarshan, it is Bharatdarshan, Vishwadarshan. He is not only the president of the ruling party, but the prime minister of the largest democracy in the world. Whatever he says is news not only for India, but also for the rest of the world. Can we ignore his statements and the functions attended by him? Does the western media ignore Maggie Thatcher, George Bush or any head of state?

Q. Isn't it blatant misuse of the official media?

A. Why are we talking about the official media? Even the print media, which is not controlled by the Government, gives more space to the prime minister than any other leader in the country. There is not a single publication in the country that has not sought an interview with him.

Q. Don't you feel that in a democracy, opposition leaders should not be blacked out from TV and AIR?

A. Doordarshan does not ignore the Opposition. Opposition chief ministers get more exposure as compared to Congress(I) chief ministers. It goes strictly by the importance of the news and the personalities involved.

Q. There is more negative coverage.

A. That may be due to their squabbles which is also news. The opposition leaders get away with more time, because there are so many of them. If you ignore them, you are accused of a bias. As against one prime minister and one Congress Party, one has to choose from so many prime ministerial candidates and alternatives to the ruling party.

Q. But the opposition leaders' attack on the prime minister is ignored.

A. We go by the statements' newsworthiness. We can't carry a statement only because someone has criticised the prime minister. There must be some substance in it.

Q. The image of the party and the prime minister have suffered.

A. Not at all. Despite the full blast attack on him by the Opposition, he remains the most popular leader in the country. No amount of character assassination, cycle pedalling and rallies will reduce his importance in the country. Rajiv Gandhi means stability, progress and democracy. Without him there will be total anarchy. It is his modern outlook that is keeping the country together.

Q. Are you concerned about the credibility of Doordarshan and AIR?

A. If our credibility is low, why are they bothered about it? They should be happy we are doing something foolish. We will suffer. They know both AIR and Doordarshan are the most trustworthy sources of information. They want to destroy them by raising false alarms.

Q. You ignore the charge that they have become the party's mouthpiece.

A. The charge is politically motivated. In fact, the credibility of the official media suffered during the Janata regime when L.K. Advani was information and broadcasting minister. Mrs Gandhi was persecuted by Doordarshan and false affidavits by politicians opposed to us were given prominence. It is really amusing to receive sermons from Advani on the official media's freedom.

Q. Is the official media being given more financial support to counter the attack on the prime minister?

A. There is more money allocation to the electronic media because the entire country wants its expansion. People of this country want to enjoy the progress achieved during the last 40 years. There is not a single opposition leader who has not demanded a TV tower in his area.

Q. Does it mean the Government should impose a financial burden on the print media so that it doesn't expand?

A. This is not correct. Newspapers haven't suffered because of the expansion of the electronic media. Both can coexist. The print media may be facing financial pressure due to the difficult foreign exchange situation. There has been cost escalation in the inputs that go into the newsprint. Ultimately, the burden of the higher newsprint cost has been passed over to the consumer. It doesn't pinch the press at all.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CRICKET

Back to the Crease

After the politicking, the Indian team gears up for a hectic season

AND finally, back to the game. The month-long cliff-hanger of a dispute between the players and the BCCI is over, so are quibbles over selections, payments, logos, column-writing, contracts, controversies, uncertainties. It's time again to talk of runs, wickets, catches, victories and defeats, all on the playing field. Leaving behind the ghost of politicking—at least for the moment—Indian cricket is gearing up for what may indeed turn out to be its busiest season ever.

And the busiest season is also a bonanza for the cricket enthusiast. What else can a cricket crazy nation ask for than a season that begins with 24 one-day internationals in a space of just 21 roller-coaster days. The first six, the season's looseners in a manner of speaking, will be at Sharjah as traditional rivals India and Pakistan try to deny victory to the West Indies in a triangular contest. Then the battle will be rejoined in India, in the fortnight-long MRF-Nehru Cup World Series as all the top international teams, except New Zealand play out the extravaganza, being already billed as the other World Cup. "It is one of our busiest seasons. And our most challenging for a long time," said national selector Raj Singh Dungarpur.

Sure enough, the way the gladiators of Indian cricket face up to the challenge could indeed have a bearing on the very future of the game in India. The defeats by West Indies and Pakistan—particularly in the one-dayers—have left Indian cricket smarting. "This is our opportunity to rebuild the team and rediscover faith in ourselves," says new captain Krishnamachari Srikkanth (see box).

Some of that resolve showed quite visibly as the team went through its paces at the five-day conditioning camp at the Railways' Karnail Singh Stadium in New Delhi. The players who had for too long been seen in the incongruous yuppie attires, addressing press conferences or going through inquisitions at the board meetings were back in jogsuits, shorts and flannels.

Mohinder Amarnath, at 39, the grandad of the team, looks fit enough despite the grey late-morning stubble on his face testifying to his experience and numerous Mohammed Ali-like comebacks. Says he: "I have lost count of my come-backs. Anyway it is great to be back." Kapil Dev is bowling with a new enthusiasm to try and rediscover that elusive outswinger and sounds confident enough. "Make no mistake. We are a formidable team," he warns. Navjot Singh Sidhu, Mohammed Azharuddin, Ravi Shastri and Srikkanth are obviously concentrating on fitness and getting their eye in for a gruelling season—the one-dayers are followed by a four-Test series in Pakistan. And Kiran More, as ebullient as ever, is raring to resume his running battle with his cricketing bete noire, Vivian Richards. "It is good to see the boys in action. They are in good shape," said former star all-rounder Chandu Borde, now manager of the team.

But fitness is the least of his and skipper Srikkanth's problems. The senior members of the team are already veteran professionals and understand the need to reach peak fitness as the season begins. The younger lot have to fight for their places and that itself provides extra motivation. Besides whatever doubts remained on the fitness on the stars who have defaulted in the past: Mohinder Amarnath and Azharuddin, were removed by their sparkling knocks in last fortnight's Deodhar Trophy matches. The real problem was devising a game-plan.

SIX TOP STARS

■ Kapil Dev: His bowling may lack the penetration of the past but he is a shrewder bowler now and India's only world class medium pacer. One-day average 27.26, one century in 137 matches, 160 wickets at 26.85 runs apiece.

■ Amarnath: Seems to be in good batting nick but this may be his swan-song season. One-day average 29.86, two centuries in 69 matches and 40 wickets at 42 runs apiece. His defiance of pace bowling will come in handy.

■ Krishnamachari Srikkanth: A match-winner of his day and dreaded by many bowlers. But rather inconsistent. One-day average 29.17, four centuries in 110 matches, 24 wickets at 16.20 runs apiece.

■ Ravi Shastri: The vice-captain. Still searching for a niche in the batting order. One-day average 24.03, two centuries in 109 matches, 103 wickets at 34.97 runs apiece.

■ Vengsarkar: The subcontinent's most under-rated batsman (average 36.52, one century in 114 one-dayers). Will be expected to prop up the middle order. Can take apart any bowling.

■ Navjot Singh Sidhu: If he and Srikkanth get going together it will be half the job done (average 43.10 runs in 22 one-dayers). But has to show more consistency to establish himself as an opener.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LIVE LIFE KINGSIZE

FOUR SQUARE KINGS

O&M/102

FOUR SQUARE
KINGS

STATUTORY WARNING : CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

All the taste, all the way

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bell Ceramics presents a 10″ x 10″ reason to do it on the floor

Bell Ceramics introduces India to the wonder of 10″ x 10″ ceramic floor tiles.

Appropriately named Bellicento—Italian for a beautiful hundred.

Now for the first time, you can have ceramic floor tiles in the size you love.

At a price you'll love.

Because the laid cost of beautiful Bellicento compares with that of the best white mosaic tiles.

Now consider why Bellicento will floor you.

It's delightfully simple to lay.

And available in a spectacular spectrum of shades.

Ranging from soft soothing pastels. To bright brilliant hues.

Topped with a sheen that only ceramic can offer.

To give you floors of rare beauty and dignity.

Come, take the floor!

Bell Ceramics Ltd.

Regd. Office & Works: Dora Village, Amod Taluka, Bharuch Dist., Gujarat. Tel.: 214 (PALEJ)

Technical Collaborators:
Societa Impianti Termoelettrici Industrial S.P.A., Italy.

Bell. Always the ring of quality.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CLEA

Bellicento

THE 100 SQ INCH BEAUTY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WHEN YOU'RE THE KING, YOU'RE BORN TO LEAD.

The finest collection at the world's most elegant duty free.

Dubai Duty Free.

For The World's Finest. Fly-Buy-Dubai

السوق الحرة - دبي
DUBAI DUTY FREE

PANGULF

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The team has a very, very strong batting line-up and that should make up for whatever lacks may remain in fielding and bowling," said Dungarpur. That is why the team brains-trust is working on a batting-oriented game-plan for the two competitions. "One-day game is a batsman-oriented game. The bowlers basically keep a straight line and wait for the batsman to make mistakes," says Srikkanth. Accordingly, his basic plan would be to bat first on winning the toss.

Unlike most other teams in the world the Indian batting line-up is peculiar in the sense that it has dashers in front and classicists in the middle-order. This can work to the team's detriment or advantage depending on the way it is exploited. Often enough in the past the stolid, conventional middle-order has taken too long settling down, wasting precious overs and neutralising good starts by the top order. That is an area of concern and

SRIKKANTH

"My batting reflects my attitude to life"

K. Srikkanth, 28, believes in destiny. As he offered a silver thali at the Guruvayoor temple for his appointment as the Indian captain, he may as well have thanked God for the quirky manner in which the cricketing drama unfolded. He was a contender almost by default. An Ian Bishop delivery fractured his forearm and he was sent back home. Otherwise, he too may have gone to the US and Canada from West Indies and got dragged into the controversy.

What worked to his advantage was his that he was a "good guy" who obeyed the contract and was aided by vigorous lobbying by the Madras press and south zone officials.

Srikkanth always believed in taking the battle to the enemy's camp by hook or by pull, by cut or by slash. He also believed that he was destined to captain the country. And now that the moment has arrived, he has a point to prove. Relaxed and confident during an hour-long interview with Features Editor SHEKHAR GUPTA, he talked about his dashing style, the game, its controversies and personal relationships in the team. Excerpts:

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Q. What are your views on finally getting the mantle of captaincy?

A. After so many years of service for the team your natural feeling is you should captain it. But I never hankered for it. I take everything as it comes. In fact my batting best reflects my attitude towards life.

Q. Many feel captaincy will affect your batting, making you defensive.

A. Not at all. When I go to bat I don't think of captaincy. I've been captaining South Zone for four to five years. People are mistaken if they think of me merely as an attacking batsman. When faced with a good attack you have to be technically as great as Gavaskar to stay on for hours, grind the opposition. I don't have that ability, so I use the limited time I have at the crease most productively. When a fast bowler bowls with three slips, a gully and short legs you can afford to hit out. Chances are you'd clear the field. Or even if you slash, the pace of the ball will take it over the slips. I never loft an inswinger, only outswingers. Similarly when a spinner comes on with an attacking field why not go down the wicket and whack him. If I'm lucky I'll clear mid-on and get runs. My hitting is scientific.

Q. And pleasurable.

A. What is most pleasurable? When a fast bowler throws a super-fast bouncer at you and you hook it royally. It hits the middle of the bat. Tapaak. That is pleasure.

Q. Don't you think you were lucky to have missed much of the West Indies tour ?

A. On the contrary the injury deprived me of the one ambition I have always had, of going to the West Indies and scoring a lot of runs. However, the defeat in the West Indies is reason for us to do some rethinking on our cricket.

Q. Such as what? Do you have a game-plan to beat the West Indies?

A. Primarily, when it comes to the West Indies or Pakistan we have to be mentally tougher so that even when they momentarily seem to be on top, we should continue fighting. As for the West Indies, you should ideally bat first, get a good score, and put them under pressure. You have to attack them aggressively.

Q. Despite the bouncers? What are your views on intimidatory bowling?

A. I don't believe in this business of limited number of bouncers. It is the way pacemen bowl. It is ridiculous, as bad as demanding that a spinner will not turn the ball more than two inches, or will not flight or dip it too much. Do you expect the fast bowlers to go on giving you half-volleys to hit? They bounce, you cut or hook. Or you can't play the West Indies.

Q. Will your batting influence your captaincy?

A. I have a certain approach to the game which is basically aggressive. Let's face it, one-day cricket is much more of a team effort. If batsmen bat well, bowlers bowl well, fielders field well, how much does the captain have to do except count overs?

Q. Won't captaining a side that includes three captains you have played under add to the pressure?

A. No. We've played together for so long. We understand each other well. As for pressure, don't they say: when the going gets tough, the tough get going?

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the team brains-trust is working on that.

Senior members of the team explain that, as a matter of fact, this is one thing that should give the Indian batting line-up a tremendous advantage. Under one-day cricket rules in the early overs the fielders have to be drawn in, a condition hitters like Srikkanth, Sidhu, Raman Lamba and to an extent even Azharuddin can exploit by taking a few chances. "Our basic plan should be that the top order should attack. If they fail, Amarnath, Vengsarkar and Shastri should stem the rot and play themselves in, creating a situation where the late-order, led by Kapil can launch an onslaught, hoping that More and Arshad Ayub will continue to be productive with the bat," said a star.

But problems on that still remain. Srikkanth and Vengsarkar are both yet to display form. Azharuddin, despite his slaughter of Maninder Singh in the Deodhar Trophy will find the going entirely different once he is face-to-face with his West Indies tormentors and Imran Khan. And vice-captain Shastri is still searching for a firm place in the batting order.

More than anything else it is the Indian team's greatest strength, batting, which has been a continuing enigma, failing to deliver at crucial moments and often unable to rise to its full potential. "Come to think of it, how many times has this great batting line-up ever crossed the 300-run mark?" asks a senior batsman, pointing out that too often in the past an excellent start from the openers has been squandered away by India's failure to cash in on the slog overs. It is significant that Srikkanth lists as his biggest disappointment the match against Pakistan at Calcutta where such a late collapse left the issue open for Pakistan which clinched it with the help of an incredible knock from Salim Malik. "We could have done better, shown greater mental toughness," says Srikkanth.

For the past few years the problem with India has been its virtually anaemic bowling resources, a weakness exposed most painfully on hard and true Indian pitches and in games played in dry domestic atmosphere. The same medium-pacers that look menacing in damp English conditions become inconsequential in the subcontinent and that is one of the main reasons behind India's relatively dismal one-day record at home. For the moment the team has to live with that problem. Kapil, whose lethality has been an enigma for three years now, still remains the spearhead-cum-stock bowler, but he too has no more than 10 overs in a one-day game.

IN Sharjah's sea breeze Delhi's Manoj Prabhakar may make the new ball wobble a bit, but between Kapil, Chetan Sharma and Manoj Prabhakar Indian bowling will be reduced to up-and-down stuff, particularly on true wickets. Add to that this Indian team's uncharacteristically weak fielding and the combined pressure on batting could be overwhelming.

Equally uncharacteristically this time, India does not even have an attacking spin bowler as leg-spinner Narendra Hirwani is still nursing an injury and Delhi's left-arm spinner Maninder Singh yet again failed to find favour with the selectors. "Unfortunately he is not bowling as well as he was earlier on," says Dungarpur. But his measured bowling, electrifying fielding and combative spirit could have come handy in the one-day games. That leaves spin department in the hands of Arshad Ayub and Ravi Shastri both of them steady performers but more in the mould of stock-bowlers rather than spearheads.

Maninder's exclusion is by far the most intriguing aspect of the selections but was perhaps unavoidable as the team was to be confined to 14. The only other surprise was the choice of Srikkanth as skipper. But as he himself says, he was considered the best compromise candidate. Vengsarkar had led India to defeat in the West Indies. Coupled with his own poor form and scraps with the BCCI that made his removal rather easy. Vengsarkar, obviously has not taken it philosophically and makes no effort to hide his disappointment. "Of course I am disappointed. I led India in 10 Tests, seven of them against the West Indies. I wasn't able to perform a miracle. I hope Srikkanth pulls that off now," he said, expressing the resolve to "pick up the thread" from the days of his peak form, "go out and get some runs". He also knows that many in the board would be waiting for a few failures from him so the process of settling scores could begin.

The team at nets: formidable task

If Vengsarkar was easy to jettison, Kapil Dev, a board official revealed, was too dangerous after his natural leadership during the recent crisis. Shastri had shown "too much arrogance" in the past when temporarily given the mantle of captaincy. Mohinder Amarnath was stepping into his 40s. The basic point also was that the cricket administrators were disinclined to hand over the captaincy to any of the stars embroiled in the recent controversies with them. As one of the stars said wryly: "That we, including Jimmy (Amarnath) have had to be included is humiliating enough for the board." But many in the board are smarting under that humiliation and make no secret of what they will do to the stars if they fail. For much of Srikkanth's team thus the threat from within will be as strong as the challenge from the West Indies and Imran Khan.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

had led in-
s. Coupled craps with val rather has not makes no ment. "Of ed India in st the West rm a mir-
s that off resolve to days of his me runs".
the board
lures from ng scores

o jettison, ealed, was ral leaderhastri had ce" in the the mantle rnath was asic point inistrators r the cap-oiled in the m. As one ve, includ-
had to be gh for the board are ation and ill do to the rikkanth's hin will be n the West

HAR GUPTA

Remember how we felt when the thunder of molten steel first resounded in an Indian steel plant...

When Satyajit Ray won the award at Cannes...

When our first oil well was spudded at Bombay High...

When India won the World Cup...

Now once again, its the same kind of feeling...

मारुति
MARUTI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For India it is a dream realised. Exporting cars to France, one of the world's most competitive car markets. Part of the EEC. With uncompromising standards for performance, safety, emission control, driving comfort and overall quality. To qualify, the Maruti underwent the tough EEC crash test and

Voila

tests for braking force, emission, peak performance and reliability on every critical compo

QUALITY IS THE BEST

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

d passed them with flying colours. In record time! Yes, the 'Maruti From India' is truly international. On the roads of Hungary, Tanzania, Malta, Cyprus, Papua New Guinea, Mauritius, Bhutan, Sri Lanka, Bangladesh,

Maruti!

Nepal...and now France.

It's a moment that fills our hearts with pride..

On being Indian.

मारुति
MARUTI

S T E A S O N F O R S U C C E S S

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/MU/895

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Buy two get one FREE

For you, from Hawkins.

Buy two Hawkins pressure cookers, 5 litre or bigger. Post your claim form as required. Get one 3 litre Hawkins delivered to your home absolutely free.

Offer limited to one free cooker per family. Ask for detailed terms and conditions. Available only from participating dealers and all CSD canteens. Only till November 10. Hurry.

Why more cookers?

The right size Hawkins pressure cooker for each of your cooking needs will help you save even more time and money. A medium size cooker is best for your day-to-day cooking. A larger size cooker is very convenient for festivals and parties. A small cooker is most economical when you are cooking for just one or two persons.

Also, a Hawkins makes a very appreciated gift.

The safest, fastest way to tasty food.

Superb Hawkins design and quality. Hawkins cookbook with 98 recipes. Choice of East, South, West or North Indian cooking and 13 languages. 311 prompt, courteous, efficient, authorised centres at your service.

Quality India Trusts

Hawkins®

Over 1 crore pressure cookers sold

1989 COPYRIGHT RESERVED BY HAWKINS COOKERS LIMITED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hawkins Scheme Dealers

DELHI

❑ DELHI: Bhopal, Jain Bartan Bhandar, 33, Saman Bazar • Chandani Chowk, Babu 1900, Opp. Bank of India • Bakshi Ware House, Shop No 1651 • Bhagwan Dass Jagannath, 633, Opposite Kucha Natwen • Budh Singh & Sons, 1834 • I.K. Sales, 4780, Ballimaran • Light Home, 1609 • Dharampal Place, Janki Dass & Co., 23-F • Sohan Lal Yash Pal, Mohan Singh Plaza • Super Bazar, Main Branch • Fatehpuri, Amar Singh & Sons, Shop No. 204 • Ladli Parshad Bansi Dhar, 256, Outside Kucha Kashi Ram • 4/3, Bonds, Shop No. 6504 • Raghubar Dayal & Sons, Shop No. 6504 • Ram Kishore Electricals, Shop No. 234 • Gandhi Nagar, Bhupinder Singh & Sons, 1/1, Old Post Office Building, Main Bazar • Des Raj Ram Prakash, 513/26, Main Bazar • Jhandamal Krishan Lal, 413/1, Main Bazar • Greater Kailash, Mehrotra Dept. Store, M-46 A • Hauz Khas, Jain Brothers, E/36/2, Jain Bartan Centre Wala • LNJA, Super Bazar, Main Market • Kalkaji, Das Electrical, H-11, Main Road • Kalka Steel Centre, M-64, Main Road • Karol Bagh, Gift Centre, 5/38, Karol Nagar, Crockery Emporium, 11-F • Sardar Bartan Store, 2567, Ajmal Khan Road • Vishal Ajmal Khan Road • Sangodha Bartan Store, 2567, Ajmal Khan Road • Kotla Mubarakpur, Bhagwan Bartan Bhandar, 2568, Ajmal Khan Road • Rajasthan Hardware Store, H-482, Ajmal Agarwal, 4523, Subhash Market • Krishna Nagar, Shri Krishna Bartan Store, D4/1, Lal Kothari Market • Bedi Bartan Bhandar, 30, Central Market • Dawar Bhandar • Lajpat Nagar, Bedi Bartan Bhandar, 34, Central Market • Jain Bartan Bhandar, 32, Central Market • National Bartan Bhandar, 34, Central Market • Bartan Bhandar, 32, Central Market • Moti Nagar, Bhutani Bartan Store, Main Market • Munirka, Lovely Kitchen Centre ,BA/10, DDA Market, Near Sabar Bazar • Paharganj, Fancy Bartan Bhandar, Shop No. 4553, Main Bazar • Patel Nagar, Super Bazar, Main Market • Rajouri Garden, New Variety Stores, J-83, Main Bazar • Rohtash Nagar Shahdara, Aggarwal Bartan Stores, 1-6966, Babarpur Road • Sadar Bazar, Amolak Chand Arhant Kumar Jain, 4217, Pahari Dhiraj • Bharat Crockery House, 6117, Main Market • Bir Kishore & Sons, 4522, Pahari Dhiraj • Delhi Cycle Co., 6119, Main Market • Grover Sons, 310, Niranjan Estate, Partap Market • Hira Lal & Sons, 6120, Main Bazar • Malik Light House, 9, Crockery Market • Nitin Store, 104/53, Deputy Ganj • Punjab Crockery House, 2744, Outab Road • Ram Rakha Mal Shanti Prasad Jain, 604, Main Bazar • Vishal Vastu Bhandar, 89 Crockery Market • Sarojini Nagar, Ahuja Bartan Store, 65, Main Market • Punjab Bartan Store, 64, Babu Market • Vandana, 93, Sarojini Nagar • Subzi Mandi, Crockery & Allied Stores, 1535, Chandrawal Road • Sarojini Nagar, Jain Electronics, 1532, Tota Ram Bazar • Vasant Vihar, Osaba Emporium, 56, Basant Lok • Yusuf Sarai, Jain Utensils, Mandir Wali Gali • Jain Household Emporium, 74/2 • Muni Lal Bishan Swarup, 72/6 • Ram Kishan & Sons, 72/7 • M/s. Shri Vardhman Traders, 6/2.

ANDAMAN & NICOBAR ISLANDS

❑ PORT BLAIR: RGT Road, Dayal Co.

ANDHRA PRADESH

❑ HYDERABAD: Kampally Station Road, Anjali Electronics • Lakshmi Home Appliances, Opp. Board of Revenue • Sultan Bazar, Baliram Emporium ❑ SECUNDERABAD: Rastrapathi Road, Deccan Iron Works, Opposite Bata ❑ KAKINADA: Suryarao Pet, Gupta Emporium, Main Road.

ARUNACHAL PRADESH

❑ PASIGHAT: Pasighat Bazar, Pasighat L/S. M/P Co-op Society Ltd.

ASSAM

❑ BARPATA ROAD: Main Road, New Variety Stores ❑ BISWANATH CHARIALI: Pabhai Road, Uday Sankar Stores ❑ BONGAIGAON, Main Road, Ravi Prakash Anand & Co ❑ DERGAON: H.C.G. Road, Bijoy Store ❑ DHUBRI: D.D. Road, G.C. Roy & Sons ❑ DIBRUGARH: H.S. Road, New Crockery Store • New Market, S. Dutta & Co., ❑ GOLAGHAT: Main Road, Kusona Enterprise ❑ GUWAHATI: Chandmari, Vedio View • Dispur, Kachuni Glass House • Fancy Bazar, S.R.C.B. Road, Sanganeria Agencies • Lakhotia, C.M. Store • Maligaon, National Variety Stores, P.N.G.B. Path • S.B. Road, City Centre ❑ HALFLONG: Main Road, Halflong Wholesale Cons. Co-op. Society Limited • Hojai & Sons ❑ JORHAT: A.T. Road, Durgapral Shankarlall • Chowk Bazar, Rakesh Chandra Das • Gar-Ali, Nemal Store • Roy & Co. • Saha Trading Agency, ❑ KARIMGANJ: Station Road, Stationery Stores ❑ NAGAON: Dacca Patty, New Chatanya Stores ❑ NORTH LAKHIMPUR: N.T. Road, Dutta Brothers ❑ SIBSAGAR: Temple Road, Murgilal Banwarilal ❑ SILCHAR: Janiganj, Maitry Enterprise ❑ TINSUKIA: Daily Bazar, Nazir Ahmed & Sons • Thana Road, N.N. Corporation

BHUTAN

❑ PHUNT SHOLING: Dolma Enterprises • Tashi Commercial Corp.

BIHAR

❑ BEGUSARAI: Main Road, Deo Bros • IOC Township, Barauni Refinery Co. Ltd. ❑ BHAGALPUR: D.N. Singh Road, Dokania & Sons • Glass Colony • Light Centre • Mela Stores • Rama Steel House ❑ BOKARO STEEL CITY, City Centre, Amrapali, Sector-4 • Bombay Variety Stores, E-13, Sector-4 ❑ DALTONGANJ: Sadar Bazar, K.C. Kaul & Bros ❑ CHAS: Bye Pass Road, Kanhaiya, • Main Road, Shital Stores ❑ DALSINSARAI: Lakshmi Narain Lal Jai Durgkar Prasad ❑ DARBHANGA: Lalbagh, Lovely Corner • North Bihar, Kalloo Subhash Chowk ❑ DEHRIONSONE: Cinema Road, Glassina • DHANBAD: Bank More, Shyamganj Road, Baidyanath Electric Stores ❑ DHANBAD: Bank More, Shyamganj Road, Shyam Bengal Ceramic ❑ GAYA: Gol Patthar, Pappu Trading Co • GIRIDIH: Chowk Bazar, Shankar Traders ❑ GUMLA: Main Road, Shyam Sundar Glass Stores ❑ JAMSHEDPUR: Jugsalai, Ramniklal Devchand, Near Railway Phatak, Main Road • Main Road, Bistupur, Coolon, Hindustan Building • Sakchi Bazar, Cocker House, 25, Old Alu Line • Lalit Kumar • Neel Metal Steel Centre, 24, Old Alu Line • Steel Sales Corporation, 161 ❑ JHARIA: Dhanbad Road, Ashirbad Trading Co • Main Road, Steel Corner • Kathuria, Sah Kataria, Roop Rang ❑ KISHANGANJ: Hospital Road, Prakash Stores ❑ MUNGER: Town Hall Road, Jalan Traders ❑ MUZAFFARPUR: Moti Jhil, Dada Steel & Crockery, Moti Jhil House • New Business Emporium • Sariyaganj, Bharat Glass Co. ❑ PATNA: Boring Road, Jain Emporiles, Hepatit Kotha • Kadamkuan, Patna Steel Corner • Kankar Bagh Road, Steel House • Muradpur, Steel Corner, Opp. Bankipur Post Office • New Market, Crockerico • Sawhney Electricals ❑ RANCHI: Church Road, Shree Metal Store • Main Road, Kailash Crockery House • Prabhat Shree Emporium Cycle Stores • The Ranchi Motor & Cycle Co., Beside Big Bata Shop • Upper Bazar, Ashok Enterprises • Stainless Steel Sales ❑ SAHARSA: Dahlan Chowk, Dahlan Glass House • D.B. Road, Apollo Electric House ❑ SAMASTIPUR: Magardahi Road, Raja Steel ❑ SASARAM: Chowkhandi Road, New Janta Glass Stores ❑ SINDRI: Saharpura, Uppal General Store, 15, Tinshed ❑ SIWAN: Durbar Cinema Compound, Saran Electric Works ❑ LAHERIASARAI: Bakarganj, Dayal Crockery House • Commercial Chowk, Steel House.

CHANDIGARH

❑ CHANDIGARH: Sector 15-D, Indian Crockery House, Shop No 45, • Sector 17-E, Jagat Singh & Sons, SCF-32 • Sector 18-C, Dharam Chand Aggarwal, SFC-17 • Sector 19-C, Gupta Crockery House, SCF 31 • Jain Glass House, SCF 14 • Sector 26, Aggarwal Distributors, Show Room No-30 • Sector 35-C, New Indian Crockery House, S.C.O. 89.

GOA

❑ MAPUSA: Municipal Market, Ismail Jusab Virani, Shop No. 19 • Near Canara Bank, Laxmikant & Co. Khalap Building • 17, Ramchandra Building, Mayur Agencies ❑ MARGAON: New Market, Dinanath D Sadekar & Sons, 10, P.O. Box No. 331 • Opp. Cine Lata, The Bombay Metal Mart • Station Road, T.A. Hazare & Sons, New Market ❑ PANJIM: Azad Maidan, S.T. Pokle & Co., Opp. Azad Maidan • Dr. Pissurlekar Road, M.S.B. Caculo, P.O. Box 63 ❑ PONDA: Belgaum Road, Shanta Electric Stores, Gaonekar Building.

GUJARAT

❑ AHMEDABAD: Meghaninagar, M/s. Ajanta Steel Centre, Meena Bazar • Three Gates, M/s. Akbarally Kadabhai, Abdul Kadar Mohammed Hussain, 1812 • M/s. Akbarally & Sons, 1822/1 • M/s. Bombay Novelty Stores, 1839/1 ❑ RAJKOT: Lakhaji Raj Road, M/s. Apsara Agencies, Sanganwa Chowk ❑ VADODARA: Jubilee Baug, Happy Home, Shalimar Chambers, Opp. Sardar Bhavan.

HARYANA

❑ AMBALA CITY: Jain Bazar, Janata Crockery & General Store • Qotwali Bazar, Fancy Bartan Store ❑ BAHADURGARH: Railway Road, Suresh Chand Sanjay Kumar ❑ FARIDABAD: Market No. 1, Krishan Lal Sanjeev Kumar, Shop No. 116 ❑ GURGAON: Sadar Bazar, Classic Kitchenware ❑ JAGADHARI, Chowk Bazar, Suruchi Sales • Railway Road, O.P. Metal Industries ❑ KALKA: Gandhi Chowk, Beni Parshad Parduman Kumar ❑ KARNAL: G.T. Road, Dewan Chand Karambir ❑ PANIPAT: Halwai Hatta Bazar, Jia Lal Jain Dass • Main Bazar, Mohar Singh Dhari Mal ❑ REWARI: Moti Chowk, Harsahaimal Sukhdev Sahaii ❑ SIRSA: Rori Bazar, Aggarwal Bartan Bhandar • Gaba Bartan Bhandar ❑ THANESHAR: Krishana Gate, Kumar Bartan Store.

HIMACHAL PRADESH

❑ KANGRA: Main Bazar, Gupta Sewing Machine ❑ KULLU: Akhara Bazar, Vigson Gen Store ❑ MANALI: Main Bazar, Thomas Stores ❑ RAMPUR BUSHAHAR: Main Bazar, Mehar Chand Mool Raj ❑ SHIMLA: Lower Bazar, Sant Lal Inder Sain Aggarwal, 31 • The Mall, Central Traders, 2.

JAMMU & KASHMIR

❑ ANANTNAG: Lal Chowk, Abdul Rashid Kochak & Co. • New Market, Kashmir Bartan Store • Super Bazar, Islamabad District Consumer Co-op. Store ❑ JAMMU: Kanak Mandi, Tara Chand Kapur Chand Jain • New Market, Ladhu Mal Des Raj Jain, Raghunath Bazar • Raghunath Bazar, Princeways ❑ SOPORE: Near D.P. Dhar Memorial Hospital, Malik House ❑ SRINAGAR: Hari Singh High Street, Kasturi Lal Jain & Sons • Piaralal Kulbhushan Lal Jain • Lala Rukh Hotel Building, Apna Bazar (J.K. Confed), Lal Chowk • Maisuma Bazar, Miraj & Co. • Pilladium Street, Cosmos House, Lal Chowk • Tankipura Road, Ahuja Agencies, Opp. D.C. Office.

KARNATAKA

❑ BANGALORE: Avenue Road, Bagrecha & Bros., 314, Bagrecha Building • Cheap Hall, No.195 • Brigade Road, Pots and Pans, 11, Curzon Complex • Chickpet, Raja Trading Co., Near Balepet Square • Richards Square, Adams & Company, 19 • Sampige Road, Anand Departments, 532 • Sudhamanagar, Master Marketing Agency, 13, Annipuram Main Road ❑ BIJAPUR: Azad Road, Sha Fulchand Kesarimal, Opp. Canara Bank ❑ CHIKMANGALUR: Vijayapura Extension, Multi Agencies, Ratnagiri Road ❑ HUBLI: Broadway, Patra Bhandar, 53 ❑ KARKALA: Main Road, Sovereign Enterprise ❑ MANGALORE: Balmatta, Souza Electronics, Kumudavathi Building • K.S. Rao Road, Super Suplies, Gokul Market • Market Road, Bharath Steel & Gift Centre ❑ SHIMOGA: Nehru Road, Sadhana Trading Co.

KERALA

❑ ALWAYE: Catholic Centre, Wireless Metro ❑ CALICUT: Muthalakulam, Bright Metals ❑ CHALAKUDY: Main Road, Sini Vessels, Pellissery Building ❑ ERNAKULAM: Broadway, Anthony Francis & Son • Life Styles, K.T.D.C. Shopping Complex • Mahmood Crockeries, Wakf Board Building • M.G. Road, Electrical Sales Corporation, Opp. College Ground ❑ MAHE: Parakkal, Karma Enterprises, Main Road ❑ PALGHAT: G.B. Road, Steel Palace ❑ PERUMBAVOOR: P.P. Road, Mookada Agencies, Near New Private Bus Stand ❑ TELLICHERRY: Logan's Road, Sreenivas Electronic Company ❑ TRICHUR: P.O. Road, Steelalayan • Round South, Kerala Leather Co.

MADHYA PRADESH

❑ AMBIKAPUR: Deviganj Road, Fairdeal ❑ BALAGHAT: Main Road, Metal House ❑ BETUL: Ganj, Bal Mukund Gupta • Kothi Bazar, Ahuja Traders ❑ BHILAI: Camp. 2, Circular Market, Gargi General Stores, Shop No. B14,15,16 • Civic Centre, Suresh Brothers, 21, Indira Place • Surana Sales, 186A, A Market, Sector 6 ❑ BHIND: Sadar Bazar, M/s. Shah Mewaram Narendra Kumar ❑ BHOPAL: T.T. Nagar, Animesh Traders, 19, New Market • Roshan Pura Naka, Darwesh Bartan Bhandar ❑ BILASPUR: Sadar Bazar, Akash Stores, Near Corona Shoe Stores • Vijay Stores ❑ CHHATARPUR: Chowk Bazar, Hazarilal Narayandas • Hatwara, M/s. Amit Electronics • Kotwali Road, M/s. Choice Centre • Agrasen Emporium, Mahal Road ❑ CHHINDWARA: Budhwari Bazar, Grih Shobha Steel Emporium • Station Road, Mayur, Char Phatak ❑ DABRA, Kamla Market, Adhunik Kitchenware ❑ DAMOH: Cinema Road, Ajanta Traders ❑ DHAR: 93, Jawahar Marg, M/s. Goyal Traders ❑ GADARWARA: Jhanda Chowk, Mangal Kalash ❑ GWALIOR: Daulat Ganj, M/s. Raju Crockery House, Daud Market • Sarafa Bazar, Dhomraj Hazarilal • Goyal Steel Emporium • M/s. Narsingdas Renwal • Topi Bazar, Ashok Crockery House • Pahuram Peshuram Lokwani ❑ INDORE: Jawahar Marg, Cooker House, Shop No.370 • Ram Laxman Bazar, N. R. Electronics, Shop No. 23 ❑ JABALPUR: Ashirwad Market, Ashirwad Steel Emporium, Shop No. 18 • Steel Emporium, Shop No. 36 • Civic Centre, Electricals & Electronicals, Shop No. 7A • Jawaharganj, National Stores, Bhargava Chauraha • Karamchand Chowk, Steel Palace • Naya Bazar, Peekay Traders, Shop No. 30 • ❑ JAGDALPUR: Gandhi Chowk, Woonwala ❑ KATNI: Raghunathganj, Shyamlelal Mohanlal • Shalimar Market, M/s. Bharat Steels ❑ KHANDWA: Bombay Bazar, Khandwa Plastic Centre, Shop No. 262 ❑ KHARGONE: Hospital Road, Kailash Printing Press, Shop No. 10 ❑ KORBA, Main Road, Agarwal Traders • Ganesh Steel Emporium • Ramgopal Radheshyam Agrawal ❑ MANDSAUR: Kalidas Marg, Janta Radios ❑ MANENDRAGARH: Old Sabji Mandi, Supreme Electricals, Nagar Palika Bldg. ❑ MORENA: Sadar Bazar, Durga Book Stores ❑ NAGDA: M.G. Road, Ramchand Premkumar Kasera, Shop No. 99 ❑ NARSINGHPUR: Kandeli, Jyoti Bartan Bhandar, Main Road ❑ NEEMUCH: Tagore Marg, Agarwal Stores • Ratandeep Agencies ❑ RAIPUR: Malviya Road, Surana Sales • Sadar Bazar, Khemraj Jusraj & Bros. • M.S. Traders • Shri Patra Bhandar, Opp. Hotel Madhuban • Steel Emporium ❑ RAJNANDGAON: Azad Chowk, Shree Bartanwala • Juniihatri, Chhote Sound Systems ❑ RATLAM: Dafu Modi Bazar, Agarwal Electricals, Shop No. 24 • Do Batti, Roopayan Stores • Manak Chowk, Jain Sons ❑ REWA: Kala Mandir Road, Gupta Sales Corporation • Prakash Chowk, Prakash Agencies ❑ SAGAR: Katra Bazar, M/s. Jaina Steels • National Stores ❑ SATNA: Opposite Ashok Talkies, Keshari Steel Centre • Pannilal Chowk, Gifto Steel Centre ❑ SEONI: Budhwari Bazar, Sunil Metal Stores • Vishal Steel Centre ❑ SHAJAPUR: New Road, A.G. Takhatwala ❑ UJJAIN: Freeganj, 23/4, Bhoj Marg, Laxmi Steel Center • Jawahar Marg, Manoj Patra Bhandar • Patni Bazar, Maha Laxmi Patra Bhandar, Shop No. 125.

MAHARASHTRA

❑ AHMEDNAGAR: Shahaji Road, Ambhore &Co. • K.T. Rasane, M.G. Road • Surekh Sangam, Department Stores ❑ AKOLA: M.G. Road, Anupam Variety House ❑ AMRAVATI: Jawahar Road, Israni Steel & Gift Centre • Inside Jawahar Gate, Nankani & Co. ❑ AURANGABAD: Supari Hanuman Road, Krishna Corporation ❑ BOMBAY: Andheri (West), Apna Bazaar, J.P. Road, Azad Nagar • Hemco Steel Centre, 212-S.V. Road • Meghraj Umedmal & Co., Opp. Municipal Market • Shree Muthulaxmi Steel Palace, B-106 Laram Centre ❑ Bandra (West), Anupam Emporium, Opposite Pali Market • Shazaan, 34-Hill Road ❑ Borivli (West), Oswal Steel Centre, 18-Goyal Shopping Arcade • Pramanic Centre, Opp. Rly. Station ❑ Chembur, Akbarallys, Sion-Trombay Road • Milan Emporium, 5-Laxmi Market • Natraj Emporium, 4, Natraj Cinema Building • Silver Centre, 3 Laxmi Market • Vijay Steel Centre, Station Road ❑ Dadar, C.M. Mehta & Co., M.C. Jawle Marg, Dadar (West) • Dhiraj Sales Corpofation, 33, Padhyewadi, B.S. Road, Dadar (West) • Kamal Stores, Opp. Kabutarkhana ❑ Fort, Apna Bazaar, Noble Chambers, Ghoga Street • ❑ Fountain, Akbarallys, Veer Nariman Road ❑ Grant Road, Variety General Stores, 297, Lamington Road ❑ Jacob Circle, Ramanlal Jayantilal & Co., Opp. Church, Sane Guruji Road ❑ Kansara Chawl, Ratilal Mohanlal, 46, Kalbadevi Road ❑ Khar (West), D.N. Jain & Co., Station Road ❑ Lohar Chawl, Asiatic Electric Trading Co., 46-48, Jay Mahal Bldg. • Sanghvis International, 62 ❑ Mahim (West), Arunodaya Stores, Opp. City Light Cinema • Bhairav Bhandi Bhandar, Near Shobha Refreshments ❑ Malad (West), Mahavir Steel Centre, Natraj Market • Sirish Traders, Station Road ❑ Mulund (West), Apna Bazaar, Jawaharlal Nehru Road ❑ Nalgaum, Apna Bazaar, Govindji Keni Road ❑ Panjrapole, Sonia Enterprises, 179/A, Kandori Bldg., Opp. Sarvodaya Nagar ❑ Santacruz (West), Akbarallys, S.V. Road • Mahavir Stores, Station Road ❑ Sion (East), Kani Evershining Emporium, Opp. Sion Hospital •Shri Murugan Steel House, Near Sion Circle ❑ Thakurdwar, Amar Enterprises, Shop No 4, 238-A, Dr B.J. Marg ❑ Vile Parle (East), Mansukh Metal Mart, Agrawal Market • Murugan Appliances, 36, Agarwal Market • Pankaj Steel Centre, 38, Agarwal Market • Parle Novelties, Opp. Rly Station ❑ Vikhroli (West), Mukesh Sales Agency, Station Road ❑ CHIPLUN: Chiplun Dist. Ratnagiri, M/s. Rajan Steel Bhandar, Main Road ❑ DHULE: Opp. Shriram Mandir, Silver Shop, 1442, Agra Road ❑ DOMBIVILI: Patkar Building, Pankaj Steel & Novelty • Parag Steel & Novelty, Near Canara Bank ❑ GONDIA: Main Road, Anjali Steel Centre ❑ ICHALKARANJI: Near Vyankatrao High School, Heramb Trade Group, 10/152❑ JALGAON: Phule Market, Varieties ❑ KALYAN: Bazaar Peth, Prabhat Bhandi Bhandar, Opp. Vishnu Mandir, ❑ KARAD: Near Mandai, Rajlaxmi Enterprises, 386, Raviwar Peth ❑ KOLHAPUR: Shivaji Road, G.R. Shah ❑ MALEGAON: Camp Road, N. Joshi Pvt. Ltd., Opp. LIC Building ❑ NAGPUR: Gokulpeth, Sathe Agency, West of High Court Road, • Jagganath Budhwari, Geetanjali Steel Centre, Lanjiwar Galli, • Sitabuldi, M.s. Pande & Sons, Near Variety Chowk, ❑ NASHIK CITY:848-Bartan Bazar, Prakash Ramdas Kale • Shalimar Bldg., Vijay Trading Co., Shivaji Road ❑ NASHIK ROAD: Opp. Muktidham, Mohan Metal Mart, Chaya Niwas, M.G. Road, ❑ NEW BOMBAY: Vashi, Apna Bazar, Sector-17 ❑ OSMANABAD: Marawadi Galli, Bedmutha Sons, B. Mahavir Path ❑ PANDHARPUR: Taluka Place, Ganjewar Traders, 2894 'Pushpanjali' Paschimdwar ❑ PIMPRI, Station Road, Rajkumar Enterprises, Near Arya Samaj ❑ PUNE: Karve Road, Jain Metals, 39/248,Karve Road, Opp. Bank of Maharashtra • Narayan Peth, Neelam, 689, Narayan Peth, Opp. Lokhande Talim • Rameshwar Chowk, B.C. Mehta & Co., Mandai • Raviwar Peth, Rajendra & Co., 894, Daroowala Bridge • Jain Metal Corporation, 635/Bohri Masjid Building • Shashtri Chowk, Nitin Metal Works, 1626, New Shukrawar Peth • Tulsi Baug, Tulsi, 1183, Budhwar Peth • N.H. Pandya & Sons, 1473/Shukrawar Peth, Near Jilbya Maruti • Opp. Tulsi Baug, Mehta Brothers, C/o. Mamta Steel, 1471, Shukrawar Peth ❑ SANGLI: Herbhat Road, Bhagate Steel Centre, Near Arwade High School • Main Road, Shree Ameya Steel Centre, Karmarkar Building • Maruti Road, Mangle & Sons • Miraj Taluka Paschimbhag Sahakar Graha Vaibhav Bhandar • Saraf Bazar, P.M. Shinde, Saraf Corner • Station Chowk, Deokar Steel Centre, Station Road ❑ SATARA: Moti Chowk, Graharaj Stainless Steel Centre, Opp. Sangli Bank • Sadashiv Peth, Lanjekar Wadake & Co., Near Bhaji Mandai ❑ SOLAPUR: Bhandi Galli, M/s. Shashikant Jaykumar Mohire, 193, Shukrawar Peth • Navi Peth, Golden Electronics, Shastri Shopping Centre • Katte Brothers Steel House, Janata Shopping Centre • Laxmi Stainless Steel Centre, 42-43/Janata Shopping Centre • Solapur Stainless Steel House, 4, Paras Estate • Steel Centre, 8/Janata Shopping Centre ❑ RAHURI: Main Road, Rasane Brothers ❑ RATNAGIRI: M.G. Road, Prakash Vastu Bhandar, Near Vitthal Mandir ❑ THANA: Naupada, Kitchen Shine, Dr. Ambedkar Chowk • Mahavir.

continued overleaf.....

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hawkins® Buy two get one FREE

Hawkins Scheme Dealers
.....continued from previous page

MANIPUR

❑ IMPHAL: M.G. Avenue, Manipur Builder Store • Poana Bazar, Pasa Enterprise • Thangal Bazar, Roopak Agency.

MEGHALAYA

❑ SHILLONG: Dhankheti, V.K. Ghai & Co., Bawri Mansion.

MIZORAM

❑ AIZWAL: Bara Bazar, B.C. Dey & Sons • Eastern Trading Agency • Lal Huluni & Sons, Zion Street • National Business Enterprise • Mizoled ❑ LUNGLEI: Chandmari, J.B. Press & Stores.

ORISSA

❑ ANGUL: Medical Road, Agarwalla Enterprisers, Sanjibani Market • Sunil Electric Supply ❑ ASKA: Bus Stand, Asoka Enterprises ❑ BALASORE: Cinema Bazar, Fairdeal Corporation ❑ BARBIL: Main Road, Bhabani Varieties ❑ BARGARH: Main Road, Roop Sringar Agencies ❑ BARIPADA: Lal Bazar, New Electrical Agency • Sebasanga Hall, Aero Voice ❑ BERHAMPUR: Bhapur Bazar, Silla Gopaiam & Sons • 13, Giri Market, Allied Stores • One Way Traffic Road, J.K. Enterprises • Madhu Enterprises • Sano Bazar, Raghevendra & Co. ❑ BHAWANI PATNA: Gandhi Chowk, Amit Fancy Emporium, Bhawani Patur • Maheswari General Store ❑ BHUBANESWAR: Ashok Nagar, T. Krishna Patra • Eastern Market Building, Banjya Bikash • Lalchand & Sons • Rajmahal Chhak, Reeta • Sahid Nagar, Suruchi ❑ BOLANGIR: Bus Stand, Narayan Das Adumal • Steel Home • Cinema Hall Road, Samjuka Steel Centre • Surya Hotel Complex, Bombay Steel Emporium ❑ BURLA: Main Road, Burla Electricals • Punjab General Stores ❑ CHANDPUR: Main Road, Gourjema Electricals ❑ CHATRAPUR: Durga Electricals ❑ CUTTACK: Bajra Kabati Road, Konark Light House • Choudhury Bazar, Janata General Store • Badambadi, Gayatri Stainless Steel • College Square, Laxmi Prakash Agency • Mahatab Road, Indian Industries • Raja Bagicha, D. Patra • Tinkonia Bagicha, Gupta Sales Corporation • Shankar General Store • Sunita • Utkal Sales Corporation ❑ DHENKANAL: Kanchan Bazar, Beauty House ❑ HIRAKUD: New Market, Pradhan General Stores ❑ JASHIPUR: Main Road, Janata Agencies ❑ JATNI: Railway Market, Popular Stores ❑ JEYPORE: Main Road, Shantee Stores • M.G. Road, Viswanath Steel Centre ❑ JHARSUGUDA: Main Road, Jharsuguda Metal Stores ❑ KARANJIA: Main Road, Shankar Stores ❑ KEONJHAR: New Market, Asha Ladies Corner • New Market, Bhabani Stores • Priya Stores • Sri Durga Agencies ❑ KORAPUT: Near Bus Stand, Bikram Radio & Electricals ❑ NALCO NAGAR: Nalco Township, Nalco Employees, Multi Purpose Consumer Co-Operative Stores Ltd. ❑ PADAMPUR: Raj Bora Sambar, Rahas Behari Stores, Main Road ❑ PURI: Grand Road, T. Krishna Patra ❑ RAIRANGPUR: Main Road, Friends Corner ❑ RAJGANGPUR: Main Road • Modern Variety Centre • Pradeep Stores ❑ ROURKELA: Fertiliser Township, Sri Baldevji Enterprise • Main Road, Ghanashyam Das & Sons, Opp. Mangal Bhawan • Glamour • Pawan Stores • Sec-5, Market Complex, Prestige ❑ SALIPUR: Main Road, Electrical Sales & Supply ❑ SAMBALPUR: Gole Bazar, Bharat Steel Centre • Usha Kunj, Poddar Machinery House, Marwaripara ❑ SIMILIGUDA: Main Road, Chandra General Store ❑ SUNDERGARH: Main Road, Jafar Ali Rahimtullah.

PUNJAB

❑ AMRITSAR: Hall Bazar, M/s. Harbans Crockery Store • Raghbir Singh Katana & Sons • Katra Baggian, Mangal Singh & Sons • Katra Jaimal Singh, Popular Trading Co. • Partap Bazar, M/s. Puri Battery Store ❑ BATALA: G.T. Road, Abrol Enterprises, Near Punjab National Bank ❑ BHATINDA: Dhobi Bazar, Bombay Steel & Crockery House • Gandhi Market, Kanchan Crockery House • Subhash & Co. ❑ GURDASPUR: Hanuman Chowk, Kedar Nath & Sons ❑ HOSHIARPUR: Jalandhar Road, Bansal Crockery House, Near Clock Tower • Kashmiri Bazar, Vaishno Dass & Sons ❑ JAGRAON: Main Bazar, Kailash Chand & Sons ❑ JALANDHAR: Balmiki Gate, Bharat Light House, Near Seema Palace • Bazar Sheikhan, Kharbanda Shopping Centre • Romesh Chander Mittar Pall • Chowk Rainak Bazar, Gift Centre • G.T. Road, Opp. Civil Hospital, J. Om Parkash & Sons • Naya Bazar, Bombay Stainless Steel (Regd.), Near Luv Kush Chowk • Rainak Bazar, Behal Sons ❑ KOTKAPURA: Railway Road, Ahuja Gift House ❑ LUDHIANA: Chaura Bazar, Jainsons • Kapoor Crockeries • Opera Crockery House • Saban Bazar, Gupta Gift House • Jain Crockery House ❑ MOGA: Bagh Gali, Crockery Palace • Main Bazar, Nand Kishore Aggarwal & Sons ❑ NASRALA: Jalandhar Road, Kailash Ceramic ❑ NAWANSHAHAR, Railway Road, Hara Singh Jaswant Singh Anand ❑ PATIALA: Chowk Arya Samaj, Malhotra Stores ❑ PHAGWARA: Loha Mandi Road, A.K. Traders, C/o. Tilak Raj Darshan Kumar Mata • Loha Mandi, Chada Metal Store ❑ ROPAD: Main Bazar, Basti Ram Narinder Kumar Dhawan • Subhash Road, Gupta Sales Corporation, Chowk Farid Jullundur

RAJASTHAN

❑ AJMER: Kesar Ganj, Goyal Brothers, Station Road • Naya Bazar, Jain Sujan Mal Shiker Chand ❑ ALWAR: Hope Circus, Janta Bartan Bhandar, Shop No. 39 ❑ BANSWARA: Azad Chowk, Kansara Shambhu Lal Maniklalji • New Cloth Market, Rajasthan Furniture, Shop No.4 ❑ BHARATPUR: Neem Gate, Kishori Shyam Brijesh Kumar ❑ BIJAINAGAR: Sadar Bazar, Ganesh Crockery Store ❑ CHITTORGARH: Rana Sangha Market, Steel Emporium, Shop No.49 ❑ JAIPUR: Katla Purohit Ji, Karamchand Premchand Jain • Nehru Bazar, Ashoka (Dept. Store), Near Mayur Cinema • Raja Park, Long Life Deptt. Store, 372, Gali No.1 • Tripolia Bazar, Mahavir General Store, Shop No. 215 • Rajdhani Bartan Bhandar, Shop No. 186 ❑ JODHPUR: Sojati Gate, Arora Stores • Station Road, Saluja Agencies ❑ KHETRI NAGAR: Subhash Market, Amar Jyoti Fancy Store, Shop No. 38 ❑ SHEOGANJ: Gandhi Chowk, Vishnu Crockery & Gen. Store ❑ SRIGANGANAGAR: Public Park, Lyallpur Bartan Bhandar, Shop No. 46-47 A ❑ UDAIPUR: Bapu Bazar, Shah Laxmilal Parkashchander Jain, Shop No. 108 • Chokhla Bazar, Rajesh Traders, Near Chittora Mandir • Inside Suraj Pole, Lucky Stores.

TAMIL NADU

❑ CHIDAMBARAM: 25, South Car Street, Sri Vinayaga Pathirakkadai. ❑ COIMBATORE: Gandhi Puram, Ms. Covai Steels, No. 48, Shree Laxmi Complex, Cross Cut Road • R.S. Puram, M/s. Ideal Gift House, 8, Bashyakaralu Road ❑ DINDIGUL: S.M.B. Manickam Nadar, 163, 164, Big Bazaar Street ❑ MADRAS: Park Town, M.A. Ethirajulu Naidu, 18, Evening Bazar • Park Town, 15-C, Evening Bazaar, P.L.D. Rajendran Bror. • S. Santhosanadar Son, 88, Nyniadda Naicken Street • T. Nagar, Rathna Stores, (Siva Complex) 47, Pondy Bazar • Rathna Stores, 15, Renganathan Street • Washerman Pet, S. Selladurai Nadar Corpn., 360, T.H. Road ❑ MADURAI: Ammansannathi, S.S. Kandasamy Pandiyan, 3, Amman Sannathi Street • Bullion Bazar, Ananda Stores, 42, South Avani Moola Street • Kamarajan Street, S. Chelliah Nadar, 267, Kamarajar Street • Netaji Road, Muthuselvi Corpn., 109 ❑ PATTUKKOTTAI: 19, Thalayari Street, Sri Raamu Furniture ❑ SALEM: Bazar Street, Ms. Chandra Sekaran & Sons, No. 357 • Ms. National Agencies, No. 348 • Ms. V.C.R. Metal & Co., 87 ❑ SIVAKASI: South Car Street, M/s. M.V.K.D. Thangavel Nadar, 8 ❑ TIRUPUR: Pookadal Corner, Ms. Kavitha Agencies, No. 45, Eswaran Koil St. ❑ TRICHY: N.S.B. Road, Mangal Metal Mart, 24/2 ❑ VELLORE: Opp. C.M.C. Hospital, Seenu Agencies, 80/A-Arcot Road • Main Bazaar, Anand Agencies, 478.

TRIPURA

❑ UDAIPUR: Central Road, Electric House.

UTTAR PRADESH

❑ AGRA: Johri Bazar, Dada Glass & Crockeries • Kaserat Bazar, Agra Bartan Bhandar Pvt. Ltd., Shop No. 1/78 • Subhash Bazar, Gupta Glass Store ❑ ALIGARH: Mahaveerganj, Leela Dhar Babu Lal Kasera • Railway Road, Gulati Store, New Market • Jai Bharat Crockery House ❑ ALLAHABAD: Chowk, Gur Prasad Hira Lal, Jain Bhawan • Civil Lines, Alka Enterprises, 30, M.G. Marg • Kamla Nehru Marg, Novelty House, Near Power House • Priya Stores, Near Power House • The Sair Co., Near Power House • Katra Crossing, Jain Trading Co., Shop No. 11/48 • V.N. Marg, Diamond Tea Sales, Opp. Chameli Dharshala ❑ ANAPARA BAZAR: Moti Radio Centre ❑ AZAMGARH: Chowk, Jalan Electricals, Ahmed Market ❑ BAHRAICH: Chowk, Shyam Lal & Sons, Near Bata Shop ❑ BALLIA: Chowk-Station Road, Maheshwari Crockery Store • Station Malgodam Road, Vijay Gun House ❑ BAREILLY: Chowk Bazar, Swadeshi Jar House ❑ BIJNOR: Sadar Bazar, Rahmani & Sons, Opp. Ghanta Ghar ❑ BULANDSHAHR: Ansari Road, Kansal Crockery Store ❑ DEHRADUN: Pipal Mandi, Cee Vee Brass & Hardware, Shop No.3 • Paltan Bazar, Sushil & Co., Shop No. 95 ❑ DEORIA: Ansari Road, Mirzapur Metal Stores • Moti Lal road, Om Stores ❑ FAIZABAD: Chowk, Karim Khan ❑ GHAZIABAD: Sihani Gate, Goel Electric Stores, Shop No. 186 ❑ GHAZIPUR: Gandhi Road, Adarsh Bartan Bhandar ❑ GONDA: Utraula Road, Paras Steel Emporium, Raja Raghuran Market ❑ GORAKHPUR: Cinema Road, Ganeshi Lal & Sons • Golghar, Fine Crockery House, 16, Water Works Building • Ganeshi Lal Ram Niwas Agency, Station Road • Gorakhnath Road, Moti Steel House, Shop No.11, Sunder Katra • Maya Bazar, Amar Crockery Centre, Kotwali Road • Town Hall, Kitchen Museum, 11, Health Officers Building • Shree Bartan Stores, Opp. Petrol Pump • Steel Corner, Shop No. 14 • Vijay Agencies, Shop No. 16-17 ❑ HALDWANI: Bareilly Road, Sardar Crockery House • Bartan Bazar, Prem Singh Bartan Wale, Shop No. 73-74 ❑ JAUNPUR: Court Road, M/s. Anand Stores, Jogiapur • Harlalka Road, Glass Stores, Near Bata Shop ❑ JHANSI: Jawahar Chowk, Saran Brothers ❑ KANPUR: Bhoosa Toli, Kanpur Metal Co., Shop No. 66/317 • Birhana Road, Supreme Radio & Electric Corporation, Shop No. 26/49 • Govindnagar, India Crockery, Shop No. 124A/116, Near Bata Chowk • S.K. Sales Corporation, 2/7, Vidyarthi Market • Universal Sales Corporation, 41, Arya Kanya Market • Gumti No.5, Ish Electricals, Opp. Jaihind Cinema • Harsh Nagar, M.K. Agencies, Shop No. 111/2, Opp. Bank of India • Meston Road, Asia Light House • Navin Market, Kumar Fancy Stores • Sisamau Bazar, Adarsh Steel House, Shop No. 108/140 • Laxmi Bartan Bhandar, Shop No. 108/130 • Shanker Bartan Bhandar, Shop No. 108/146 ❑ KHURJA: Bartan Bazar, Bhola Nath Harchand Rai ❑ LAKHIMPUR KHERI: Main Road, Alok Agencies, Champa Bhawan • Mehrotra Agencies ❑ LUCKNOW: Aminabad, Inder Chand Jain • Ram Saran & Co., C/o. Bankey Lal Ram Saran • Susheel Bartan Bhandar • Aminabad Road, Tara Chand Kishan Gopal Jain, 18, Awadh Market • Tara Distributors, Awadh Market ❑ Hazratganj, Jain Sons, 11, Church Building • Nazirabad, Kanhaiya Lal Prag Das • Yahiya Ganj, Kanhaiya Lal Prag Das, Pili Kothi ❑ MATHURA: Chatta Bazar, D.C. Prakash Chand Anand Punjabi • Shree General Store ❑ MEERUT: Begum Bridge, Shakun Bartan Bhandar, Jagdish Sharan Inter College Bldg. • Khair Nagar Bazar, Modern Light House, Shop No.222, Opp. Pan Dariba ❑ MIRZAPUR: Sardar Bhagat Singh Marg, Mohan Brothers, Kotwali Road • Wellesly Ganj, Akashwani & Co., Swami Dayanand Marg • Krishna Electricals Agency, Sardar Bhagat Singh Marg ❑ MORADABAD: Bazar Ganj, Jain Crockeries • Pradeep Crockeries • Opp. Kotwali, Crockery Emporium ❑ MUGHALSARAI: G.T. Road, Krishna Bandhu ❑ OBRA, Kharatia Bazar, Mai Ram Jai Bhagwan ❑ RENUKOOT, Super Bazar-Hindalco ❑ RUDRAPUR: Bhagat Singh Chowk, India Industries ❑ RUPAIDIHA: Ramdoot Stores, Beside Ramdoot Cloth Store ❑ SAHARANPUR: Nehru Market, Nihal Chand Harbans Lal, Shop No.14 ❑ SHAKTINAGAR: Vidyut Vihar, Aggarwal Fancy Stores, Shop No. 32, Shopping Centre ❑ SHAMLI: Bara Bazar, Sugan Chand Sohan Lal ❑ SHAKTINAGAR: Vidyut Vihar, Jyoti Store, Shop No 6, Shopping Centre ❑ SHAMLI: Bara Bazar, Sugan Chand Sohan Lal ❑ SITAPUR: Greek Ganj, Sehra Brothers ❑ SULTANPUR: Majorganj, Narayan Stainless Steel Retail Stop • Shahganj, Anupam Electricals, Shiv Bhawan • S.R. Steel Emporium, Lala Suraj Lal Market ❑ UNNAO: Sadar Bazar, New Harish Chandra Gupta & Sons, 72-73, Shahganj ❑ VARANASI: Bansphatak, Girdhar Das & Sons • Stainless Steel Centre • Dalmandi, Glass & Plywood Centre • Ideal Glass House • Govindpura Khurd, Ramji Sao Satyanarayan Prasad, Near Raja Darwaja • Kashipura, Mahadeo Prasad Hari Ram, Shop No. C.K. 62/30 • Lahurabir, Asia Electronics, Opp. Thana Chetganj • U.P. Glass Stores, Opp. State Bank of India • Shiwala, S.P. Engineering, B10/45, Kirim Kund • Vishwanath Lane, Mohan Lal Kishan Chand, Shop No. D10/45.

WEST BENGAL

❑ ANDAL: G.T. Road, National Variety Stores ❑ ASANSOL: Bastin Bazar, Saha Steel House, 19, Leighton Street • G.T. Road, Eagle Glass House, 102, Ghanty Furniture House, 361 • Probhat Radio & Electricals • Hutten Road, A. Mitra & Co., 1 ❑ ASHOKNAGAR: Golbazar (Maingate), Renuka Stores ❑ AURANGABAD: Netaji More, Saladal Basanalaya, C/o. Mulin Kr. Sinha ❑ BALURGHAT: Chowranghee, Hemanta Stores • Lenin Sarani, Sri Krishna Stores ❑ BANKURA: Lalbazar More, Radio Centre, 306, Lalbazar Crossing, Subhas Road, Goenka Stores. ❑ BARASAT: Capital Market, New Sarkar ❑ BASIRHAT: Nutan Bazar, Suralipi • Puratan Bazar, Modern Electric ❑ BATANAGAR: Batanagar Employees Co-operative Society ❑ BELDANGA: Beldanga Bazar, Radio Ghar ❑ BERHAMPORE: Aajkal, 53, B.B. Sen Road • Near Kalpana Cinema, Basak Enterprise, B.B. Sen Road • Khagra, Ghosal & Co., 226, Manindra Road • Roy Brothers, 202, Manindra Road ❑ BOLEPUR: Sreeniketan Road, Ananda Stores. ❑ BURDWAN: Dholdighi, Hindustan Aluminium, G.T. Road • Tentultala, West Bengal Stores, B.B. Ghosh Road ❑ CALCUTTA: Bagree Market, Sham Bros. C-23, • United Stationery, C-21 • Baguiati (Durga Bari), Manimala, AA/12, Baguiati Road, Deshbandhu Nagar • Baranagar, Kashinath & Co., 1/1/A/4, Narasingha Prasad Dutta Rd. • Baranagar Bazar, Manoranjan, 16, Cossipore Road • Beadon Street (Hedua), Avantika, 173/3, Bidhan Sarani • Behala Bazar, Behala Steel House, 400-1, D.H. Road • Narayanee, 13, Brahma Samaj Road • Bhawanipur, Amita Stores, 144/A, A.T. Mukherjee Road, (Near Purna Cinema) •Porcelain Stores, 28, B.T. Mukherjee Road, (Near Purna Cinema) • Bidhansarani Town School, Modern Museum, 137/1A, Bidhan Sarani • Canning Street, Lamp House Pvt. Ltd., 21 • Chandni Chowk, Crockery Centre, 41B, Chandni Chowk Street • Nag & Sons, Chandni Chowk Street • College Street, Dutta Bros, B41/42, College Street Market • Cotton St., (Satyanarayan Park), Mohanlal Madhawjee, 59, Cotton Street • Deshapriya Park, Nepal Sankar & Co., 85, Rash Behari Avenue • Dunlop Vikram Super Market, Sanjay Sales, 140, B.T. Road, Block-D, Room 14 • Haltu, H.B.P. Finance & Trading Centre Ltd., 4, Kayastapara Main Road • Hare Street, Calcutta Telephone, Dist. Con. Co-op., 8 • Hati Bagan, Ashraf Trading Corpn., 82/2E, Bidhan Sarani • Hazra, Shyam Traders, 62/A, Hazra Road, (Near-New Allenbury) • India Exchange Place, Ramdeo Enterprises, 36 • Jadubabur Bazar, Dasakarma Bhander, (C/o. R. Saha), 31, A.T. Mukherjee Road • Kasba, Proyojani, 22, B.B. Chaterjee Road, (Opposite Purbasha Cinema) • Khangra Patty, B. Dayal & Sons, 109A, Pandit Purushotyam Roy Steeet • Lake Market, Sree Durga Stores, Shop No. D-5, 104, R.B. Avenue • Lenin Sarani, Navee Electronics & Electricals, C/o. Wadhwa Mollah & Sons, Pvt. Ltd., 8 ✓ Lindsay Street, Samavayika, 13 • New Market, Ghosh & Ghosh, B-65 • Old China Bazar, Amamath Kundu & Bros., 14/3, Old China Bazar St. • Obhay Charun Coondoo, 207, Old China Bazar St. • R. Shantilal Flash Light & Co., 53/A, Old China Bazar St. • Satcowrie Dass & Co., 196, Old China Bazar St. • S. L. Coondoo & Co., 206, Old China Bazar St. • Padmashree Cinema, United Sales Emporium, P-45, Raja S.C. Mullick Road • Posta (Central Bank), Nandy Stores, 50, Kalikrishna Tagore Street • Sealdah, Laxminarayan Basanalaya, 133/H, A.J.C. Bose Road, (Ground Floor of Astoria Hotel) • Ruby Cycle Stores, 11, M.G. Road • Shambazar, Sangeeta Enterprises, 123, Bidhan Sarani ❑ CHAKDAH: Opp. Post Office, Steel Varieties, N.S. Road ❑ CONTAI: Main Road, Sabitri Bhandar ❑ COOCH BEHAR: B.S. Road, Das Brothers • Nripendra Narayan Road, Tolaram Dalimchand ❑ DARJEELING: Chowk Bazar, Keramat Ali & Sons ❑ DIAMOND HARBOUR: Near UCO Bank, Botokrishna Pal & Sons ❑ DURGACHAWK: Colony Market, Pratik ❑ DURGAPUR: Benachity, Jyoti • New Digty, Nachur Road • Chandi Das Market, Prince • Mamra Bazar, Sansar, Chatterjee Market • Station Bazar, Ruj Bros., Hattala Road ❑ FARAKKA: Chittaranjan Market, Modern Trading Agency, Shop No. G-19 ❑ HABRA: Jessore Road, Mahali Bhandar • The Hindusthan Belar • Jirat Road, Habra Sewing Concern, Uday Shop ❑ HOWRAH: Shibpur Bazar, Sree Guru Basanalaya, 34-2, Shibpur Road ❑ JANGIPARA: Jangipara Bazar, China Stores ❑ JIAGANJ: Churiapatty, Jogmaya Stores ❑ JIRAT: Jirat Station Road, Poddar Steel Variety, Hooghly ❑ KALNA: Bhadurl Para, Shaw Sarker & Co., Old Bus Stand ❑ KANCHRAPARA: Workshor Road, Bangalaxmi Basanalaya ❑ KANDI: Kalabagan, Nivanani Electric, (Near Police Station) ❑ KHARAGPUR: Gole Bazar, Arvind Stores, 87, Railway Market • Ganga Jamuna, TE-2, Railway Market • Hindustan Stores, 123A, Railway Market ❑ KRISHNANAGAR: Gole Sona Patty, Sailen Kumar Dutta & Bros., B.K. Chatterjee Lane (Near Mini Market) • High Street, Ram Krishna Stores, R.N. Tagore Road • Near Debnath High School, Nadia Basanalaya, Biswambhar Roy Road ❑ LAL BAG: Lal Bag Court, Dey Brothers ❑ MALDA: Binoy Sarkar Road, Malda Electric House (Chhata Bhandar), 11/4, Binoy Sarkar Road • D.C.R. Market, Malda Variety Stores, 3/49, D.C.R. Market • Netaji Subhas Road, Radio Sign, 27 ❑ MIDNAPUR: Bibiganj, Chabri Enterprise ❑ MURAROI: Station Road, Gouranga Dutta ❑ NABADWIP: Basan Patty, Balai Chandra Das, Bazar Road ❑ PURULIA: Chowk Bazar, Dutta Bros. ❑ RAGHUNATHGANJ: Darbeshpur, Provat Stores, (Dulu's Dokan) • Sadar Ghat, Sukanta, Municipal Super Market ❑ RAMPURHAT: Dak Banglow Para, Radio Stores, Netaji Subhas Road • Near U.B.I., Dutta Stainless Steel House, Desbandhu Road ❑ RANAGHAT: Bhangrapara, Chakraborty Distributors, Kalimoy Ghatak Lane ❑ RANIGANJ: Burro Bazar, Seth Bros, 25, M.G. Road ❑ SAINTHIA: Nandy Keshan Talkies, Shankar Variety Stores, Old Kandi Road ❑ SANTIPUR: Public Library, Sen Electric, 33/A, Netaji Subas Road ❑ SERAMPUR: Near Manasi Cinema, Eastern End Traders, 39, N.S. Avenue ❑ SILIGURI, Alupatty, Neelam, Metal Market • Hill Cart Road • Bidhan Market, Nadia Stores, B3(R), Bidhan Market • Stainless House, A93(R) Bidhan Market • Bidhan Road, North Bengal Stores ❑ SIMURALI: Simurali Bagar, Uphar ❑ SONAMUKHI: Rathitala, Paul's Furniture ❑ TAMLUK: Panskura Bus Stand, Tamralipta Aluminium Stores, Padambasam ❑ TARAKESWAR: BPR Gate, Supersonic Radio, Chaudhuri Road ❑ UTTARPARA: Uttarpara Bazar, Tapasi, 219, G.T. Road.

Quality India Trusts
Hawkins®
Over 1 crore pressure cookers sold

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AIR-INDIA

Flying Colours

New livery and image for the airline

A glittering golden sun with 24 spokes emblazoned on the tail against a deep red sash. The glitzy new symbol, Air-India hopes, will inspire it to fly to the heady reaches of prosperity, wing-to-wing with the other major world airlines. So after half a century, the national carrier is shedding its faded skin to emerge in a gleaming new corporate avatar.

(From top) the new logo; the redone executive class; and (left) the menu card: suave look

The Boeing 747 Emperor Rajendra Chola, the first of the refurbished planes has a markedly different interior. The upholstery is new, so is the livery, the cutlery and the decor. The seats are remodelled with custom-made fabrics from Lagenthal of Switzerland. The economy class seats are new: the Sicma model of Paris with its contoured back. The chairs offer greater leg-room. Overhead luggage bins are expanded. And the overly ethnic side panels have been redone in a simple white tone and diffused lighting. Explains buoyant Managing Director Rajan Jetley: "It is a public statement of change and a product modernisation exercise in the classic marketing sense."

The changes took a long time coming. A board subcommittee comprising Jetley, chairman Ratan Tata and Vivek Bharat Ram closely monitored every change. The attention to detail is evident everywhere: the bone china is Royal Doulton. Porcelain and imported glassware adorn the Sun Executive Class. Table-linen is white damask and the liquor, a connoisseur's delight. For those who prefer white wines, 1985 Schloss Vollards Rheingau Riesling and 1986 Chablis A.C. Joseph Drouhin. Red wines: 1985 Chateau Negrit St Emilion A.C. and 1986 Bourgogne Pinot Noir Joseph Drouhin. Rose wine: 1986 Chateau de Beaulieu Coteaux D'aix en Provence A.C. And Henriot Brut champagne. The first-class now serves Blue Label, not Black Label. It also offers bounties like XO Courvoisier cognac and Moet Chandon. The cuisine has gone upmarket with food festivals and menus prepared under the recommendation of Steigenbergers.

Air-India's audio range too has been brushed by the fairy wand. It has been expanded from the earlier eight channels to include a selection of ghazals presented by Kaifi Azmi, western classical music presented by David Hudson, jazz from Don Hurst, a children's hour, and Japanese music on the eastern sector. And instead of reruns of the '50s films which had become Air-India's staple inflight entertainment, the latest hits from Hollywood and Bollywood are being screened. Non-stop entertainment includes programmes on sports, health, tourism, music and wildlife. This month, for instance, there is a tourism feature on India focusing on heli-skiing.

Inflight shopping has also been upgraded with a much wider range of items. There are duty free wines, liquors, aperitifs, lighters (Ronson and VC-200), and Swatches and Casio calculators will soon be introduced. Says Jetley: "It is meant to satiate the demand of the Indian clientele for cheap bargains." Incidentally, the cabin crew has been advised to shed those extra pounds and look trimmer and sexier.

The face-lift comes expensive: a cool $ 35 million (Rs 58.9 crore). Air-India has acquired a new advertising agency—the San Francisco-based Landor Associates, which had earlier refurbished British Airways, Thai, Singapore Airlines and US Air. Its tab: $ 1 million (Rs 1.7 crore). Jetley, however, is quick to explain that the cost of the entire refurbishing is to be spread over the next three years in a phased manner. And after the first two aircraft are redone in Hong Kong, the next 19 will be refitted in India itself.

